

BOOK REVIEW DIGEST

1972

SAN FRANCISCO
PUBLIC LIBRARY

PERIODICAL DEPARTMENT

REFERENCE BOOK

Not to be taken from the Library

PERIODICAL DEPT.

JUL 3 1973

SAN FRANCISCO
PUBLIC LIBRARY

BOOK REVIEW DIGEST

Sixty-Eighth Annual Cumulation

MARCH 1972 TO FEBRUARY 1973 INCLUSIVE

Edited by

JOSEPHINE SAMUDIO

Indexers

GILMORE C. AARESTAD

ANNA TINKEL LAUFFER

MARTHA T. MOONEY

KATHLEEN MURPHY

NEW YORK

THE H. W. WILSON COMPANY

1973

Copyright © 1972, 1973

By The H. W. Wilson Company

US ISSN 0006-7326

Library of Congress Catalog Card Number (6-24490)

Printed in the United States of America

PREFATORY NOTE

Book Review Digest is an index to reviews of current fiction and non-fiction appearing in selected periodicals and journals. The Committee on Wilson Indexes of the American Library Association's Reference Services Division advises the publisher on editorial policy by means of studies conducted at intervals of several years. Such studies include the preparation of a list of possible review journals for consideration by the subscribers and the development of criteria to determine coverage, with emphasis placed upon subject balance and the needs of the general user. The actual selection of review journals is, however, accomplished by subscriber vote.

To qualify for inclusion a book must have been published or distributed in the United States. A work of non-fiction must have received two or more reviews and one of fiction four or more reviews in the journals selected. Exception is made for books reviewed in the Reference and Subscription Books Reviews section of the Booklist where one review is deemed sufficient. Reviews must have appeared within eighteen months following a book's publication; at least one review must be from a journal published in the United States.

Generally not more than three excerpts for fiction or four for non-fiction are included, except for books of unusual importance or of a controversial nature where more excerpts are needed to reflect several points of view. However, all reviews appearing in the Digest list of journals are cited.

The main body of the Digest consists of author entries in alphabetical order setting forth title, pagination, price, publisher, etc., with review excerpts arranged alphabetically by the name of the review journal. The first number of the review citation refers to the volume, the second to the page, the letters to the date and the last figure to the approximate number of words in the complete review. The symbol YA indicates the suitability of a book for young adults.

A subject and title index appears following the author entry section.

Non-fiction is classified according to the Abridged Dewey Decimal Classification. Subject headings are based on Sears List of Subject Headings.

ABBREVIATIONS

- AM ANTHROPOL—American Anthropologist
 AM ECON R—American Economic Review
 AM HIST R—American Historical Review
 AM J PUB HEALTH—American Journal of Public Health and the Nation's Health
 AM J SOC—American Journal of Sociology
 AM LIT—American Literature
 AM POL SCI R—American Political Science Review
 AM SCHOLAR—American Scholar
 AM SOC R—American Sociological Review
 AMERICA—America
 ANN AM ACAD—American Academy of Political and Social Science. Annals
 ARCH FORUM—Architectural Forum
 ART BUL—Art Bulletin
 ATLANTIC—Atlantic

 BEST SELL—Best Sellers
 BOOK WORLD—Book World
 BOOKLIST (reviews taken only from Reference and subscription books reviews section)
 BUL ATOMIC SCI—Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists

 CANADIAN FORUM—Canadian Forum
 CHOICE—Choice
 CHRISTIAN CENTURY—Christian Century
 CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR—Christian Science Monitor
 CLASS WORLD—Classical World
 COL & RES LIB—College & Research Libraries
 COMMENTARY—Commentary
 COMMONWEAL—Commonweal
 CONTEMP SOCIOLOG—Contemporary Sociology
 CRITIC—Critic

 ECONOMIST—Economist (London)
 ENCOUNTER—Encounter (London)
 ENGL HIST R—English Historical Review

 HARPER—Harper's Magazine
 HARVARD ED R—Harvard Educational Review
 HORN BK—Horn Book

 J AESTHETICS—Journal of Aesthetics and Art Criticism
 J AM HIST—Journal of American History
 J HIGHER ED—Journal of Higher Education
 J HOME ECON—Journal of Home Economics
 J PHILOS—Journal of Philosophy
 J POL ECON—Journal of Political Economy
 J RELIGION—Journal of Religion

 LIBRARY J—Library Journal
 LIBRARY Q—Library Quarterly
 LRTS—Library Resources and Technical Services

 MOD LANG J—Modern Language Journal
 MOD PHILOL—Modern Philology
 MUS Q—Musical Quarterly
 MUSIC LIB ASSN NOTES—Music Library Association Notes

 N Y REV OF BOOKS—New York Review of Books
 N Y TIMES BK R—New York Times Book Review
 NAT R—National Review (44p issue, pub. in alternate weeks)
 NATION—Nation
 NATUR HIST—Natural History
 NEW ENG Q—New England Quarterly
 NEW REPUB—New Republic
 NEW STATESMAN—New Statesman
 NEW YORKER—New Yorker
 NEWSWEEK—Newsweek

 PACIFIC AFFAIRS—Pacific Affairs
 POETRY—Poetry
 POL SCI Q—Political Science Quarterly

 RECORD. See Teachers College Record (known from October 1967 to May 1970 as The Record)

 SAT R—Saturday Review
 SCI AM—Scientific American
 SCIENCE—Science
 SOCIAL STUDIES—Social Studies
 SPECIAL LIBRARIES—Special Libraries

 TEACH COL REC—Teachers College Record
 TIME—Time
 TLS—Times Literary Supplement (London)

 VA Q R—Virginia Quarterly Review

 WORLD POL—World Politics
 YALE R—Yale Review

LIST OF JOURNALS

- America. $10. w America, 106 W 56th St, New York 10019
- American Academy of Political and Social Science. Annals. $12; clothbound $16; free to members. bi-m American Academy of Political and Social Science, 3937 Chestnut St, Philadelphia 19104
- American Anthropologist. $30; free to members. bi-m American Anthropological Assn, 1703 New Hampshire Av, N.W, Washington, D.C. 20009
- American Economic Review. $20. q American Economic Assn, Rendigs Fels, Sec, 1313 21st Av. South, Nashville, Tenn. 37212
- American Historical Review. $20; free to members of the American Historical Assn. 5 times a yr American Historical Assn, 400 A St, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003
- American Journal of Public Health and the Nation's Health. $20. m American Public Health Assn, Circulation Dept, 1015 Eighteenth St, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036
- American Journal of Sociology. $10. bi-m University of Chicago Press, 5801 Ellis Av, Chicago 60637
- American Literature. $7. q Duke University Press, P.O. Box 6697, College Station, Durham, N.C. 27708
- American Political Science Review. $35; free to members. q American Political Science Assn, 1527 New Hampshire Av, N.W. Washington, D.C. 20036
- American Scholar. $5. q United Chapters of Phi Beta Kappa, 1811 Q St, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20009
- American Sociological Review. $15; free to members. bi-m American Sociological Assn, 1722 N St, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036 (Discontinued Book Review section as of December 1971 issue. Superseded by Contemporary Sociology: a journal of reviews)
- Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science. See American Academy of Political and Social Science. Annals
- Architectural Forum. $12. m The Architectural Forum, M. M. Stern, Circulation Mgr, 130 E 59th St, New York 10022
- Art Bulletin. q Available through membership in the College Art Assn. of America, 432 Park Av. South, New York 10016
- Atlantic. $10.50. m The Atlantic, Subscription Dept, 125 Garden St, Marion, Ohio 43302
- Best Sellers. $9. semi-m University of Scranton, Scranton, Pa. 18510
- Book World. $10. w Postrib Corp, 342 Madison Av, New York 10017 (Appeared in the Sunday editions of the Chicago Tribune and the Washington Post. Last issue published May 28, 1972)
- Booklist. $12. semi-m American Library Assn, 50 E Huron St, Chicago 60611
- Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists. $8.50. m Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists, Circulation Dept, 1020-24 E 58th St, Chicago, 60637
- Canadian Forum. $5. m Canadian Forum, 56 Esplanade St, East, Toronto 1, Ontario
- Choice. $20. m American Library Assn, Subscription Dept, 50 E Huron St, Chicago 60611
- Christian Century. $12. w Christian Century Foundation, 407 S Dearborn St, Chicago 60605
- Christian Science Monitor (Eastern edition). $30. Christian Science Publishing Society, One Norway St, Boston 02115
- Classical World. $5.25. m The Classical World, Lehigh University, 246 Maginnes Hall, Bethlehem, Pa. 18015
- College & Research Libraries. $10. bi-m College & Research Libraries, 50 E Huron St, Chicago 60611
- Commentary. $10. m Commentary, 165 E 56th St, New York 10022
- Commonweal. $14. w Commonweal Publishing Co, 232 Madison Av, New York 10016
- Contemporary Sociology: a Journal of reviews. $10. bi-m American Sociological Assn, 1722 N St, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036 (Supersedes Book Review section of American Sociological Review)
- Critic. $6. bi-m The Thomas More Assn, 180 N Wabash Av, Chicago 60601
- Economist. $33.60. w The Economist of London, 527 Madison Av, New York 10022 (The Economist, Subscription Dept, 54 St James's St, London, S.W. 1)
- Encounter. $14. m British Publications, Inc, 30 E 60th St, New York 10022 (Encounter, 59 St Martin's Lane, London, W.C. 2)
- English Historical Review. $14.40. q British Publications, Inc, 30 E 60th St, New York 10022 (Longman Group, Ltd, Journals Division, 33 Montgomery St, Edinburgh, EH 7)
- Harper's Magazine. $8.50. m Harper's Magazine, Subscription Dept, 381 W Center St, Marion, Ohio 43302
- Harvard Educational Review. $10. q Harvard Educational Review, Subscription Service Dept, 106 Tenth St, Des Moines, Iowa 50305
- Horn Book. $7.50. bi-m Horn Book, Inc. 585 Boylston St, Boston 02116
- Journal of Aesthetics and Art Criticism. $15. q American Society for Aesthetics, The Cleveland Museum of Art, Cleveland 44106
- Journal of American History. $12. q Organization of American Historians, Thomas D. Clark, Sec, 112 N Bryan St, Bloomington, Ind. 47401
- Journal of Higher Education. $8. m The Journal of Higher Education, Ohio State University Press, 2070 Neil Av, Columbus 43210
- Journal of Home Economics. $12. m American Home Economics Assn, 2010 Massachusetts Av, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036
- Journal of Philosophy. $9. bi-w Journal of Philosophy, Inc, Leigh S. Cauman, Managing Ed, 720 Philosophy Hall, Columbia University, New York 10027
- Journal of Political Economy. $15. bi-m University of Chicago Press, 5801 Ellis Av, Chicago 60637
- Journal of Religion. $8. q University of Chicago press, 5801 Ellis Av, Chicago 60637
- Library Journal. $15. semi-m R. R. Bowker Co, Subscription Fulfillment Dept, Box 2017, Ann Arbor, Mich. 48106
- Library Quarterly. $8. q University of Chicago Press, 5801 Ellis Av, Chicago 60637
- Library Resources and Technical Services. $8. q American Library Assn, 50 E Huron St, Chicago 60611
- Modern Language Journal. $5. m National Federation of Modern Language Teachers Assns, Wallace G. Klein, 13149 Cannes Dr, St Louis 63141
- Modern Philology. $8. q University of Chicago Press, 5801 Ellis Av, Chicago 60637
- Music Library Association Notes. $10. q The Music Library Assn, W. J. Welchlein, Exec. Sec, 104 W Huron, Rm 329, Ann Arbor, Mich. 48108
- Musical Quarterly. $9. q The Musical Quarterly, Circulation Office, 48-02 48th Av, Woodside, New York 11377
- Nation. $12.50. w The Nation, 333 Sixth Av, New York 10014
- National Review. $12. bi-w (44p issue) Circulation Mgr, National Review, 150 E 35th St, New York 10016

Natural History incorporating Nature Magazine. $8. m The American Museum of Natural History, Central Park West at 79th St, New York 10024

New England Quarterly. $8. q The New England Quarterly, Hubbard Hall, Brunswick, Me. 04011

New Republic. $12. w The New Republic, Subscription Dept, 381 W Center St, Marion, Ohio 43302

New Statesman. $15. w British Publications, Inc, 30 E 60th St, New York 10002 (Statesman & Nation Publishing Co, Great Turnstile, London, WC1V 7HJ)

New York Review of Books. $10. bi-w The New York Review, Subscription Service Dept, P.O. Box 1162, Ansonia Sta, New York 10023

New York Times Book Review. $13. w The New York Times Co, Times Square, New York 10036

New Yorker. $12. w The New Yorker Magazine, Inc, 25 W 43d St, New York 10036

Newsweek. $14. w Newsweek, The Newsweek Building, Livingston, N.J. 07039

Pacific Affairs. $7. q Pacific Affairs, University of British Columbia, Vancouver 8, Canada

Poetry. $12. m Modern Poetry Association, 1228 N Dearborn Parkway, Chicago 60610

Political Science Quarterly. $12; free to members. q The Academy of Political Science, Columbia University, 413 Fayerweather Hall, New York 10027

Record. See Teachers College Record

Saturday Review. $12. w Saturday Review, 380 Madison Av, New York 10017

School Library Journal. See Library Journal

Science. $20. w American Association for the Advancement of Science, 1515 Massachusetts Av, N.W, Washington, D.C. 20005

Scientific American. $10. m Scientific American, Inc, 415 Madison Av, New York 10017

Social Studies. $6.50. m McKinley Publishing Co, 112 S New Broadway, Brooklawn, N.J. 08030

Special Libraries. $22.50. m Special Libraries Assn, Subscription Dept, 235 Park Av, South, New York 10003

Teachers College Record. $10. q Teachers College, Columbia University, 525 W 120th St, New York 10027

(From October 1967 to May 1970 called The Record)

Time. $14. w Time, Inc, 541 N Fairbanks Court, Chicago 60611

Times Literary Supplement. $18. w Times Literary Supplement, Times Newspapers of Great Britain, Inc, 201 E 42d St, New York 10017 (Times Literary Supplement, Times Newspapers, Ltd, Printing House Square, London, E.C. 4)

Virginia Quarterly Review. $5. q The University of Virginia, One West Range, Charlottesville, Va. 22903

World Politics. $9. q Princeton University Press, Princeton, N.J. 08540

Yale Review. $6. q The Yale Review, 28 Hillhouse Av, New Haven, Conn. 06520

Book Review Digest

CUMULATION OF MONTHLY NUMBERS

MARCH 1972—FEBRUARY 1973

(Subject and title index at the end of author entries)

AAKER, DAVID A., ed. Consumerism: search for the consumer interest; ed. by David A. Aaker and George S. Day. 442p $10.95; pa $4.95 Free press

339.4 Consumer protection
LC 72-148737

"After an opening section on the scope of the problem, the book treats present day marketing practices as the consumer meets them chronologically in a market transaction. In relation to the prepurchase phase, the availability and quality of information are the focus of attention and articles are included on branding, misleading advertising, Truth in Lending Act, and packaging. In relation to the purchasing transaction, fraudulent selling practices, pricing, and trading stamps are treated. In the post-purchase experience section, warranties and service, product safety, and liability are treated. There is a separate section on the problems of the ghetto consumer." (J Home Econ) Bibliography. Index.

"[The thirty articles in this volume] are reprinted from many different sources and represent the views of authorities from business, government, and education. Aaker and Day have succeeded in their desire to present a balanced and well structured discussion of the key issues in the consumerism movement." Choice 8:1360 D '71 130w

"[The editors] have produced a collection of readings to explain [consumerism] to the businessman and the student of business management. This stated purpose does not preclude the home economist and others on the consumer rather than the business side of the fence reading it with interest. . . . [The articles] vary greatly in style and level of treatment. There are broadside attacks on current practices by such well-known consumer advocates as Ralph Nader and David Caplovitz. . . . Reports from several federal agencies are included. Most of the contributors write from the consumer's point of view. There is some representation of the businessman's position, notably in the discussion of the protections of brands." J. L. Pennock
J Home Econ 64:71 F '72 300w

AALTO, ALVAR. Alvar Aalto; introd. and notes by George Baird; with 76 phot. by Yukio Futagawa. 130p $7.50 Simon & Schuster 720.9471
SBN 671-20877-2 LC 73-139582

This account of Alvar Aalto, the architect, "contains a . . . biographical introduction, followed by a hundred or so pages of photographs . . . taken by Yukio Futagawa and . . . by notes on the buildings illustrated." (TLS) Bibliography. Chronology. Index.

"[This is a volume] in Simon and Schuster's handsome and useful Library of Contemporary Architects. . . . Aalto is pictured in the examples of his work as . . . conservative but capable of producing splendid interiors." Best Sell 31:102 Je 1 '71 30w

"The introduction . . . shows some originality and is perceptive." TLS p717 Je 18 '71 50w

AALTO, ALVAR. Alvar Aalto, 1963-1970 [ed. Karl Fleig; tr. by Henry A. Frey]. 248p il $29.50 Praeger

720.92
LC 73-158095

"This book contains 190 photographs, 180 plans and 14 drawings that show in chronological order each . . . building from Aalto's Opera House in Essen to the Museum in Shiraz, Iran." (Publisher's note) Index of works 1918-1971.

"[This work] is meant to follow a volume published in the same format, Alvar Aalto [BRD 1964]. Consequently, this recent volume is inadequate in terms of biographical detail concerning the architect and the evaluation of his work. . . . The fragmentation of an architect's work into short periods serves to inform the reading public of the most contemporary developments, but this type of volume does not analyze sufficiently the architect's position in modern architecture." Choice 9:356 My '72 100w

"On the work shown in his volume . . . [Aalto's] mature style can fairly be judged. . . . His international fame has naturally brought him many invitations to build in other countries, increasingly so in recent years, with the result that of the thirty-eight buildings and projects included in this volume no less than eighteen are outside Finland. They reinforce the impression made before that away from his own country his touch becomes less sure and his decisions somehow more arbitrary." TLS p1627 D 31 '71 800w

AARON, WILLIAM. Straight; a heterosexual talks about his homosexual past. 216p $6.95 Doubleday

301.41 Homosexuality—Personal narratives
LC 71-163938

This is an account of the author's twenty years as a homosexual and of his "gradual abandonment of homosexuality for a wife and family. . . . Mr. Aaron shows what it means to grow up 'gay' in America." (Publisher's note)

"Now that Gay Liberation is trying so hard to persuade us that there is nothing about homosexuality which is aberrant or immature, a glance at Aaron's account of the 'gay' world is salutary. . . . I think we should accept Aaron's change as being genuine. There are two reasons for this. First, his account of his homosexual behavior is so self-denigratory that I see no reason to doubt his honesty. Second, the account of how his conversion came about is rather convincing." Anthony Storr
Book World p3 My 21 '72 850w

"Straight is personal, intelligent, honest, and for the most part unsentimental. Aaron has camouflaged characters and situations to protect his family from the ridicule of cruel or misinformed readers; unfortunately, those aspects which effectively disguise his identity also serve to blunt authentic detail and contribute to a plastic quality. . . . The straight reader will be informed; the homosexual may find himself or herself nodding in recognition. To both, Aaron offers welcome insight into possibilities for the kind of growth and radical change that most of us cynically write off as revivalist propaganda." Jean Lambert

AARON, WILLIAM—Continued

Christian Century 89:1304 D 20 '72 550w

"[The author's] almost total inability to transcend conventional values colors every aspect of his 'homosexual past;' and his experiences in the homosexual milieu are thus, almost without exception, exercises in self-hate and self-fulfilling prophecies of degradation. . . . His understanding of heterosexuality seems to be as idealized as his view of the gay world is sordid. . . . This book lacks human reality and existential courage." G. E. Hansen

Library J 97:2571 Ag '72 130w

"In a well-written book [the author] presents his homosexual past straightforwardly. . . . This is hardly self-help literature and Mr. Aaron is no saint, it's just that he didn't like what his life was becoming as a homosexual (at one point he lists the mortality rate among his homosexual friends, and it is chilling). He does not deny homosexual love but finds himself happier now that he has made a successful heterosexual life. Homosexuality is not inevitable is the message."

N Y Times Bk R p21 J1 30 '72 120w

AARONSON, BERNARD, ed. Psychedelics; the uses and implications of hallucinogenic drugs; ed. by Bernard Aaronson and Humphry Osmond. 512p il $11.25 Schenkman pub.

615 Hallucinogenic drugs
LC [71-876502]

The purpose of this work "is to present as wide a spectrum as possible of the experimental work that has been done in [the] field in recent years. . . . The book is divided into eight parts by various authors, and the editors supply an introduction and conclusion. The subjects include the nature of the experience; anthropological considerations; effects of psychedelics on religion; psychedelic effects on mental functioning; non-drug analogues to the psychedelic state; therapeutic applications; and sociology of psychedelics in the current scene." (TLS) Bibliography. Index.

"The title suggests a biased emphasis on the 'mind-expansion,' subjective properties of [these drugs]. . . . Little mention is made of undesirable effects. . . . This emphasis will probably restrict the readership to those already convinced of the favorable use of these drugs. . . . [Authors] argue in the summary for a more rational social policy than the present one towards the psychedelic drugs and their use."

Choice 9:720 J1/Ag '72 150w

"All the contributors are united in their condemnation of the virtual stopping of all experiments with these 'wonder' drugs by the United States administration in 1965. Hence, as one of the authors rightly remarks, 'a balanced approach that would permit proper evaluation and use of these agents has been absent, and a scientific scandal of the first rank has been created.' For there is more to LSD than kicks. . . . The religious chapters are obviously the most provocative, with Dr Watts as usual at his best/worst. This will not deter anyone from reading this book, and it should not. There is an anti-Judeo-Christian bias in the religious section, but this is perhaps the least important part. Of far more importance are the sections dealing with the therapeutic and psychiatric uses to which the drug can be put. Particularly impressive is the article 'Towards an Individual Psychedelic Psychotherapy' by R. E. L. Masters and Jean Houston, whose book The Varieties of Psychedelic Experience [BRD 1968] is probably the most balanced assessment of the whole vexatious problem to date. The book under review, however, covers a wider field and is a must for all extremists in the psychedelic controversy."

TLS p738 Je 25 '71 1500w

ABBEY, EDWARD. Slickrock; the canyon country of southeast Utah. 143p col il col maps $27.50 Sierra Club

917.92 Utah—Description and travel
ISBN 0-87156-051-8 LC 73-163897

This book about the wild canyon country of southern Utah "has two parts: Abbey's verbal commentary and Hyde's pictorial commentary." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Hyde's photographs show a land of rocky, water-splashed, sun-struck enchantment which, clearly, should not be tinkered with. Naturally some person in authority is proposing to run a vast network of roads through this mercifully uninhabited district." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 228:135 D '71 80w

"The layout of the book is commendable and the pictures reproduced with a minimum of the overglossiness found in many volumes devoted to the West. Hyde's plea that those who are prompted to visit this still-wilderness area should 'leave so little trace of your passing through that the next one in may fancy himself almost the first to come there,' is a poignant statement. One fervently hopes this book does not become a document used as evidence in a before-and-after case of despoliation."

Choice 9:49 Mr '72 170w

"This most recent of the Sierra Club's 'Exhibit Format' books seems to me the most beautiful of that beautiful series. Its photography, color reproduction, layout, and printing are nothing less than superlative, while its text is poetic, anecdotal, vigorous, often angry, always informed. . . . Abbey's text deals with the beauty that was, and angrily with the road builders and power-plant builders who have already partially destroyed it. It is somewhat astonishing to find fury and name calling in such beautiful letterpress on such elegant coated paper, with four-color illustrations, but one has to concur in the anger and join the crusade." Wallace Stegner

Natur Hist 81:86 Ja '72 700w

"[This is a] handsome and evocative work. . . . [It] is a sheer delight to see and read."

Nelson Bryant

N Y Times Bk R p58 D 5 '71 120w

ABEL, ELIE, jt. auth. Roots of involvement. See Kalb, M.

ABRAHAM, HENRY J. Freedom and the court; civil rights and liberties in the United States. 2d ed 397p $12.50 Oxford

323.40973 Civil rights. U.S. Supreme Court
ISBN 0-19-501526-6 LC 75-177991

"Although the scope and approach of [this edition] are the same as that of the original, the passage of time . . . has mandated changes on almost every page and the rewriting as well as enlarging of certain chapters, particularly IV, V, VI, and VII. The new edition as been completely updated through December 1971, thus taking account of the latest posture of the 'Burger Court.' There are two procedural innovations: the addition of an appendix containing excerpts from the Constitution dealing with civil rights and liberties, and a separate 'name' index (alongside 'general' and 'case' indexes)." (Pref to second ed) Annotated bibliography. General index. Name index. Court cases index. For the first edition see BRD 1967.

"In bringing the 1967 version up to date . . . 52 pages have been added. . . . The focus of this book—determining where social interest must end and individual rights begin—continues to make it a unique and exceptionally useful pedagogical tool. The blend of historical perspective, philosophic exploration, and legal analysis is skillfully handled; Abraham has provided an even more valuable book than before."

Choice 9:1200 N '72 100w

Reviewed by R. R. Harris

Library J 97:2172 Je 15 '72 100w

ABRAHAM, HAROLD J., ed. Selections from the scientific correspondence of Elihu Thomson. See Thomson, E.

ABRAHAM, ROGER D. Positively black. 177p $5.95; pa $2.95 Prentice-Hall

398 Folklore, Negro
SBN 13-686097 LC 69-11358

The author "insists that his book is not meant to examine folklore for its own sake, but rather to study certain aspects of Black culture. He wants to explore a number of themes which pervade the life styles of urban Blacks, and he uses folklore as an expressive medium which demonstrates these themes." (Am Anthropol)

"[This] book is a sensitive demonstration of what folklore studies can accomplish. . . . One can question the replicability of a study like this. Would another observer find the same themes in the folklore, or could one, by appropriate selection, find whatever themes he looked for? Abrahams argues vigorously that the themes are really there, not simply a fabrication of the observer, and I find him rather convincing. Nevertheless, I think it fair to call this a book of sensitive intuition, rather than of objective social science, and I hope Abrahams will accept this as the compliment it is intended to be. He writes with a warm and graceful style and I recommend his book both to those interested in the uses of folklore and to all those concerned with the culture of Black Americans." Robbins Burling

Am Anthropol 73:1370 D '71 850w

"Abrahams' premise is that there is a black culture few whites know anything about and with which they therefore can hardly be expected to deal effectively. . . . [He] has done much research, gathering material from the young black people of the streets; and he seeks understanding rather than value judgments. . . . The writing is rather uneven and he does strain at some of his points; but some excellent material is presented." C. M. Weisenberg

Library J 95:2173 Je 1 '70 130w

ABRAHAM, WILLIAM, jt. auth. Unknown
Orwell. See Stansky, P.

ABT, LAWRENCE E., jt. ed. The creative experience. See Rosner, S.

ABU-LUGHOD, IBRAHIM, ed. The transformation of Palestine: essays on the origin and development of the Arab-Israeli conflict; with a foreword by Arnold J. Toynbee. 522p maps $15 Northwestern univ. press

956 Jewish-Arab relations
ISBN 0-8101-0345-1 LC 71-137791

"Alan R. Taylor, Richard Stevens, and W. T. Mallison, Jr. discuss Zionist expansionism and its interaction with British imperialism. John Ruedy, Janet L. Abu-Lughod, Erskine B. Childers, David Waines, and others trace the Zionization of Palestine—land transfer, demographic changes, etc.—and the history of the Mandate. Arab policy, Israeli policy, and Jerusalem are then discussed for the general reader by Michael C. Hudson, Janice Terry, and Malcolm H. Kerr, while Richard Cottam, Ivar Spector, and M. S. Agwani treat the U.S., Russian, and Asian perspectives in similar fashion and Ali A. Mazrui examines Afro-Semitic relations in the U.S. and Africa." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The authors include 16 outstanding scholars in the fields of political science, sociology, history, and international law. None is an Arab or a Zionist. They succeed in giving students of the modern Middle East a comprehensive, well documented, and factual treatment, rarely found in books on the Middle East in general and the Palestine question in particular. . . . Essential for any good college library. Should be required reading in every course on the Middle East. Extensive up-to-date bibliography. Subject index."

Choice 8:1505 Ja '72 160w

"These well-written, scholarly essays, produced especially for the book, 'support the Arab case,' as the introduction says; but they are not polemic in tone, nor are their arguments forced. . . . A far-above-average addition to the literature." D. W. Littlefield
Library J 96:3321 O 15 '71 130w

ABU-LUGHOD, JANET L. Cairo: 1001 years of the city victorious. (Princeton studies on the Near East) 284p 11 maps $25 Princeton univ. press

962 Cairo—History. Cairo—Description
ISBN 0-691-030855-5 LC 73-112992

"From the earliest settlements to the multiple communities of modern Cairo, Professor Abu-Lughod measures each period and development by its impact upon Cairo and its relevance to conditions and counterimpulses at work today. . . . Population figures combined with an 'imaginative reading' of indices of socio-economic status, family life, and social organization within the quarters give us, she shows, a new way of examining the complex structure of the city. . . . [The book] concludes with a prognosis for post-1975 Cairo." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The sweep of Cairene development is accomplished in 170 densely referenced and illustrated pages, which the author considers the introduction to 'the central purpose' of her book—an analysis of contemporary Cairo. She uses the decennial censuses and her intimate personal and sociological knowledge of Cairo to explore the explosive northward expansion of the city since 1960 and the diverse 'social worlds' characteristic of different parts of the city. The latter, which the author was most professionally prepared to handle, was disappointingly brief. . . . Extensive use of plans, maps, prints, and photographs (many small, hazy, grayish)."

Choice 8:1484 Ja '72 210w

"This [is a] first-class history of Cairo. . . . The very extensive notes are as informative as the text. The first such work on Cairo and the first comprehensive work on a Middle Eastern city, it is essential for special collections." D. W. Littlefield

Library J 96:4026 D 1 '71 130w

"[This] is more an exposition of city planning in relation to Cairo than either the sociology or history of the area. . . . Professor Abu-Lughod never loses control of her facts or her narrative and charts for her readers a clear course. . . . It is a dizzying achievement and the excitement engendered in the reader can only have been surpassed by the author's own."

Va Q R 48:lxiv spring '72 110w

ABUEVA, JOSÉ VELOSO. Development administration in Asia. See Development administration in Asia

ABUN-NASR, JAMIL M. A history of the Maghrib. 416p maps $14.50 Cambridge

961 Africa, North—History
ISBN 0-521-07981-0 LC 73-128635

This is a "history of Libya, Tunisia, Algeria and Morocco from the earliest times until the present day. . . . The author describes the history of the area from the beginning of recorded history. . . . and analyses the emergence of a culture derived from many sources, and a drive for unity which submerged ethnic and tribal divisions without completely obliterating them. Recent events are covered in more detail, and over a third of the book is devoted to the nineteenth and twentieth centuries." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"To cover the whole sweep of the history of North Africa from the fall of Carthage to the establishment of the modern nation-states. . . . in the space of less than 400 pages is an ambitious undertaking which Abun-Nasr (University of Ibadan) has nevertheless managed to accomplish with notable success. . . . His fine narrative account also contains a most useful summary of the Ottoman period, as well as a fine introductory chapter on the land and the people. Especially noteworthy is his treatment of the various independence movements and the extent to which the impact of the West under French colonial rule disrupted a traditional Islamic society still deeply rooted in tribal and ethnic loyalties. The real value of the book, however, lies in its use as a work of reference."

Choice 9:570 Je '72 200w

"This generally successful history. . . . is the first such work in English, and one of the very few available in any language. Intended as an introductory textbook, it is based mainly on secondary literature, including many Arabic sources. The author attempts to indicate the sociopolitical essence of each era and generally approaches the subject from a North African perspective, which makes the book even more valuable. Highly recommended for academic and larger public libraries." D. W. Littlefield

Library J 96:3753 N 15 '71 80w

"In one respect it is unfortunate for Professor Abun-Nasr that [his book] appeared soon after the English translation of [C.] Julien's famous survey, History of North Africa [BRD 1971] . . . for Professor Julien's painstaking bibliography, augmented by references to English sources, completely eclipses Professor Abun-Nasr's meagre list. . . . Nevertheless, given that the book is intended for the general reader . . . [Abun-Nasr] has written an excellent political history, and his attention to the deeper movements underlying the political process is frequently superior to the somewhat convoluted reasoning found in Professor Julien's survey."

ABUN-NASR, J. M.Continued*

TLS p1172 S 29 '72 460w

ABZUG, BELLA S. Bella! Ms. Abzug goes to Washington; ed. by Mel Ziegler. 314p $7.95 Saturday review press

B or 92

ISBN 0-8415-0154-8 LC 72-182486

This is the author's account of her activities and schedule during the year she served as a member of the House of Representatives from Manhattan. Index.

"This journal of Mrs. Abzug's first year ■■ a congresswoman . . . not only captures her colorful, outspoken condemnation of our congressional leadership but it also documents the woman's lib arguments that she faced from her colleagues and the press. From the beginning she saw herself as an outsider who was suddenly on the inside, and she was not about to compromise her positions for the sake of party harmony or a career in Congress. . . . This proved to be a surprising book, shedding light on the real inner workings of congress and disillusioning in its descriptions of the democratic process, which is almost non-existent. . . . Highly recommended for women in need of a liberated model and for anyone in search of the truth about the workings of our government." Jeanne Kinney

Best Sell 32:181 J1 15 '72 440w

"Her diary-form book, dictated into a tape recorder, is a stream of anecdotal insights into Rep. Abzug as congresswoman, wife, mother, speaker, steam-roller, and women's libber. . . . [Her] stance is consistent: she is always against every facet of the Vietnam war, she always puts her frame of reference as a liberated woman around her view of legislation and she keeps watch on the shape of everybody else's frame too." Jo Ann Levine

Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 28 '72 550w

"While she is unusually candid and forthright, [the author's] constant use of the pronoun 'I' and the repetition of the many comeuppances she has hurled at various conservative and moderate politicians pall after awhile. . . . Abzug's partisans will enjoy this book, while others would probably prefer ■■ more reflective, analytical account of her views and career." Hindy Schachter

Library J 97:1795 My 15 '72 150w

Reviewed by Gore Vidal

N Y Rev of Books 19:10 Ag 10 '72 90w

"[The author] lets us know exactly what we are supposed to think. She tells us, for instance, that she is an indefatigable 'activist,' a compelling public speaker, and a quick learner who is mastering techniques to beat the old parliamentarians at their own devious games. She is also a 'multifaceted' person who, despite her rough, tough exterior, is sensitive and vulnerable [etc.]. . . . She also writes a great deal about the toll the Congressional pace takes on her health and private life. She lets us know how much she is doing for us and how it is killing her. . . . In [her] book, no one suffers like Bella."

Stephanie Harrington

N Y Times Bk R p5 J1 2 '72 750w

ACCADEMIA DEL CIMENTO. Saggi di naturali esperienze. See Middleton, W. E. K. The experimenters; a study of the Accademia del cimento

ACHESON, DEAN. Grapes from thorns. 253p $7.95 Norton

081

ISBN 0-393-05254-0 LC 76-39604

This work consists of material from Acheson's "files and records. . . . [It contains] stories, accounts of experiences, speeches, memorials to famous friends, letters, and other material. . . . There are also selected reprints of . . . articles he wrote for such publications as Foreign Affairs and the New York Times." (Library J)

Reviewed by G. L. Rosfinot

America 127:296 O 14 '72 500w

"[This book] is flavored with Acheson's unique blend of humanism, rationalism, and superb style. A minor book to be sure, it will nevertheless delight the reader looking for subtlety, sense and literacy. . . . Not the best of Dean Acheson, but if 'reading is living,' as he himself felt, then this book is for anyone who would enjoy a few hours of the better life." Joan Sweeny

Best Sell 32:226 Ag 15 '72 320w

Choice 9:1034 O '72 100w

"For an example of [Acheson's] taut, rapier skill at anecdote, the account titled 'Range Practice'—a series of incidents when he served with the old horse-drawn artillery under Wilson when Acheson was just out of law school—is vintage. This reader broke up and spent a month's quota of laughter in fifteen minutes, quite out of control." Saville Davis

Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 28 '72 900w

"This is a delightful book that reflects Acheson's philosophy, style, and wide range of interest. It is a warm and sometimes personal addendum to his best-selling Present at the Creation [BRD 1969]. Hubert Humphreys

Library J 97:1802 My 15 '72 120w

"This non-book, a posthumous collection of insignificant pieces, is no key to the importance of the man who was one of the most powerful figures in and creators of our half of the 20th century. . . . The pity of this book, as of all Acheson's writings, is that he could never explain, nor would he search into, the roots of his commitment to 'greatness.' Bookish and clever as he was, he was not a thinker; his writing is charming but glossy, fundamentally non-communicative of what he most deeply believed about America, freedom and the necessary connection between them. In any event, this book is not his memorial; our foreign policy is." Alfred Kazin

N Y Times Bk R p3 My 28 '72 2000w

ACHINSTEIN, PETER. Law and explanation: an essay in the philosophy of science. 168p il $9 Oxford

501 Science—Philosophy. Science—Methodology

ISBN 0-19-858208-0 LC [70-876811]

This is a "survey of the concept and meaning of physical law and the various methods by which physical laws are formulated." (Choice)

"The book can be read by the student who has completed an introductory course in college physics, but it will be better appreciated by one who has also been introduced to the philosophy of science. Most of the scientific statements are correct but the text is tedious due to excessive repetition. Should be useful reference material for students of the philosophy of science."

Choice 9:386 My '72 100w

"A large part of the value of the present work is that Professor Achinstein draws his examples out of a detailed acquaintance with contemporary physics, and often quite advanced physics. If there is ambiguity in a term, Professor Achinstein can be trusted to ferret it out. . . . [He] studies with remorseless logic characteristics of laws in virtue of which they may be said to express regularities, features which constitute their generality, and aspects in virtue of which laws may be said to express necessity. An analysis of the general concept of explanation is then given, and this analysis applied to the question of what types of explanation can be supplied by laws. . . . Taken as a whole, the book is hard but worthwhile reading."

TLS p160 F 11 '72 300w

ACTON, H. B. The morals of markets: an ethical exploration. 104p $5.50 Humanities press

174 Business ethics

LC [72-564034]

"Acton has written . . . [an] essay relating economics to the humanities and ethics. He discusses such individuals ■■ Ruskin, Carlyle, Tawney, and Galbraith. . . . He concludes that competitive markets give more scope for intellectual and moral excellence than would centralized economic planning." (Choice)

"This would be valuable reading for those students in the humanities who have been taught (or believe) that the Victorian criticism of economics and economists is still relevant today. . . . [The] subject matter is quite similar to that of Kenneth Boulding in some of his more recent writings. Certainly the student should have access to the humanists' criticism of economics as well as the economists' answer to those critiques. Acton's book would serve that purpose."

Choice 9:687 J1/Ag '72 120w

"[Acton is] an ardent supporter of competition and the market, and an opponent of socialist or social democratic approaches to society and the economy. It is important that the case for the morality of competition should not go by default. It is indeed irritating to find the constant priggish and superficial assumptions, particularly of the more unthinking of people who would call themselves left-wing, that anything on the right is ex hypothesi immoral. The trouble with Professor Acton's analysis, however, is that it, too, is superficial. By attacking the more obviously foolish arguments of collectivists he exposes himself to the same sort of charges as those he makes against his opponents."

TLS p613 My 28 '71 650w

ACTON, JAY. Mug shots; who's who in the new earth, by Jay Acton, Alan Le Mond [and] Parker Hodges; phot. by Raeanne Rubenstein. (A Meridian bk) 244p $9.95 World pub.

920 U.S.—Biography
ISBN 0-529-04513-3

LC 77-174672

"A compendium of short biographies of more than 200 cartoonists, activists, educators, rebels, musicians, writers, et al. who have made a name for themselves in the counter-culture. It is arranged in alphabetical order—from Louis Abolafia to Howard Zinn—and contains short quotations illustrative of each subject's ideas, philosophy, etc." (Library J)

"Some of these biographical sketches are of people who are well known, but the freshness of approach and style—with the pertinence of the information—makes the brief biographies useful. Many of those described, however, are important chiefly to one another. The 'mug shots' are mainly verbal, though there are many photographs—only one of them is obscene and even it will bother no one except by its repulsiveness. The writing is heavily slanted, adulatory whenever erratic behavior is mentioned, and is couched in what, for the moment, is current diction."

Best Sell 32:226 Ag 15 '72 200w

"This book is not a reference work: it has no table of contents, no index, no cross references, and no accurate list of works by or about the people cited. Instead, the reader is given short commentaries on the subjects' accomplishments. . . . [This is] an excellent introduction to learning who's who in the counter-culture." H. G. Black

Library J 97:2572 Ag '72 90w

ADAM, ANTOINE. Grandeur and Illusion: French literature and society, 1600-1715; tr. by Herbert Tint. 311p $8.95 Basic bks.

840.9 French literature—History and criticism
SBN 465-02697-4 LC 74-187000

The author's aim is to exhibit "the fundamental relationships that existed between French society in the seventeenth century and the literature it created." . . . The first third of Grandeur and Illusion is . . . devoted to the political and social history of the period.

Professor Adam tells the story of how France and its major social groups evolved under Henry IV, Richelieu, Mazarin, and finally Louis XIV. Next [he] reviews French thought in the seventeenth century, offering a summary of the period's religious ideas, its science, philosophy, and aesthetics. Finally, he turns to a consideration of genres and writers, and . . . relates the works and their authors to the political, social, and intellectual currents of the age." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Since [Adam] does not limit himself to the preeminent writers and yet deals with all in quick summaries, one cannot agree that we have here, as implied by the translator's stated purpose as editor, the most meaningful introductions to, for example, the great playwrights and moralists of the century. On a large number of topics, however, Adam does clarify areas on which there are widely held mistaken ideas. His revisionist views on many of the major authors and topics, though perhaps stated too succinctly, will interest all readers, convinced or not. . . . Bibliography, though summary for specialists, will be invaluable to those newly engaged in the field."

Choice 9:1136 N '72 260w

"The present book can be viewed as an abridgment of Adam's monumental history [Histoire de la littérature française au XVII<sup>e</sup> siècle, 5 vols.] based on more recent scholarship. It is remarkable in its conciseness and compactness, and for its quality of conveying in a clear manner the summary of complex relationships and influences. Adam's book, which does not read like a translation, will be most appreciated by the expert; but it is also the most reliable introduction to its subject for the beginner." C. B. Osburn

Library J 97:2398 J1 '72 210w

"The discussion of literature comes only after full treatment of the social and political and the religious and intellectual background of the century, so that literature can be appreciated in its proper context and, above all, so that the persistent misconception of a monolithic grand siècle can be shown up for the aberration it is. . . . More comprehensive and penetrating than the many other histories of seventeenth-century literature currently available, Grandeur and Illusion offers no short cut to the literature itself, and to be understood requires more than casual acquaintance with the texts. While it would serve as an excellent introduction, it is even more a framework into which the reader can set those bits of the mosaic with which he is already familiar. There is, inevitably, a good deal of compression and simplification, though no superficiality."

TLS p406 Ap 14 '72 650w

"Too allusive for the common reader, too sketchy for the scholar, this book would seem to serve no purpose at all. . . . Given the questionable style of this book, filled with Gallicisms and some misinformation, one is often embarrassed. It is hard to believe, for example, that Adam would have attributed, without a qualm, the writing of Le Grand Cyrus and Clélie to Georges de Scudéry alone. Some failure of communication between author and editor/translator must be assumed. For Grandeur and Illusion is something of a disservice to this most knowledgeable scholar—'l'homme de France' who is the great specialist in seventeenth-century literature, thought, and even history." Jacques Guicharnaud

Yale R 62:106 O '72 1350w

ADAM, HERIBERT. Modernizing racial domination: South Africa's political dynamics. 203p $8 Univ. of Calif. press

323.1 Africa, South—Race relations
ISBN 0-520-01823-0 LC 75-132422

The author "examines the characteristics of state policy and the African nationalist movement which have forestalled any serious revolutionary challenge. Adam argues that the future of the South African system will be shaped by 1) the growing need for skilled African labor, 2) the development of an Afrikaner industrial group which is more concerned about getting cheap African labor than protecting jobs for Afrikaner workers, and 3) the use of Bantustans by Africans as vehicles through which to express opposition and work for concessions." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Adam's analysis of South African politics is current, highly perceptive, and free of the now routine recitation of the tragic consequences of racial domination. . . . The extensive critical analysis of other works on South Africa is very good as is the effort to place the political system in a comparative context. The book is flawed only by several stylistic and proofreading mistakes."

Choice 8:1641 F '72 130w

ADAM, HERIBERT—Continued

"[This] new series 'Perspectives on Southern Africa' shows great promise of improving holdings in Africana collections of both academic and general libraries. . . . [This volume] is perhaps the best academic analysis of South Africa's political dynamics published in the last five years. It is more of an analytical exercise than an accumulation of data. Frequently revisionist in his approach, Adam has scrutinized a wide range of literature on South Africa and comments on many of the standard hypotheses. . . . The work contains an excellent bibliography." J. J. Grotzinger
Library J 96:2650 S 1 '71 90w

ADAM, HERIBERT, ed. South Africa: sociological perspectives. 340p $11.25 Oxford 301.29 Africa, South—Race relations. Africa. South—Social conditions
ISBN 0-19-215191-6 LC 79-26795

These essays "on various aspects of the contemporary social structure of South Africa . . . [include] descriptions of the organizations and value systems of each of the varying communities within South Africa and of the conflicts between them." (Choice) Bibliography.

"The authors share a common political starting point of liberalism. That is, they are all opposed to the present government's policy of apartheid but none is committed to all-out support for the national liberation movements. . . . Two essays are particularly interesting as primary documents—that by Jordan Ngubane, a black South African now in exile, and that by Fatima Meer, a South African Indian. Both are reflective and revealing. . . . [The volume] will be useful to any student wishing to go beyond an introductory survey but distinctly is not the first book one should read on South Africa. Rather comprehensive bibliography of materials published since 1960."

Choice 9:438 My '72 190w

TLS p1149 S 24 '71 140w

ADAMS, ALEXANDER, B. Geronimo; a biography. 381p il $8.95 Putnam

B or 92 Geronimo (Apache chief). Apache Indians
LC 77-163402

In this account of Geronimo's life, the "author includes the entire history of the Apache wars, along with much material on Mangas Coloradas, Cochise, and other leaders. The first half of the book is concerned with the background and causes of the wars." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] is an engrossing story of [a] clever warrior. . . . The appendices are as interesting as the text itself. The news media of that day lauded General Nelson Miles, but this book says he was a stuffed shirt, pompous and ineffective. . . . The whole book makes for good reading, and a reader sighs as he sees almost the same things being done nowadays when knowledgeable men in the front lines of warfare are overruled by men sitting at comfortable desks or in ivory towers." E. A. Dooley
Best Sell 31:389 D 1 '71 800w

"The volume does more . . . than describe the raids and battles. It sheds light on the duplicity, the savagery, and the inexperience of the white leadership in Indian affairs. It brings to life the times in which Mangas Coloradas, Cochise, Juh, Victorio, Eskiminzin, and Geronimo lived. It points out the dilemmas of Generals Crook and Miles in dealing with the Apache 'problem.' Twenty-six pages of notes . . . and a number of excellent photographs supply documentation."

Choice 9:428 My '72 190w

Reviewed by Jack Gregory and Rennard Strickland

Commonweal 96:288 My 26 '72 70w

"It is not until the second half [of the book] that Geronimo emerges as more than a secondary character. Adams is definitely on the side of the Indian, and this reviewer has to agree with him on most cases. This is . . . fuller than [O.] Faulk's Geronimo Campaign [BRD 1970]. Writing the life of a man from another culture is at best difficult. When that man is from an oral culture with no written records, it is well nigh impossible. Adams has accomplished his task. Excellent notes and a good bibliography add to the value of the work." W. H. Farrington

Library J 97:674 F 15 '72 180w

"This [is a] well-researched account. . . . Although Adams does not provide much information about the personal life of his subject, the book is replete with documentation of the connivances, blunders, savagery and heroism that characterized the removal of the Apaches from their New Mexico lands."

N Y Times Bk R p40 F 6 '72 70w

ADAMS, ANSEL. The Tetons and the Yellowstone, by Ansel Adams [and] Nancy Newhall. 95p il $8.95; pa $5.95 5 associates, inc.

917.87 Grand Teton National Park, Yellowstone National Park
LC 74-121034

The text describes the natural history of the area, and recounts the story of the Indians who inhabited it. The coming of the fur trappers and mountain men, which was followed by the exploring expeditions and the development of the national parks is also related. Bibliography.

"An important book for libraries that may not have a representative example of work by Adams, a contemporary master. However, the book has several shortcomings for the serious student of photography: there is no list or index of the photographs and no dates are indicated. There is no way of telling which, if any, were made during his Guggenheim years and which were made in recent years. It would be interesting to see if the intervening 30 years have changed either Adams' vision or the landscape's aspect. . . . This is a book for people who would rather keep mountains on their coffee tables."

Choice 8:816 S '71 140w

"[This book] sings the glories of the Teton-Yellowstone region with unabashed delight. Adams is one of the great photographers of our time and he and Nancy Newhall have collaborated on several books. Miss Newhall's text is essentially historical." Nelson Bryant

N Y Times Bk R p60 D 5 '71 110w

ADAMS, ARTHUR E. Men versus systems; agriculture in the USSR, Poland, and Czechoslovakia, by Arthur E. Adams and Jan S. Adams. 327p il $12.50 Free press

338.1 Agriculture—Russia, Agriculture—Poland, Agriculture—Czechoslovak Republic, Agriculture—Economic aspects
LC 70-128476

This "is a comparative analysis of the effects of modernization on economic growth, social institutions, and people in three Communist agricultural systems. . . . Each study is divided into two sections. The first provides a brief historical summary of recent agricultural developments, emphasizing the period since the advent of Communist party rule in Poland and Czechoslovakia. The second section contains the authors' observations during a visit in 1967 to agricultural areas of the three countries. Farmers, farm managers, agricultural scholars, and government officials . . . speak for themselves, evaluating recent experiences, present-day systems, and prospects for the future." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The treatment is not technical or sophisticated from an economic or agronomic viewpoint, since Arthur Adams is a historian and Jan Adams is a political scientist. Their informal anecdotal approach is aimed chiefly at the general reader without previous knowledge of the subject, but their detailed accounts of farm visits will be of some interest even to those familiar with the problems. . . . The content and style are semipopular rather than scholarly."

Choice 9:252 Ap '72 220w

"The scholarly presentation, with a well-balanced appraisal of agricultural methods and organization in each country, is much enlivened by the recounting of [the author's] personal experiences." H. H. Bernt

Library J 96:3751 N 15 '71 180w

ADAMS, BERT N. The American family; a sociological interpretation. 378p $7.95 Markham pub.

301.42 Family
SBN 8410-4004-2 LC 74-122303

This "book consists of chapters on the history of the family containing a review of current theoretical orientations. . . . family structures and varieties with an emphasis on cross-cultural materials, family subcultures and sub-societies in the U.S., socialization, adolescence, premarital relationships, love and mate selection and marital relations. In addition, the author has included . . . discussions of the functions of the family in differentiated societies, kinship relations, aging and the family, familial responses to change and challenge, and a summary chapter on contemporary and future aspects of the family in the United States." (Contemp Sociol)

"[Adams] analyzes and interprets the data from multiple studies and presents pointed theoretical interpretations. . . . [This is] an ideal book for outside or companion readings. Author and subject indices."

Choice 8:295 Ap '71 170w

"[This] work firmly establishes the author's reputation as one of the most critical, astute, and imaginative young scholars applying themselves in a sub-field requiring such talents. It is, with only very minor qualifications, a gem of a [book] . . . that is neither pretentious nor dull. . . . Throughout, Adams explicitly recognizes the salience of historical and comparative perspectives in illuminating current patterns. . . . Useful summaries are presented at logical intervals, and Adams is well acquainted with both the recent and pertinent empirical studies in the field without succumbing to the temptation of being stultifyingly encyclopedic. . . . I recommend Adams' work not only for [undergraduates] but to anyone who wishes to consult a lucid, literate, undogmatic, and informed account of families in America and the family in general."

Nicholas Tavuchis

Contemp Sociol 1:352 Jl '72 1050w

ADAMS, CLINTON. The Tamarind book of lithography. See Antreasian, G. Z.

ADAMS, FRANK C. College and university student work programs; implications and implementations [by] Frank C. Adams and Clarence W. Stephens. 272p $8.95 Southern Ill. univ. press

378.3 Education, Higher. Students—Finance. Student loan funds
ISBN 0-8093-0467-8 LC 77-112382

This "analysis of current financial aid and student work programs in the United States . . . [includes a section] which deals with eighteen colleges and universities having a variety of work-study and co-op programs." (J Higher Ed) Bibliography.

"Financial aid officers undoubtedly have most of the information given in the book. High school guidance counselors might be interested in some of the collated material about self-help programs. . . . Appendices provide various forms used in self-help programs; a glossary defines some common 'field' terms; bibliography describes books, articles, and dissertations dealing with the topic."

Choice 8:1224 N '71 150w

"Although the reading is often difficult and the writing sometimes akin to that in reports by the Census Bureau . . . [the authors] have produced a helpful but detailed and comprehensive [book]. Anyone who is interested in how other institutions operate their programs can be enlightened here. . . . It should be emphasized that this book has a broad scope as well as a narrow focus on specific issues and problems. For that reason it should be pointed out that the discussion is not restricted to work-study programs, but the major area areas of student assistance are considered. The reader is taken through the mind-boggling maze of federal, state, and local options with a high degree of efficiency accompanied with little confusion." W. R. Nester

J Higher Ed 42:419 My '71 430w

ADAMS, HAZARD, ed. Critical theory since Plato. 1267p $12.95 Harcourt

801 Criticism. Literature—History and criticism. Esthetics
ISBN 0-15-516142-3 LC 74-152575

This "collection contains essays by over one hundred authors, representing more than 2300 years of critical theory. . . . [The emphasis] is upon literature. Adams provides a general introduction and a short introduction to each author that indicates his contribution and place in the historical scheme." (J Aesthetics) Bibliography. Index.

"[This is] one of the few . . . anthologies of literary criticism deserving of inclusion in university library collections. In the tradition of critical anthologies by Smith, Spingarn, Gilbert, Zabel, and Bate, it 'presents the major theoretical statements of literary critics and aestheticians from the earliest times to the present.' Selections are 'chosen to emphasize broad theoretical issues such as imitation, the relationship between form and content, and the definition of literature.' There is little concern with specific works, authors or movements, except insofar as these represent the focus of certain major critics intent on exploring broader issues or the central concerns of a period. . . . [The] broad coverage extending to such contemporary theoreticians as Bachelard, Ong, Gombrich, Barthes, Poulet and Kreiger gives the collection a utility and value far beyond the usual anthology. . . . Undergraduates interested in literary criticism would enjoy and profit from reading it."

Choice 9:501 Je '72 160w

"This collection could be very useful as an introductory text in literary criticism even though there is a sense in which such a large collection is overwhelming. Most of the essays appear to be commensurate with the contribution of their authors to criticism, and many combinations of authors could be selected for consideration. . . . Although the quality of writing varies, all of the essays have a certain sameness, as though each was written to meet a common standard of purpose and design. But the collection lacks a continuity that neither the preface nor the introductory or concluding essay provides. Thus the book fails to have the impact as a whole that some collections do have." W. L. Blizsek

J Aesthetics 31:132 fall '72 120w

ADAMS, JAMES TRUSLOW, ed. Album of American history, 6v. See Album of American history, 6v

ADAMS, JAN S., jt. auth. Men versus systems. See Adams, A. E

ADAMS, JOE KENNEDY. Secrets of the trade; notes on madness, creativity & ideology. 238p $12.50 Viking

616.89 Psychiatry. Mental illness
ISBN 0-670-63171-X LC 71-149269

The author deals with "organized psychiatry. . . . He describes how his experiments with LSD led to two psychotic episodes ten years ago. . . . [Some of his] contentions are: experts in every field, especially psychiatry, . . . lie and thus compound the layman's or patient's ignorance; Western civilization's overemphasis of sex, evidenced by its prudery and pornography, is a major source of its problems." (Library J)

"The results of [the author's] journeys into the world of psychosis appear to him to have been beneficial, in that he believes himself to have gained a kind of insight which he would not have obtained in any other way. . . . Does Adams's book support his thesis? It is of course impossible to say with certainty, since we do not know what he was like before his mental illnesses. His first chapter is certainly interesting. It is concerned with what he calls 'Differentiation and Dedifferentiation in Healthy Functioning.' . . . Adams's comments upon the creative process are interesting, in that he has realized that the flexibility of 'dedifferentiation' is one of its characteristics; and that creative people are in fact distinguished by an unusual capacity for mixing mental contents which are usually kept apart, and also by an uncommon penetration of, or access to, the unconscious part of the mind. But he fails to draw attention to the fact that insight is not enough. . . . Moreover, he generalizes far too much from his own experience of mental illness." Anthony Storr

Book World p14 N 7 '71 850w

"Since [these] essays were written at different times, many of the ideas are repeated. . . . This would be an interesting addition for large psychology collections." C. E. Wadsworth
Library J 96:3332 O 15 '71 130w

ADAMS, PAUL. Children's rights. See Children's rights

ADAMS, RICHARD NEWBOLD. Crucifixion by power; essays on Guatemalan national social structure, 1944-1966; based on field res; with chapters by Brian Murphy and Bryan Roberts. 553p maps $10 Univ. of Tex. press

309.17281 Guatemala—Social conditions
ISBN 0-292-70035-0 LC 79-121125

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by M. S. Edmonson
Am Anthropol 74:77 F/Ap '72 1150w

Reviewed by J. C. M. Ogelsby
Am Hist R 77:1188 O '72 450w

Reviewed by D. G. Munro
Ann Am Acad 400:202 Mr '72 200w

ADAMSON, DONALD, ed. T. S. Eliot: a memoir. See Sencourt, R.

ADAMSON, JOY. Pippa's challenge. 177p pl col pl $9.50 (A Helen and Kurt Wolff bk) Harcourt

599 Cheetahs
ISBN 0-15-171980-2 LC 72-75410

"Pippa, the cheetah whose release into wild life Joy Adamson described . . . in The Spotted Sphinx [BRD 1969], and her offspring are the chief characters in this [book]. . . . After Pippa's tragic death following an injury, the author succeeded in keeping in touch with the survivors of two of her litters. In her . . . efforts to do so, she . . . learned and recorded hitherto unknown facts about the development and the behavior of these . . . cats. In particular, she was able to observe at close range the beginnings and development of the cheetah's sexual behavior and mating habits, . . . and to record them in [photographs]." (Publisher's note)

"Adamson's rare perception and her superb gifts of storytelling are vividly evident. She has a passion for understanding 'the fascination of what's difficult' . . . the cheetah, reticent, graceful, and astonishingly beautiful, is a difficult and fascinating creature. . . . [The book contains] a useful comparison table of members of the cat family. Highly recommended." Anita Nygaard

Library J 97:3171 O 1 '72 130w

"[The author] has a great talent for communicating her fondness for animals and, without anthropomorphism, for revealing their personalities. The book contains striking color photographs."

N Y Times Bk R p20 Ag 6 '72 90w

ADDINGTON, LARRY H. The blitzkrieg era and the German general staff, 1865-1941. 285p maps $10 Rutgers univ. press

943 Germany—History, Military, World War, 1939-1945—Campaigns and battles—Germany
ISBN 0-8135-0704-9 LC 75-163955

"The purpose of this book is to show that the German Army was never the motorized, mechanized juggernaut that its blitzkrieg successes in the beginning of World War II led most people to believe. Rather, it was a mixture of modern and old-fashioned elements that was responsible for the Army's successes and its final failure. . . . The book focuses on the German Army General Staff and on General Franz Halder, who was its head from 1938 to 1942. The author has drawn . . . on General Halder's war journal and personal correspondence with him, [and] on postwar studies of German officers sponsored by the Office of the Chief of Military History of the U.S. Army." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[Addington examines] the German Army's structure and strategic doctrine during its eminence in 1939-41. Sufficient background is provided to demonstrate that German victories depended less on superior weapons than on a doctrine . . . which emphasized surprise . . . and huge encirclements. Victories resulted in 1866 and 1870-71, but not in 1914 or 1941. Why these failures? A fundamental problem of supply, Addington contends. . . . Despite certain failings—the style is readable but plodding, and there is far less reliance on German source materials than on works in English—this book is important, for it annihilates the legend of German eminence in military technology, thus demonstrating what a limited instrument the army actually was."

Choice 9:266 Ap '72 200w

"The reader is advised that this is scarcely a definitive study of the German general staff; only some of the basic thoughts of a few outstanding personalities like Helmuth von Moltke, Alfred von Schlieffen, and Franz Halder are given. The account of German military doctrine in action is uneven. . . . The author's style is clear, but the few accompanying maps are of insufficient quality to clarify complex tactics of warfare." E. G. Hamann

Library J 97:1010 Mr 15 '72 230w

ADELEYE, R. A. Power and diplomacy in Northern Nigeria, 1804-1906; the Sokoto Caliphate and its enemies. 387p 11 maps $10 Humanities press

966.9 Fulah Empire
ISBN 0-391-00169-8 LC 77-27825

The first section of the book "carries the story of the Caliphate from its background and its establishment through its consolidation and development; a second treats the Caliphate and its relations with the European powers during 'the scramble for Africa'; and a final section deals with the overthrow of the Caliphate by the British under Lugard." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Adeleye, relying on French, Arabic, and Hausa sources, in addition to standard English sources, presents a contrasting account of the British conquest of northern Nigeria. His account gives an in-depth study of what the Caliph and his various emirs believed that they were signing in their various agreements with foreign agents, primarily English. Lugard appears in a more ruthless, even dishonest, cast than in traditional accounts. A welcome addition to a growing body of African writings based primarily on African and Arabic sources. . . . Extensive bibliography."

Choice 9:116 Mr '72 170w

Reviewed by C. C. Wrigley
Encounter 39:66 Jl '72 200w

ADELMAN, CLIFFORD. Generations; a collage on youthcult. 321p $7.95 Praeger

301.43 Youth—U.S.
LC 72-168334

Adelman "discerns in the several youth generations born between 1939 and 1954 a mindlessness, an inability to verbalize or inaugurate change [and] a bumbling view of the universe that was smoke-screened by the rhetoric of the counterculture." (Christian Century)

"Both exciting and almost incomprehensible, this is, basically, a critical commentary on the rhetoric (and actions) of the counterculture by a young man (in his twenties according to the book's dust jacket), seemingly in sympathy with many of the basic thrusts of the counterculture. . . . One comes away from this book, however, wondering what it all means and unsure of where the author stands on many of the issues he raises. Nevertheless, [it] may provide some useful insights to those concerned with the 'youth culture.'"

Choice 9:1165 N '72 160w

"This is a study with which to reckon. [It is] far from the romantic viewpoint of the Roszaks and Reichs of a few years ago. . . . If Adelman's findings are correct, there is much less to hope for from . . . [radical youth] than many thought. Naught for your comfort—unless you belong to the political and cultural right wing."

Christian Century 89:807 Ag 2 '72 140w

"The book suffers so much from lack of editing that only the most determined reader will work his way through Adelman's Byzantine prose. His purpose is to dissolve 'self-serving false posturing.' He does this by means of a kind of survey questionnaire distributed to a sizeable sample of students, although the sample is hardly scientifically acceptable. Adelman's main point seems to be that an enormous contradiction exists between the cultural ideological trappings of the counter-culture and the . . . elders who pass for their teachers. . . . Suffice it to say that, as for the counterculture, there is less there than meets the eye. But much the same has, to my mind, been said better elsewhere." Henry Steck

Library J 97:3172 O 1 '72 280w

"Adelman, who has taught at CCNY and Yale, 'wished to verify the extent to which the equation of the youthcult with the multifarious spirits of counter culture and counter politics was justified.' His style has all the grace of a doctoral thesis gone amok, but he presents us with information worth examining. . . . [He] does not write with a forked tongue but a curled lip. He constantly refers to Buckminster Fuller as 'Bucky' and to Charles Reich as 'Charlie.' But snide as he is, his information has some value. The prospect of a generation depriving itself of conceptual sensitivity is frightening to literate and politically aware people. . . . But Adelman's research is too spotty. He substitutes polemics for polls and arrives at conclusions too quickly. He is like a paleontologist who finds a chicken bone from yesterday's lunch and automatically reconstructs a dinosaur." Norman Schreiber
Sat R 55:58 S 2 '72 360w

ADELSON, ALAN. SDS. 276p $10 Scribner
323.2 Students for a Democratic Society.
Students—U.S.—Political activity
SBN 684-12393-2 LC 75-143913

The author attempts to describe the aims and history of the organization known as Students for a Democratic Society. The first part of his book contains accounts of campus demonstrations during the spring of 1970 at Yale, Columbia and Berkeley. The "second section is taken up with theory and with sketches of individual members of SDS. . . . [The] final section is given over to a . . . history of SDS and to some of Adelson's speculations concerning the direction the organization may take in the future." (Sat R) Index.

"Adelson's book is pure propaganda, and SDS leaders are seen with such adoring, uncritical eyes that it is very difficult to tell whether SDS is alive and stronger than ever, or if it has sunk in a morass of vague idealism and clichéd private language." G. M. Knoll

America 126:382 Ap 8 '72 300w

Reviewed by J. J. Conlin
Best Sell 31:498 F 15 '72 450w

Choice 9:247 Ap '72 240w

"SDS is an engagingly written book. Adelson was a reporter for the Wall Street Journal for a time and his style is light, breezy and journalistic. He . . . believes very much in what SDS is doing and wants to bring his readers to the same level of appreciation. The warm, personal style with which he makes his arguments is a definite asset in such a quest. . . . [But his] breezy informality often treads a thin line beyond which is a kind of cute glibness that surfaces too frequently. A much more serious shortcoming is the superficiality with which Adelson discusses (or fails to discuss) ideas and conflicting ideologies. . . . The need has long existed for an in-depth, critical analysis and history of the Students for a Democratic Society. That need still goes unmet." Stu Cohen

Commonweal 96:122 Ap 7 '72 800w

"There is a great deal of information in the book, but it takes lots of digging to pry it out. S.D.S. is important to all libraries that serve students—which means all libraries—if only because there is so little information available about the organization apart from scattered newspaper accounts. Adelson is truly concerned about society's problems; one wishes he would express his concern more coherently." F. M. Blake

Library J 96:2617 S 1 '71 110w

New Repub 167:26 Jl 8 '72 400w

"Concerned with a fascinating subject, [this book] is almost as boring as an SDS meeting. . . . [It] is loosely organized and full of grammatical errors. Moreover, Adelson's . . . deployment of detail frequently seems mindless. The author moves a couple of demonstration scenes along at a gripping pace, but he generally gets bogged down in long quotes or explanations of radical strategy that spoil the drama of the scenes he sets forth. . . . In passing, he offers capsule analyses of 'the system' that sound as if he had swallowed SDS political and economic theories without chewing them over even once. . . . Not bothering to provide even the bare minimum of facts to substantiate his prophecy [of revolution,] he overwhelmingly fails to convince." Mary Breasted

Sat R 55:75 F 12 '72 800w

ADHÉMAR, JEAN. Twentieth-century graphics; tr. from the French by Eveline Hart. 256p il $8.50 Praeger

769 Engraving. Engravers
LC 72-150453

This survey of print-making contains reproductions "of line engravings, etchings, woodcuts, and lithographs by more than a hundred artists, including Gauguin, Munch, Picasso, Braque, Kirchner, Pechstein, Kandinsky, Käthe Kollwitz, Masereel, Barlach, Nolde, Miró, Maillo, Segonzac, Hayter, Viellard, Baskin, Hecht, Jacques Villon, John Piper, Nigel Lambourne, Frank Martin, and . . . others." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The book is composed of a series of unrelated anecdotes and insignificant data, which leave the reader with no coherent idea of printmaking in this century. Another problem, equally disturbing, is that the book is mechanically awkward. There are numerous misspellings of artists' names, instances of poor grammar, incorrectly captioned illustrations, and poor translations. . . . Artists of minor stature are heavily represented, while numerous major figures are not even mentioned. . . . The most serious drawback of the book is that Adhémar makes many misleading and incorrect generalizations. . . . Useless for research, undergraduate study, or even for casual reading."

Choice 9:200 Ap '72 220w

"This is the third of a three-volume series, originally in French, on the graphic art of the last three centuries. . . . [It] is more biographically light and conversational than aesthetically analytic and incisive. Written for a French audience, it is biased towards printmakers working or popular in France. It is a shame the publishers of this English version did not obtain a supplement from M. Adhémar concerning the last decade. . . . The reproductions are fairly good, though not as well printed as in the original French edition. An unfortunate number of minor errors should have been avoided." Andrew Robison

Library J 97:864 Mr 1 '72 160w

ADKINS, JAN. The art and industry of sandcastles; being an illustrated guide to basic constructions along with divers information devised by one Jan Adkins, a wily fellow. xxixp $4.50 Walker & Co.

723.8 Castles—Juvenile literature. Sand—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-8027-0336-4 LC 76-141615

"Line drawings depict early fortifications: a Saxon fort; a Norman keep; the Towers of London and of Roumeli Hissar (in Turkey); the Great Wall of China; and the development of the castles of Restormel and Pembroke. After a . . . description, floor plan or cross section, Adkins gives directions for making modified examples of each type with wet sand—molded, sliced and dug. . . . Grades one to six." (Library J)

"Both the subject and format here may attract a wide range of readers, for differing reasons. . . . The building techniques and the tossed-off historical references are for older children or a family of sandcastle devotees. Social studies teachers who could expand on Adkins' sometimes misleading oversimplifications (regarding castle life, the decline of castles, etc.) would find useful material here. Tiny figures of people in his sketches add whimsy; the chatty text, sometimes bordering on cuteness, is written in a legible, informal italic. . . . An instructive, fun-ramble on sandcastle building." R. M. McConnell

Library J 96:2123 Je 15 '71 180w

"The master sandbuilder's most important gift: a romantic nature' was plainly given to artist and author Adkins, who has made his sand-colored book into a small tour de force. Part practical guide to molding in sand with old buckets, part convincing sketches of real sand castles on small rocks or by a forest of sea grass, part loving study of medieval life and times, this book is all his own." Philip and Phyllis Morrison

Sci Am 225:112 D '71 120w

ADLER, IRVING. Atomic energy; il. by Ellen Viereck. (The Reason why bks) 47p $2.97 Day

621.48 Atomic energy—Juvenile literature
LC 75-132946

This discussion of atomic power includes "such topics as muscles and engines, energy, fossil fuels, splitting the atom, the nucleus, chain reaction, nuclear fuels, and fusion. . . . Grades three to six." (Library J)

"[This is a] brief, elementary treatment. . . . The many diagrams and illustrations are clear and will help young readers grasp the scientific ideas presented." P. W. Alley
Library J 97:1168 Mr 15 '72 80w

"The book is concise, clear, and logically arranged."

Sat R 54:37 J1 17 '71 70w

ADLER, IRVING. Energy; il. by Ellen Viereck. (The Reason why bks) 48p lib bdg $2.97 Day

531 Force and energy—Juvenile literature
LC 71-101463

This book "tells of the energy of motion, the energy of heat, fuel and electricity, the sun's energy, and nuclear energy—all the forms that energy may take, and how they are used." (Publisher's note) Glossary. "Grades four to five." (Library J)

"[This book does] a nice job of concept-crystallizing. At least, the examples and diagrams make sense to me, and I spotted nothing which I would feel the need to unteach in later years. There were oversimplifications, of course; but this is not a criticism." H. C. Stubbs
Horn Bk 47:624 D '71 250w

"[This book] can be put in collections alongside [Adler's] Energy and Power [BRD 1958]. . . . Illustrations are simple and helpful. There is . . . a very useful, specific table of contents—really needed since the book is so crammed full of information." Linda Greenberg
Library J 95:4382 D 15 '70 80w

ADLER, MORTIMER J. The common sense of politics. 265p $6.95 Holt

320 Political science—History
SBN 03-085966-2 LC 72-138870

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by George Kateb
Am Pol Sci R 66:596 Je '72 1450w

Reviewed by M. J. Shapiro
Ann Am Acad 401:198 My '72 300w

Reviewed by Peter Lyon
Encounter 39:73 J1 '72 140w

ADLOFF, RICHARD, jr. auth. The French Pacific Islands. See Thompson, V.

ADVANCES in understanding approval and gathering plans in academic libraries; ed. by Peter Spyers-Duran and Daniel Gore. 220p $11.95 W. Mich. univ; for sale by Int. scholarly bk. services

025.2 Acquisitions (Libraries). Book selection
ISBN 0-912244-08-9 LC 78-631886

This volume consists of the proceedings of The Second International Seminar on Approval and Gathering Plans in Large and Medium Size Academic Libraries held at Western Michigan University in October, 1969. It "provides statements on why certain libraries do or do not use [blanket, gathering and approval] systems and how they function. . . . About half the volume reports the dealers' panel, and the question period, and prints the statements by 13 dealers describing their services." (Library J)

"The seminar took place in a year when book budgets were sizeable and when federal support was great. . . . The papers reflect the age of affluence. It is assumed that the great amount of money being poured into approval plans is justifiable. . . . The book describes the services of a number of dealers offering approval plans. Several types of plans are represented, although changes in the services described have since taken place. . . . In spite of such changes, the services presented provide an overview of the different types of approval plans that were and are available to libraries. . . . The library market is dynamic and although its complexion has changed since the seminar, these proceedings play an important role in relating the development of approval plans in academic libraries." H. K. Rebuldela

Col & Res Lib 33:334 J1 '72 550w

"Some of the problems [of the systems] are approached directly or obliquely—but an organized critical analysis [is not provided. The book contains] considerable detail on the increasing computerized analysis by the dealers of the library's blanket specifications to the end of more complete supply of desired publications and a decrease in titles rejected by the library." Betty Rosenberg

Library J 96:1688 My 15 '71 350w

"[This volume] belies its title and reveals that all too few advances have been made in understanding approval plans. . . . [Daniel Gore's essay] sets a standard which the speakers and questioners at the meetings unfortunately fail to reach. . . . Libraries contemplating moving to an approval plan type of ordering might well find the lack of common ground among the librarians a source of confusion if they are hoping for guidance from this volume. On the other hand, the dealers represented show a sound grasp of what they can realistically hope to do for libraries and present their various programs briefly and clearly. The question-and-answer session following this portion of the program would have benefited from further editing, as would all such sessions included." Carol Schaafsma

LRTS 15:557 fall '71 360w

AFFRON, CHARLES. A stage for poets; studies in the theatre of Hugo & Musset. (Princeton univ. Princeton essays in European and comparative lit.) 254p il $9.50 Princeton univ. press

842 Hugo, Victor Marie. Musset, Alfred de. French drama—History and criticism
ISBN 0-691-06201-3 LC 75-153847

"In the nineteenth century, the French lyric poets imposed their diction on the theatrical genre and thus illuminated the essence of both poetry and theatre. Ten plays by Victor Hugo . . . and Alfred de Musset . . . most frequently performed in France today, are analyzed by Charles Affron to answer the question, 'Can the dialectic form of the theatre accommodate the solitary élan of the lyric poet?' . . . He considers those characteristics of lyric poetry—time, voice, and metaphor—which bring us closest to the . . . attitudes of Hugo and Musset. Then, examining the texts of Hernani, Les Burgraves, Torquemada, Fantasio, and Lorenzaccio as well as several lesser-known plays, Mr. Affron discusses such topics as poetic time, the scope of analogy, theatrical and poetic rhetoric, the guises of the poet-hero, and the manner of sounding the poet's voice upon the stage." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[Affron's] conclusions about romantic drama and the contributions of Hugo and Musset are judicious and well supported, with recent scholarship taken into account. Occasional stylistic infelicities . . . are surprising in an otherwise well written text. All French quotations are translated and act-by-act synopses of the plays are included. Excellent bibliography, unusually complete index. Highly recommended for all college and university libraries."

Choice 9:226 Ap '72 210w

"This study . . . is a welcome contribution to the literature on the much-neglected, and much-derogated, 19th-Century romantic theatre." B. L. Knapp

Library J 97:198 Ja 15 '72 160w

"This is an important work on the French Romantic drama. . . . [It] is a penetrating study which sheds new light not only on the French Romantic theatre but upon the whole concept of Romanticism. Every student of French literature will wish to acquire it."

Va Q R 48:cv summer '72 160w

AFRICA independent; a survey of political development. (Keesing's res. report) 317p maps $10; pa $3.95 Scribner

320.96 Africa—Politics—1960-
SBN 684-12532-3; 684-12531-5 (pa)
LC 70-162750

"The politics of each country is examined, from the rule and ancient lineage of Haile Selassie to the . . . career of Kwame Nkrumah, apartheid in South Africa, and recent developments in Rhodesia." (Sat R) Subject index. Index of political parties. Index of selected names.

"Predicated on the fact that the decade of the 1960's saw the political map of Africa undergo several significant changes, and the assumption that these changes have ceased—at least for the moment. Factually speaking, this volume has a wealth of information and would be of immense value to anyone who seeks a general introduction to the nations of Africa. However, the political scene is subject to many upheavals and the book could become outdated before it is purchased. While it is objective and has two excellent indices and numerous tables, it is lacking in bibliographic data as well as in-depth treatment. Recommended only for very general collections."

Choice 9:877 S '72 130w

"Emigrating to Africa? Read [this book]." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 55:70 My 6 '72 50w

AFRICAN perspectives; papers in the history, politics and economics of Africa presented to Thomas Hodgkin; ed. by Christopher Allen and R. W. Johnson. 438p 11 maps $17.50 Cambridge

916 Africa. Hodgkin, Thomas Lionel
ISBN 0-521-07948-9 LC 78-128497

These essays "represent original and previously unpublished work in the fields of African history, Islamic studies and the sociology of religion, and also of contemporary political and economic studies. . . . [Among the countries] discussed are Ghana, Guinea, Nigeria, Senegal, Guiné-Bissau, Zambia, Ivory Coast, Tanzania, Gambia and, as part of the African diaspora, Jamaica." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Index.

"Generally of higher quality than those found in similar collections, the essays are scholarly, concrete, analytical, readable. . . . What makes African Perspectives a stimulating and provocative volume is the author's conscious efforts to challenge the conventional wisdom on their topics (even that established by Hodgkin himself on occasion) and to offer alternative methodologies and explanations. These features combine to make the collection a fine tribute to their mentor and a significant contribution to African Studies." Sheldon Gellar

Am Pol Sci R 66:222 Mr '72 950w

"Seventeen essays in honor of the 60th birthday of noted Africanist Hodgkin. An uneven festschrift comprising contributions by noted scholars (Apter, Davidson, Goody, Suret-Canale, Wilks), friends and colleagues, and graduate students. . . . Scholars will find two articles of special interest: J. Holden's revisionist approach to Samori, and K. Post's study of Ethiopianism in Jamaica. An incomplete bibliography of Hodgkin's major works (two books, an anthology, numerous essays, articles, and reviews) is appended. Six maps, four illustrations. . . . Useful for advanced students."

Choice 8:387 S '71 110w

"There is, here, no evaluation of . . . [Hodgkin's] contribution . . . nor, in the seventeen papers which pay tribute to his inspiration, are there more than five references to his works. Indeed, the reader may wonder why so distinguished a memorial was merited, if he did not know already that it was Mr Hodgkin who fashioned the first and most influential political analysis of African nationalism. . . . This is a fascinatingly difficult book, for specialists only."

TLS p268 Mr 10 '72 750w

AGASSI, JOSEPH. Faraday as a natural philosopher. 359p il $12.50 Univ. of Chicago press

B or 92 Faraday, Michael
ISBN 0-226-01046-5 LC 73-151130

This work is "designed 'to consider and compare . . . the private, personal, or psychological [portrait of Faraday], and . . . the public, or scientific' one in an attempt 'to integrate the two.' . . . The work presents a series of arguments . . . to demonstrate . . . that Faraday was 'a nonmaterialistic realist' frustrated in his . . . desire to gain recognition not only as [an] . . . experimentalist but as a 'natural philosopher' and speculative thinker." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Stimulating, exasperating, informative, provocative of new insights, Agassi's 'partial portrait' of one of the great men of 19th-century science is a useful and important supplement to L. P. Williams' definitive Michael Faraday: a biography (BRD 1965). . . . Overlong, often repetitious, marred by some errors of fact, omissions, occasional infelicities of style and lapses in scholarship, the work still succeeds in giving helpful perspectives on a personality and its relation to scientific life in the 19th century. Required for historians of science of that period and as a reference. Useful for economic and social historians, interesting to philosophers and scientists. Good bibliography, name index, subject index. Recommended."

Choice 9:831 S '72 180w

"Although this is a biographical work, it is not a biography in the ordinary sense of the word; it could be described as biographical commentary. . . . I found this book interesting and stimulating, but think that it would be difficult to follow in many places for someone not well acquainted with Faraday's work." B. L. Stern

Library J 97:1802 My 15 '72 200w

"[Agassi] states that he would like to present a broader view of Faraday than he feels has been done in the past. . . . [His] mode of attack is to assume that everyone thinks of Faraday as strictly an experimentalist, show that he was strongly driven theoretically, and then argue that there is a dialectical interplay between the two. . . . [The question arises] whether all this needs to be done. The answer is probably no. . . . [The book] doesn't take proper account of [L.P.] Williams' biography. Agassi states that most of his research and even a first draft of the book were completed in 1956; indications are that no major modifications were made after that. References to Williams appear mainly as addenda at various appropriate points; a detailed discussion of the work is avoided. This avoidance is critical. . . . Agassi's style, which is florid and often entertaining, can also be obscure. The book would have gained considerably from an additional revision to tighten up the language." B. S. Finn

Science 176:665 My 12 '72 800w

AGOR, WESTON H. The Chilean senate; internal distribution of influence. (Tex. Univ. Inst. of Latin Am. studies. Latin Am. monographs, no 23) 206p $7 Univ. of Tex. press

328.83 Chile. Congress. Senate
ISBN 0-292-70146-2 LC 79-165918

The author "considers the extent of influence of the Senate generally, examines the operation of the Senate committees, discusses the relative impact of different political parties within the Senate committees and considers the informal norms governing Senate behavior." (Ann Am Acad) Bibliography. Index.

"The author presents a detailed and carefully documented analysis of the functioning of the Chilean Senate. . . . Throughout he uses methodological approaches suggested by scholars working on the United States Congress, approaches which prove to be singularly applicable to the Chilean situation at this point in time (late 1960s). The book is written in a straightforward, concise fashion and provides useful material." L. C. Behrman

Ann Am Acad 402:170 Jl '72 220w

"An interesting but disjointed assemblage of facts, this slim volume fails to provide a context for its description of the institutional life and folkways of the Chilean Senate. Focused primarily upon the operation of the Senate's committees during the government of Eduardo Frei (1964-70), scant attention is paid to the substantive issues in that government. . . . An epilogue, briefly reviewing developments in the first year of the Allende government, including his proposal to abolish the bicameral legislature, lacks any linkage to the preceding data."

Choice 9:277 Ap '72 150w

AGRARIAN policies and problems in Communist and non-Communist countries; ed. by W. A. Douglas Jackson. 488p maps $15 Univ. of Wash. press

338.1 Agriculture—Communist countries. Agriculture—Economic aspects. Agriculture and state. Agriculture—Asia
LC 75-103292

This is the "third in a series of symposia arranged by the Conference on Soviet Agricultural and peasant affairs . . . [and held at the University of Washington in August 1967]. The first volume, Soviet agricultural and peasant affairs [BRD 1964] edited by Roy D. Laird, dealt only with the Soviet Union. The second, Soviet and East European agriculture [BRD 1968], edited by J. F. Karcz, contained papers on Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, and Poland. This book extends the geographical coverage to Asian Communist countries and, for comparative purposes, Taiwan and Japan. Index." (Choice)

"The authors and discussants of the 16 papers include economists, political scientists, historians, and geographers from the U.S., U.K., West Germany, France, Japan, and South Korea. The papers are well documented, and a good index helps the reader locate the same topic in different chapters. As usual in such symposia, the papers vary widely in scope, approach, technical sophistication, and quality. Nevertheless, the book is a basic source on agriculture in Communist countries, useful for undergraduate reading assignments and research as well as for more advanced readers."

Choice 9:251 Ap '72 190w

"The key-note address [at the conference] was delivered by Professor Wittfogel, who pronounced the summary verdict that 'in the realm of extensive agriculture the American (and European) way is superior to the Soviet way, and in the realm of intensive agriculture the Japanese (and Taiwanese) way is superior to the Chinese way'. Most of the contributors obediently directed their efforts to support this conclusion. . . . One wonders how far the statistics quoted can be relied on, and how far their comparability can be guaranteed. The papers on Soviet agriculture . . . deal for the most part with institutions such as the Sovkhoz, Kolkhoz and cooperatives. But the historical dimension is . . . lacking; hardly anything is said of the progress and consequences of the vast and continuous migration from the villages to the towns. Nor do we get any very clear picture of what goes on inside these institutions, or in the Russian countryside in general."

TLS p250 Mr 3 '72 500w

AGUILAR, LUIS E. Cuba 1933; prologue to revolution. 256p $9.50 Cornell univ. press

972.91 Cuba—History
ISBN 0-8014-0660-9 LC 70-162544

"Focusing on a crucial episode in Cuban history—the Revolution of 1933—Professor Aguilar describes the social, economic, and political forces that formed Cuban nationalism, [in an attempt to show] that ideas, attitudes, and programs that seemed to originate with Fidel Castro's revolution actually began in 1933. He explores . . . the early influence of the Communist party, and sheds . . . light on the interventionist role of the United States government." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Aguilar's description of the Autentico governments (1944-1952) is a complete whitewash of corrupt and unsavory politicians who catered to United States and Cuban investors. [His] discussion of Cuban 'nationalism' is so vague and all-inclusive as to be meaningless. Aguilar's discussion of the ideas and tactics of the revolutionary student groups is frequently marred by hostile ejaculations. . . . [He] has the annoying habit of ascribing views which he espouses as 'realistic' and 'pragmatic' and 'unavoidable.' At one point he describes the United States imperialistic presence as an 'unavoidable fact.' Obviously, since Castro this 'unavoidable fact' has been avoided. The weakest part of Aguilar's discussion stems from his lack of any theory or analytical framework to explain U.S. policy. . . . Finally, a good deal of the story presented has already been covered by Hugh Thomas, Robert Smith, and others." J. F. Petras

Ann Am Acad 403:179 S '72 340w

"The first monograph in the English language on the Cuban revolution of 1933. Aguilar, a Cuban exile, gives a balanced and complete coverage of the period. Much of the material is not new . . . [but Aguilar] clearly defines the significance of the events described and he draws a close relationship between the revolution of 1933 and events which came before and after. . . . This book is important for students of Cuba, who are interested in the relationship between U.S. intervention in 1933 and the rise to power of Fidel Castro."

Choice 9:871 S '72 170w

"There is much new material here, even if not all of it is well digested. The book's peculiar strength lies in its expert delineation of the complex cultural and political forces at work in Cuba, and in its capacity to destroy—in a calm and persuasive fashion—the last vestiges of Welles's reputation for fairness and decency. As an émigré scholar, Aguilar holds back from the often made assertion that by destroying the 'moderate' revolution of 1933 the U.S. made the far more radical revolution of 1959 inevitable; the reader will have to make up his own mind whether to accept Aguilar's disclaimer or not. Highly recommended." Mark Falcoff

Library J 97:1011 Mr 15 '72 250w

AHERN, JAMES F. Police in trouble; our frightening crisis in law enforcement; foreword by John V. Lindsay. 260p $6.95 Hawthorn bks.

363.2 Police—U.S. Law enforcement
LC 78-179115

"Decrying the lack of leadership among police professionals, the former chief of the New Haven police department presents . . . [an] appraisal of the modern-day police force." (Library J)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 230:96 J1 '72 120w

"To present his answers to the problems that confront local police forces, Ahern first tells of the 'closed fraternity' that is the police. This is without doubt the most significant part of the book since it tells of the dilemmas of the lower echelons of law enforcement which tend to remove any idealism for the neophyte and exclude him from any social or intellectual contact with non-policemen. [He] graphically recounts the plight of the cop as he pursues the aim of order-maintenance. . . . This is an excellent book on police problems; its weaknesses lie in its philosophical positions. Ahern is beyond his depth . . . 'in-house' liberal." J. J. Conlin

Best Sell 32:59 My 1 '72 400w

"Chief Ahern gives us a devastating picture of how policemen are chosen and the way they operate. Political and economic corruption, hidebound training, misapplied effort, absurd definition of functions—all these and many more disgraceful failures in police operation are bluntly described. . . . [One of the] most important elements of this book [lies] in its candid description from first-hand knowledge of how bad things are now. . . . Among a long list of telling points is Chief Ahern's reminder that police deal mainly with street crime, while white collar crime—millions of dollars stolen by lawyers, businessmen, doctors, politicians—is beyond their purview. . . . His bold and experienced words should be read by everybody with civic conscience." E. D. Canham

Christian Science Monitor p8 Ap 27 '72 420w

"[The author] sees little of value in existing law-enforcement agencies and offers numerous specific suggestions for improvement, many of which parallel those of the President's crime commission. Nevertheless, they seem more relevant than redundant because of the author's personal experience. . . . Two suggested improvements call for departments to issue detailed policy statements on such discretionary matters as the use of handguns, and that they begin to regard the patrolman as the heart of a department. Well worth reading." D. L. Norrgard

Library J 97:1795 My 15 '72 200w

"This analysis by a former New Haven police chief who lost his job after trying to institute reforms is perhaps more severe and incriminating than the charges of radical critics or liberal reformers. Ahern ridicules the notion that police fight crime or impose law and order. . . . [This is a] very forceful exposé."

N Y Rev of Books 18:34 Ap 6 '72 180w

Reviewed by John Holt
Sat R 55:51 Ag 5 '72 850w

AHLSTROM, SYDNEY E. A religious history of the American people. 1158p $19.50 Yale univ. press

200.973 U.S.—Religion. Church and social problems
ISBN 0-300-01475-9 LC 72-151564

"Ahlstrom traces the history of American religion from its origins in Europe, through its diverse expressions in the American past, to its complex form in the 20th Century. Departing from the . . . confines of denominational or church history, he discusses American religious life and thought in light of the social, intellectual, and political context." (Library J)

Reviewed by M. V. Gannon

America 128:22 Ja 13 '73 800w

"The whole story is told, without skimping . . . balanced in chronological allotment of space and in attention to diverse religious traditions. Inevitably and necessarily because of its long predominance, Protestantism claims three-quarters of the volume, but there is no stinting in accounts of later-blooming faiths that make up the wide-ranging spectrum of 20th century religious pluralism in the United States. . . . In a concluding quotation Ahlstrom notes that 'it is one of the great charms of books that they have to end.' It is a mark of his own gifts and stimulating 'charm' that after so many pages the reader is left unsatiated, with much to ponder and with tantalizing questions in mind as to the future course of the religious life of the American people." W. S. Hudson

Christian Century 89:1188 N 22 '72 600w

"By any standards . . . [this] is a story of remarkable range and depth. . . . [Mr Ahlstrom has] developed and extended, with . . . thoroughness and self-consciousness, a well-established genre of American religious history. It is the extent, rather than the novelty, of this reassessment that will most strike the reader. But when he goes on to revise the concept of what is relevant for religious history from the standpoint of what he calls 'the turbulent sixties' . . . Mr Ahlstrom may be thought to risk weaknesses as well as gains. What he gains is breadth of sympathy, a non-dogmatic sensitivity to the variety of the American religious experience. What he lacks is any clear perspective beyond that of a vague liberalism and as it were, intellectual egalitarianism."

Economist 245:63 D 2 '72 550w

"This carefully researched and documented analysis of the American religious consciousness deserves a place in libraries of all types; it will be essential for all theological schools, but will be widely read by laymen as well." J. B. Trotti

Library J 97:3601 N 1 '72 150w

"[This] book does not represent new departures. Instead [it] is the fruition or fulfillment of the accepted religious history, the longest, most detailed, most polished of the works in its tradition. . . . The most important assumption is tucked into the title; this is to be a history of 'the people.' Here Ahlstrom makes it only half way. Yes, this is people's history in the sense that it tries to deal with all the people. Only Winthrop Hudson among earlier writers has tried to treat so many peoples so fairly. . . . [Unfortunately the author] still has to resort to telling the story not of people but of leaders, not of congregations but of preachers, not of mass-goers but of bishops. . . . He has made the most of the sources which can be reached through the old monographs. If he misses the people, it is not because he wanted to overlook them or found them unimportant." M. E. Marty

N Y Times Bk R p40 O 29 '72 1400w

AIKEN, CONRAD. The clerk's journal; being the diary of a queer man; an undergraduate poem together with a brief memoir of Harvard, Dean Briggs and T. S. Eliot. 26p $8.50; ltd ed $30 Eakins press

811

LC 70-152799

This poem, "written in 1911 and now published for the first time, is a 450-line story of a clerk's love affair. . . . [It includes Aiken's] introductory 'Memoir' . . . [as well as a] facsimile reproduction of the original manuscript." (Library J)

"This poem was written . . . for Dean Briggs English V composition class at Harvard. The facsimile [includes] Briggs' emendations . . . [as well as] a brief letter of response to the poem by one of Aiken's classmates. . . . The poem itself—written in two parts, alternating rhyme scheme, in iambic tetrameters—is memorabilia worthy of being added to Aikeniana. Valuable to readers of 'early' Aiken particularly, and an historically important addition to Aiken collections."

Choice 8:1584 F '72 120w

"The poem reflects [that] Aiken and his contemporary, Eliot were seized with a desire to find a new language. . . . This fundamental contribution that . . . Aiken made to the poetry of our time . . . can be ignored no more than the vast energies, poetical, intellectual, which Eliot with Williams, Pound, and the rest banked up for our later investing in creative work and in criticism." Theodore Weiss

Encounter 38:67 D '71 400w

"Browns and grays, clouds and rain are typical of the mood and imagery of the poem. Aiken accurately notes . . . that the poem is 'very young, very funny when it didn't quite mean to be, and unmistakably the work of a very young man.' As might be expected, however, it still prefigures the fine poetry that Aiken was to write. . . . All serious collections of American poetry will want this thin yet elegantly made volume." P. A. Dollard

Library J 96:3764 N 15 '71 170w

Va Q R 48:cii summer '72 100w

AIKEN, HENRY DAVID. Predicament of the university. 404p $11.95 Ind. univ. press

378.73 Colleges and universities—U.S. Education, Higher
ISBN 253-12970-2 LC 79-143618

The author urges that "the university be reconceived to create a continuous interaction between professional and liberal education so that consideration of humane values and quality of life may permeate the academy—from freshman to trustee. . . . He attacks the 'ideology of rationalism,' . . . comments on the anti-art movement . . . attacks departmental parochialism, the government-industry-university complex, the multiversity, and the core-of-traditional wisdom programs, and he defends free universities, modern art, and the religious impulse." (Publisher's note) Index. Some of the essays have appeared in such periodicals as The New York Review of Books and The Journal of Aesthetic Education.

"Mistitled. This is really a miscellaneous collection of essays. . . . Undergraduates will not find the last six assorted essays on teaching the arts, youth, the new morality, and rationalism of much use to them. 'The value of humanistic education' is the closest one comes to a general theme. . . . Recommended for only multiversity and graduate school libraries."

Choice 8:1492 Ja '72 170w

"Asserting that the university remains in peril of its life, Aiken . . . attempts to identify its predicament. . . . [He] draws on his own academic experiences, especially at Harvard and Brandeis, and debates sharply with other contemporary writers on the subject. Capably written and strongly favoring philosophy and the voice of youth, the book is especially important for academic collections." J. W. Stein

Library J 96:2079 Je 15 '71 140w

AIKEN, JOAN. Died on a rainy Sunday. 121p $4.95; lib bdg $4.59 Holt

ISBN 0-03-088587-6; 0-03-088588-4 (lib bdg)
LC 73-182777

"Jane Drummond's architect husband, Graham, insists that she take back her old job temporarily to help meet spiraling expenses. . . . Jane hates to leave her two young children, but Graham hires Mr. and Mrs. McGregor as gardener and housekeeper and Jane dutifully begins commuting to London every day. She soon discovers that little Caroline is terrified of sadistic Mrs. McGregor, but spinelessly puts up with the situation because Graham refuses to fire her. Eventually Jane realizes that the McGregors have some sort of hold over Graham. . . . While Jane is away from the house, Mrs. McGregor kills Graham and the pair attempt to force Jane to sign a confession by claiming to have kidnapped her children. . . . Grade seven and up." (Library J)

"According to the author, really good juvenile literature must include the same ingredients

AIKEN, JOAN—Continued

as adult fare, only 'squeezed into a smaller compass.' True! But even adults may fight a revolution at such brutality. . . . [This] is a genuine cliff-hanger, but Miss Aiken spins such good spells without such quantities of gore, why entertain this way? Recommended, with reservations, for Jr. High and up." Mrs. J. G. Gray

Best Sell 32:97 My 15 '72 200w

"[This book] is advertised as a juvenile but could equally well be considered an adult gothic romance reminiscent of the book-length novels of suspense and terror included in women's magazines. . . . Readers will undoubtedly enjoy this romance-mystery, but a few may want to shake some sense into Jane." S. L. Kennerly
Library J 97:1928 My 15 '72 150w

"A thriller by Joan Aiken is like an ice cream cone. Both must be consumed at a single sitting and both leave a cold but pleasurable feeling in the pit of the stomach. . . . Miss Aiken has given us a simon-pure chiller, delicious to the end." Georgess McHargue
N Y Times Bk R p8 J1 23 '72 350w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 55:83 My 20 '72 90w [YA]

AIKEN, JOAN. The green flash, and other tales of horror, suspense, and fantasy. 163p $4.95; lib bdg $4.59 Holt

ISBN 0-03-080288-1; 0-03-080289-X
LC 73-155870

"A small self-contained child who dreams reality; the ghost of a love-struck, bicycle-riding night watchman; a canary who bears an acute resemblance to the younger sister of Charles II; an old lady, hard of hearing, almost blind, but with a murderous sense of smell . . . are a few of the characters . . . in this . . . collection." (Publisher's note)

"[The author] reinforces her reputation as a superb writer in the horror-mystery field in [this] collection of fourteen stories covering a span of twenty-five years, previously published in England. The stories, skillfully plotted and characterized, range from the fantastic to the humorous to the grisly. Suspense is constant and each tale culminates in a surprise ending. Not one of them disappoints." P. G.
Book World p11 (children's issue)
N 7 '71 60w

"[In these stories] the author combines the luxuriance of invention found in her free-wheeling, full-length extravaganzas with the restrained, focused art of the short story. Some of the tales deal with improbable possibilities; some are grisly tales of cold horror, revenge, and murder. Others represent ghostly extensions of reality, sometimes even stretching into ludicrous humor; and one story—'Searching for Summer'—is a portentous ecological fantasy. The title story is a tour de force, its last sentence ending the book like a sudden crack of lightning." E. L. H.
Horn Bk 48:54 F '72 300w

"[This] is a chilling collection of . . . gruesome little atmosphere pieces. . . . After the initial shock wears off, however, the tales become rather monotonous in style and plotting." S. L. Kennerly

Library J 96:4200 D 15 '71 60w

Reviewed by Richard Elman
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p42 N 7 '71
130w

AKINTOYE, S. A. Revolution and power politics in Yorubaland, 1840-1893; Ibadan expansion and the rise of Ekitiparapo. 278p $10 Humanities press

966.9 Yorubas. Nigeria—History
ISBN 0-391-00168-X LC 73-27611

"This is a study in military and diplomatic history. . . . It gives an . . . introduction to the whole of eighteenth-and-nineteenth-century Yorubaland . . . [and deals with] the question of Yoruba unity . . . [as well as] such problems as how urbanization took place; how a state whose expansion was military incorporated refugees and the conquered; and how related African groups, threatened by signs of European advance, did or (as in this case) did not perceive the threat—or did not regard it as of sufficient importance to set aside differences." (Am Hist R)

"This is an important study, adjusting as it does the perspective on nineteenth-century history of the key Nigerian group known collectively as the Yoruba. . . . It is mainly a book for specialists; the novice in African history may lose his way amid the many names of people and places and positions (one could wish for more and clearer maps, particularly for one that put Yorubaland in Nigeria). . . . Each of the author's analyses emerges with clarity throughout the book, making it a valuable and stimulating contribution." Jean Herskovits

Am Hist R 77:818 Je '72 470w

"[This work has] the solid virtues of orthodox historiography—and some of its vices, including, alas, a fair measure of indigestibility." C. C. Wrigley

Encounter 39:66 J1 '72 200w

AKPAN, NTIEYONG U. The struggle for secession, 1966-1970; a personal account of the Nigerian Civil War. 225p maps $11 Int. scholarly bk. services

966.9 Nigeria—History—Civil War, 1967-1970. Nigeria—Politics and government
ISBN 0-7146-2930-8

The author seeks to answer the questions "were Biafran secession and the civil war really inevitable? Could there not have been one without the others?" . . . [He] traces the course of events from the killings of May 1966 and the second military coup of July of that year, through secession and the subsequent civil war, to the collapse of Biafra and the flight of the Biafran leader, Ojukwu." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Akpan sees his civil servant role from an objective viewpoint but writes subjectively about the relationships he had with the Ibo/Biafran leaders. An antisecessionist, he is highly critical of the war. . . . An important book because of the firsthand insights into the decision-making processes that took place; the attitudes of Ibo/Biafrans to the British, the role played by relief agencies. The book suggests reasons why the war lasted so long and accounts for the unexpected collapse of Biafra. . . . Recommended for college libraries." Choice 9:1024 O '72 200w

"This book promises to be a unique 'insider's' account of Biafra's birth and brief existence, since its author was chief secretary to the military government and head of the civil service in Biafra. It is, however, disappointingly sparse in details; and even a broader analysis of the policies and problems involved is lacking. The author's view of Biafra centers mainly on his evaluation of the personality of its head of state, C. O. Ojukwu, who is depicted as weak, but tyrannical and stubborn. . . . It is an interpretation grounded on an exceedingly narrow range of considerations (there is no mention of Nigerian oil interests, for instance), and it will be challenged widely by many of Akpan's former Biafran colleagues." M. M. Reik
Library J 97:2182 Je 15 '72 230w

"A courageous and important book. . . . Mr Akpan was one of the half-dozen top men selected by Ojukwu to accompany him on his eleven-hour flight out of beleaguered Biafra to asylum in the Ivory Coast (whose pro-Biafran President is here revealingly depicted in new colours). . . . If some pages read like a novel, they are no more fictitious than many of the bizarre events of the war itself. . . . What emerges is a frightening picture of cliques, . . . graft, suspicion, arrests and total confusion. . . . It is this sustained perspective on Biafra's leadership that makes [this] in some ways the most important book on the Nigerian Civil War yet to have appeared. . . . [However] it is only an aspect and not the full story." TLS p981 Ag 25 '72 700w

ALBERS, JOSEF. Interaction of color. 74p 11 col il $8.50; pa $3.95 Yale univ. press

701.8 Color
ISBN 0-300-01474-0 LC 74-147901

"Originally published in 1963 with 150 color studies, this work was priced at $200. This edition contains the original text plus ten color plates (including the two cover illustrations); Albers, in a short new preface, discusses these plates and relates them to the text." (Library J)

"The original work . . . is unique, neither a color theory nor a color system, but a teaching approach which confers upon the student the responsibility and privilege of learning through search, observation, and discovery. The admirably succinct text, essentially an account and rationale of Albers' color course at Yale, is informative and valuable. But, for full effectiveness, it needs the support of the 150 splendid plates and author's commentary, which made of the original edition a virtual color course in itself. The plates of the present edition . . . are indications only, missing in greater or lesser degree the nicety of adjustment which was the point of the original exercises. . . . Recommended, nevertheless, for the intrinsic merits of the text."

Choice 8:1576 F '72 150w

Reviewed by R. R. Harris

Library J 96:3594 N 1 '71 40w

ALBERTINI, RUDOLF VON. Decolonization; the administration and future of the colonies, 1919-1960; tr. from the German by Francisca Garvie. 680p $12.95 Doubleday

325.3 Colonies—History
LC 79-144264

The author deals with "the way in which the major European powers have addressed themselves to the problem of decolonization and how they envisioned the future of their overseas possessions. He concentrates on Britain and France, but [includes] . . . commentaries on the colonial possessions of the U.S., Belgium, Portugal, and the Netherlands." (Choice)

"The material on which [the author] has drawn consists primarily of official British and French pronouncements, of party programs, and of speeches and writings of influential political leaders, colonial administrators, and other commentators. . . . Much of this material overflows into the abundant footnotes which occupy 113 pages. . . . [A central theme] is inevitably the familiar difference between the British and the French in their basic colonial philosophy, the French looking to assimilation through direct rule, the British to the development of distinct societies through indirect rule. . . . Although the author abstains from openly taking sides, it seems reasonably evident that on the whole he finds the British position more acceptable. . . . The book . . . covers a large amount of ground, and maintains a high level of scholarly moderation and sensible interpretation. . . . This is not however, to say that [it] adds very much to the existing stock of knowledge in either interpretation or substantive material." Rupert Emerson

Am Pol Sci R 66:667 Je '72 1000w

"Originally published in Germany under the title Dekolonization (1966), now in excellent translation . . . [this] is a comparative approach that successfully demonstrates that the methods of the colonial powers were determined by nationalistic preconceptions in Europe. . . . [The book] is intelligent, modest, well documented, and classic in the sense that no library interested in colonial affairs can afford to be without it."

Choice 8:1368 D '71 180w

"This thorough study . . . is based on extensive research and is recommended for academic collection." B. S. Viault

Library J 96:1609 My 1 '71 100w

ALBRAND, MARTHA. Manhattan North. 223p $5.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

LC 70-169659

This story centers "on the brutal slaying of Supreme Court Justice Clark Butworth. Tad Wood, a young lawyer assigned to a Presidential Commission investigating the murder, quickly turns up unusual facts about the case: Butworth was wearing a disguise when he died, and a psychic gives an address for the murderer which turns out to be that of Tad's godfather, San Angelo. Then, the godfather sends his granddaughter, Melinda, to a convent school in Italy because he found her in bed with an older man. But she manages to smuggle a letter to Tad, who flies to Italy and learns that the late Justice Butworth was her lover." (Library J)

"The writing is controlled and the plot sustained to the end; but it is not an appetizing subject."

Best Sell 31:362 N 1 '71 110w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 96:3643 N 1 '71 70w

"[This is a] fast-moving political thriller. . . . Realistic characterizations and carefully built-up suspense lead to a surprising and horrifying climax." Joni Bodart

Library J 96:4204 D 15 '71 120w [YA]

Reviewed by Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p23 D 19 '71 90w

"One keeps expecting political overtones. None appear. Manhattan North remains, however, a novel of crime and detection, written with more thought and polish than most."

Haskel Frankel

Sat R 54:58 N 27 '71 100w

ALBRECHT, MILTON C., ed. The sociology of art and literature; a reader; ed. by Milton C. Albrecht, James H. Barnett & Mason Griff. 752p $15 Praeger

700 Art and society. Art criticism
LC 70-76785

For descriptive note, reviews excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by A. F. Suny

Am Anthropol 74:1462 D '72 800w

Reviewed by P. P. Clark

Am J Soc 78:719 N '72 850w

Reviewed by M. R. Stein

Contemp Sociol 1:154 Mr '72 500w

ALBRIGHT, JOSEPH. What makes Spiro run; the life and times of Spiro Agnew. 295p $6.95 Dodd

B or 92 Agnew, Spiro T.

ISBN 0-396-06551-1 LC 75-38525

This biography, by a journalist, is based on clippings and interviews, including two with Vice President Agnew.

Reviewed by P. J. Hannon

Ann Am Acad 404:281 N '72 240w

"The best section of the book is the last chapter, 'President Agnew?' Here Albright makes his fairest evaluations and concedes the ability, the acumen, the courage, and determination of the Vice-President. . . . [Albright] is too frankly partisan to present an objective study. But if you want to find out what the liberal politico thinks of Agnew, this is your book." S. J. Laut

Best Sell 32:160 Jl 1 '72 400w

"Albright makes a robust, if marginally successful, attempt to support the proposition that Spiro Agnew is a conniver, much more disposed to cash in on his political success than most people suspect. . . . [The author] is refreshingly aggressive. He doesn't like Spiro Agnew, or at least he doesn't like much of what Spiro Agnew has done, and he says so. . . . If the vice president ever gets around to commenting on [this book], he will probably say 'hatchet job!' But it isn't. As irreverent, pompous, and nasty as Albright sometimes gets, he meticulously presents other sides to his most serious allegations. He is also sensitive in his approach to the more issue-oriented aspects of Agnew's tenure. His book is an intriguing, spirited, eminently enjoyable exploration of indiscretions committed with facility in high places of public trust. In view of the clamor for more honesty in government, this is the book that will hurt Spiro Agnew the most." Walter Jacobson

Book World p1 My 14 '72 300w

"[This] is a loosely joined, loosely written set of anecdotes about Agnew. Trivia is intermixed with more instructive information about the steps in Agnew's rise and the shifts in his policy positions. Wherever possible Albright looks for some sign of wrong-doing or financial payoff in Agnew's background, but finds nothing. What fails to emerge is a convincing, rounded portrait of Agnew himself. . . . The book has obvious contemporary interest. But it is certainly not a 'must' for political science collections."

Choice 9:878 S '72 170w

Christian Century 89:552 My 10 '72 10w

"[This] is a breezy account replete with personal-interest details . . . but lacking an intensive analysis of important political events. . . . In general, the book reads like a series of articles in the Sunday section of a mass-audience newspaper." Hindy Schachter

Library J 97:1022 Mr 15 '72 130w

ALBUM of American history; James Truslow Adams, ed. in chief; J. G. E. Hopkins, editor. 6v il pl maps $120; to libs & schools $98.40 Scribner

973 U.S.—History—Pictorial works. U.S.—Social life and customs
LC 74-91746

This edition "consists of six volumes: Colonial Period, 1783-1853, 1853-1893, End of an Era (1893-1917), 1917-1953, and 1953-1968 and General Index, Volumes I-VI. The Album was originally published in 1944-1949 (edited by James Truslow Adams) and consisted of the first four text volumes and an index [see BRD 1944 through 1950 under Adams, J. T.] . . . In 1960, a new volume V covering the years 1917-1953 was released. Volume VI, index, and a revised volume I were published in 1961. These volumes were edited by Joseph G. E. Hopkins. The new edition was printed from new plates, and over 500 pictures have been rephotographed. . . . [There have been some revisions in the first four volumes]. . . . Volume V still carries the 1960 copyright date. Volume VI extends the coverage through 1968 and includes the new General index. The purpose of the set, as stated by Adams in volume I, is 'to tell the history of America through pictures made at the time the history was being made'. . . . The text seeks merely to identify the time, place and subject, together with the minimum requirement of explanatory narrative. . . . The purpose of the 144 new pages in volume VI not relegated to Index is to show: The continuing involvement of the United States in world problems; . . . the new militancy of American Negroes in their struggle for full citizenship and economic opportunity [and] something of the developments in science and technology which have marked the period. . . . [Such topics] as hippies, student uprisings, the New Left, the peace movement, poverty, ecology, and religion are treated in pictures and words.' (Booklist)

"All of the illustrations are in black and white, indicate the source, and depict some of the events of the times and the everyday life of the people. The Foreword of volume V emphasizes that the aim is to present a picture of the plain people and the common life. . . . Running chapter headings are used throughout the set. The first four volumes, particularly, contain a fascinating presentation of pictures . . . [with] new photographs, rearrangement of pictures, changes in the size of photographs, and fewer pictures in some cases. Only a few slight text changes were noted. . . . The shift in emphasis [in volume VI] has resulted in a book which does not seem to be an integral part of the set. The charm and reference value of the earlier volumes is in the view presented of the 'plain people of the United States in their customary occupations.' To present this view is not one of the purposes of volume VI. The claim in volume VI in 'How to Use This Index' that 'Each picture in the six volumes is listed under its subject; each detail in each picture is listed under its name' is not borne out. . . . The Album of American History [offers a] pictorial 'panorama of the life of the times,' from the discovery of America through 1968. The 6,300 pictures make it an interesting browsing set for home or library. Since the changes and additions in the new edition do not make the Album an essential purchase for those having the previous edition, and because of inadequate indexing for the two volumes indexed since the publication of the original, the 1969 revision . . . is not recommended."

Booklist 68:825 Je 1 '72 1600w

"When this [work] initially appeared it received some favorable comments but many critical appraisals from historians. One shortcoming, the lack of an index, has been corrected in this reprint. Many of the harsh comments dealt with the poor quality of the brief text from the perspective of the historian. Nothing has been done to correct this, and the text continues to be the major weakness. The illustrations are interesting and will appeal to readers. . . . At this price and with many new works forthcoming on the Revolutionary period, one doubts that this volume is an essential purchase."

Choice 9:590 Je '72 180w (Review of v 1)

ALCOCK, ANTONY. History of the International Labour Organization. 384p $15 Octagon bks.

341.1 International Labor Organization
ISBN 0-374-90127-9 LC 78-144821

The "author chronicles the history of how the ILO, which began as an arm of the League of Nations, has survived the disruptions of the Depression, World War II, and the . . . attempts of the cold war belligerents to use it for political advantage. . . . [He also discusses how] the ILO has had to deal with . . . problems of forced labor, technical assistance to underdeveloped countries, apartheid, migratory labor, human rights, etc." (Library J)

"Little understanding of the trade union movement or of labor history is in evidence . . . [Alcock's] bibliography is incomplete with important works missing. Too technical for a general reader, offering little of interest for the research scholar, the work would be of value to a college undergraduate concerned with the problems of international organization."

Choice 9:252 Ap '72 150w

"The study is detailed and objective, and the material has been drawn mostly from the extensive archives of the ILO. A significant contribution to the literature of international labor cooperation and a definitive history of a major agency of international cooperation."

R. L. Filippelli

Library J 97:194 Ja 15 '72 140w

"Alcock has done a prodigious—some might say a disproportionate—amount of research into those early years, when the Organisation laboured under the handicap of the absence of the United States, and very soon there were the problems presented by the Soviet Union on the one hand, and by Fascist Italy on the other. . . . The book is not easy reading. But the ILO's recurring preoccupations . . . are competently if somewhat summarily set out in this workmanlike contribution to the history of contemporary international effort."

TLS p1000 Ag 20 '71 550w

ALCOCK, LESLIE. Arthur's Britain: history and archaeology. AD 367-634. 415p il pl maps $11.95 St Martins

914.2 Great Britain—History—To 1066. Great Britain—Antiquities. Arthur. King
LC 72-185252

"This book is about the Arthur of history and the Britain in which he lived. It demonstrates that Arthur was no figment of myth, but a genuine historical figure. He . . . provides a symbol for Britain's attempt to retain her integrity in the troubled centuries of Roman collapse and barbarian invasion. Arthur's Britain traces this attempt from the first major barbarian attack in AD 367 to the failure of the last British counter-attack in AD 634. Arthur himself stands at the mid-point of the story." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Alcock, director of the excavations of Cadbury-Camelot in Somerset, England, presents in full the case for the historic Arthur (fl. A.D. 500) . . . [and brings] to bear extensive historic and archaeological evidence after a detailed discussion of the nature of such evidence from the period. The book covers the political, cultural, and economic history of all peoples in the British Isles during that time, including the Germanic 'English'. . . . Alcock presents for the first time a general survey of the culture of the Britons during the period A.D. 450-650 and updates and modifies standard histories of the period as well as the chapter on the historic Arthur in Arthurian literature in the Middle Ages edited by R. S. Loomis (BRD 1961). . . . Extensively illustrated with plates, figures, and maps. . . . Highly recommended."

Choice 9:1186 N '72 190w

"In an interesting and valuable chapter on archaeological method, Alcock stresses the inconclusive and subjective nature of the discipline. He states that 'the main business of the archaeologist is not with objective facts, but with inferences.' He shows how time-hallowed techniques, such as the use of trial trenches, may destroy evidence beyond any hope of ever understanding a site. . . . An important and interesting, but difficult book."

T. M. Avery

Library J 97:3706 N 15 '72 180w

"[Alcock] writes soundly . . . and has ordered his myriad facts and queries with skill. . . . All the time I was reading and enjoying [this book] I was aware of a final chapter, 'Arthur and Britain', which I hoped I was being led up to and which would bring the whole work together. Here was the real disappointment. In the end I did not feel I had been well led to it, and the little chapter itself was rather sketchy (incidentally making far less of the importance of Arthur's victories than many other historians have done). It would be quite unfair to say that the Arthurian material is a sugar coating—and the book is far from being a pill. All the same I think it would have been better to have given Arthur a more natural place in the story of his times and to have kept him off the title page." Jacquetta Hawkes

New Statesman 82:830 D 10 '71 1100w

ALDERMAN, CLIFFORD LINDSEY. The golden century; England under the Tudors. 191p pl $4.95 Messner

942.05 Great Britain—History—Tudors, 1485-1603—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-671-32514-0 LC 74-182946

"From 1483 to 1603 England was ruled by three kings and three queens who exercised immense influence. Through a series of biographies, the history of the period is presented chronologically from the rise of Henry VII and the Tudors to the death of Elizabeth I and the close of the 'Golden Century.' [Annotated bibliography. Bibliography. Index.] Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

"In the opening chapter, a rather pedestrian general overview of the lives of the three kings and the three queens of the Tudor period is made. There are also introduced brief but authentic-sounding thumbnail sketches of lowly young men who were able to rise to fame and fortune, because, for the first time, under the Tudors many of the common people were able to improve their way of life. Although these sketches provide the reader with a good picture of the life in village, town, and in the great city of London, it is not until the author treats of the individual kings and queens, the foreign intrigues, the murders, betrayals, religious persecutions, the plots and counterplots and rebellions, that the book becomes alive. . . . The book is historically correct and quite detailed and is well indexed. . . . All told, it is a welcome addition to works for young people on the turbulent years of Tudor rule." Mrs. Molly Flaherty
Best Sell 32:150 Je 15 '72 330w [YA]

"A small photograph section is included in the middle of the text. Unfortunately, personalities are sometimes judged on physical appearance, and the presence of a meritocracy is overemphasized although social advances were present at this time. . . . This account is sufficiently broad ranging and detailed for junior high school students." Ken Haycock
Library J 97:2957 S 15 '72 230w [YA]

ALDRED, CYRIL. Jewels of the pharaohs; Egyptian jewelry of the dynastic period; special photography in Cairo by Albert Shoucair. 256p $15 Praeger

739.27 Jewelry
LC 72-108266

In this book on the major pieces of ancient Egyptian jewelry housed in various museums, the author "discusses their meaning and history, their artistic significance, and the techniques used in their execution." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Chronology. Index.

"Edinburgh's eminent Egyptologist has brought together major pieces from museums in America and abroad, and presented them in 193 fine plates, 100 in color. . . . General questions about their recovery, uses, materials, techniques, forms, and craftsmen are answered in the text. . . . [This work] should appeal to any undergraduate interested in the history or the practice of art."

Choice 9:496 Je '72 120w

"The present volume, illustrated with magnificent plates . . . is largely decorative. The text provides interesting information on the materials and techniques . . . but the interpretative content is slight. One would like to know more about changes over time. One can notice developments in style from the plates but cannot find them described in sufficient detail. However, this work should be of great interest to artists and designers." J. R. Bram
Library J 97:64 Ja 1 '72 90w

"This book is another testimony to how hard it is to efface the past, once determined research begins, despite the rip-offs of centuries." Lawrence Alloway as attractive as they are instructive. Few subjects so strongly demand coloured illustrations as jewelry; the more so that of ancient Egypt, which depended on rich contrasts of metal and coloured inlays for its effect. In this respect Mr Aldred aptly compares it to medieval stained-glass. In a way possible in few museums, these plates allow for stimulating comparisons between the work of one period and the next. Fine as the [black and white] illustrations are, their use is enormously enhanced by the detailed, perceptive captions which Mr Aldred has provided. These in themselves offer an admirable, concise introduction to the subject. Indeed the reader will be well advised to study them and the plates first, as they provide the chronological sequence largely dispensed with in the main text."
Nation 213:665 D 20 '71 50w

"[The] colour photographs, many of them specially taken in the Cairo Museum . . .

TLS p72 Ja 21 '72 290w

ALDRIDGE, JOHN W. The devil in the fire; retrospective essays on American literature and culture, 1951-1971. 364p $12.50 Harpers mag. press bk; Harper

810.9 American literature—History and criticism. Authors, American
ISBN 0-06-120201-0 LC 77-138701

This book consists of "Aldridge's book reviews 1951-71, with a few essays from his previous books on . . . [such] subjects [as] creeping low-browism, ecology, the isolation of the American novelist, and . . . some pages from a novel." (N Y Times Bk R) Index.

Choice 9:502 Je '72 150w

"It's easy to be annoyed by Aldridge, because he functions best as ungenerous deflator of reputations: thus, too easy to notice that he is derivative, repetitious, and overcommitted to a narrow view of literary worth. Nonetheless, this quirky talkathon possesses both interest and excellence. . . . But [Aldridge] is not a major critic—and this is not an essential book—because he does not apply his unrealistically high cultural standards to himself. If he did so, he would have to realize that insouciance and skepticism, however refreshing, are not the highest function of criticism, and perhaps even find himself guilty of the besetting sin in his own theology. Mediocrity." Bruce Allen

Library J 97:1015 Mr 15 '72 230w

Reviewed by Jeffrey Hart

Nat R 24:409 Ap 14 '72 900w

"Aldridge is the Saint George of journalism. He makes a grand fetish of slaying the paper dragons of literary fashion. Death to the sell-outs—that's his portentous motto. . . . Discussing the postwar novelists in the late Forties, for instance, he has all the earnestness of the editor of a college newspaper determined to make his mark. . . . By the mid Fifties, we see he has grown more sophisticated and can sprinkle names with the best of us. . . . Aldridge is a critic of middle-seriousness who takes himself very seriously indeed."

N Y Rev of Books 18:38 Ja 27 '72 290w

"[The author] has the gift of rational discussion and has developed it to a high degree. The analytical feast served us in this book is most wholesome and nutritious. We can gobble it with zest before we begin to have second thoughts about what we were promised. . . . [The inclusion of some pages from a novel] would seem to be a strategic disaster, as they demonstrate that the professorial drone which is appropriate to the essays and reviews is so much phenobarbital in [the author's] imaginative prose. And the subtitle really is a whopper. The culture part of it can simply be forgotten. . . . One soon learns that Mr. Aldridge is well blinkered against anything in the arts except a collection of novelists who might be called the officially famous writers of the time." Guy Davenport
N Y Times Bk R p6 Ja 16 '72 1200w

"Witty, lucid, acutely alive, and stimulatingly forthright, Aldridge writes about literature and the United States with the immediacy of a participant-observer. His panorama of the American novel from the 1920s through the 1960s is built up with specific, detailed analyses of particular works and the general careers of representative writers such as Katherine Anne Porter, Saul Bellow, William Styron . . . and John Cheever. . . . The book concludes with studies of American cultural history, environmental decay, and political dogmatism that demonstrate a breadth of thought and knowledge unusual in American men of letters since the heyday of Waldo Frank, Edmund

ALDRIDGE, J. W.—Continued

Wilson, and Lewis Mumford. Brilliantly extending and crystallizing the nature of the general culture in which contemporary American literature has faltered, The Devil in the Fire is a work as important as those rare critics' best." Brom Weber

Sat R 55:71 Mr 11 '72 850w

ALEXANDER, DAVID. Retailing in England during the industrial revolution. 282p $11.25 Oxford

381 Retail trade. Industry—History. Great Britain—History—19th century
LC 178-549456j

The author "shows there was no straight line development from fairs, markets, and producer/retailer shops in the 18th century to modern stores in the later 19th century, but rather distribution was quite flexible in adapting itself to the changing needs of urbanizing society. . . . He also shows that itinerant hawking and preindustrial shops were able to provide labor for thousands of unemployed persons who, at low cost, served the distribution needs of the burgeoning cities and suburbs." (Choice)

"Provides excellent browsing for advanced scholars wanting to round out their knowledge of the industrial revolution. Unlike other recent histories of distribution, Alexander has learned his economics; and he discusses what little quantitative data we have to help in evaluating intuitive concepts. He gives us fascinating details on the business affairs and economic functions of real persons far down the economic ladder."

Choice 8:1360 D '71 160w

"[This] study covers a much shorter period than that commonly understood by the Industrial Revolution, nearly all [the author's] evidence coming from the three decades after 1820. In parts, too, it reads rather like a doctoral thesis, in which form it originated. It is, however, a study in depth. . . . A valuable section considers the effects of transport developments on retailing. Material has been widely collected from local as well as national archives, and the statistics include data on credit transactions, shop rents, wages, and shopkeepers' capital. Distribution has been an obscure aspect of the period. . . . [and] Dr Alexander's book helps to fill a serious gap."

TLS p212 F 19 '71 800w

ALEXANDER, EDWIN P. On the main line; the Pennsylvania railroad in the 19th century. 310p il maps $15 Potter, C.N.

385 Pennsylvania Railroad Company
LC 70-118297

"Using the format of a trip that a passenger might have taken on the Pennsylvania Railroad before 1900, Alexander covers in detail, through the use of photographs and drawings, many of the system's scenes, structures, and equipment. . . . Following the pictorial trip over the 'main line' are similar treatments for several divisions of the system." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"The photographic sources, excellently reproduced, date back to the Pennsylvania Railroad's earliest records and are published in this book for the first time. . . . The major weakness of this work is the lack of sufficient historical commentary accompanying the 367 illustrations. In those places where Alexander uses contemporary newspaper accounts of places and events, the photographs take on an enhanced meaning. While this book will have limited appeal to the general reader, it will serve as a good resource book for 19th-century historians as well as the railroad specialist. . . . Large libraries should purchase it."

Choice 8:1635 F '72 170w

"This album of photographs from roughly 1865 to 1905 (with a few recent shots showing the present sadly contrasting conditions) effectively re-creates the Pennsy's golden age. The area covered is that part of the system east of Pittsburgh, and the emphasis is on stations and track rather than on trains. . . . Though a few [photographs] of inferior quality have had to be included as the only available view of a particular place in the time period covered, most are of good quality and are well printed. The brief text consists, in large part, of quotations from first-hand accounts of 1855, 1875, and 1899. While not a basic work, this will be a worthwhile addition to transportation and Americana collections." P. B. Cors

Library J 96:3605 N 1 '71 130w

ALEXANDER, GERARD L. Guide to atlases: world, regional, national, thematic; an international listing of atlases published since 1950. 671p $17.50 Scarecrow

016.912 Atlases—Bibliography
ISBN 0-8108-0414-X LC 70-157728

This volume is a "listing of more than 5,500 atlases. . . . [Each] entry lists the name of the publisher, title, edition, author, place and date of publication, number of pages, colored maps, and size of atlas. Oriental and other non-roman titles have been transliterated. . . . The atlases are divided into four distinct groups: 1) World Atlases; 2) Regional Atlases (covering whole continents or major regions of a continent); 3) National Atlases (covering individual countries as a whole); and 4) Thematic Atlases (by subject; i.e., economy, geology, history, roads, etc.). . . . [The author] is Chief of the Map Division, New York Public Library." (Publisher's note) Publishers index. Language index. Authors, cartographers, editors index.

"The Library of Congress Catalog lists the atlases under the person or corporate body that is primarily responsible for the content. Libraries that since 1968 have cataloged their atlases according to this rule of entry . . . may find it easier to use the Library of Congress catalog than the Guide, which enters atlases by publisher. However, there is much to be said for entry under publisher . . . because the consistency of entry . . . facilitates use of the book. The binding is of sturdy cloth; the entries stand out clearly, and the print is easy to read. The work lies flat when opened and the paper is non-glare-acid-free paper. Notwithstanding the fact that most of the atlases in Guide to Atlases may be located in Library of Congress printed catalogs, the Guide is an accurate, handy finding list in one volume and is recommended for all libraries with a major interest in atlases, maps, or geography."

Booklist 69:49 S 15 '72 700w

"World atlases are chronologically arranged, then alphabetically listed by publisher under each year. The regional atlases are in alphabetical order by continent and then by publisher. The national atlases are alphabetized by continent, then by country, and last by publisher. Thematic atlases are alphabetical by subject and then by publisher. Each entry is numbered. . . . The largest index is by publisher with as many as 421 entries under one publisher making usage extremely difficult. Various editions such as those of the Times atlas are listed under different publishers but with no 'see' references. Title entries for those atlases with popular titles such as the Odyssey atlas would be useful. . . . It is questionable if the approach used by the compiler . . . will prove useful to the bibliographer. Only extremely large libraries will need this bibliography and even that need is questionable."

Choice 9:489 Je '72 260w

"A useful, compendious searching tool." L. E. Spellman

Library J 97:184 Ja 15 '72 90w

ALEXANDER, HERBERT E. Financing the 1968 election. 355p $12.50 Heath Lexington bks.

329 Elections—U.S. Elections—Finance
LC 76-151790

This book deals with "the escalating costs of running for office [and] the sources of campaign funding (who gives how much and to whom) and how these funds are used by the candidates in the nominating campaigns, the conventions, and the general election contests." (Choice)

"This is a sober, detailed, dry, undramatic book. It is also a must for every serious student of American politics. . . . Forty-two tables and fourteen appendices supplement the text. This is the most thorough of the several analyses commissioned by the Citizen's Research Foundation of which Alexander is the Director." T. P. Wolf

Ann Am Acad 399:209 Ja '72 550w

"Despite state and Federal laws requiring candidates to file statements detailing campaign expenditures, precise information on all campaign spending is simply not available. Nevertheless, Alexander draws together the best data available to document [his study]. . . . This will be an extremely valuable resource for future political analyses since Alexander updates the analyses and categories of data developed by scholars in the past."

Choice 8:1245 N '71 130w

"Not everything you always wanted to know about campaign financing; but, still, an exhaustive analysis of the figures involved in the 1968 election. . . . A worthwhile document."

N Y Times Bk R p10 O ■ '71 90w

ALEXANDER, HERBERT E. Money in politics; foreword by Tom Wicker. 353p $10 Public affairs press

329 Campaign funds. Elections—U.S.
LC 78-188305

In this account of the costs of political campaigning the author "talks about campaigns at the various levels of government in Presidential years and in congressional years; about primary battles and third-party ventures; fund-raising gimmicks; and about money's less visible influences." (New Yorker)

"There seems to be no book comparable to Alexander's. It is by far the most thorough, comprehensive study of financing American politics and the ramifications of various methods of finance. . . . [It] should remain as the definitive work on American political finance for a long time and every library should have multiple copies."

Choice 9:878 S '72 170w

"The author takes far too long to develop the notion that most of us have long suspected: the amounts of cash reported to conform with public-disclosure legislation constitute a meager tip of the iceberg. . . . While this book is reliable with regard to sources, the going is turgid and the end product specialized. But Money in Politics does have the weight of authority, thus is worth your consideration."

Dem Polacheck
Library J 97:2102 Je 1 '72 80w

"[The author] is a recognized expert on campaign finance. The small foundation he directs (The Citizens' Research Foundation, Princeton) has been collecting data for 14 years and trying to clarify the issues in this complicated field. As might be expected, his 'Money in Politics' is a sober, scholarly book that sets forth in manageable fashion most of what can be gleaned from candidates' reports and other published sources. It is an indispensable work for anyone seriously interested in the subject. . . . Alexander, with his scrupulous respect for facts . . . [turns up much] interesting information and provides the basis for . . . [an] understanding of what is actually going on and of what is possible."

W. V. Shannon
N Y Times Bk R p38 O 15 '72 390w

"[This is a] book full of surprises for the layman. . . . Large expenditures, of course, do not invariably guarantee victory, and Mr. Alexander thinks we may worry too much about cost—that, taken as a whole, American politics is probably underfinanced. His assessments of various campaign-spending reforms—enacted and proposed—are helpful, just as his breadth of view is illuminating."

New Yorker 48:147 Ap 15 '72 170w

ALEXANDER, JEAN. Affidavits of genius; Edgar Allan Poe and the French critics, 1847-1924. 246p $12.50 Kennikat

818 Poe, Edgar Allan
ISBN 0-8046-9015-4 LC 79-154033

This "volume contains translations of commentary by major and minor poets as well as journalists, and reveals the . . . esthetic, philosophic, and sociological impact of Poe on mid-nineteenth century French intelligentsia. It traces the continuation and modifications of Poe's reputation through the era of Symbolism, and concludes with the . . . view of the last of the Symbolists, Paul Valéry." (Publisher's note)

"An introduction of some eighty pages 'attempts to clarify some of the basic motives and conflicts revealed in the early French essays,' touching in particular on the personal myth of Poe, his roles as an American and at the same time as a rebel against America, and the influence of his poetic theories on the Symbolists."

Am Lit 43:680 Ja '72 70w

"Although this combined essay-anthology does not explain Poe's popularity with French writers of the first three generations of Symbolism, it does discuss his reputation as it was modified by these changing critical contexts. Alexander contends that the French face of Poe changed from that of outlaw to American to poet, while staying as that of exemplar and guide. . . . The chief value of [the book] however, is her translation of 17 representative essays by French Poe critics (usually writers themselves, e.g. Baudelaire, Barbey d'Aurevilly, Huysmans, Valéry) from 1847 to 1924. This is material which monolingual American undergraduates have long needed."

Choice 8:1447 Ja '72 130w

ALEXANDER, JOHN. Yugoslavia before the Roman conquest. 175p pl maps $12.50 Praeger 913.39 Yugoslavia—Antiquities. Man, Prehistoric.
LC 79-135512

The "story stretches from the paleolithic age to the time of the Roman conquest. The book is based on the results of major postwar excavations in Yugoslavia in the past two decades; such . . . finds as the Lepenski Vir in Serbia, a chance discovery of the remains of no fewer than eight successive settlements from mesolithic times, unearthed during work on the Iron Gate power station on the Danube." (Economist) Bibliography, Index.

"A useful addition to the series because of the vast corpus of non-English language literature summarized. As a bibliographic survey and guide to further reading, the book is excellent, but it does not succeed as a comprehensible exposition of the pre-history of the area. Alexander's treatment of the material seems to fall unhappily between two stools. The traditional heavy emphasis on the typology of stone, ceramic, and metal artifacts must severely tax the nonspecialist in his attempt to understand the 'cultures' discussed. But as a typologically oriented work aimed at the specialist, the book is often inadequate in site and assemblage description and particularly in artifact illustration."

Choice 9:700 J1/Ag '72 170w

"Dr. Alexander has produced one of the better volumes of a very good series. . . . Large aspects of the subject emerge clearly from Dr. Alexander's text without diminishing the detail of his references. The thoroughness of his coverage can be measured by comparing his book with the volume Epoque préhistorique et protohistorique en Yougoslavie—Recherches et résultats, issued under the general editorship of Grga Novak for the International Prehistoric Congress held at Belgrade in 1971. In the tradition of the series the graphic illustrations are of high quality and well chosen. Only the price gives cause for complaint."

R. R. Holloway
Class World 66:187 N '72 300w

"[This] fascinating and well-documented study is the first comprehensive account of the history of man in the Balkans before the arrival of the Romans. It is well organized and is written in clear, straightforward English. . . . Dr Alexander himself has done research in Yugoslavia and is thoroughly familiar with all the latest material. It is a pity, therefore, that he and his publishers have allowed so many mis-spellings of various Yugoslav names to creep in. And the plates are wrongly numbered. But these are still only minor blemishes in a very good book."

Economist 242:58 F ■ '72 330w

ALEXANDER, MARTHA. Nobody asked me if I wanted a baby sister; story and pictures by Martha Alexander. unp $3.50; lib bdg $3.99 Dial press

LC 78-153731

"A small boy whose fussed-over baby sister captures all the attention of the grownups angrily puts her into his little red wagon and sets forth to give her away. On the verge of his supposed success come howls from the baby. But whom does Bonnie want, when no one can quell this 'loud-mouth baby'? Oliver's vanity is indeed touched; he takes Bonnie home to tell Mom about it." (Horn Bk) "Preschool to kindergarten." (Library J)

ALEXANDER, MARTHA—Continued

"[The author offers an] enchanting solution to the problem every child faces when a new sibling arrives in the family. . . . Once again Miss Alexander gives us a clever treatment of a common problem." M. J. Bandler

Book World p2 (children's issue) N 7 '71 80w

"A little book, refreshing simple and child-like, picturing a real adventure, is welcome in a day of overblown volumes and emphatic art. . . . The diminutive drawings in various pastel colors are not limited to humorous detail and action; they truly illustrate the text."

Horn Bk 47:600 D '71 120w

"[The author] demonstrates her remarkable ability to see things from a child's point of view. . . . Cleverly conceived and charmingly carried out from the point of view of both text and illustrations, this warm, funny little book (6" square) is an especially good choice to give to young children who have to adjust to a new baby brother or sister." Marion Marx

Library J 96:3888 N 15 '71 200w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 54:59 N 13 '71 130w

ALEXANDER, NIGEL. Poison, play, and duel; a study in Hamlet. 212p il $6.50 Univ. of Neb. press

822.3 Shakespeare, William. Hamlet
ISBN 0-8032-0772-7 LC 79-130871

The author "shows how Shakespeare, like Raphael, Titian, and other Renaissance artists, developed and adapted the imagery inherited from the Christian and classical past. The battle within the soul, the choice of life, the hunt of passion, the triple face of prudence, and the dance of the graces are given dramatic habitation in Hamlet's soliloquies, in the play-within-a play, and in the savage contrast between Gertrude and Ophelia." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This study] may well prove to be the most important and influential discussion of the play since Bradley. . . . The book has a rare critical equipoise. . . . Alexander treats Shakespeare in a 'classical' way as an artificer, above all a theatrical artificer, solving in terms of brilliant stagecraft (the Ghost, the Mousetrap, the graveyard scene, the duel and Hamlet's soliloquies) a number of presentational problems, in order to clarify the problems of conduct that Hamlet shares with us. At the same time he retains a Romantic—or perhaps a 'scientific'—awareness of Shakespeare as another nature, in that he approaches the play with a trust, even a reverence, that maintains that everything tells." M. M. Mahood

Encounter 38:55 D '71 300w

"This is, in part, an attempt to describe a context ('poison, play and duel') within which many well-known critical assertions can be reasserted in specious freshness. It is also an exciting symbolist explication of the play in terms of sexual psychology, Renaissance painting, mythological astrology, and any other approach which the author's fertile imagination finds applicable. Yet there are too many forced analogies. . . . However, the total fascination of the book denies detailed carping."

J. H. Crouch

Library J 97:72 Ja 1 '72 100w

"[This study] is learned, methodical and so closely argued that it is in parts difficult reading. But perseverance is amply rewarded by the coherence and critical penetration of the book."

TLS p739 Je 30 '72 130w

ALEXANDER, THOMAS B. The anatomy of the Confederate Congress; a study of the influences of member characteristics on legislative voting behavior, 1861-1865 [by] Thomas B. Alexander and Richard E. Beringer. 435p $10 Vanderbilt univ. press

328.73 Confederate States of America
ISBN 0-8265-1175-9 LC 76-138985

"The authors begin with a profile of the Confederate Congress . . . [and then analyze] the voting habits of the members. They isolate certain issues—conscription, impressment, habeas corpus, and others—and correlate the votes on them with various facts known about the legislators—their former party affiliation, their stand on secession, their wealth, especially in slaves, and their location: that is, whether they represented occupied or unoccupied areas. Their principal conclusion is that the spirit of party was not a major determinant in decision-making." (Ann Am Acad) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"This study of the Confederate Congress is a difficult book to read. Replete with tables, roll call analyses, 'scale and median positions,' and sometimes a terminology not familiar to the conventional historian, it requires a close attention and much time. . . . A review cannot begin to measure the wealth of information it contains. . . . Previous writers have ventured the opinion that the absence of parties in the Confederacy was a weakness in the Southern system. Alexander and Beringer document the assertion. . . . [The book] should be read by all serious students, and then read again. It is a first-rate contribution." T. H. Williams

Ann Am Acad 403:195 S '72 550w

"Historians expecting intricate legislative history revealing the role of compromise and power in arriving at final legislation will be disappointed. . . . Nor does the book treat committee structure or rules of debate as part of the Congress' anatomy. Recommended for libraries with specialized collections in politics."

Choice 9:1195 N '72 160w

"This incisive look at the Confederate Congress in action shatters the rhetoric of those who would still argue the unity of the Southern cause. . . . Although the narrative . . . is unexciting, one must admit that the book is an important methodological and historiographical contribution to Civil War history."

Va Q R 48:xcii summer '72 150w

ALEXANDRE, PHILIPPE. The duel: De Gaulle and Pompidou; tr. by Elaine P. Halperin. 360p $7.95 Houghton

320.944 France—Politics and government—20th century. Gaulle, Charles de, President France. Pompidou, Georges Jean Raymond. President France
ISBN 0-395-13640-7 LC 72-177540

This is an "account of the political struggle between de Gaulle and Pompidou which lasted from July, 1968 to April 1969. . . . Pompidou was replaced as Prime Minister by Couve de Murville, but, unlike other politicians discarded by de Gaulle, he succeeded in maintaining himself in the public eye as a candidate for the succession [and became President of the Republic 1969]." (Christian Science Monitor)

"Alexandre writes perceptively about Pompidou's character, and movingly about de Gaulle's death at Colombey in 1970. But his style is over-dramatic . . . [and he] exaggerates . . . the nature of the rift between his two heroes. There may have been disagreements, but there was also a high degree of mutual respect and understanding." John Ardagh

Book World p10 My 14 '72 700w

Choice 9:866 S '72 170w

"The French version of the book has been considerably cut in translation, but an extra chapter has been added carrying the story down to de Gaulle's death. . . . [Alexandre] embellishes [his work] with much detail and, rather irritatingly, with verbatim reporting of conversations of which nobody could have taken notes. This makes his book one for the historian to use with caution, but his account of this curious episode in French history will probably be the one to read until the memoirs and volumes of correspondence start appearing." Anthony Hartley

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ap 27 '72 600w

"In preparing this volume . . . Alexandre had the cooperation of some 90 individuals who shared their confidences with him. . . . The book's value is enhanced by the author's pithy 'cast of characters,' although certain individuals are omitted. Also, important incidents are often sketchily presented, providing an obstacle for those unfamiliar with the history of the Fifth Republic. However, the book is still recommended." B. S. Viault

Library J 97:871 Mr 1 '72 140w

"A well-told tale: The narrative is lively, dramatic, on the whole accurate. The 'Duel' . . . is recounted in detail . . . like a cloak-and-dagger film starring Errol Flynn or Douglas Fairbanks Jr. . . . The reader is never bored, and learns in a pleasant manner, if he has not followed the debates of French political life on a daily basis for the past 20 years. What this well-written and on the whole impartial book (although de Gaulle at times appears a bit exaggerated as a sort of moaning King Lear) lacks is a social and historical background for the two protagonists, in the absence of which everything can be grasped without being profoundly understood." Jean Lacouture

N Y Times Bk R p31 My 14 '72 1200w
New Yorker 48:79 J1 22 '72 110w

ALFONSI, PHILIPPE. Satan's needle; a true story of drug addiction and cure, by Philippe Alfonsi and Patrick Pesnot; tr. by June P. Wilson and Walter B. Michaels. 284p $6.95 Morrow

362.2 Narcotic habit
LC 76-151924

"This book's journalist authors had already been thinking about a book on drugs when they met the two girls they call Pascale and Mireille in a Marseilles women's prison. . . . Pascale and Mireille agreed to cooperate with the two reporters, and Alfonsi and Pesnot in turn promised to arrange their admission to a good psychiatric hospital for detoxification and therapy. . . . The book [is] assembled from the girls' letters, journals and taped reminiscences of life on drugs." (N Y Times Bk R) First published in France under the title Satan qui vous aime beaucoup.

"Although this is basically a biography of two young French drug addicts, it is handled with the sensitivity and poignancy of [James Michener's The Drifters, BRD 1971]. . . . These authors subtly introduce poetry into the thought processes of these girls. The translators are to be commended for their ability to maintain the narrative flow. Recommended for high school and adult population."

Choice 9:582 Je '72 110w [YA]

"A True Story magazine approach. . . . [There is] a fast, sometimes facile reporter's style; and no little sensitivity for what the average reader wants and expects from a heroin mainliner. . . . A few years ago it might have meant something. Now, it is no more than what we all read in every paper, every day—if not as graphically, at least more honestly. Forget it, unless, of course, you get kicks from reading about human suffering." Bill Katz

Library J 97:1453 Ap 15 '72 110w

"[This volume offers] a more expanded treatment of the life of an addict than other books on the subject. By the end of the book, it is clear that these girls are still addicts, with no cure in sight. Drug horror tales are proliferating these days, but this one is particularly valuable for teens because of its insights into the hopelessness of addiction." Anita Ice-man

Library J 97:1627 Ap 15 '72 80w [YA]

"[This] will not immediately grab the American reader. The real barrier is style, both the style of French journalism (more melodramatic and impressionistic than we're used to) and the style of French generational politics, which pits a stuffy bourgeois-Catholic propriety against a romantic and nihilistic contempt. . . . Pascale has a way with words (though the authors should have made it clearer what she actually wrote and what they constructed from tapes), and her long chronicle of traveling, shooting up in cheap hotels in Istanbul and Teheran, and of a brilliantly mad Greek millionaire's mansion crash-pad in Athens, is almost too entertaining. (The authors admit they had to do research to inject local color into the monochrome of junkie memories, thus defeating one of their more serious purposes). . . . Their story forces a double-edged, sobering conclusion: Drugs are no true alternative, only a trapped opposite to a repressive society; and neither jail nor psychiatry reliably gets people off drugs." Annie Gottlieb

N Y Times Bk R p36 My 21 '72 850w

ALFORD, HAROLD J. The proud peoples; the heritage and culture of Spanish-speaking peoples in the United States. 325p $5.95 McKay

301.45 Latin Americans in the U.S.
LC 73-188265

The "text is divided into five main sections: the explorers, the settlers, the rancheros, the migrants and the militants. . . . [The book also contains biographies of 60 Spanish-speaking individuals]." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] is a fascinating story that is well told. As history it is most illuminating, despite its faults. Woven throughout the chapters are the deeds of the Padres. . . . [However, this volume gives inadequate] treatment of the religious background of the Mexican-American. . . . We are still waiting for a history of the Spanish-speaking Americans that will try to give the whole story." Charles Dollen

Best Sell 32:265 S 15 '72 300w

"Despite the fact that Mexican-Americans have been here the longest and form the largest Spanish-speaking minority, a disproportionate amount of text is devoted to them. Alfond, who is special director of the Educational Testing Service, has written a readable, sympathetic book based on competent research. The language and style identify it as an especially useful, though not inspiring, book for young adults. The subject needs more colorful, incisive treatment to attract a wider audience. While aspects of the history have been treated fully in other books, nothing else current appears to have the scope of [this volume]." Frank Cinquemani

Library J 97:2086 Je 1 '72 130w [YA]

ALGER, LECLAIRE. See Nic Leodhas, S.

ALLAND, ALEXANDER. The human imperative [by] Alexander Alland, Jr. 185p $8.50 Columbia univ. press

155.7 Aggressiveness (Psychology). Race psychology
ISBN 0-231-03228-5 LC 77-183227

Alland attacks the ethological speculations of R. Ardrey in The Territorial Imperative (BRD 1966 and 1967) and African Genesis (BRD 1962); of D. Morris in The Naked Ape (BRD 1968); and of K. Lorenz in On Aggression (BRD 1966). Alland "believes that territoriality, the exclusive claim to a tribal hunting preserve, is neither a desirable nor a provable human characteristic. Further, he believes that aggression is decidedly not a human instinct. . . . [He] examines the cultures of the matrilineal Abn of the Ivory Coast, the Pacific Semai of Malaya, and the . . . Iroquois of North America in . . . attempts to unearth evidence of both territoriality and aggression. . . . A concluding section on war claims to identify economic competition, not chromosomal predestination, as the main cause of war." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"After a brief review of Darwin's 'elegant' hypothesis of evolution, Alland recapitulates and attacks the theories of [Lorenz, Ardrey and Morris]. . . . 'The instinct school [he says] will never be able to explain war or property or human territoriality on the basis of a few simple-minded analogies between birds and fish on one hand and what they think are essentially genetic processes in man on the other.' . . . A rigorous, gauntly written work which confronts the speculations of the ethologist with the selected facts of the ethnologist." P. W. Boytineck

Library J 97:1734 My 1 '72 180w

"As an anthropologist, Alland is able to bring a perspective to bear upon the behavioral traits of human beings that is entirely lacking in 'LAM' (Lorenz, Ardrey, and Morris). . . . As Professor Allard shows, environmental factors, which in man are largely cultural, have a way of producing behaviors that the unsophisticated readily attribute to innate factors. . . . The writings of LAM have great appeal for corporation presidents, racists, and inhabitants of the Pentagon, a fact that elicits appropriate comments from Professor Alland. . . . Lamianism, as [he] points out, diverts attention from the real causes of human aggression and violence by focusing on purely spurious ones. Professor Alland's book will help to keep the focus where it should be—with those who are attempting to discover the truth, not with those who claim to have found it." Ashley Montagu

Natur Hist 81:92 Ag/S '72 550w

ALLARDT, ERIK, ed. Mass politics; studies in political sociology; ed. by Erik Allardt and Stein Rokkan; with a foreword by Seymour M. Lipset. 400p il $11.95 Free press

301.5 Political sociology. Elections. Political parties
LC 77-78608

"Bringing together reports and papers of four conferences of the [Committee on Political Sociology of the International Sociological Association (1961-63-64-67)] . . . [this volume also] reprints articles from two other publications: Cleavages, ideologies and party systems (Helsinki: Westermarck Society, 1964) edited by Allardt and Rokkan, and Approaches to the study of political participation (Bergin: The Michelsen Institute, 1962) edited by Rokkan or in Acta sociologica, vol. VI, no. 1-2, . . . [Included from these publications are] papers by Allardt on protest and alienation, by Himmelstrand and Torgersen on depolitization and the growth of political consensus, by Cornford, Cox, Nossiter employing historical, geographical, and aggregate electoral data." (Choice)

"The reader is presented with the writings of thirteen scholars, representing eight nations on both sides of the Iron Curtain (there is one from Poland), which comprise an organized, and now visible, 'invisible college.' . . . The degree to which the authors represented in this book cite each other's work, and the work of other scholars associated with the committee, attests to the viability of international cooperation and reflects the functioning of the invisible college. The other side of this coin, of course, is that the work of important political sociologists from each of the parent disciplines who have not been closely associated with the work of the committee receives little if any recognition. . . . As a historical document, this collection has much in it that is worthwhile. As a statement of methodological and theoretical development, it was largely obsolete by the time it was published." D. R. Segal

Am J Soc 77:601 N '71 800w

"Those familiar with other volumes published under [the Committee's] sponsorship will welcome this particular volume. . . . [which] is a worthy, if less pioneering, companion . . . to the recent work of Lipset, and to [G.] Galli and [A.] Prandi's Patterns of political participation in Italy [BRD 1971] as well as the earlier Princeton volumes on political modernization. The essay by Sartori ('The typology of party systems—proposals for improvement') is—it must be noted—alone worth the price of the whole volume."

Choice 8:1087 O '71 240w

ALLDRITT, KEITH. The visual imagination of D. H. Lawrence. 244p il $3 Northwestern univ. press

823 Lawrence, David Herbert
ISBN 0-8101-0356-7 LC 76-155801

In this study of the visual element in Lawrence's major novels Alldrift shows that Lawrence was not only helped to see by painters of the English nineteenth-century school, but helped to find subject matter and to form his literary style." (TLS)

"[This study] approaches familiar materials from an original point of view but with somewhat mixed results. A basic difficulty is that any interpretation of Lawrence that emphasizes the visual at the expense of the kinetic is certain to be leaving a lot out. A further problem is that many of Alldrift's extended allusions—to Ruskin, Cézanne, and Buddenbrooks [by T. Mann, BRD 1924], for example—seem disproportionate and a little strained. I am also puzzled that he overlooks Lawrence's visual debt to Hardy, the special pictorial quality of Sons and Lovers [BRD 1913], and any consideration of Lawrence's own paintings. . . . A special virtue is his attention to Lawrence's style by means of close reading of key passages. Not all students of Lawrence will agree with the premises and findings of [this study] . . . but it is nevertheless a book they will want to look into." Keith Cushman

Library J 96:4095 D 15 '71 180w

"[Alldrift is] interested in accounting for the 'best' years of [Lawrence's] achievement, when the provincial visual imagination was healthy and not yet undermined by cosmopolitan decadence. . . . Ruskin plays a key part in the study, as the intellectual figure behind the psychic revolution occurring in The Rainbow, which some individuals can identify with, and others cannot assimilate. . . . Alldrift is anxious to state that other influences were also at work [on Lawrence] but the visual arts were the most significant. In broad terms the thesis is excellent, though one may feel unhappy about details from time to time. Mr. Alldrift over-values Lawrence, and overestimates his originality in this area. . . . Most of . . . [his] inferences and theories are based on the novels themselves, rather than on biographical and critical material."

TLS p682 Je 11 '71 950w

ALLEGRO, JOHN M. The chosen people; a study of Jewish history from the time of the exile until the revolt of Bar Kochbeba, sixth century B.C. to second century A.D. 320p il $10 Doubleday

933 Jews—History
LC 70-157570

The author attempts to demonstrate "that Judaism had its origins in the primitive fertility rites and mystery cults of the Near East. Further, he maintains that the Jewish belief in the superiority of their god only developed in response to the continued subjugation which threatened to destroy the tribe's identity. . . . [He believes that Ezra] created the Chosen People myth during the Babylonian Captivity. . . . [He presents an account of] the rise of the Maccabees . . . [of] Masada and finally the 'Christian' era with the Romans having sway over Jerusalem." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Genealogy. Bibliography.

"[This] is a sequel to Allegro's The sacred mushroom and the cross [BRD 1970, 1971]. . . . It presupposes the 'discoveries' and 'lifting of cultural horizons' of that work, and purports to teach 'reason and rationality.' In fact it duplicates much of the standard work in the field, and, where most original, discloses a striking lack of critical methodology. It is dilettante in scholarship, conservative in treatment of source, hackneyed in style and expression. . . . Photographs, maps and plans. . . . No footnotes or indices."

Choice 9:224 Ap '72 130w

"Surely it is absurd to assign to the Jews sole responsibility for the actions of those who have sought to destroy them. Unfortunately, Allegro leaves the reader with the impression that they may rightly be held so accountable. . . . Also, the Jews were not hellbent on world domination, contrary to what Allegro claims. . . . In his sympathetic portrayal of the powers that attempted to deny the Jewish people religious, cultural and political freedom, Allegro exhibits a terribly shallow understanding of Judaism; his slanted reading of history fails to clarify either historical developments or contemporary events." R. S. Kennedy

Christian Century 89:608 My 24 '72 900w

"As history, the book leaves much to be desired, mostly because of the author's preoccupation with pet theories. . . . Equally damaging is his reiterated thesis that anti-Semitism is the natural result of a rabid exclusivist nationalism dominated by visions of world rule, politically understood, and built into the very fiber of Judaism. He feels very free to either reinterpret or set aside his earliest written sources (e.g., Josephus and 1 Maccabees) whenever it suits his purposes. He has succeeded in being sensational; but despite the masterful handling of the intrigues of Herod or of other isolated segments of the narrative, the history, taken as a whole, is lost to view behind overmastering biases furthered by special pleading." R. V. Ritter

Library J 97:509 F 1 '72 190w

"Mr Allegro mostly summarises and retells Josephus (as ever, everybody's source), though in what resembles pop-thriller style. . . . [His] simplistic writing is a pity, for now and then Mr Allegro touches quite acutely upon the problems of Romans and Jews in the Middle East in that first century of the Christian era, of which we know so painfully little. . . . Hardest of all I find Mr Allegro's basic idea that the tale of the Crucifixion was the mere cover story for the secret cult of a psychedelic fungus, for here he seems simply to believe that whatever he asserts must be so." T. R. Fyvel

New Statesman 82:304 S 11 '71 1400w

ALLEN, CHRISTOPHER, ed. African perspectives. See African perspectives

ALLEN, DONALD, ed. The collected poems of Frank O'Hara. See O'Hara, F.

ALLEN, GAY WILSON. Melville and his world. 144p il $10 Viking

B or 92 Melville, Herman
ISBN 0-670-46740-5 LC 77-117066

This is a pictorial account of Melville's career and the world in which he lived. Bibliography.

"The bibliography and the chronology will prove useful, but the book will be valued for its scores of illustrations."

Am Lit 44:176 Mr '72 30w

"[This book] is surely 'for the trade.' . . . What Professor Allen contributes is a rather uninspired commentary . . . a sort of droning lecture accompanying a slide-show."

TLS p53 Ja 21 '72 450w

"This, 'the most complete pictorial record of Melville's life ever published,' is an expensive nonsense. It is true that there are a great many pictures but they fail to tell us very much about Melville. The text is as exciting to read as the back of a bus ticket. The dry factual account is not correct in every detail and it is certainly overbalanced in favor of the younger years. There is nothing here for the scholar and pitifully little either for that poor devil, 'the general reader.' It is difficult, to imagine the audience for this publication."

Va Q R 48:lxl spring '72 150w

ALLEN, KENNETH W. Use of community college libraries. 159p $5 Linnet bks.

028.7 Libraries, College and university
ISBN 0-208-01143-9 LC 74-132001

"This volume reports on research conducted in 1969-70 . . . [on] attitudes toward and utilization of the libraries at three community colleges in Illinois. . . . Allen's major finding was that although the selected institutions failed to meet ALA standards, nevertheless the majority of students and faculty liked the libraries. . . . While faculty members, regardless of subject areas and levels of education . . . expected their students to utilize them, students visited the libraries less than expected and tended to read only assigned items. The primary reason students gave for using the libraries was to study their own materials." (Library J)

"[This survey report] will interest many persons who feel strongly about upgrading the quality of higher education. If taken seriously, Allen's study could help in accomplishing this task. As a result, all those who believe that learning can be facilitated by incorporating a library dimension into the educational system should take it seriously indeed. . . . Readers who are statistically minded will probably object that all tables are relegated to an appendix. This means that no tabulated materials are in proximity to the text and no illustrations relieve the seriousness of the style." Howard Clayton

Col & Res Lib 33:144 Mr '72 600w

"Data were collected with an attitude questionnaire administered to students in randomly selected classes, another attitude questionnaire distributed to all full-time faculty, and a utilization questionnaire given to library users on sample days. Circulation and reference statistics, as well as data on the colleges, were also studied. . . . Much of what Allen discovered about community college libraries was already known. His main contribution was his methodology, which was original and generally sound. However, the wording of his questionnaires was ambiguous and some of his samples were either unrepresentative or inadequate. Moreover, because his research is described in the standard dissertation style, Allen's book tends to be unreadable and redundant." Leonard Grundt

Library J 96:1586 My 1 '71 240w

ALLEN, PHYLLIS, jt. auth. Student housing. See Mullins, W.

ALLEN, RICHARD F. Fire and iron; critical approaches to Njáls saga. 254p $11.95 Univ. of Pittsburgh press

839.6 Njáls saga—History and criticism
ISBN 0-8229-3219-9 LC 71-134493

In this study, the author "goes over the antecedents of the saga, the influences thereon from law and history, and discusses . . . the shaping power of oral tradition on early literature. [as well as] the text and its mechanics." (Choice)

"[This book] should be in all college and university libraries. . . . Students of literature will probably find Allen a goldmine for critical essays. . . . [He expresses] a Jungian viewpoint about much that is marvellous in saga . . . [and] believes that 'the whole vast medieval world structure from heaven to hell' can be viewed as 'an enormously elaborated projection of forces that are active within the psyche.'"

Choice 9:65 Mr '72 220w

"[The author has] an admirable mastery of a voluminous critical literature and [presents] a fresh new reading of the Njáls saga. . . . [Allen is opposed] to the theory that this saga is a compilation of several earlier sagas, and argues that it is the work of a single master craftsman writing late in the 13th century." Ernst Ekman

Library J 96:2507 Ag '71 100w

ALLEN, SHIRLEY S. Samuel Phelps and Sadler's Wells Theatre. 354p il $15 Wesleyan univ. press

792 Phelps, Samuel, Sadler's Wells Theatre, London, Theater—London
ISBN 0-8195-4029-3 LC 72-120259

This book covers the "range of Phelps's half-century career, with . . . emphasis on his . . . decades at Sadler's Wells and on his work as performer and producer of Shakespearean drama." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] has produced a book invaluable to students of the drama. Interestingly illustrated, it brings together many new facts, unearthed from archives and collections, and provides unusual glimpses of Edmund and Charles Kean, Macready, and other contemporaries of Phelps." Bernard Grebanier

Sat R 54:[28] Jl 3 '71 500w

"Phelps's importance resides more, perhaps, in his effectiveness as a manager than in his accomplishments as an actor. In the latter capacity he was much admired, as Mrs. Allen amply proves. . . . [Her] treatment of this interesting and far-seeing man is concise and clear. She proceeds in an orderly, strictly chronological manner. She likes the object of her study, but she isn't in love with him; hero worship, that is, she carefully abjures. She has given us a useful and . . . a welcome book."

Yale R 61:134 O '71 600w

ALLEN, TERRY, ed. The whispering wind: poetry by young American Indians; with an introd. by Mae J. Durham. 128p lib bdg $2.70; pa $1.95 Doubleday

§11 Indians of North America—Poetry—Juvenile literature, American poetry—Collections—Juvenile literature
LC 78-157572

This collection of poetry "is a sampling of the work of students at the Institute of American Indian Arts in Santa Fe. . . . [The techniques range] from lyrical metaphors of nature to intricate abstractions, from primitive drumbeat rhythms to the idiom of today's urban youth." (N Y Times Bk R) "Grade six and up." (Library J)

"[This book], a living presence throughout, provides a whiff of fresh air among collections of modern poetry addressed to young people. The powerfully limned landscapes, the Indian ambience, and the multiplicity of emotions delicately conveyed will long remain with readers. The authors, all in their 20's, have something to say and know how to say it, effectively evoking reality without stringing together banal expletives and four-letter words. The editor's instructive preface adds to the value of this volume." Daisy Kouzel

Library J 97:2487 Jl '72 160 [YA]

"Once they have seen this book, most students from the sixth grade through college will want copies on their private shelves." Dee Brown

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p7 N '72 80w

ALLEN, WILLIAM EDWARD DAVID, ed. Russian embassies to the Georgian kings (1589-1605) ed. with introd. add. notes, commentaries and bibl; texts tr. by Anthony Mango; pub. for the Hakluyt society. 2v 368; 369-640p pl col pl maps $18.50 Cambridge

947 Russia—History
 S1N 521-01029-2 LC 70-85707

"These are the records of two major embassies from the tsars of Russia to the kings of Georgia in 1589-90 and 1604-05. . . . First published from archival records by S. A. Belokurov in 1889, they had become a bibliographical rarity. The current volume is translated from Belokurov. . . . Genealogical notes and tables, contemporary maps and illustrations, bibliography, index." (Choice)

"[These records] are a very important source of geographical and ethnographical information. . . . [They are now] available in English for the first time. Allen's editorial work is excellent, and the commentary is astonishingly thorough and interesting. . . . Essential for research libraries."

Choice 9:267 Ap '72 90w

"[The texts] provide not only a clear and detailed picture of Russian administrative and diplomatic practice at that time, but also a lively account of the life and customs of the peoples of the northern and central Caucasus and of Georgia, giving us (as the editor points out) the sort of information for the period which is not available in any other source."

TLS p1452 N 19 '71 850w

ALLEY, ROBERT S. So help me God; religion and the presidency, Wilson to Nixon. 160p il $4.95 John Knox press

261.7 Presidents—U.S.—Religion
 ISBN 0-8042-1045-4 LC 70-37418

"What effect does a President's religious background have on foreign policy and domestic issues? How have chief executives made political use of piety? Have the Presidents tended to formalize a 'civil religion' in our midst? These are some of the questions Robert S. Alley discusses in his evaluation of religious influences on the presidency from Wilson to Nixon." (Publisher's note)

"A very thought-provoking book! The style is not sparkling but the points are well made. The author perhaps has some bias towards pragmatic non-credal religion, but, on the whole, he has no axe to grind. One must remember that a politician acts from many motives and forces of which his religion is just one. Nevertheless, a reader is likely to emerge convinced that half-conscious religious ideas have done a tremendous amount to make our Presidents act as they have acted." R. B. Nordberg

Best Sell 32:73 My 15 '72 420w

"The author divides [these presidents] into three groups: Congregational-Unitarian; Calvinist; and Episcopalian. . . . He places all in the Calvinist camp except for Roosevelt and Kennedy. They are in the Episcopal group which is expanded to include a post-Vatican II Catholic. One of the characteristics of the Calvinists is that they are crusaders, usually against Communism. The categories are subject to question. Certainly in American history Congregationalists have had more in common with Presbyterians and others in the Calvinist heritage than with Unitarians. The author himself places Calvin Coolidge, a Congregationalist, in the Calvinist group. The author has a clear bias against any religion which preaches salvation or has a missionary concern. . . . The brevity of the book does not allow for an adequate analysis of the religion of any of the presidents. Its primary virtue is that it brings into the study of the presidents the discussion of recent years on civil religion."

Choice 9:981 O '72 200w

"This [is a] self-righteous study. . . . Alley's historical and sociological knowledge is shaky and his research methodology questionable as he freely mixes fact and opinion. For example, he maintains that while the Presidents 'grew in all other ways, their religion remained static. The church had no voice.' How does one come to such a conclusion? Certainly not by basing it on numerous articles from the Christian Century, highly opinionated political biographies, and 'regular dialogic encounters, often heated' with one's associate. Numerous unsupported generalizations render the book of limited value to all but the least questioning readers." P. A. Kalisch

Library J 97:1725 My 1 '72 120w

"[This] will be quickly forgotten. . . . Alley is not sufficiently clear of his own purposes to help readers appraise their own stances in his review of the spirituality of Presidents since Wilson. Since he is so dependent upon secondary work and familiar materials, only his Eisenhower-Nixon comments have much import for the present. He sees these Presidents as perpetrators of America's messianism—a possibly dangerous position for nuclear-age Presidents to take—but he does not get too excited about that or any of his other subjects. His book serves chiefly to remind Nixon-haters that the current President did not invent nationalistic White House religion." M. E. Marty

N Y Times Bk R p7 Ag 6 '72 350w

ALLISON, GRAHAM T. Essence of decision; explaining the Cuban missile crisis. 338p $8.95; pa $4.50 Little

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations—Russia, Russia—Foreign relations—U.S. Cuba—History—1959—
 LC 70-168998

"The author sets out to demonstrate the advantages of analyzing foreign policy decisions from three major frames of reference: by viewing the governments involved as outsized rational humans; by focusing on the independent operations and goals of the many subunits involved; and by assessing the conflict of interests within any large organization. Alternate chapters use the missile crisis as a case study to demonstrate the theoretical concepts advanced. . . . Index." (Library J)

Reviewed by J. H. Wilson

Am Hist R 77:1521 D '72 440w

Reviewed by R. E. Licklider

Ann Am Acad 404:255 N '72 340w

"This book is a must for serious students of governmental actions. . . . [The first model] presupposes that governmental action is largely analogous to a game in which the goals are clear and well defined, as are the options and potential choices. . . . When applied to the Cuban missile crisis, this explanation is so facile that one wonders what all the tension was about. The second model, based on economic theory [argues] . . . that in the short run organizations, with their standard operating procedures, are not well adapted for crisis situations. . . . Model III considers the situation from the view of governmental politics. . . . Robert Kennedy's memoirs [Thirteen Days; a Memoir of the Cuban Missile Crisis, BRD 1969] provide most of the evidence. Here, governmental action is considered not as the decision of a single person, the president, but as the result of the politics and politicking of the various members of the Executive Committee of the National Security Council. The account of how a consensus was finally achieved is very interesting and sheds a new light on the whole situation." William Schweder

Best Sell 31:453 Ja 15 '72 430w

"[The author] makes some pointed and needed comments about future direction of research in political science. . . . His book examines policy-making during the Cuban missile crisis. . . . He clearly demonstrates that the conclusions which one reaches about the outcome of the crisis are substantially influenced by assumptions one makes about how decisions are made. For example, Allison shows that there can be no such thing as 'describing' the events during the crisis; description, as the term is normally used, implies the use of the rational actor model with all its assumptions and pitfalls. A necessity for any collection on political science, and it may help many political scientists break out of their current intellectual lethargy."

Choice 9:277 Ap '72 170w

"The attempt to combine theory and analytical narrative is both the strength and weakness of Allison's important monograph. . . . It is the [alternate] chapters that will have the most general appeal; the others seem burdened with too much professional jargon for the average reader. A concentration on just the case-study chapters is still tremendously enlightening." R. W. Schwarz

Library J 97:1329 Ap 1 '72 100w

"What is disturbing about studies such as Allison's and the impact they are having on the teaching of political science . . . is not that their concern is unserious but rather that it is peripheral to the central question of political responsibility. In avoiding that question—indeed, implying that it does not exist—the architects of the study of bureaucratic politics are not, as Allison maintains, providing a 'fundamental change in intellectual style' so much as they are offering a cool way out." Ronald Steel

N Y Rev of Books 19:43 O 19 '72 800w

ALLSWANG, JOHN M. A house for all peoples: ethnic politics in Chicago, 1890-1936. 253p $8.95 Univ. press of Ky.

320.9 Chicago—Politics and government. Minorities
SBN 8131-1226-5 LC 76-119810

"The author has made a study of nine Chicago ethnic groups. . . . [His thesis] is that the political behavior of these . . . groups shaped American politics, both locally and nationally . . . [and] that the ethnic reference group was the primary factor in establishing the voting patterns of these people during the period under study." (Ann Am Acad) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Allswang has made a thorough and challenging study . . . [which] presents an excellent discussion of the impact of prohibition, crime and reform, economic status, and such personalities as Tony Cermak, Henry Horner, Big Bill Thompson, and Al Capone on ethnic voting. It skillfully uses a combination of quantitative and qualitative techniques . . . [but] it is my opinion that [his] interpretation of the period places too much emphasis on the influence of ethnic groups." H. F. Gosnell
Am J Soc 77:978 Mr '72 700w

"Allswang has produced a valuable tool for social scientists. His work, clearly written and completely documented, will be consulted by historians, political scientists, and sociologists for years to come. . . . His data are based on unpublished census material and election returns. He also has made a comprehensive examination of the foreign language press, supplemented by materials from other newspapers, personal interviews and manuscript sources. . . . Allswang's findings—that the immigrant got his security from his group—agrees with the same conclusions presented by Park, Gavit, and Handlin in their studies. . . . What Allswang found in Chicago could probably be assigned to all cities in the United States during the same period." J. J. Flynn

Ann Am Acad 398:173 N '71 380w

"[The author] follows a quantitative and interdisciplinary approach to American political history in this study. . . . [His] heavily statistical approach makes at times for difficult reading. But his work supplements A. Gottfried's more narrative account, Boss Cermak of Chicago (BRD 1963) and is a major contribution to our understanding of American political behavior. Belongs on the shelves of all college libraries."

Choice 8:1080 O '71 260w

"[This sophisticated study] is a major contribution to the growing literature in the 'social analysis of politics.' It carries the methods and theories of the political behavioralists into the first third of the twentieth century for which the ecological data at the precinct level are almost impossible to obtain because of the unavailability of the manuscript federal censuses. . . . Allswang's major contribution is methodological. He is the first scholar to isolate at the precinct level a large sample of high ethnic concentration units in the early twentieth century. . . . [This book] surpasses its predecessors in methodological innovation. It is an indispensable guide for the behavioral study of ethnic politics in the early twentieth century." R. P. Swierenga

J Am Hist 58:779 D '71 800w

ALMARÁZ, FÉLIX D. Tragic cavalier: Governor Manuel Salcedo of Texas, 1808-1813, by Félix D. Almaráz, Jr. 206p $7 Univ. of Tex. press

976.4 Salcedo, Manuel María de. Texas—History
ISBN 0-292-70139-X LC 75-165917

This "study of Salcedo, governor of Hispanic Texas, 1808-1813, . . . deals with some of the last, neglected years of Spanish rule in that state. . . . It evaluates the reaction of a provincial official to [Father Miguel] Hidalgo's initiation of that nation's struggle for independence. Almaráz examines problems the governor faced from domestic affairs such as 'procedure' in the bureaucracy, insufficient manpower and supplies . . . and from foreign threats such as hostile Indians, exiled conspirators, and North American interlopers." (Choice)

"In this first study of Salcedo, Almaráz draws on the Béxar Archives in Texas and other manuscript collections. . . . Although written for specialists, Almaráz' graceful style gives the book a wider audience that includes anyone interested in the Texas borderlands."

Choice 8:1505 Ja '72 250w

"Almaráz writes with sympathy and understanding. In his account, Governor Salcedo, who arrived in Texas in 1808, emerges as a noble and tragic figure. . . . In this study of half a decade of Texas history, Almaráz views events from the perspective of the Spaniards. That perspective both adds and detracts from the value of Tragic Cavalier. To defend and justify Governor Salcedo and the royalist cause, Almaráz often uncritically makes heroes of his favorites and belittles their enemies. Still, he writes with conviction and vigor, and his conclusions rest on careful archival research and the able use of all available secondary works." R. E. Ruiz

J Am Hist 59:412 S '72 400w

ALMEDINGEN, E. M. Anna (Anna Khlebnikova de Poltoratzky, 1770-1840). 180p $4.50 Farrar, Straus

ISBN 0-374-30361-4 LC 71-175823

"The girlhood of Anna Khlebnikova is related in this last [and posthumous] historical novel in the sequence based on the lives of the author's ancestors, the Poltoratzkys. Anna, Almedingen's great grandmother, was reared with loving sternness by her father, a grain merchant. An enlightened man, he insisted that Anna share lessons with her brother, Yasha. When Yasha left Russia to live abroad, she learned to manage her father's estates. The story ends with Anna's marriage to Dimitry Markovich Poltoratzky, but their life together is briefly recounted in the epilogue. [Glossary.] Grades seven to ten." (Library J)

"E. M. Almedingen wrote in the prologue to Anna that 'this book is not wholly fiction; its background is based on reality.' So skillfully did she blend the two in this story about her great-grandmother that Anna and her life in tsarist Russia became in many ways more real and comprehensible than the majority of stories for young people purporting to deal with our own present culture. It comes down, ultimately, to what an author sees as important, and Miss Almedingen's view was in no way limited by time or place. . . . Beautifully written and engrossing, Anna is a work of literature. I know I would have loved it when I was young." Natalie Babbitt

Book World p4 (children's issue) My 7 '72 190w

"Less enticing as a central figure than [her] adventurous [father-in-law, who is the subject of the author's Young Mark, BRD 1968,] Anna often seems more a victim of her surroundings than an active protagonist. Certainly pallid in comparison with some of the great heroines of Russian fiction. . . . Anna, at least, has a certain charming simplicity that makes her a sympathetic—although not particularly exciting—character. But, as in her previous books, the author delineates the settings and customs in a narrative that is constructed with the intricacy of a finely-woven Persian carpet. . . . The enchanting settings combined with beautiful descriptions of daily events bolster the simple, romantic story." A. S.

Horn Bk 48:272 Je '72 210w

Reviewed by Lynda McConnell

Library J 97:1611 Ap 15 '72 90w

"The stories of this sensitive and gifted writer, all based on the chronicles of her family in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, are infused with devotion and nostalgia. Her last book, Anna also marks the end of an era. Although she does not shirk the social implications of a feudal society which persisted into our century, the author empathizes so completely with the heroine, Anna, that the reader sees the book as autobiographical fiction in the best tradition of 'the good old days'. . . . The shadows of coming events are short. Anna's life is a scholarly idyll, beautifully written. It is unlikely there will be any more of this kind."

TLS p476 Ap 28 '72 300w

ALMQUIST, ALAN J., jr. auth. The other Californians. See Heizer, R. F.

ALONSO, DAMASO. Children of wrath. See Alonso, D. Hijos de la ira

ALONSO, DAMASO. Hijos de la ira. Children of wrath; tr. by Elias L. Rivers. bilingual ed 169p $6.95 Johns Hopkins press

861

ISBN 0-8018-1174-0 LC 77-119107

This "is a book of protest written when nobody was protesting in Spain. It is a book of protest and of probing. What does it protest against? Against everything. . . . It is a universal, cosmic protest. . . . [It] is also an attempt to probe into the reality of the world, its essence and its first cause." (Author's prologue)

"Of today's contemporary poetry no other author deserves more a translation than Damaso Alonso, Spanish poet and literary critic, and no other work than Children of wrath could reveal [his] deep concern for the 'existence' after the sorrows of the Spanish Civil War. Alonso's stanzas are sometimes simply expressions of the non-poetic anguish of a man looking for the real meaning of being alive in a world abounding in nonsense. The language allowed the translator to give us those feelings, at the same time avoiding the most difficult task of keeping always the musical sound of the Spanish verse. This English translation does succeed in conveying most of the feelings of this outstanding poet. Useful for scholars as well as students, this book is a good acquisition for any library."

Choice 8:1588 F '72 130w

"Twenty-five years is a tremendous gap between publication in the original language and translation, but that is the length of time we have had to wait for this great Spanish poet's work to be made available in English. . . . Alonso's poetry combines the bitter, bleak mood of Spanish existentialism (Unamuno's influence) with a pervading Catholic background (Alonso's Jesuit schooling) that results in an agonized, introspective, death-of-God theme. . . . Frequently misinterpreted in literary histories as a religious poet, Alonso reads clearly here as a human being protesting on many levels, but mostly against the monstrous inhumanity of everyday life. . . . [His] most vivid and moving poems are those in which Alonso probes his own mind . . . or the war-exhausted society he lives in." Priscilla Whitmore

Library J 96:483 F 1 '71 260w

ALTBACH, PHILIP G., ed. Academic super markets; ed. by Philip G. Altbach, Robert S. Laufer [and] Sheila McVey. 369p $9.75 Jossey-Bass

378-73 Colleges and universities—U.S. Education. Higher
ISBN 0-87589-109-8 LC 71-173853

"Eighteen authors examine the crisis at [the University of] Wisconsin from various perspectives with most focusing on the events between 1967 and 1970. . . . Seven chapters [are] devoted to examination of the 'Power Structure,' six chapters to 'The Faculty,' and five to 'The Teaching Assistants and Students.'" (J Higher Ed)

"The editors place in perspective the series of crises at Madison beginning in 1966 and culminating in the August 24, 1970 explosions which caused damage of more than a million dollars to several university buildings and killed a student. Contributors (not all of whom are or were at Wisconsin) . . . examine the power structure of the university (Donald J. McCarthy's 'Reflections on academic administration' is a virtuoso piece well worth the price of the volume), the faculty (e.g. 'Faculty images of power and conflict'); and teachers and students ('Unions on campus' is the best examination yet available on this new phenomenon). The volume is an important addition to a large literature. . . . Recommended."

Choice 9:256 Ap '72 200w

"Anyone who is interested in the social and political climate of higher education in the state of Wisconsin will find the book fascinating. This reviewer found that many chapters support the authors' claim that 'the analysis and data presented here have much relevance for other universities.' . . . Students and professors of higher education, of student personnel, and of administration will receive the most value from this book. In addition, faculty members at many institutions will be able to see their own departments described and analyzed in a chapter or two. Administrators across the nation will recognize the complex pressures and forces which daily buffet their offices and will benefit (or receive solace) from the analysis." J. F. Volkwein

J Higher Ed 43:579 O '72 1000w

ALTMAN, DENNIS. Homosexual; oppression and liberation. 242p $6.95 Outerbridge & Dienstfrey; for sale by Dutton

301.41 Homosexuality—Personal narrations
ISBN 0-87690-039-2 LC 79-178894

This is an account of the author's "personal liberation in coming out and participating in the [gay-liberation] movement, as well as . . . [an] analysis of the political premises and goals and philosophical background of the movement." (N Y Times Bk R) Bibliography.

"The author's thesis about oppression of the homosexual . . . is a good one and it is recommended for adults. Like most minorities, homosexuals suffer, and such imposed suffering can be caused by ignorance or fear. This short study can help to remove both. . . . As we read through . . . [this] book we will find some of the cries of pain. Such pain can produce sounds which seem harsh, almost arrogant. It is important for the reader to tune into the entire symphony, not deciding too abruptly against these harsh sounds. Man's inhumanity to man has become a cliché. Reading and understanding this book can help us to restore some balance. . . . There is a serious bibliography and index. It is a serious book; it should be considered by the reader with humane reflection." Rev. E. J. Linehan
Best Sell 31:439 Ja 1 '72 440w

"While some will be offended by [the author's] outspoken views and language, the others by his writing style, often choppy, this volume is an important manifestation of a point of view which is having considerable impact on the homosexual community."

Choice 9:582 Je '72 160w

Reviewed by J. K. Marshall

Library J 97:2109 Je 1 '72 120w

"[It is] out of the black and women's liberation movements that gay liberation formulated itself and derived the courage to become a movement in the first place. The connections and disjunctions between the three movements are adroitly explored [in this book]. . . . As the books to date have all been by males it is not surprising that gay liberation is still considered a basically male phenomenon. Altman is the first man to recognize the woman. . . . Altman in making himself the center of his study . . . [conveys] the psychic damage sustained by the great majority of homosexuals who have internalized the prejudice against them by the culture." Jill Johnston

N Y Times Bk R p5 F 20 '72 600w

"[This] book is a boast and a demand for social revolution. . . . Altman's argument is that homosexuality is natural and good. It is society that is all wrong, by forcing the homosexual into the role of an oppressed minority. . . . What [he] demands is nothing less than full agreement that homosexual love is 'just as valid' as heterosexual. Altman has a rosy view of what the world will be like if and when this view becomes generally accepted." A. T. Baker

Time 99:81 F 28 '72 550w

ALTMAN, SIG. The comic image of the Jew; explorations of a pop culture phenomenon. 234p $10 Fairleigh Dickinson univ. press

791 Jewish wit and humor—History and criticism. Jews—Anecdotes, facetiae, satire, etc.—History and criticism. Mass media
ISBN 0-8386-7869-6 LC 71-146161

"Altman attempts to survey 'key' books, films, New York plays, and a sample of TV talk shows from roughly 1964-70 in order to determine if an 'image' of 'the Jew' is presented, if so—what is that image and how does it compare to other ethnic images, and what is the significance of the findings. The author analyzes materials that show there is a 'Jewish comic image' unlike other ethnic images in the same materials; that the image was largely created by Jews, and that it is basically anti-Jewish. Historical data on the emergence of 'Jewish humor' and the nature of the settings in which it originated are presented. . . . Bibliography, Index." (Choice)

"The pioneer venture of its kind for this ethnic group. . . . It is an interesting beginning study of a topic for which Altman by personal and intellectual background appears qualified. While clearly written, the analysis concerns materials the reader may never have seen or heard, thus making the work sometimes difficult to follow. The work should have most interest and relevance to an audience of scholars interested in pop culture and content analysis, to those seriously concerned with mass media and group stereotypes and to persons interested in American Jewish life."

Choice 9:723 J1/Ag '72 200w

Reviewed by A. L. Fessler
Library J 97:1453 Ap 15 '72 230w

ALTMANN, JEANNE, jt. auth. Baboon ecology. See Altmann, S. A.

ALTMANN, STUART A. Baboon ecology; African field research [by] Stuart A. Altmann and Jeanne Altmann. (Bibliotheca primatologica no 12) 220p il $12 Univ. of Chicago press

599 Baboons
ISBN 0-226-01601-3 LC 72-116763

"This monograph describes [the authors'] ecological observations on baboons in Masai-Amboseli Game Reserve, Kenya, East Africa. Fieldwork was conducted between June, 1963, and August, 1964. It deals with census data, sleeping patterns, movements, water, food, and predation." (Am Anthropol)

"The authors have thoroughly researched the literature of the baboon when preparing their data. But without social data [the book] is of limited interest except as an encyclopedia-like reference source. The primatologist who wants baboon census data or predation data will use this book. The nonspecialist who wants a description of baboon ecology (ecology without social behavior) will find it a comprehensive review." C. A. Bramblett
Am Anthropol 74:144 F/Ap '72 270w

"[[This study] includes engrossing accounts of the behavior of savanna baboons adapted to meet the rigors of life in the arid Masai-Amboseli Game Reserve. . . . A staggering amount of data has been arranged in logical, orderly fashion. . . . Clear, careful descriptions of . . . [the Altmanns'] rigorous protocols in the collection of data are present in full so the reader may assess the degree to which the data may be interpretive, a feature rarely found in behavior field studies. . . . What are usually deemed conclusions have been set aside in a 'speculations' chapter. . . . Unfortunately, a full one-fourth of the limited speculations are concerned with the applicability of a particular model of group-size with limited general interest. In content, organization, and production, this book ranks as another superb report of an excellent field study."

Choice 8:856 S '71 250w

ALVAREZ, A. The savage god: a study of suicide. 299p $7.95 Random house

179 Suicide
ISBN 0-394-47451-1 LC 70-117703

This book "begins with a personal memoir of the young American poet Sylvia Plath and proceeds into a study of how she, and so many artists in the twentieth century, chose to die. The book explores suicide . . . from a personal, literary and existential point of view. . . . documents and explores historically man's changing attitudes toward suicide . . . [and discusses] the theories which have developed . . . [from] Emile Durkheim to . . . Freud and his associates. . . . [Alvarez] explores the minds and emotional states of Dante, Cowper, Donne, Chatterton, and others

[and chronicles] his attempt on his own life." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by Anthony Sialyls
Best Sell 32:59 My 1 '72 490w

Reviewed by Anthony Storr
Book World p1 Ap 16 '72 1050w

Christian Century 89:466 Ap 19 '72 20w

Reviewed by J. B. Gordon
Commonweal 96:460 Ag 25 '72 1300w

"Mr Alvarez has not made a convincing job of his claim that this is a study of suicide in general. It is a pity, for the scholarship is there and the exposition is elegant. . . . The book is like a meal in which the first course and the dessert are too rich; no matter how subtly nourishing the main course, the result has to be described as ill-balanced. If Mr Alvarez wanted to write a book about Sylvia Plath and himself, he should have done so and not tried to pad it out with Dante and Melanie Klein."

Economist 241:59 N 27 '71 420w

Reviewed by Geoffrey Grigson
Ecounter 39:59 Ag '72 1200w

Reviewed by Irving Howe
Harper 244:102 Je '72 1750w

"Alvarez has written a book of absorbing human interest, low-keyed, yet rich with feeling. . . . The tone is neither statistical nor salvational. Suicide is portrayed as a 'terrible but utterly natural reaction to the strained, narrow, unnatural necessities we sometimes create for ourselves,' a picture of suffocating personal untruth with the only breakthrough in death. . . . Alvarez views the contemporary artist as scapegoat or victim, as one who must open the psychic wounds of his time on his own person, thus as one uniquely prone to suicide or breakdown." A. G. Mojtabal

Library J 97:1325 Ap 1 '72 310w

Reviewed by J. D. O'Hara
New Repub 166:29 Ap 22 '72 1050w

"[Alvarez] writes briskly and sensibly, with a genuinely sympathetic understanding of the subject, with a ready control of quotation, and a nicely quizzical way with a good story. But these sturdy virtues don't always prove themselves a match for the gigantic puzzle of self-extinction. Too often the problem of suicide slides elusively from Alvarez's deft, commonsensical scrutiny. . . . Most readers will, I imagine, tackle the beginning and end of Alvarez's book first. When they come to the centre of the sandwich they will be disappointed. For it is little more than a summary dossier on suicide through the ages." Jonathan Raban

New Statesman 82:701 N 19 '71 2000w

Reviewed by W. H. Auden
NY Rev of Books 18:3 Ap 20 '72 2650w

Reviewed by J. C. Oates
NY Times Bk R pl Ap 16 '72 1200w

Reviewed by P. S. Prescott
Newsweek 79:92 Ap 24 '72 850w

Reviewed by Albert Rothenberg
Sat R 55:66 Ap 29 '72 2200w
Time 99:85 Je 12 '72 300w

"The book's chief object is to explore what one might call the 'suicidal element,' to penetrate at least some distance into the existential presence of the wish, or rather the resolve to die. Where the arguments and assertions become suspect (and they often do) it is usually because Mr Alvarez has reached a point in his reasoning where reason isn't any use, where blank bafflement insists on taking over, where it has got to be acknowledged that the truest thing we can know about suicide is that we cannot know. It is Mr Alvarez's elementary awareness that 'suicide means different things for different people at different times' that encourages both the best and the worst things in The Savage God."

TLS p1479 N 26 '71 2600w

Va Q R 48:cliii autumn '72 280w

ALVES, RUBEM A. Tomorrow's child; imagination, creativity, and the rebirth of culture. 210p $6.95 Harper

901.94 Civilization, Modern--1950-
SBN 06-060176-0 LC 77-183637

"The theme of this book is the irrationality of modern society as perceived by a deeply religious man. The discussion centers on the role of power, science, violence, and our method of rationalization. For Alves, who from 1970 to 1972 was a visiting professor at Union Theological Seminary, New York, and who now teaches in São Paulo, Brazil, our ways of acting are leading toward destruction." (Library J) Bibliography.

ALVES, R. A.—Continued

Reviewed by R. P. Burns

America 127:72 Ag 5 '72 700w

"Alves longs for a brand-new world . . . beyond the dreams of recent futurologists. What that new culture will be, he does not presume to predict. He does venture to say, however, that it will not be an outgrowth of current organizations, social systems, ideals or beliefs, but a totally new society. Alves does a brilliant job of spelling out the need for a new age and the dynamics of man which will inevitably effect that change at some time in the distant future. . . . In his scenario, we can only sow a seed of hope and dream of a new day we will never see and whose form we cannot even imagine, despite the creativity of our imagination. . . . Readers should find Alves' book fascinating, insightful, rich and intellectually aggressive, but they may be impatient with his conclusions about life in the immediate future." Norman Habel

Christian Century 89:1077 O 25 '72 650w

"This book is an amalgam of semirevolutionary thinking, an attack on Western imperial expansiveness, a paean enjoying expanded consciousness, a rehash of the theology of play, and an already dated call for another 'counter-culture.' [I am] . . . more pro than con in my attitudes toward this kind of book. . . . Alves is better than many of his supporters." Martin Marty

Critic 30:76 J1/Ag '72 220w

"[Alves's] creed is that 'creativity . . . is the logic of life.' He calls for the rebirth of imagination, magic, play, and utopian dreams. Imagination, which involves suffering and rebellion, will enable the human personality to build a culture of hope. It 'gives birth to a new creation.' This book is a good presentation of the new thinking about life taking shape in the church." Alan Seaburg

Library J 97:2195 Je 15 '72 130w

AMBLER, ERIC. The Levanter. 307p $6.95
Atheneum pubs.

LC 72-76902

"The story concerns the efforts of a radical, breakaway group of Palestinian Arab guerrillas to wreak havoc on Tel Aviv . . . Ambler has taken a . . . Lebanese-Armenian-Greek Cypriot-Syrian, with the Anglo-Saxon name of Michael-Howell—and sent him . . . through a fantastic series of adventures." (Christian Science Monitor)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 230:96 J1 '72 50w

"The book is a sure winner . . . [and is] a typical Ambler romp through complex international intrigue, persistent danger, shadowy, mystery men, an absolutely up-to-the-minute twist." J. G. Harrison

Christian Science Monitor p10 J1 12 '72 140w

Reviewed by Henry Veit

Library J 97:[2652] Ag '72 90w

"Once again it is a pleasure to report that the old Master continues to function at the height of his powers. . . . Ambler is a superb technician. Anything but avant-garde, he is descended from Maugham and certain Edwardian stylists. 'This is Michael Howell's story and he tells most of it himself,' the book begins. (Ambler is not the one to start off with sex in the back seat.) Slowly, smoothly he involves the reader with his characters, and in a short time everything becomes real. Ambler fans will rejoice. Which means everybody. Is there anybody so benighted as not to be an Ambler fan? Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p32 J1 16 '72 260w

"It takes Mr. Ambler some little time to set the stage for the entertainment to come—Howell's extrication of himself and his girl. This requires of us both patience and attention, but we are more than repaid for our trouble. . . . [This] is certainly one of the best—if not the best—of Mr. Ambler's postwar thrillers."

New Yorker 48:84 J1 15 '72 100w

Reviewed by O. L. Bailey

Sat R 55:56 Ag 5 '72 180w

Reviewed by Charles Elliott

Time 99:[92] Je 26 '72 270w

AMBROSE, STEPHEN E. Rise to globalism: American foreign policy since 1938. 352p $3.95; pa $2.45 Penguin

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations

ISBN 0-14-021247-7 LC 75-162801

This book, which is a volume in the projected eight-volume series Pelican History of the United States, is an "account of American foreign policy, from Franklin D. Roosevelt's administration before World War II, through the war, Truman, and Marshall Plan years, down to the Kennedy and Johnson administrations and Vietnam." (Library J)

"A lively, undocumented but informed account that occupies that middle ground between polemic and meticulous scholarship, which is generally labeled 'popular history.' Though necessarily and by no means free of highly questionable interpretations and generalizations, the volume succeeds in placing the complex events of the past 30 years into a coherent framework, and contains explanations which are provocative, useful, and, at least in broad outline, generally accurate. . . . The volume can serve as a stimulating introduction to the subject for both undergraduates and the general reader."

Choice 9:125 Mr '72 170w

"In the context of Vietnam and all that this is a very 'relevant' young man's history: it may look rather dated ten years from now."

Economist 241:60 O 30 '71 120w

"Considering the size of the book and the period of time covered, this makes for an excellent survey of U.S. foreign policy and chronicles in one small volume the events that carried the country from war to war. The work includes a detailed bibliography. . . . [This history] written in a popular style [is] recommended for public and school libraries and for the academic library wishing to provide a survey of the times." Eugene Holtman

Library J 96:3130 O 1 '71 120w

"[This book is] a splendid example of the impact of revisionist analysis on the reinterpretation of American wartime and postwar diplomacy. Engaged, literate, comprehensive, and always stimulating, it is among the best surveys of cold war history that have yet appeared." Ronald Steel

N Y Rev of Books 17:23 S 2 '71 750w

AMERICAN COUNCIL ON EDUCATION. Higher education for everybody? See Higher education for everybody?

AMERICAN FILM INSTITUTE. The American film institute catalog of motion pictures produced in the United States: vF2: Feature films, 1921-1930; exec. ed: Kenneth W. Munden. 2v 936:1653p $55 Bowker

016.79143 Motion pictures—Catalogs

ISBN 0-8352-0440-5 LC 79-128587

"The first volume describes about 7,000 films, arranged in one alphabetical sequence. The second contains three indexes: (1) personal, institutional, and corporate names credited in the films; (2) literary and dramatic sources of the films; and (3) subjects. . . . [Other] volumes are planned: one for the beginnings, 1893-1910, six each (by decades) on feature films, short films, and newsreels." (Am Lit)

Am Lit 43:684 Ja '72 70w

"[These volumes] are the beginning of what will have to be the major reference work on American movies. The first volume's . . . listing for each film includes the distributor, date, number of reels, number of feet, credits, cast (names of characters as well as actors), literary sources, and synopses. Some of the synopses are entertaining enough to make the catalog a browsing item. . . . The second volume contains a wonderfully complete cast and credit index, as well as a subject index, which refers to the listing of subjects after each film—a device of questionable value although reading the subject lists aloud makes a delightful parlor game. . . . As the volumes cumulate, perhaps the subject listings will prove to have some use . . . their inclusion doesn't lessen the catalog's value." J. A. Avant

Library J 96:4082 D 15 '71 250w

AMERICAN HERITAGE. The American heritage history of notable American houses; auth. and ed. in charge: Marshall B. Davidson; biographical essays [by] Margot P. Brill. 383p il $19.95 Am. heritage 728 Architecture, Domestic. Architecture, American, U.S.—Historic houses, etc.

ISBN 07-015467-8 LC 75-149724

This is "the story of life in America in terms of the houses Americans have planned, built, and lived in. . . . [It] reaches back into the European past, as far back as ancient Greece and Rome, and . . . to the distant Orient. It continues for three hundred years in these New World surroundings." (Introd) Index.

"[This is] a profusely illustrated volume, containing more than 650 photographs, 100 in color. . . . The social historian, the architect, the decorator, the antiquarian—all will want to have this reference volume, the beauty of which must be seen in order to be appreciated. . . . Initially, the reader is overwhelmed by the magnificent photography. . . . A careful reading of the text, however, reveals Mr. Davidson's ability to 'animate' his houses with great effect. . . . I highly recommend this beautiful survey." J. Q. Feller

Best Sell 31:398 D 1 '71 220w

Choice 9:1284 D '72 190w

"Well-written and well-informed, the book is a delight to read." M. E. Landgren
Library J 97:487 F 1 '72 160w

"[This work] fails to document sufficiently either the social life or the architectural and decorative arts history of every period from the Puritans through Paul Rudolph. The informative, if turgid text, is punctuated endlessly with quotations from documents of the periods surveyed. The device seems totally out of keeping in a book that is designed to appeal to the readers of decorating magazines." Rita Reef

N Y Times Bk R p66 D 5 '71 140w

"A book that runs from the mid-seventeenth to the mid-twentieth century cannot be all-inclusive, but this one tries, and the space it allots to later and smaller houses is realistic and valuable."

New Yorker 47:187 N 27 '71 70w

AMERICAN HERITAGE. The American heritage history of the American people. See Weisberger, B. A.

AMES, LOUIS BATES. Stop school failure [by] Louis Bates Ames, Clyde Gillespie [and] John W. Streff. 308p il $7.95 Harper 370.15 Educational psychology. Child study
SBN 06-010114-8 LC 79-181603

This book considers the common causes of school failure including "immaturity, overplacement in grade, visual or perceptual difficulties, emotional disturbance, low intelligence. There are discussions of . . . the role of the father in a child's education, the phonetic system of reading, remedial reading, the many current fallacies in primary education, a comparison of English infant schools and ours. Ideas for new programs, and what the parent may reasonably expect." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Written primarily for parents, but early childhood teacher educators, administrators, teachers, and teachers in preparation would find the majority of the text most informative. The text is well indexed, more than adequately supplied with references. Parents as well as teacher-educators will find the text very readable and more than adequate in providing concrete discourse on causes of school failures. . . . Two very practical chapters, 'Suggestions for promoting school success' and 'Don't believe all you hear,' provide the parent with succinct observations."

Choice 9:1177 N '72 200w

"At a time when many writers are implicating environment as the major source of school failure, it is refreshing to read a book that focuses on heredity and development. In fact, the message of [this book] could be summed up in three words: Don't push nature! . . . Parents, for whom this readable and authoritative book is primarily intended, will gain many insights into school failure. . . . They will [also] find abundant library and community resource material, including the diagnostic tests used at the Gesell Institute to help them in understanding and easing their child's learning disability." S. R. Cohen

Library J 97:1318 Ap 1 '72 200w

AMES, WILLIAM E. A history of the National intelligencer. 376p $11.95 Univ. of N.C. press

071.53 National intelligencer. Gales, Joseph. Seaton, William Winston. Smith, Samuel Harrison
ISBN 0-8078-1178-5 LC 75-109462

"During much of the first half of the nineteenth century, . . . the aristocrat of Washington journalism was the National Intelligencer. . . . For most of its life the newspaper depended on the federal government for support. . . . [This account] is, for the most part, the story of two of its editors Joseph Gales, Jr., and William Winston Seaton, [and of] the paper's founder, Samuel Harrison Smith. . . . The study summarizes the paper's public position on almost every important issue from 1807 until 1865." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Primarily for specialists, those interested in early 19th-century journalism and the influence of politics and patronage on it, and for those interested in 19th-century history. Abundant footnotes show careful documentation but will annoy a general reader. Assumes familiarity with U.S. history, not explaining important historical events like the Alien and Sedition Acts, the Macon Bill, and the Wilmot Proviso." Choice 9:1195 N '72 160w

"Perhaps most informative and entertaining are those chapters dealing with the years the Intelligencer was with the 'outs,' during the factional and party battles of the Jackson period. By then intellectually committed to Whiggery and financially indebted to the second Bank of the United States, proprietors Gales and Seaton played an important part in the controversy over the bank. . . . There is little other than politics in this study, for the Intelligencer was almost exclusively a political newspaper. Much attention is given to the tortuous financing of the paper, but that too was political in nature. . . . Ames' writing style is serviceable, and the book is handsomely printed. . . . Extensive use is made of the newspaper and of the letters of those men with whom the proprietors corresponded, such as Jefferson, Clay, Biddle, Webster, and many others." T. H. Baker

J Am Hist 59:700 D '72 500w

"This is a first-rate account (as well as the first important history) of the paper, the men who ran it and the men who did business with it. Invaluable to anyone curious about the history of U.S. journalism and U.S. politics of the first half of the 19th century."

N Y Times Bk R p16 Mr 19 '72 250w

"Ames has written an ambitious study of one of the most important newspapers in American history. . . . The book is well written and will be of interest to journalists as well as historians. It is unfortunate, however, that the broad scope of the book does not, at times, allow the analysis to go as deep as might be hoped. The conflict between patronage and a free press, the paper's move from Jeffersonian to Whig politics, and the avoidance of the slavery issue are discussed, but not deeply enough."

Va Q R 48:cxliv autumn '72 130w

AMIS, KINGSLEY. Girl, 20. 253p $5.95 Harcourt
ISBN 0-15-135690-4 LC 75-174504

The central character in this novel is "rich, with-it, leftist Sir Roy Vandervane, a classical musician who is also popular. He is a great one for having it both ways. Why should his age (fifty-three) cut him off from 'youth', or his wealth . . . cut him off from anti-apartheid rallies or other hammer-blows at the system? . . . His favoured method of bridging the generation-gap is affairs with young girls. . . . The current one is in fact girl, 17. . . . Douglas Vandell [a music critic and friend] finds himself supporting the nymphophilic Vandervane through an assortment of . . . situations, from a four-handed dinner with mistress and daughter . . . to a disastrous venture into pop." (TLS)

Reviewed by Frank Kermode
Atlantic 230:85 J1 '72 850w

Reviewed by Carolyn Riley
Best Sell 31:473 F 1 '72 600w

AMIS, KINGSLEY—Continued

"To Kingsley Amis fans who savored . . . his last novel, The Green Man [BRD 1970], this comic (and slightly tragic) novel . . . comes as a disappointment. . . . Amis has better things to do, I think, than go larking at the expense of the trendy people who pant to keep in there at the pulse of where-it's-happening, that fantasy-land media construct of fashion, fad, and spiritual poverty. It's a bit late to waste a book on that, and the touch of torpor in the prose suggests perhaps Amis knows it. The humor is well enough turned but broadly brushed. . . . [The characters] are proficiently but sometimes superficially done, and the plot moves along like a guy on a leisurely stroll to the corner pub." S. K. Oberbeck

Book World p4 Ja 9 '72 650w

Reviewed by Derwent May Encounter 38:74 Ja '72 950w

Reviewed by H. E. Hutchinson
Library J 97:1344 Ap 1 '72 70w

Reviewed by D. K. Mano
Nat R 24:408 Ap 14 '72 550w

Reviewed by Clive Jordan
New Statesman 82:409 S 24 '71 80w

Reviewed by Christopher Ricks
N Y Rev of Books 18:23 Mr 9 '72 1000w

"As soon as the outlines of this utterly contemporary novel begin to emerge one can see that it is essentially an adaptation of the old moral fable about the Pied Piper. Decked with scenes of youthful riot and the disarray of middle age, the essential fable has been revamped to express Amis's distaste for permissiveness and all its consequences. For satiric ends the cast of characters has been adroitly shaped to expose a sort of folie à deux in which youth and an aging misleader of youth contribute equally to the mischief. . . . The reader can, if he chooses, skate merrily on the thin ice of amusement without concern for the abysses of terror below. The message is Spenglerian, but the mood remains spritely." R. V. Cassill
N Y Times Bk R p7 Ja 16 '72 650w
New Yorker 47:102 F 5 '72 110w

Reviewed by Arthur Cooper
Newsweek 79:77 Mr 6 '72 230w

"Amis's talent for creating humorous situations, characters, and dialogue is as fresh as ever. As with Peter De Vries, whom he resembles in some ways, Amis also has a distinct undercurrent of pathos, darkness, and trauma. The result is not really a 'new' Amis so much as a more mature examination of human foibles and excesses than was the case in his earlier novels. Girl, 20 is first rate." Paul Schleuter
Sat R 55:35 Ja 15 '72 600w

Reviewed by R. Z. Sheppard
Time 99:88 F 7 '72 450w
TLS p1138 S 24 '71 950w
Va Q R 48:lii spring '72 60w

AMMER, CHRISTINE. Harper's dictionary of music; drawings by Carmela M. Ciampa and Kenneth L. Donlon. 414p ill $10 Harper
780.3 Music—Dictionaries
SBN 06-010113-X LC 77-134280

"The entries in this dictionary include the most commonly used musical terms [as well as] material on music history, with a view to explaining the background of musical practice." (Author's note)

Booklist 69:1 S 1 '72 1050w

"A creditable music dictionary which will appeal, as the book jacket states, 'not only to the confirmed music lover who may not be a specialist in music, but also to the young person on the threshold of music appreciation.' While this dictionary appears to draw heavily on the Harvard Dictionary of Music [by W. Apel, BRD 1970] and other standard works for content, it is a genuine reworking of the material for an entirely different audience, and as such, a worthwhile contribution. . . . High school and many public libraries will find Ammer's new dictionary an appropriate addition to their collections. Perhaps it will be most warmly received by those seeking a gift for music loving teenagers."

Choice 9:353 My '72 240w [YA]

"Prepared by the editor in chief of the Harvard dictionary of Music revised edition, [this] seems designed primarily for young people. . . . The orientation is somewhat Viennese, (e.g., Franz Lehar is included but not Frank Loesser). As in any large compilation, errors occur. . . . Use this book with caution." Dika Newlin
Library J 97:1418 Ap 15 '72 120w

"Sufficiently comprehensive for amateurs and laymen, though by no means for the advanced student or professional. Biographical information is reduced to make room for more intensive coverage of musical compositions—a justifiable compromise. Particularly helpful are the clear drawings of instruments, pronunciations of entry words, musical illustrations, and the tables for such classifications as 'Romantic Composers,' 'Theme and Variations,' and 'Symphonic Poems,' which list composers, titles or types of composition, and dates. The excellent discussions of 'Serial Music' and 'Rock' point up the author's knack for clarifying and characterizing difficult subjects." D. M. Glixon
Sat R 55:75 My 6 '72 100w

"Cross-references are ample, and though abbreviations are used, the entries are literate, not algebraic. [The book's] distinctive feature is that it is of American origin and is therefore strong on American music. While its utility as a general reference book would seem to be adequate, the American information made available in it gives it a special value for European users. . . . The book certainly promises to stand up well to prolonged use."

TLS p840 Jl 21 '72 170w

AMMON, HARRY. James Monroe; the quest for national identity. 706p $12.95 McGraw

B or 92 Monroe, James. U.S.—Politics and government—1855-1861
ISBN 0-07-001582-1 LC 78-141294

This biography "chiefly concerns American diplomatic history as influenced by Monroe." (Library J) Bibliography.

Reviewed by V. A. Lapomarda
America 125:436 N 20 '71 30w

Reviewed by J. C. Dougherty
Best Sell 31:194 Ag 1 '71 700w
Choice 8:1242 N '71 170w

Reviewed by C. C. Mooney
J Am Hist 59:131 Je '72 900w

"While Ammon includes in this study Monroe's flaws of character, as well as his sterling qualities, this is not a personal biography intended for the general reader, but a scholarly, meticulous work for the expert. . . . Ammon has documented his work well and includes some sources not previously used. He presents, where applicable, viewpoints opposed to his conclusions. Recommended for academic and large public libraries." Jerry Cao
Library J 96:826 Mr 1 '71 100w

"There has long been no adequate biography of Monroe; here is a gap to be filled. It is both reasonable and predictable, with the mass of authentic information now at hand, that it should be filled with a fat book. If meticulous scholarship can do it, Ammon has written the definitive life of Monroe. . . . [This biography] gathers within the compass of a single volume a mass of useful information from widely diffused sources. In its undemonstrative way, it offers the best approach to an American who was neither a great personality nor a deep thinker, but simply an experienced, ambitious and worthy gentleman." George Dangerfield
N Y Times Bk R p3 Jl 4 '71 1000w

AMUNATEGUI, FRANCIS. Masterpieces of French cuisine; introd. and text by Francis Amunategui; recipes provided by the chefs of the starred restaurants of the Guide Michelin. 344p pl col pl $14.95 Macmillan (N Y)

641.5 Cookery, French
LC 79-92207

The editor "has collected the favorite recipes of the urban and regional restaurants [of France] starred in the . . . Guide Michelin and has written an introduction to each of the various regions, commenting not only on the character of the region or province but also on its wines and cheeses as well as its . . . dishes. . . . [A section at the end] contains directions for the preparation of the sauces, butters, stocks, pastry-doughs, and other garnishes shared by all the regions." (Best Sell) Index of recipes.

"If not the handsomest cook book published within the past decade certainly . . . [this] is a contender for the title. . . . There are 135 full-page color plates which should stir appetites and an additional 70 black-and-white plates. . . . Gorgeous may well be the word for this gourmet's delight. As a gift item it is nonpareil." Freide Gruenrock
Best Sell 31:311 O 15 '71 170w

"The promise is that 'now you can recreate at home the sybaritic experience of dining in the most illustrious of French restaurants.' Well, mazelov for that—though the recipes aren't too difficult. Many are quite simple: e.g., Stuffed Clams and Broiled Lobster with Tarragon. Yet I don't think that even these will taste as they did in Lezardrieur or Concarneau. Let's face it, the flavor of European foods is different from ours. A fact (need I add?) that few how-to-re-create-European-or-Asian-food-at-home books mention." Nika Hazelton

N Y Times Bk R p32 D 12 '71 110w

AMUNDSEN, KIRSTEN. The silenced majority: women and American democracy. (A Spectrum bk) 184p $5.95; pa $2.45 Prentice-Hall 301.41 Women in the U.S. Woman—Civil rights
SBN 13-810291-0; 13-810283-X (pa)
LC 70-153441

"In surveying the present status of women, [the author] provides documentation of their current powerless state which she says is the result of their sex-role conditioning. 'Our stereotype of femininity . . . comes to constitute serious interference with a woman's positive orientation to . . . politics.' It is, however, by becoming involved in politics that women can change and end many forms of discrimination. They may have to use the same tactics that other outgroups have used to become visible—i.e., sit-ins and boycotts. 'Woman power' at the polls can, Amundsen believes, help to upgrade American life and the character of politics." (Library J) Index.

"[Amundsen's] tone of anger saves the undistinguished style of the writing from condemnation as academic blah-prose and her statistics save her arguments from being clichés. She is no radical and mutes any women's lib views by appeals to simple social fairness. This would be a useful book for a freshman or sophomore women's course. The footnotes provide a good resumé of the recent material on women in America. It should be noted that the data is, of necessity, pre-1970 and that the analysis is not sophisticated enough to give the book more than a short life as a meaningful statement of the progress of women towards equal participation in political and economic institutions."

Choice 9:684 JL/Ag '72 130w

"Amundsen presents a clear case for the need for more participation by women in the democratic process. . . . This contribution to the women's liberation movement is well written and to the point. Recommended for all libraries." K. A. Cassell

Library J 96:2617 S 1 '71 120w

AN, TAI SUNG. Mao Tse-tung's cultural revolution. 211p $6.95; pa $1.95 Pegasus (N Y) 320.951 China (People's Republic of China)
—Politics and government
LC 79-128653

A "description and evaluation of the Cultural Revolution. . . . The book focuses upon the political struggles of the Maoists with supporters of Liu Shao-ch'i. The struggle, largely initiated by the Red Guards, threatened domestic chaos and was eventually reduced by the intervention of the army. Emphasis is placed on the central position of army personnel in the revolutionary committees and post-Cultural Revolution party committees that developed as stability returned." (Choice) Index.

"The appendices are very useful for the specialist, since they are lists of (1) the Ninth Central Committee, (2) leading and influential members of the 29 provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions revolutionary committees, and (3) as well as the committees. The book antedates the fall from power of Lin Biao and devotes too little attention to the policy issues of the Cultural Revolution, so that it is of limited use as a text, except perhaps as supplementary reading. The nonspecialist will undoubtedly be confused by the large number of names that occur without real clarity as to their role, except for designation as to army, party, etc."

Choice 9:865 S '72 160w

"An, a political scientist at Washington College in Maryland, here presents some tentative findings and conclusions from an intensive and continuing study of Mao's epochal effort to expunge 'revisionism and revisionists' from the Chinese Communist Revolution. . . . [An's] analysis, resting upon painstaking research, has entailed a hard-headed examination of the available source materials in many languages. Sweeping aside the romanticism and gullibility characteristic of many other reports and accounts of this major event in Chinese Communist and modern world history, An concludes that not only was Mao's compulsive upheaval a Pyrrhic political victory at best, but that the outcome and consequences are still—and will long remain—inconclusive." Hyman Kublin

Library J 97:2584 Ag '72 170w

ANASTAPLO, GEORGE. The constitutionalist: notes on the First amendment. 826p $20 Southern Methodist Univ. press 342.73 Free speech. Freedom of the press.

U.S.—Constitutional history
LC 72-165793

In this study the 'first part, consisting of . . . documented texts, traces the various interpretations and applications of freedom of speech and press from its English origins to the present. The second part, consisting of five appendices, discusses the practical evolution and application of these freedoms in a number of specific historical and contemporary situations.' (Choice) Index: Subjects and names. Index: Cases and jurists.

"The thesis of this scholarly work is that the speech and press clauses of the First Amendment have been misinterpreted by the United States Supreme Court; that a gloss has been added which was never intended by the framers. . . . Whether one agrees with Professor Anastaplo or not is beside the point. With great thoroughness he has explored the [Justice Black] doctrine and raised questions of far-reaching importance. . . . [This work includes] 389 pages of footnotes. 'The extensive notes,' writes Professor Anastaplo, 'which (in their comments on the most trivial as well as the most exalted things) both elaborate and qualify my original argument.' Could not the significant elaborations and qualifications have been included in the text? Might not the trivial have been omitted?' C. G. Post

Ann Am Acad 404:291 N '72 550w

"[This] is a powerful study which bridges the gaps between theory and reality and the past and present. While by no means easy reading, the volume should prove useful to a variety of readers in the fields of constitutional history, political theory, and contemporary civil liberties. The work is part of the continuing scholarly discussion of what has proven to be the chief problem in American constitutional development; the need to balance individual freedoms with national security."

Choice 9:129 Mr '72 200w

"A giant book, and a curious one, this is a semiautobiographical discussion of the First Amendment by a maverick with courage, a man gifted in philosophical and legal traditions who devoutly believes in free speech. A long appendix details his problems with the legal fraternity."

Christian Century 88:1422 D 1 '71 40w

"This is a rare book, one that contains original thinking, and a serious discussion of very sensitive topics. . . . [It is] no book for the casual reader, even the casual scholar. While certainly not beyond criticism, it is a work of reason, concern and passionate conviction—even righteousness. . . . It would be a misfortune if this book were ignored, for it is designed to evoke cries of anguish from liberals and conservative scholars alike, and it provides the grounds for a new discussion of the contemporary constitutional crisis of order and liberty, rights and duties—a discussion thus far missing because of a general failure to appreciate the necessary tension between these ideals that Anastaplo is at pains to demonstrate." William Gangi

Nation 214:218 S 18 '72 1450w

ANCHELL, MELVIN. Sex and sanity. 310p 11 $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

301.41 Sexual ethics. Sex instruction
LC 73-158166

The author of this book, a doctor who "practices psychiatry and internal medicine, draws . . . almost exclusively from his clinical experience for the positions he takes. . . . [He is opposed to] sexual permissiveness . . . false or excessively detailed sex education in the schools . . . [and] pornography. . . . [He advocates] adult sexuality in marriage." (Best Sell)

ANCHELL, MELVIN—Continued

"Though the book is indexed and has a bibliography, it has few footnotes or authoritative quotations. It is almost entirely based on a determined Freudian faith and the doctor's analysis of his own experience with patients. The author . . . defends Freud against the charge of being a pan-sexualist, and takes a dim view of the various 'sexperts' of the Kinsey-Masters-Johnson persuasion. As a 'witness' to common sense . . . this book is worth [reading]." H. V. Sattler

Best Sell 31:549 Mr 15 '72 220w

"[Dr. Anchell], frank in his language and modern in his approach, seems to disapprove of any sexual activity outside the marriage bed. . . . There is nothing really new in [his book but it is] both readable and sensible." E. T. Smith

Library J 96:3332 O 15 '71 50w

ANDERSON, ALAN H. The drifting continents, by Alan H. Anderson, Jr. 192p il lib bdg $4.29 Putnam

551.4 Continental drift—Juvenile literature. Geomorphology—Juvenile literature LC 70-154788

"Drawn from articles in Science and Nature, this [book] presents . . . information on continental drift theory based on the work of Wegener (elastic hypothesis); Du Toit, Joly and Holmes (convection theory); Hess (theory of seafloor spreading); Vine, Matthews, Pittman and Heirtzler (magnetic anomalies); and Wilson (transform faults). Included are the paleomagnetic evidence in land rocks, magnetic striping on the sea floor, seismic analysis of transform faults, and the discoveries of oceanic ridges and the Pacific trenches. Seismic techniques and the sonar reentry technique of the Glomar Challenger (Deep-Sea Drilling Program) are also covered." (Library J) "Age thirteen and up." (Sat R)

"[This] book is a splendid example of the historical approach combined with clearly explained reasoning from evidence. It relates how the idea of continental drift changed from a laughable heresy less than half a century ago to its present status of acceptance. There are a few errors. . . . In spite of these minor slips, I like the book very much indeed." H. C. Stubbs

Horn Bk 48:168 Ap '72 170w

"Such predictions as that 'The Suez canal will become unnecessary as Eurasia pulls away from northeast Africa, doubling or tripling the width of the Red Sea' will hold even readers with little background in geology spellbound." I. G. Kelley

Library J 97:286 Ja 15 '72 220w [YA]

"Not only a well-written book about an important advance in geology, this is also an interesting study of scientific method." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 55:47 Ja 15 '72 90w

ANDERSON, BENEDICT R. O'G. Java in ■ time of revolution: occupation and resistance, 1944-1946. 494p $15 Cornell univ. press

959.8 Java—Politics and government. Nationalism. Indonesia ISBN 0-8014-0687-0 LC 74-174891

This is a "political history of Java (to some degree of Indonesia as a whole) during the early period of its transition from Japanese occupation to merdeka or national independence. Anderson gives . . . attention to the emergence during this period of a new generation of political leaders and activists (pemuda) who were to contribute . . . to the nation's history in subsequent years." (Choice) Biographical appendix. Foreign terms and abbreviations. Bibliography. Index.

"Together with [G.] Kahin's Nationalism and revolution in Indonesia [BRD 1953], Anderson's study will serve as a standard reference for the history of the Indonesian independence movement."

Choice 9:865 S '72 120w

"This study of the Javanese revolution that led to the end of Dutch rule in Indonesia, and of the role of youth in that revolution, goes into great detail on personalities, groups, and events. . . . [The] book is based on extensive field work and use of Indonesian-language sources. . . . In parts, the work breaks new ground and helps provide a much clearer understanding of the emergence and role of new groups in the politics of revolutionary Java. But the very ambition of the author to make his work completely comprehensive has burdened his text so that significant facts get distressingly mixed up with trivia. . . . Of little interest for general libraries, but essential for specialized collections." B. G. Gokhale

Library J 97:2183 Je 15 '72 200w

"As narrative, [this] study is splendid. But as analysis it is insufficiently integrated with the large and constantly growing corpus of serious work on the theory and history of imperialism and the theory and history of social revolution. . . . Anderson seeks a personalized vocabulary of explanation, or a vocabulary emphasizing the Indonesian-ness of events in Indonesia rather than one assimilating the Indonesian story to the great tide of the Asian revolution against imperialism and neo-colonialism."

TLS p941 Ag 11 '72 200w

ANDERSON, CHARLES W. The political economy of modern Spain; policymaking in an authoritarian system. 282p $12.50 Univ. of Wis. press

338.946 Spain—Economic policy ISBN 0-299-05611-2 LC 72-106036

In this study Anderson "demonstrates his theme of 'substantial continuity' and imitative-ness in the . . . policy shifts during the last decade's stabilization. . . . He generalizes from his analysis that authoritarian political regimes: (1) can display 'flexibility and openness to change' in the realm of economics if not politics; (2) may deliberately adopt economic liberalism in order to 'make the economy more responsive to governmental direction'; (3) 'do not tend to devise innovative approaches to policy.'" (Choice) Bibliography.

"[The author] has achieved a splendid study of the functioning of political pluralism in the Franco Regime. . . . [His] study broadens our understanding of the parameters of viable public participation in the making of contemporary complex economic policies, be it in a democracy or in an authoritarian regime. The author's great contribution to contemporary Spanish history is a lucid description of the way the political process actually functions. . . . Anderson offers a comprehensive theory on the political process in Spain today, one that will facilitate the integration of new data. And this fuller understanding of the Franco regime will in turn, enrich the study of comparative government." J. C. Ullman

Am Pol Sci R 65:1196 D '71 1000w

"Anderson provides . . . [a] well written, interesting [survey], appropriate for general reader, political scientist, and economist. Although little detail on bibliography is offered, a clear general picture is developed. . . . The book [is] exciting to any student of economic policy."

Choice 7:1549 Ja '71 190w

"The title is inflated: . . . [the book] does not deal with the political economy of 'modern Spain' . . . but with that of Franquist Spain." S. G. Payne

World Pol 25:155 O '72 650w

ANDERSON, FREDERICK, ed. Mark Twain: the critical heritage; ed. by Frederick Anderson with the assistance of Kenneth M. Sanderson. 347p $14.50 Barnes & Noble

818 Clemens, Samuel Langhorne ISBN 0-389-04213-7 LC 72-177519

This book presents the "critical reaction to Mark Twain's writings in Britain and America up to 1913. The 88 reviews are arranged in a generally chronological order and the authors of unsigned reviews are identified where possible. Indices of general topics, characteristics of Twain's writings, and of the writings themselves as well as a brief bibliography are provided." (Choice) Bibliography.

"In his 19-page introduction, Anderson concludes that though Twain received praise throughout his career, it was never unqualified and was 'probably too tempered to provide him the gratification he craved; because reviewers failed to recognize 'his unique quality,' it is difficult to assess the impact of criticism on Twain's work. The collection provides ■■ excellent overflow of the response to Twain's writings by his contemporaries and should be included in collections of Twain criticism."

Choice 9:809 S '72 160w

"This assembly of responses to the licensed buffoon of the gilded age and his vulgar version of the American experience—from carping attacks on his grammatical lapses to the celebrated ban on Huckleberry Finn by the Concord Public Library—was certainly worth gathering. But the lessons are almost wholly historical, rather than critical."

TLS p280 Mr 10 '72 360w

ANDERSON, FREDERICK, ed. A pen warmed-up in hell. See Twain, M.

ANDERSON, HENRY, jt. auth. So shall ye reap. See London, J.

ANDERSON, JOHN. Acheen and the ports on the north and east coasts of Sumatra; with an introd. by A. J. S. Reid. 240p $9.50 Oxford 382 Atjeh, Indonesia. Great Britain—Commerce LC 79-26519

Although this book was not published until 1840, it "was originally written in 1824 or soon after at the behest of Governor Robert Fullerton of Penang in order to combat Dutch encroachments upon the independence of the Sumatran states. Anderson, whose whole career as a civil servant of the East Indian Company was spent in Penang, was an . . . advocate of the maintenance of Malay sovereignty as a major object of British policy. . . . Anderson's paper on Atjeh was compiled from official records." (Pacific Affairs)

"The work . . . is a rather polemical and controversial book. There is considerable information on the trade between Atjeh (the currently accepted spelling of the name of the sultanate) and Penang, but Anderson's observations on the political, economic, and social structure of the sultanate are often at variance with the findings of later and more scholarly writers on Atjeh. Because of its highly specialized subject matter, Acheen is not likely to be used in general courses on Southeast Asia or British colonial history. Recommended only for larger research libraries catering to graduate students and mature scholars."

Choice 8:1234 N '71 160w

"Dr. A. J. S. Reid of the Australian National University, Canberra, [has written] an introduction which is a model of its kind. Anderson's extremely well-informed story of the Achinese civil war is carefully assessed by Reid in the light of subsequent historical research, as also his trenchant criticisms of Penang's attitude in the matter. Anderson wrote with scrupulous regard for truth and for fairness to those he disagreed with. His book is of great interest to students of Malayan history." D. G. E. Hall

Pacific Affairs 45:325 summer '72 300w

ANDERSON, JOHN A. The Sioux of the Rosebud; a history in pictures; phot. by John A. Anderson; text by Henry W. Hamilton and Jean Tyree Hamilton. 320p maps $12.50 Univ. of Okla. press

970.3 Dakota Indians—Pictorial works
ISBN 0-8061-0953-X LC 78-145506

"The transitional period of the Brulé Sioux is the theme of the photographs presented here. Anderson photographed the Sioux from about 1885 until shortly after 1911 and lived on the Rosebud Reservation with his family." (Library J) Index.

"Not quite what the title suggests. True, it does deal with the Sioux of the Rosebud but only insofar as they were the subjects of a pioneer photographer and life-long friend of the Sioux, John A. Anderson. To enter this comment is by no means to detract from the photographs. They are quite a good collection . . . for both the ethnologist and the anthropologist. Even the layman can see something of the West. . . . There are some particularly good photographic portraits where the personalities of the subject are not hidden by their own masks or by the somewhat stiff poses traditional in the formal photographs of the late 19th-century. Some of the panoramas and landscapes might have been omitted but otherwise this is a useful pictorial essay. Most libraries should find [it] a helpful addition to their American Indian or American West collections."

Choice 9:428 My '72 120w

"The text of this book is sparse, because little is known of Anderson's career. Information in picture commentary was supplied by tribal informants to the authors. The photographs are from many sources and vary in quality because of the poor condition of some originals. But the story is revealed of a proud race's fall from the freedom of the plains to the degradation of the reservation." T. W. Wright

Library J 97:678 F 15 '72 90w

ANDERSON, JOHN Q. The liberating gods: Emerson on poets and poetry. 128p $6.95 Univ. of Miami press

809.1 Emerson, Ralph Waldo. Poetry—History and criticism
ISBN 0-87024-157-5 LC 72-121682

This study "discusses Emerson's concept of ideal poetry as revealed in his evaluation of Shakespeare and Milton and as exemplified in his own poems. The author includes Emerson's evaluations of some of his contemporaries, particularly Thoreau and Whitman in America and Tennyson and Wordsworth in England." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The most useful service which this book performs for readers of Emerson is the assembling of quotations from the Journals, Poems, Essays, and a few letters under the various chapter heads. The author has explained clearly and sympathetically the concepts of inspiration, imagination, symbolizing, and moralizing. . . . In the final chapter, brief comparisons of Emerson's poetics to those of Wordsworth and Whitman are helpful; perhaps a more extensive comparison between Emerson's and another contemporaneous theory might point up more sharply the significance of Emerson's poetic principles." V. C. Hopkins
Am Lit 43:449 N '71 420w

"This little book is a valuable companion to F. O. Matthiessen's American Renaissance [BRD 1941] and Vivian C. Hopkins' Spires of form: a study of Emerson's aesthetic theory [BRD 1951]. The chapter on Emerson's criticism of his contemporaries reveals the unevenness of his judgment but his opinions will be sought by many kinds of students. . . . The notes reflect the thoroughness of Anderson's absorption of the previous studies of Emerson's poetic theory."

Choice 8:826 S '71 130w

"[This] short overview of Emerson's theory and criticism of poetry [is] useful as an introduction to the subject but of limited value to the specialist. . . . [It] is a sensible and fair-minded study, sympathetic to Emerson but also objective. It sticks to the main facts about him and does not seek to embroider them into strange new theories. For all these reasons, the general reader will find it a helpful guide. The advanced student, however, may safely pass this book by. It does not add to scholarly knowledge of its subject; indeed it does not take into account some of the most significant recent studies of Emerson." Lawrence Buell

New Eng Q 45:290 Je '72 650w

ANDERSON, M. S., ed. The great powers and the Near East, 1774-1923. 181p $6 St Martins 956 Eastern question. Near East—Politics LC 77-144218

This "volume concerns itself with 11 thematic developments in the Near East between 1774-1923. . . . [Included are] documents illustrative of particular themes, especially related to the Crimean War, the Eastern crisis, 1875-78, and Eastern question, 1878-1914." (Choice) Glossary.

"Nearly all the documents can be found collectively elsewhere. Most have been published in the highly praised [J.] Hurewitz, Diplomacy in the Near and Middle East [BRD 1957]. This current collection thus reviews much that has already been published and sheds little new perspectives on the period. . . . It does, however, provide better focus on the 11 areas it encompasses, and should direct the student of the Middle East in his examination of these main forces underlying great power rivalry in the Ottoman Empire."

Choice 8:1368 D '71 150w

ANDERSON, M. S.—Continued

"[This volume] does not confine itself to the dry language of treatises and edicts that the persevering student can fairly easily turn up in a library. Sandwiched in among the diplomatic documents are extracts from letters and contemporary books that cover the scene from the sidelines as well as from the seats of power. The advantage of these pieces over the bare bones of legal language is that they create a thirst for more reading of stuff of their kind. . . . One can cavil at topics omitted or under-emphasized or at the over-familiar documents included. . . . but given the compass allowed to him, Dr. Anderson's choice is wide and excellent."

Economist 233:51 Ja 23 '71 550w

ANDERSON, MARY, jt. auth. The rise of the student estate in Britain. See Ashby, E.

ANDERSON, MICHAEL. Crowell's handbook of contemporary drama. See Crowell's handbook of contemporary drama

ANDERSON, MICHAEL. Family structure in nineteenth century Lancashire. 230p maps $16 Cambridge

301.42 Family. Lancashire, England—Social conditions

ISBN 0-521-08237-4 LC 79-164448

In this "sociological study of the impact of urban-industrial life on the kinship system of the working classes in nineteenth-century Lancashire, . . . the author presents new data on household structure, residence patterns and population turnover within the towns, migration patterns, the incidence of poverty, the role of the family in finding homes and employment for relatives, the age of marriage, parent-child conflicts, and baby-minding of the children of working mothers." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This study] is informed by a social-exchange theory perspective which allows us to see the implications of the findings in the broadest possible sense, though at times Anderson generalizes beyond what his data permit. It nicely complements Richard Sennett's Families against the city (BRD 1971), and thus should be part of every library catering to social historians, sociologists, and their students."

Choice 9:540 Je '72 120w

"Anderson shares a large and powerful battery of techniques with other modern demographic historians. But his main approach is also fairly distinctive in that his hypotheses and methodology derive from a somewhat formal sociology. As a result, he has produced a fascinating book, although its language and conceptual impersonality will not be to everyone's taste."

Economist 245:61 D 9 '72 260w

"Dr Anderson builds up his [study] so carefully and so elaborately that even the sceptical reader is likely to end up agreeing that there is more in it than he had thought and admitting that he has learned a good deal in the course of it. The trouble is that the argument is complex, highly technical and sometimes rather heavy going. It seems almost as if Dr Anderson has written two books, one addressed to a more professional audience than the other. It will be a pity if his ingenious attempt to contribute to social science theory obscures from the wider audience it deserves his more modest but still considerable achievement in social history."

TLS p894 Jl 28 '72 800w

ANDERSON, PATRICK. The approach to kings. 373p $6.95 Doubleday

LC 78-123683

David Hyer, the hero of this novel about current Washington, is a thirty-one-year old "speechwriter, troubleshooter, and confidant to President Barney Newfield. He is deeply involved in the creation of New Cities, in shaping political strategy, and in making policy toward a guerrilla war in Latin America. . . . [He is caught in the] pressures [that] accompany political power . . . [and] the pressures of his own conscience as he confronts the compromises and sacrifices . . . of Presidential politics." (Publisher's note) The title is derived from a statement by Sir Francis Bacon concerning honor.

_____

"Newfield, a composite of American attributes and American politicians . . . is a convincing character-creation. Equally credible is David Hyer. . . . Cabinet ministers, senators, and congressmen, seldom shadowy, are always typical. Their ploys and machinations ring true enough to constitute important strands in a plot laced with intrigue and all the jockeying for precedence and influence so typical of the national capital. . . . [This is] a highly credible, convincing first novel, which impels one to read this same writer's previous, factual, study of presidential aides from Truman through Johnson. [The Presidents' Men, BRD 1968]." W. H. Archer

Best Sell 30:404 D 15 '70 1050w

"This so-so first novel of current Washington politics has a thin story line and unfortunately, nothing new to say. The hero . . . [is] a liberal fighting more conservative cabinet members (some of whom rather strongly resemble current occupants) in influencing the President. There's the usual sex and David's marital problems with his attractive actress wife. In the end the conservatives appear to be winning and Hyer decides to go into private law practice. . . . Buy for large current fiction collections." G. J. Kubal

Library J 95:3302 O 1 '70 130w

Reviewed by Mary Borg

New Statesman 83:183 F 11 '72 440w

"[This [is a] lusty, souped-up and largely incredible tale of derring-do in and about the White House. . . . [Mr. Anderson] provides a realistic picture of the complexity and volume of the problems that confront the modern American President and his staff. He deals well with personal aspects. Washingtonians will have a field day trying to identify the various characters. . . . The author does not succeed in making credible the revolutionary scene in South America. . . . Profuse in detail excellent in organization, surrealistic in its flights of fancy, this picaresque novel deserves a wide audience. Even those turned off by its ubiquitous and insistent sex or unsympathetic to its 'new politics' approach will find it provocative and dramatic." J. S. Monagan

N Y Times Bk R p4 O 18 '70 950w

ANDERSON, SHERWOOD. The Buck Fever papers; ed. by Welford Dunaway Taylor. 250p il $12.50 Univ. press of Va.

818

ISBN 0-8139-0322-X LC 73-151252

Anderson wrote these "news stories under the guise of 'Buck Fever' for his two newspapers in Southwestern Virginia. . . . In these two country weeklies he introduced the character of Buck Fever to comment on the events of Marion and Coon Hollow, Buck's fictitious town. . . . He commented on the political and social mores and events of Southwest Virginia, conducted money-raising campaigns, and often was the target for fervent and desperate letters from his girl friends." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The editor has written an introduction and full annotations on local references in the pieces."

Am Lit 44:345 My '72 50w

"[This is a] genial, minor bit of Americana, by a major American writer. Previously uncollected."

N Y Times Bk R p38 S 19 '71 50w

"There is little doubt that [Buck Fever's] comments on social business, and political events greatly influenced the opinions of the people of this small town. Humor runs rampant in this fine example of personal journalism. Anderson's wit—sometimes caustic, sometimes warm—gives us a delightful insight into life in a small town."

Va Q R 48:xxxvi winter '72 100w

ANDERSON, THOMAS P. Matanza: El Salvador's Communist revolt of 1932. 175p maps $7.95 Univ. of Neb. press

972.8 Salvador—History. Communism—Salvador

ISBN 0-8032-0794-8 LC 78-146885

"The author begins with 'an examination of the political and social background, the extent of the communist conspiracy, and the effects of the economic collapse of 1930. . . . Chapters 2 through 4 recount the rise of the left, the election in February, 1931, of Arturo Araujo as president, and the coup of the following December, which brought into power a military government. . . . Four chapters on the organization . . . and spread of the revolt are followed by an account of the matanza—the slaughter of the peasants who supposedly had participated in the rebellion. The final chapter considers the effects of the revolt on the subsequent history of El Salvador." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This book] represents not only a dispassionate analysis of the ephemeral 1932 Communist revolution in El Salvador but the first detailed study to appear in English. . . . Drawing primarily from interviews with participants in the bloody events of 1932 and the files of various knowledgeable Salvadorians, Anderson presents a balanced interpretation of the tumult. His careful and convincing analysis serves to de-mythologize the revolt and its protagonists while explaining much of El Salvador's paranoia relating to the Communist menace in the Western Hemisphere. Although Latin Americanists may object to the book's often journalistic tone, they will find it a significant addition to the growing literature on 20th-century Latin American radicalism."

Choice 9:124 Mr '72 150w

"[Anderson] conclusively challenges the view that 'international Communism' planned and executed the revolt and sees it as a home-grown movement in which leftists played an important role." H. A. Spalding

Library J 97:494 F 1 '72 100w

ANDIC, FUAT. A theory of economic integration for developing countries illustrated by Caribbean countries [by] Fuat Andic, Suphan Andic [and] Douglas Dosser. 176p $6.75 Humanities press

338.91 Economic policy. Underdeveloped areas. Caribbean area—Economic conditions

LC [72-187117]

"Starting with the traditional analysis of customs unions and free trade areas in trade terms, the authors argue that this approach is too narrow for developing countries. An appropriate cost-benefit analysis should be applied, adding at least such considerations as foreign exchange saving, possible industrialization benefits, and capital requirements. Most of the book consists of the effort to apply this broader approach to five Caribbean countries." (Choice)

"What [this volume] demonstrates is the inadequacy of present statistical data for filling out the theoretical formulation, especially for the nontrade elements. This specialized book may be of interest to those concerned with developing country policy in the field of international trade expansion."

Choice 9:849 S '72 100w

"Should developing countries form free trade areas and common markets? This book skates round this question and fails to reach definite conclusions. But it does point out the irrelevance of traditional integration theory for these countries. For example, diversion of trade to inefficient producers within the group may be a gain, not a loss, if it promotes much-needed industrialisation. [In its study of] groupings open to Caribbean countries, and estimates how these might effect trade. . . . [the book] fails to follow up its own analysis by charting the effects of industrialisation on each of these countries' economies."

Economist 240:49 Ag 28 '71 90w

TLS p1006 S 15 '72 230w

ANGELL, ROGER. The summer game. 303p $7.50 Viking

796.357 Baseball

SBN 670-68164-4 LC 76-183512

This book "collects Angell's New Yorker baseball writings . . . from the 1962 Amazin' Mets to the 1971 world champion Pirates." (Library J)

Reviewed by W. F. Murphy

Best Sell 32:207 Ag 1 '72 400w

Reviewed by Ray Robinson

Book World p4 My 14 '72 1100w

"'The Summer Game' is not, in quality, to be compared with Roger Kahn's fast-selling The Boys of Summer. [BRD 1972]. It is also about big-league baseball, but done in bland, diary form. It is, as the author himself says, the work of a part-time non-professional baseball watcher." Phil Elderkin

Christian Science Monitor p13 My 17 '72 40w

"[Angell is] the most elegant, stylish, and intelligent baseball writer in the country today. . . . Perhaps some would feel that a few of these pieces are a little too ephemeral for republication, but everyone who understands with the author that baseball is a country of the heart will recognize The Summer Game as the treasure it is." Keith Cushman

Library J 96:1456 Ap 15 '72 190w

"These pieces . . . are . . . a decade's worth of meditations and observations on the metaphysics of the game. . . . Occasionally Angell becomes waspish . . . but usually he's searching for the Higher Game, the cosmology behind each pitch, each swing, each 'shared joy and ridiculous hope' of summer's long adventure."

NY Rev of Books 18:37 My 18 '72 280w

"[This book] provides such finely observed and finely written reportage on major-league baseball during the past decade that I hope it will triumph over certain of its disadvantages. One is that it is a collection of pieces. Collections don't sell unless they have an obvious gimmick, and I don't see any in sight for Roger Angell's witty but tactful coverage. Still, The Summer Game is a genuine book, unified by its ongoing account of the new developments and distortions of the sport and integrated by Angell's consistent ability to capture the 'feel' of the player, the game, the series, the pennant race, and by his articulate and imaginative defense of the sport itself against its adversaries, beginning with the major league owners." Ted Solotaroff

N Y Times Bk N p1 Je 12 '72 1500w

Reviewed by Arthur Cooper

Newsweek 79:100 My 22 '72 700w

ANGELOU, MAYA. Just give me a cool drink of water 'fore I die; the poetry of Maya Angelou. 48p $4.95 Random house

811

ISBN 0-394-47142-3

LC 70-156964

Part one of this collection of poems "contains poetry of love, and therefore of anguish, sharing, fear, affection and loneliness. Part Two features poetry of racial confrontation—of protest, anger and irony." (Library J)

"Maya Angelou has had a versatile career—at various times an actor in Porgy and Bess, dance teacher in Rome and Tel Aviv, northern coordinator for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference—and at all times, a poet whose work is a moving blend of lyricism and harsh social observation. The first [part of this book] is the more personal and tender. . . . Many of these poems have been set to music. The second part, 'Just Before the World Ends,' has more bite—the anguished and often sardonic expression of a black in a white-dominated world." Chad Walsh

Book World p12 Ap 9 '72 250w

"Thirty-nine lyrics (craftsmanlike and powerful though not great poetry) by a distinguished black artist. The most effective are in the second section, 'Just before the world ends'—bitterly angry poems expressing the will to survive of a strong woman 'Too proud to bend/Too poor to break.' Recommended for any library with an Afro-American collection."

Choice 9:210 Ap '72 50w

"Angelou's I Know Why the Caged Bird Sings [BRD 1970] was a best seller, and there will be an audience for this rather well done schlock poetry, not to be confused with poetry for people who read poetry. . . . This collection isn't accomplished, not by any means; but some readers are going to love it." J. A. Avant

Library J 96:3329 O 15 '71 120w

Reviewed by Martha Liddy

Library J 96:3916 N 15 '71 60w [YA]

ANGLIN, JEREMY M. The growth of word meaning. 108p il $5.95 MIT press

401 Knowledge, Theory of. Semantics
ISBN 0-262-01033-X LC 79-128536

"The thesis which Anglin adopts is that development of word meaning moves from the concrete toward the abstract. The work consists primarily of a statistical presentation of the results of various word sorting and pairing tests given to children of various ages and to adults. The twenty words used were: boy, girl, horse, flower, chair, idea, above, below, into, during, laugh, cry, listen, grow, fall, rich, poor, angry, dead, and white. The tests appear to prove Anglin's thesis." (Am Anthropol) Bibliography. Index.

"Viewed positively, Anglin's doctoral dissertation is a rare careful application of statistical methods to semantic study. . . . Anglin is well versed in perception psychology and statistical interpretations of Millerian sorting tests, but seems somewhat deficient in linguistic training. . . . [His] chief contribution rests in the fact that a modest thesis is thoroughly tested with great statistical precision, demonstrating to any objective reader that the concrete-abstract progression so often noted in linguistics is universal, whether it manifests itself in semantic change . . . or in the developmental psychology of children." Adam Makkaï
Am Anthropol 74:92 F/Ap '72 350w

"The experimental work [which Anglin describes] is ingenious and well executed; although the non-specialist reader should be warned that, in spite of the author's avowed aim to cut technicalities to a minimum, the book bears the tell-tale marks of a research thesis, and would be hard going for anyone not acquainted with the techniques of experimental psychology. But for those who persevere the main interest will lie in the conclusions that can be drawn from the finding that children and adults do indeed differ quite significantly in the kinds of connexions they see between words."

TLS p810 J1 9 '71 350w

The ANNALS of America. 21v il maps $174.50
Encyclopaedia Britannica

973.08 U.S.—History—Sources

This set "is comprised of 18 volumes with distinctive titles, a two-volume conspectus, and an index. Organized in chronological order by subject [are] . . . 2,202 original source readings drawn from the American past—articles, speeches, letters, songs, poems, official documents, and so on. Many of the selections are reprinted in their entirety. . . . The selections begin with Discovery of the New World, an excerpt from a letter by Columbus. . . . and continue forward, year by year to 1968. . . . The primary intent of the Annals is to tell the story of America, 'in the words of those whose story it was.'" (Booklist)

"According to the editors, the basic uses of the set are historical browsing or chronological reading, and conspective or topical reading. The set is also intended to be used by teachers of American history as a reference book, a research tool, a primary text, or as background reading. Each of the 18 text volumes contains an introduction, providing 'an overview of the historical period covered by the volume,' which is followed by a chronology of events which occurred during that period and four to eight pages of pertinent maps. . . . At the end of each volume is an Index of Authors which . . . provides . . . significant biographical information about each. . . . The set contains nearly 5,000 illustrations, more than 100 of which are in color. . . . [The] Conspectus is intended to be a subject index to the contents of the 18 volumes of text and is organized around 25 major issues that have been 'of continuing relevance to American history from the earliest days to the present.' . . . [It] contains a chapter on each of the 25 subjects. . . . Volume 2 of the Conspectus also contains a Bibliography of Source Material, a 16-page list of works which were considered for inclusion in the set but 'for one reason or another, were not used.' . . . [It is intended to issue] an additional text volume . . . about every five years. . . . [Many of the selections] are likely to be available in large academic libraries. In those high school and college libraries, however, where such material is not available the Annals should be very useful. This is particularly true now that the use of documents in the teaching of history is emphasized in secondary schools. . . . The addition of the Index volume to the set greatly facilitates its use. The Proper Name Index . . . includes names of persons, cities, regions, and events (e.g., Federalist Party, Abolition Movement) and titles of selections. . . . The Authors and Sources Index . . . lists the selections by their original title under the name of the author. . . . The Annals is recommended for home libraries which can afford such a purchase. It is also recommended for secondary school libraries . . . public libraries, . . . [and] academic libraries."

Booklist 68:945 J1 15 '72 3500w

ANNO, MITSUMASA. Upside-downers: down-side-uppers; more pictures to stretch the imagination [adapted into English by Meredith Weatherby and Suzanne Trumbull] 27p il $3.95 Weatherhill

793.7 Puzzles—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-8348-2005-6 LC 71-157269

The problem of which side is up and which is down in the Land of Cards is the theme of this . . . Japanese story. Similar in style to the author's Topsy-Turvies [BRD 1970], this [book] combines watercolor drawings with a riddle-like text. . . . Kindergarten to grade three." (Library J)

"In a companion volume to Topsy-Turvies, the artist performs further feats of optical ingenuity with the same joyous dexterity that characterized the earlier book. . . . The verbal riddles add another dimension to the visual puzzles; for the words are printed both upside-down and downside-up so that two people facing each other can read the book as a dialogue. A kind of mad logic runs through the book." E. L. H.

Horn Bk 48:39 F '72 180w

"Readers will have no trouble understanding the confusion the people in the Land of Cards feel. The text is occasionally flat—'Hey! it's raining here,' they cry./grumbling and rumbly./ 'No, that's our handy fire-pump'—but on the whole the story is put together ingeniously and makes a refreshing addition to library collections. As the author intends, 'This is a book without any rules. It's simply to be enjoyed and wondered over. . . .'" Marge Grnysa

Library J 97:2474 J1 '72 150w

ANONYMOUS OF BOLOGNA. Principles of letter-writing. See Murphy, J. J., ed. Three medieval rhetorical arts

ANSEL, WALTER. Hitler and the middle sea. 514p il maps $12.75 Duke univ. press

940.54 World War, 1939-1945—Mediterranean Sea. World War, 1939-1945—Campaigns and battles—Crete
ISBN 0-8223-0224-1 LC 77-132026

This book discusses "Hitler's activities in the Mediterranean, particularly Germany's invasion of . . . [and] capture of Crete in 1941. . . . [The] account of the battle of the Mediterranean is presented against a background of the ever-shifting plans and struggles for power of Hitler himself and the German High Command." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Except for military specialists, Ansel's review of the battles on Crete will be less useful than the history of and reflections upon German and British policy and strategy which form its context. Ansel believes that . . . a number of events . . . conspired with Hitler's fear of the sea and his obsessions regarding Russia to divert him from his Mediterranean opportunities. . . . Hitler let Crete become a dead end, and he never faced up to the strategic problem of Malta. Ansel's analysis of all this should be read in full; so should his analysis and criticism of British policy and strategy in the Mediterranean, for he sees Churchill as waging war by some of the worst possible methods of command, and being rescued mainly by the good fortune of having an opponent whose Mediterranean warmaking was still more inept than his own." R. F. Weigley
Ann Am Acad 404:262 N '72 550w

"A retired rear admiral in the U.S. Navy who served in the Mediterranean area during the Second World War, Ansel has taken certain general historical conditions commonly known to scholars and applied them with deliberateness and clarity in producing this readable narrative and careful analysis of Hitler's efforts in the Mediterranean Sea. . . . [This account is] particularly worthwhile to a college audience which seeks ideas and concepts to further clarify the standard ordeal of battle. . . . A thorough, workmanlike job with some rather difficult materials."

Choice 9:1186 N '72 200w

"[Ansel] depicts the events from the German viewpoint. The writing is casual, but the documentation is thorough as Ansel frequently relies on personal interviews with the major participants. Look not for eloquence nor exciting ideas; it is a conventional history, though a logical purchase for owners of [Ansel's] Hitler Confronts England [BRD 1961]." M. H. Ridgeway

Library J 97:2584 Ag '72 120w

"Although its theme is Hitler's failure to exploit the strategic possibilities of the Middle Sea—the Mediterranean—after the German capture of Crete in May, 1941, the book is dominated by a wider issue. How far was this failure due to Hitler's earlier decision to invade Russia in the summer of 1941, and to subordinate all other operations to that master plan? . . . There were serious political and strategic difficulties for Germany in the Mediterranean, as well as great strategic possibilities. At the same time, it is one of the merits of this excellent study that it shows the extent to which the German planners were themselves disposed to underestimate these difficulties in their keenness to divert Hitler from his eastern campaign."

TLS p1308 N 3 '72 650w

ANSHEN, RUTH NANDA. The reality of the devil: evil in man. 142p il $6.95 Harper

216 Devil. Good and evil
SBN 06-060242-2 LC 72-78057

"This book explores the tension between the Christian doctrine of redemption and the eternal, paradoxical presence of evil in the midst of our experience of ourselves, of each other, and of the world." (Library J)

"Mythic attempts to speak of human evil have been common; Ms. Anshen covers much of the field and points up some morals."

Christian Century 89:1042 O 18 '72 30w

"The book's primary value and contribution is its revival of issues and questions long ignored by modern theology about the dynamic function of the Satanic. Although the author declares that her approach is 'phenomenological,' this reviewer found little evidence of research into the rich material available for just such a study. Her approach is largely speculative and theoretical and suffers from that limitation." T. A. Greene

Library J 97:2741 S 1 '72 180w

ANSON, ROBERT SAM. McGovern; a biography. 303p il $7.95 Holt

B or 92 McGovern, George Stanley
ISBN 0-03-091345-4 LC 72-183538

This is an account of the career of the Democratic Senator from South Dakota. "Following him from boyhood through wartime service as a bomber pilot, then through a brief period as minister and professor of history, this book tells how McGovern . . . got elected to Congress [in 1956 and to the Senate in 1960]." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Anson makes no effort to gloss over any potentially embarrassing episodes from the Senator's political past. . . . Likewise, the views of McGovern's critics are fully aired. . . . On the whole this book offers a fair and balanced assessment." F. X. J. Homer

Best Sell 32:129 Je 15 '72 300w

Christian Century 89:374 Mr 29 '72 40w

"Biographies of prospective Presidential candidates, like the [one] offered here, tend to be snappily written and full of human relations material, anecdotes, and remembered conversations. [Anson's book] is written by a staunch partisan of McGovern's who has probably researched every favorable quote ever written about the South Dakota Democrat, including some which are not terribly relevant to a political biography. . . . The result is that the reader is put off from appreciating very real talents; a good propagandist must be more subtle." Hindy Schachter

Library J 97:1422 Ap 15 '72 60w

Reviewed by R. R. Lingeman

N Y Times Bk R pl Je 4 '72 220w

"In a shrewd and informing study, Anson, correspondent for Time magazine, scrutinizes McGovern, who solidly occupies the left-of-center domain among the candidates. . . . [He] is not, Mr. Anson finds, completely guileless or unwilling to make minor adjustments. On occasion he has trimmed back his statements on Vietnam." L. W. Koenig

Sat R 55:62 Je 3 '72 320w

"The Senator represents South Dakota, a state in Middle America where the society and its politics are radically different from those of, say, New York's Westchester County or Wimbledon. The English reader will benefit from Mr Anson's brisk description and analysis of the land and the people that produced George S. McGovern. This is the first attempt to fill in the background of shabby political deals, undeniable idealism and savage infighting that are part of the McGovern story. Some of it is instructive. . . . Mr Anson does his best to represent his subject as a political genius from the outback capable of solving the problems arising from these issues. But he is never able to eradicate the impression, perhaps, unworthy, that there is something just a bit phony about George S. McGovern."

TLS p736 Je 30 '72 700w

ANTHONY, DAVID. Blood on a harvest moon. 288p $6.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

LC 73-172626

Morgan Butler 'had been a marine for sixteen years, had married and divorced a girl named Elaine, joined a private detective agency . . . and then retired to the farm he had bought. His ex-wife appears in the midst of the corn harvesting to ask Butler's aid in finding her present husband, Ralph Maynard, who has disappeared and may be in deep trouble. Butler takes the job, traces Maynard to Crafton, West Virginia, where Milt Kelso is murdered with a Magnum revolver and Maynard is suspected. . . . The plot goes back to World War II and involves at least five men marked, it appears, for elimination." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 31:494 F 1 '72 170w

"[Private eyes] get a good working out in [this book]. . . . There are very sinister goings on in West Virginia and . . . a series of murders, retribution for a particularly raw bit of 20-year-old treachery. Bloody and complicated, this is not at all painful to read—consistently interesting and toughly inventive." Henry Veit

Library J 97:904 Mr 1 '72 70w

"What rivets the imagination and finally totally engages the reader is the author's use of the cliché. After a while one begins to tabulate. . . . Faces are 'full of purpose.' Or they look 'brittle.' Or 'splotchy and worried.' Or 'impassive.' . . . One can pursue other physiological niceties of the Anthony style. There are eyes to consider: 'moist, lustrous' or perhaps 'oily, slitted.' Anthony also is good on smiles: There's this lady whose smile is 'demure,' passing into 'crooked and lovely,' ending in 'allure.' . . . [The book is] so badly written it is unforgettable, ineffable." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p27 F 20 '72 280w

"This is one of those books you find yourself praising with faint damns. The author does everything satisfactorily, but nothing really dazzles." Haskel Frankel

Sat R 55:104 Mr 25 '72 80w

ANTHONY, EARL. The time of the furnaces; a case study of black student revolt. 131p $4.95; pa $1.95 Dial press

378.794 California. San Fernando Valley State College, Los Angeles. Negroes—Education. Students—U.S.—Political activity
LC 76-150403

"A case study of the black student revolt which took place at San Fernando Valley State College in California in 1968." (Choice)

"Anthony, a black nationalist leader at the time in Southern California, is well informed of the events of the situation. The book is essentially a description of the events and the factors preceding it. As such, it is a useful discussion of an aspect of the student 'revolt' which has been generally neglected. The book, however, is flawed by a lack of analysis, a bit too much rhetoric, and insufficient detail. Nevertheless, a useful addition to the literature on black students in America."

ANTHONY, EARL—Continued

Choice 8:1215 N '71 100w

"[This] is written in a curiously bland and stilted prose. However, it is valuable because it delineates not only the immediate community and campus issues which surrounded the confrontation, but also the more widely significant general features of the situation. This particular black studies controversy provides an ideal model of the objectives, ideology, and tactics of black student groups. It also illustrates the deep commitment which black studies programs have to neighboring black communities. Anthony's book is a solid contribution to understanding some of the more militant, articulate forces demanding radical changes in our society." Eve Spangler

Library J 96:1957 Je 1 '71 140w

ANTHONY, EVELYN. The Poellenberg inheritance. 249p $6.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

LC 77-172635

"Paula Stanley is a young divorcee who was raised in England by her German mother and English stepfather. She knows vaguely of her German parentage but never knew her father and thought him dead until she is contacted by a messenger who tells her of a priceless inheritance—a gold and jewelled art piece by Cellini called the Poellenberg Salt. Believing her father may be alive, Paula joins forces with Eric Fisher, a private detective hired by an extremely wealthy German family whose matriarch claims ownership of the Cellini." (Library J)

"The action is fast-paced throughout. The plot of the story abounds with twists and turns and surprises. Because of the structure of the story, there are many possibilities for character development and these are vividly fulfilled by Mrs. Anthony. Her work has many similarities to that of Helen MacInnes (e.g. intricacy of plot, character development). In at least one area, the pace of the action, she surpasses Miss MacInnes. The conclusion provides an appropriate finale for an exciting novel. Over all it is well worth reading." C. J. Keffer

Best Sell 32:49 My 1 '72 350w

"[This] is an elaborate confection, a cream puff of intrigue, spying, and riches; and as such it is moderately entertaining. . . . The background is socially rarefied and not overwhelmingly true; the plot is suitably mysterious, if a little idiotic." Henry Veit

Library J 97:2121 Je 1 '72 100w

Reviewed by Carol Coon

Library J 97:2245 Je 15 '72 100w [YA]

"If you like the Helen MacInnes blend of action, romance, international spy stuff and well-researched backgrounds, you should try [this book]. . . . Anthony, a British lady, handles the genre just as well as her famous American counterpart, and there is much in common in the two approaches. The pace is leisurely, the buildup inexorable. A great deal of attention is paid to character development. Both writers have a deft touch, though Anthony is not the propagandist that MacInnes is. The latter almost always has a message involving the threat of Communism against the United States. Anthony merely tells a story." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p34 My 7 '72 150w

ANTREASIAN, GARO Z. The Tamarind book of lithography: art & techniques [by] Garo Z. Antreasian with Clinton Adams. 436p il col il $25 Abrams

763 Lithography

ISBN 0-8109-0496-1 LC 76-121328

The author presents "a summation of technical experiments and information compiled at [the] Tamarind [Lithography Workshop]. A working handbook for the practicing printmaker, this is . . . concerned with artistic and technical procedures, the nature and use of materials, and the basic chemistry of the processes." (Library J) Bibliography.

"The most comprehensive, thoroughly illustrated, and beautifully produced book on the art of lithography ever to appear. The authors have written with great clarity on the complex technical problems connected with lithography. . . . This book will be most useful as a source book of professional artists, art teachers, and students of printmaking. . . . Excellent bibliography; list of suppliers of lithographic materials and equipment. Invaluable addition to the art library."

Choice 8:1441 Ja '72 170w

"[This book] is just the thing for those who like American more than French cookbooks: not vague and creative provocation, but hard data—specifics on recipes, preparations, and techniques. And the detail is not only literary but also visual, with copious diagrams and workshop photos, including appropriately colored photos of the color processes. The analytic table of contents helps for easy reference; and a certain interest and readability is added by occasional historical and aesthetic passages, as well as by the illustration of many important lithographs from the past. In general, all the plates are well chosen, though they are poorly reproduced." Andrew Robison

Library J 97:488 F 1 '72 150w

APOLLINAIRE, GUILLAUME. Apollinaire on art: essays and reviews, 1902-1918; ed. by LeRoy C. Breunig; tr. by Susan Suleiman. (Docs. of 20th cent. art) 546p il $17.50 Viking

709 Art criticism

ISBN 0-670-12960-7

LC 70-148266

This volume contains "over 150 writings on art and artists, with a 14-page introduction . . . and 16 pages of illustrations." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"This volume is comparable to Arp on Arp [by J. Arp, BRD 1972] in scope and format. [It] is based on the French edition, Chroniques d'art (1961), [and] provides a clear picture of the range and depth of Apollinaire's art criticism. It also suggests the variety and vitality in the Paris art scene during the first decades of the 20th century. . . . [It includes] fine notes."

Choice 9:1118 N '72 110w

Reviewed by R. R. Harris

Library J 97:2175 Je 15 '72 30w

"[This] lively translation . . . presents as racy and piquant an account of the period as could possibly be desired." Rackstraw Downes

N Y Times Bk R p6 D 31 '72 270w

"Apollinaire's writing about art has historical value, much is still readable for its own sake and, most important of all, it adds to our understanding of the poet himself. His knowledge of the history or techniques of painting was less important than his intuitive understanding of creative power. Like some other unclassifiable, over-dispersed writers he was intrigued by les autres, for he found subject-matter every where and looked at others with some hope of understanding himself."

TLS p1277 O 27 '72 650w

APPLEBY, JON. Skate; a novel. 224p $6.95 Farrar, Straus

ISBN 0-347-26570-4

LC 75-164534

"The narrator is Jim, Skate's closest friend, who tells how he met Skate at an orphanage in Boston and how their worlds repeatedly converged and separated as Jim went on to become a doctor and Skate turned into a recluse. . . . In letters to Jim from an Adirondacks retreat, Skate evolved the ethical precepts and moral parodies which were to be the focus of . . . discussions held at a non-church founded by Skate in Greenwich Village. But . . . Skate was betrayed by one of his disciples; and once again, he renounced the world." (Horn Bk)

"Jon Appleby is 23, and this is his first novel.

. . . The characters are either cardboard or depressingly murky, and the entire effort substitutes portent and implication for substance. Contrary to being the 'dazzling achievement' its publishers claim, Skate strikes me as the most commonplace first novel I've come across in a long time." Sara Blackburn

Book World p12 Ja 30 '72 290w

Reviewed by M. S. Cosgrave

Horn Bk 48:78 F '72 160w [YA]

"Appleby struggles with the issue of maintaining self in the absorbing process of making and keeping a friend. . . . Skate's search for self-enlightenment is contrasted with Jim's struggles to understand not only Skate but himself as well. A dependence upon description rather than dialogue gives the characters a one-dimensional quality, and the extended use of parable and anecdote is so indirect at times that the reader is left curiously unmoved. Skate's Thoreauvian description of his stay in the woods is the finest prose in the book." M. B. Freese

Library J 97:213 Ja 15 '72 150w

Reviewed by Joni Bodart

Library J 97:291 Ja 15 '72 100w [YA]

"The book's middle section is a fine series of letters sent to Jim during Skate's three-year exile. These contain some wise and lyrical prose. In a way, they hold the book together, making tangible a poignancy that never quite emerges in other episodes. Elsewhere, the writing is sometimes too plain and too direct, too given to summary, as if craft were being deliberately overlooked. But the writing is always honest. 'Skate' is a work to be taken seriously. And Jon Appleby deserves praise for creating, in his first novel, a disturbing and oddly beguiling man who lingers with you because he is, finally solvable only in terms of himself." J. D. Houston

N Y Times Bk R p29 F 20 '72 700w

TLS p565 My 19 '72 400w

Va Q R 48:xlix spring '72 100w

ApROBERTS, RUTH. The moral Trollope. 203p $8.50 Ohio univ. press

823 Trollope, Anthony

ISBN 8214-0089-4

LC 75-141383

"In her introduction [the author argues] for a new aesthetics of the novel which would more satisfactorily explain the enduring appeal and success of an author lacking the more fashionable element of symbolism, style, and propaganda. Defining Trollope as a 'divided mind,' an artist struck by the complexities of moral good and evil in life, apRoberts relates him to a classical tradition which includes Cicero (who was the subject of a two-volume study by Trollope); the Anglican Church; . . . and [Walter] Pater. . . . The novels are described as deliberately creating ambiguous moral and political situations in which right and wrong are shared on all sides." (Choice) Index.

"A well written and thoughtful study of Trollope's moral position, and surely the most useful of the current crop of Trollope studies. . . . Trollope emerges as a man quite at home in the modern atmosphere of moral relativism. Highly recommended."

Choice 9:210 Ap '72 180w

"An immensely enjoyable and intelligent examination of Trollope's attitudes, scope and achievement. . . . This critical study will surely send readers in search of Trollope's novels, and this is the most important consequence an appraisal of this kind can have; but it should also cause people engaged in literary studies to think again about one of the great Victorians, who has often been too lightly dismissed as a somewhat pedestrian entertainer."

Economist 241:63 O 30 '71 390w

"The author appears to me to share a certain baldness with her author. I find this baldness not only in her business-like packaging-up of structural, symbolic and verbal criticism as over and done with, but in her claims, modestly phrased but scarcely modest in their implications, for [Trollope] and what he has to teach us in the discovery of new critical approaches. Many of her observations suffer from the lack of close and sustained analysis, whether of language, events, or character. . . . [She] seems to oversell Trollope, a man of considerable gifts but scarcely emerging triumphantly from the comparison with Balzac or Tolstoy." Barbara Hardy

Encounter 38:48 D '71 240w

"[The author makes] the mistake of re-fashioning Trollope into a mid-twentieth-century man . . . [arguing] that Trollope's novels have 'not yet earned the dignity of a rationale'. . . . The rationale offered by Dr apRoberts is 'a relativism, arrived at by means of the multiple ironic perspective'. It is a hypothesis (so far as it can be understood as such) which is very far from being sustained by knowledge of the novels and their backgrounds or by any sort of erudition or sophistication in the terminology she employs. . . . [The author] is tempted to such locutions as 'aright' [and]

'individuated'. . . . Of Senator Gotobed in The American Senator, she says he is 'the highly objective correlative of the comparative attitude.' Such a book smelling strongly of the lamp but emitting no light, reminds one all too feelingly of Harry Levin's definition of literary criticism as 'bad writing about good writing'."

TLS p1605 D 24 '71 1000w

ARCHER, JULES. Revolution in our time. 191p $4.50 Messner

323 Revolutions—Juvenile literature

ISBN 0-671-32475-6 LC 71-161515

The book attempts to "show the conditions that make revolutions possible, and the factors that spell the difference between their victory or defeat. It explains the paradox of revolutionary leaders from the upper classes, and of government repression which actually increases the danger of revolution. It questions the value of the changes that revolutions have brought about, while at the same time spotlighting the needs for change in many areas of contemporary society." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. "Grades seven to nine." (Library J)

"Objectivity will be noted only if the entire book is read. The early chapters would seemingly be supportive of current revolutionary movements whereas the final chapters point out their innate weaknesses and potential failures."

Best Sell 31:386 N 15 '71 60w

"[Archer offers] a series of glib generalizations with a generally liberal hue. . . . [He] makes his personal opinions clear enough but he fails to establish a claim for serious attention either by demonstrating his familiarity with the vast literature on the topic or by emancipating himself from conventional wisdom."

Choice 9:278 Ap '72 130w

"A confusing account of world revolutions in the past century. . . . While many interesting anecdotes are offered, the abrupt jumps in time (e.g., a period of over twenty years from the sentencing of Communist Party leader Bob Thompson by Judge Medina under the provisions of the Smith Act in 1949 to Lee Harvey Oswald, the Weatherman, the Black Panthers and the blacklisting of Pete Seeger in the 1960's is spanned in two pages) and from place to place (e.g., in three pages Archer touches on the Tupamaros of Uruguay, the Quebec Liberation Front, the Palestine Liberation Front, and outbreaks of violence in Northern Ireland and South Africa) make this book almost impossible to read and follow coherently." J. G. Polacheck

Library J 97:287 Ja 15 '72 140w

ARDIES, TOM. This suitcase is going to explode. 234p $5.95 Doubleday

LC 79-180054

"A Washington superspy organization. ASPIRE, is involved in tracking down the locations of atomic bombs which have been planted all over the United States, hidden in suitcases." (Library J)

"An espionage thriller that brings cliff-hanging to the point of absurdity. . . . There is a lot about brainwashing and hypnosis not to mention plain shooting. The fast action is lightened by a sublimely stupid stenographer as well as by the gossip and indiscreet wife of a cabinet member." H. C. Veit

Library J 97:2758 S 1 '72 80w

Reviewed by Elizabeth Storey

Library J 97:3473 O 15 '72 100w [YA]

"One of our contemporary nightmares is the atom bomb in a suitcase. . . . 'Suitcase' deals with the problem, and also the very contemporary problem of brain tampering. It cannot be said that Ardies has made a plausible case. Even on his terms, the situation is hard to accept, and some altogether unnecessary sadism is included. But if it's escape reading you want, 'Suitcase' will hold you spellbound. There is a tough, smart-aleck agent, untold quanta of action, and a breathless, down-to-the-wire climax. Sex, too. And, at the end, perhaps a message for our times." Newgate Calendar

N Y Times Bk R p22 J1 23 '72 180w

TLS p1235 O 13 '72 50w

ARENDT, HANNAH. Crises of the republic; Lying in politics, Civil disobedience, On violence. Thoughts on politics and revolution. 240p $6.95; pa $2.95 Harcourt

320.01 U.S.—Politics and government—1961—Violence. Government. Resistance to
ISBN 0-15-123095-1 LC 72-187703

This book contains four essays. The first, an "analysis of the Pentagon papers . . . deals with . . . image-making and public relations in politics, and the . . . world of Washington's analysts, advisers, and decision-makers. 'Civil Disobedience' examines the various opposition movements from the Freedom Riders to the war resisters and the segregationists. 'Thoughts on Politics and Revolution,' cast in the form of an interview, contains a commentary to the author's theses in 'On Violence' [BRD 1970]." (Publisher's note) Civil Disobedience originally appeared, in somewhat different form, in The New Yorker. Versions of the other essays originally appeared in The New York Review of Books. Index.

Best Sell 32:110 Je 1 '72 300w

Reviewed by Kathleen Nott

Commentary 54:77 Ag '72 1500w

"The three essays and interview gathered together here are individual tracts capable of being read and studied on their own, but are united in a common concern with the U.S. in the 1960's. [The author's] language is strong, pointed, and full of judgment. She makes no effort to be kind where honesty demands a voice in the face of deceit and immaturity. The chapters on lying in politics, on violence (reprinted from an earlier book), and civil disobedience amply demonstrate that it is not more abstract theory which is needed, but rational action based on social awareness and freed from the prejudices of the isolated, individual conscience. These essays reflect throughout a happy and very intelligent balance of critical philosophical thought, perceptive psychological commentary, and deep political concern." J. W. Heisig

Library J 97:1814 My 15 '72 150w

"Socialism and capitalism, anarchism and elitism, imperialism, and 'third-world' revolutionism, student rebellion and adult repression, have all been shorn of their glossy facades by Arendt's practice of philosophy unalloyed by partisan interest. . . . Thus the reader who searches here for some sympathetic variant of 'radicalism,' 'liberalism,' or 'conservatism' will be disappointed. Anyone, though, who doubts the worthiness of our own status quo, and is inspired by the most fundamental criticisms of it, will find . . . much to be grateful for in the work of Hannah Arendt. . . . In particular, the essay 'Lying in Politics: Reflections on the Pentagon Papers' is worth the closest attention. Miss Arendt's treatment of the Pentagon Papers is unique." Philip Green

N Y Times Bk R p27 My 7 '72 1300w

New Yorker 48:132 Je 10 '72 100w

Reviewed by Robert Nisbet

Va Q R 48:449 summer '72 1800w

ARETINO, PIETRO. Aretino's dialogues; tr. by Raymond Rosenthal. 384p $12.50 Stein & Day

858

ISBN 0-8128-1410-X LC 76-163355

"In the time of the Renaissance there were three occupations open to women. A woman could be a wife, a whore, or a nun. . . . [Aretino] describes the advantages and disadvantages, the perils and pleasures, of all three professions as viewed by two women who have experienced them all." (Publisher's note)

"[This work contains] nearly 400 pages of dull pornography. Aretino lacks the warm humanity of Boccaccio, the critical intelligence of Machiavelli, the imaginative hilarity of Rabelais. He exhibits no deep understanding of the human condition, no compassion for the frail sinner, no passionate indignation at the depravity of sophisticated society. His approach to his subject is mechanical and superficial, with the result that his dialogues appear to be little more than a nasty exploitation of sex and sin. Rosenthal has provided a competent and racy translation." W. J. Roscelli

Library J 97:1326 Ap 1 '72 260w

"Aretino is an extraordinary storyteller, excelled in the 16th century only by Cellini. His realism is picaresque; the immensely lively anecdotes woven into the 'Dialogues' all illustrate a vision of life that is motivated by necessity, as in the Spanish novels with rogues for heroes. Food, clothing, money, possessions—survival, in a word—are the important things. Here is where, in my opinion, one must look for Aretino's truth." Alberto Moravia

N Y Times Bk R p27 Ap 30 '72 1050w

"Contrary to what the translator of this book says, these dialogues are more cynical than satirical, more obscene than erotic. Fresh with trivia (gray parrots cost more than green parrots) and the colorful idioms of yesteryear ('In less time than it takes to dry out a goat cheese'), these dialogues trade upon the kind of barroom anecdote that Chaucer and Boccaccio employed. . . . Aretino is incapable of bringing to his stories and arguments the complexity, irony, varied tones of voice or moral point of view that would place him with Boccaccio and Chaucer in the first rank of writers. . . . His book shocked no one, delighted many, and then, for centuries, it was spoken of, but not read. Rosenthal's lively translation shows us what a curious thing it was: too long, too dull, but flickering with an anarchistic fire." P. S. Prescott

Newsweek 79:108 F 21 '72 850w

AREY, JAMES A. The sky pirates. 360p il $7.95 Scribner

364.13 Hijacking of airplanes

SBN 684-12584-6 LC 72-162767

"Along with accounts of individual skyjackings, [the author] appraises current methods of prevention and makes some . . . suggestions for future prevention and criminal prosecution." (Library J) Chronology of aerial hijackings from 1930 to mid-1971.

"The first fairly comprehensive history of skyjacking appearing to date, Arey draws from many sources, some printed here for the first time. . . . Unfortunately the book is poorly organized and tedious. Several accounts are too long, and some are repeated. The writing is mediocre journalese, and there's too little documentation. I can only recommend [this work] as a stopgap. Hopefully a more carefully planned history will appear soon." R. T. Dillon

Library J 97:871 Mr 1 '72 90w

Reviewed by Janet Kammermeyer

Library J 97:1628 Ap 15 '72 90w [YA]

"Beginning with a blow-by-blow transcript, from radio transmission tapes and interviews, of the Palestine Liberation Front's hijacking of a Pan Am 747, which was eventually blown up in Cairo, Arey traces the phenomenon back to an obscure incident in Peru in 1930. . . . Informative, if you're still interested in the subject. A good book to take on that cruise ship."

N Y Times Bk R p36 Mr 26 '72 90w

"Arey, a skilled newsman who joined the public relations department of Pan American Airways, makes the point in [this work] that there is nothing admirable about the modern sky-jacker. . . . In this thoroughly documented book, which examines world-wide the new craze for aerial piracy, Arey emphasizes that most hijackers are losers taking out their resentments on hapless plane crews and passengers. There are, of course, various motivations." F. J. Cook

Sat R 55:68 Mr 11 '72 800w

ARION (periodical). Essays on classical literature. See Rudd, N., ed.

ARKUS, LEON ANTHONY, comp. John Kane, painter. 343p il col il $19.95 Univ. of Pittsburgh press

759.13 Kane, John

ISBN 0-8229-3217-2 LC 72-134488

"There are two parts to this book—Sky Hooks [BRD 1938], the autobiography of John Kane as told to Marie McSwigan, is reprinted with McSwigan's postscript as the first part, and a catalogue raisonné of Kane's printings by Leon Arkus is the second. The autobiography provides . . . [an] account of the life and thought of the immigrant laborer and self-taught artist. The catalogue raisonné is arranged by the subject matter of Kane's painting and is illustrated with 135 plates, eight in color. Appendices listing the exhibitions of Kane's painting, a selected bibliography, and an index of the paintings complete the volume." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Arkus does not take the opportunity in his foreword to the autobiography or his preface to the catalogue raisonné to explore the nature of artistic vision as revealed in the work of the primitive artist or the relation of primitive art to the tradition of American art, but his book is an important source for those who will."

Choice 8:1323 D '71 170w

"[Kane's] proletarian saga, untouched by sentimentality, complaints or boasting—notwithstanding some unlooked for critical acclaim—is of unusual interest. The tone of stoic resilience, the loyalty to a social system that dealt him a grim hand, create a suggestive ambience for his art. . . . However, the illustrations are not of very high quality."

Rackstraw Downes

N Y Times Bk ■ p7 D 5 '71 90w

"[Kane] had a grim life, a grimness which shows in his canvases, which are awkward representations of the life about him. Are they art? Well, art has so many definitions today that they fit into at least one of them. Are they interesting? Yes again, at the very least as records. Does the autobiography have merit? Yes, once more, for it, too, is a record of the kind which is unthinkable today. One must also agree that Kane has been well served by this monument of a book. It could not have been more sincerely, more carefully, or more kindly compiled."

Va Q R 48:xv winter '72 200w

ARMAH, AYI KWEI. Why are we so blest? 288p $6.95 Doubleday

LC 70-175355

"A novel about the psychological effects of African nationalism, set in 'Congheria' and narrated by three troubled would-be participants: a Harvard-educated young African [Modin]; his white girl friend [Aimée], on fire with awakening sex and dreams of revolution; and Solo, an African intellectual cursed with keen awareness of the turmoil around him, but unable to embrace activism." (Library J)

Reviewed by James Gaffney

America 126:434 Ap 22 '72 550w

"This is a sometimes brilliant, sometimes maddening book. The characters seem to be pawns, in defense of a peculiar, Manichean-like argument about, of all things, racial will: Whites are out to destroy blacks and blacks embrace their own destruction; the very nature of the relationship is evil. So all-encompassing a view is a stacked deck and pre-emptive shock or even surprise. . . . Modin is improbably passive and naïve, but of course he has to be if the novel is to work out its thesis. You don't know just how he's going to get it, but you know he will. . . . So much tendentiousness is especially hard to take in fiction; it's both tiresome and artistically self-defeating. But Armah's intensity is so great that you are caught up by the eloquence of this novel, even though it is eloquence in the service of an argument that is, to say the least, hard to understand." Alan Hislop

Book World p8 Ap 2 '72 440w

"Country and action are only a vague backdrop; the novel concentrates on its characters' minds, and reiterates truisms about the ironies of 'liberation.' Though he uses every possible multiracial cliché, Armah renders convincingly the prison of Solo's mind, and, through the tripartite narration, dramatizes the confusions that dominate revolutionary involvements—so effectively, in fact, that the reader cannot order his responses to the book, only share its confusions. It may be right that we emerge from this novel confused, but it is not satisfying." Bruce Allen

Library J 97:898 Mr 1 '72 190w

"[This] is more of an inspired travelogue than a novel. . . . There is an obsessive preoccupation with black-white sexual relations throughout the book and the author offers far too many unnecessary and repetitive clinical details, which in the end produce yawns instead of fresh insights. This novel . . . is one bereft of genuine emotions. Somehow in dissecting characters, situations, settings, there is an absence of tension. It demonstrates the sterility of a purely intellectual involvement in revolution, sex or life itself." Jan Carew

N Y Times Bk ■ p7 Ap 2 '72 340w

"Armah's new novel may offend some readers. The ending, for example, is the most graphic and sickening portrayal of physical torture I can recall having encountered. At the same time, this violent denouement is by no means arbitrary: the author has carefully prepared his reader for it. Masterfully constructed, [the book] is disturbing in many ways; in the sharpness of its focus on the psychological by-products of racial prejudice—among others, emasculation and self-contempt—and in the implications it makes about race relations. Yet it is these very elements which, I predict, will make people talk about this book for a long time to come." C. R. Larson

Sat R 55:73 Mr 18 '72 650w

ARMBRISTER, TREVOR, jt. auth. O Congress. See Riegler, D.

The ARMED services and society: alienation, management and integration [proceedings of the Sixth of the Edinburgh Seminars in the Social Sciences, May 1969]; ed. by J. N. Wolfe and John Erickson. 170p $8.95 Aldine pub.

301.5 Great Britain—Armed Forces. U.S.—Armed Forces. Manpower policy

This is a collection of eight papers, with discussions, organized "in reference to four main themes: the extent to which the services are representative of their society in quality and organization; the efficiency and effectiveness with which the services utilize the resources allocated to them in providing an adequate defense force; the extent to which the service experience of military manpower is of benefit to the larger society in terms of acquired skills; and the issue of whether the armed forces are integrated with the society or comprise a separate antagonistic element." (Am Soc R)

"There are important lessons here for Americans, for to a large extent this is a report of recent British experiences with a military manpower policy which now appears imminent for us: the all-volunteer armed force. . . . The viewpoints are expressed with refreshing cogency and candor. This is a fundamental contribution to the sociology of military organization." R. W. Little

Am Soc ■ 36:1149 D '71 750w

"[This] reader is extremely broad in scope . . . [and would be] usable for a graduate seminar or a reference book . . . [but it] lacks an integrative introductory statement for each chapter that could weave the work more closely together." J. C. Snell

Ann Am Acad 396:180 J1 '71 300w

ARMES, ROY. Patterns of realism. 226p il $12 Barnes, A.S.

791.43 Moving pictures—History. Realism in moving pictures
ISBN 0-498-07788-8 LC 70-146745

In this account of "Italian Neo-Realistic film . . . the author begins with . . . the origins of literary realism and moves on to emphasize Italian aspects. . . . [He] shows that postwar Neo-Realism developed logically out of the Italian literary scene and as a reaction to the Fascist propaganda films. He then describes the great years of Neo-Realism (1945-1951), paying . . . attention to film plots and the leading directors . . . [and] concludes with an evaluation of the Neo-Realistic school of film, ranking it as one of the great movements in world cinema." (Library J)

"This study is probably the definitive work in English on [Italian Neo-Realistic film]. . . . There seems to be as much interest in demolishing the film theories of Siegfried Kracauer as there is in presenting a history of realism. . . . Throughout, the book is heavily detailed, at times to the point of diminishing returns. And for all its virtues, including some fine stills, it will appeal mostly to specialists in film or researchers." R. S. Bravard

Library J 97:1033 Mr 15 '72 200w

"[This is a] very sensible and well-documented book, a model of its kind. . . . With admirable delicacy and self-control, [Armes] avoids the semantic pyrotechnics latent in any discussion of words like 'real' and 'neo-realism.' . . . [His] devotion to his subject is not blind. He spots where a domestic bent for melodrama or sheer commercial pressures have twisted a film in the director's hand. . . . [This is a] scholarly and entertaining survey, one of the few film books to achieve the professional level of observation, insight and argument that we take for granted in other disciplines." John Coleman

New Statesman 84:294 S 1 '72 800w

ARMSTRONG, JAMES. Mission: middle America. 127p $3.50 Abingdon 248 Christianity. Church and social problems
ISBN 0-687-27076-6 LC 79-172807

The thesis of this book is "that Middle Americans look with disdain on the struggles of the poor to achieve justice and self-determination, while they themselves are also the victims of exploitation and depersonalization." (Christian Century)

"Armstrong exhorts his fellow Methodists to proclaim and support a genuinely 'full gospel in order to deal adequately with problems of poverty, militarism, pollution and exploitation which have too often been regarded as the eccentric concerns of the radicals. . . . [The author did not engage] in basic sociological research, but . . . has made use of findings and observations of sociologists. And though [his book does not add] to the theoretical understanding of the dynamics of middle- and lower-middle-class American society . . . [it] is effective, for its audience, in increasing a general awareness of the existence and unique problems of the middle." Carl Bangs

Christian Century 89:633 My 31 '72 180w

"[Armstrong] has written an informal and popular plea for understanding of and ministry to the silent majoritarians of our nation." Martin Marty

Critic 30:92 Ja '72 30w

ARMSTRONG, LOUIS. Louis Armstrong—a self-portrait; the interview by Richard Meryman. 59p il $4.95; pa $2.95 Eakins press

B or 92

LC 70-152507

The major portion of these reminiscences of the late American jazz musician was first published in the April 15th, 1966 issue of Life.

"Does not merit serious consideration by any academic library. . . . The magazine article has more and better photos, and the book has a slightly enlarged text but hardly enough to merit publication in book form. There is nothing in the interview that is particularly new or revealing. . . . A first-rate biography of this unique musical giant is very much needed, and the recently published biography by [M.] Jones and [J.] Chilton [Louis, BRD 1972] comes much closer than this gift shop kind of book." Choice 9:377 My '72 120w

"[There has been] no updating and only a little tidying up. Armstrong evidently tended to ramble on in his personal recollections. The extremely large print produces the impression that the book contains more than it actually does, and the price is therefore prohibitive." Dean Tudor

Library J 96:3749 N 15 '71 60w

ARNDT, WALTER. Pushkin threefold. See Pushkin, A. S.

ARNOLD, ARNOLD. The world book of children's games; written and designed by Arnold Arnold. 346p $9.95 World pub.

790 Games

ISBN 0-529-00778-9 LC 77-142134

"Included are non-regulation games with balls, beanbags, balloons, buttons, marbles, bowling pins, words and numbers. . . . [Arnold] details methods by which children can be taught to improvise and to govern their own behavior and each other. . . . [He offers] suggestions on how much social development and learning can be fostered . . . through games and play." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Age, place and materials index of games.

"A well organized encyclopedia of children's games. . . . Quaint illustrations add a pleasant touch."

Christian Century 89:346 Mr 22 '72 20w

"The author has combined child psychology, folklore, and the science of recreation to produce an excellent compilation of children's games. It includes indoor and outdoor games for children from preschool through elementary school ages. . . . It is [the author's] concern that the young parents and teachers of today are the first generation to have spent a large part of their growing years watching television, and that they do not have an abundance of play and game information to hand down to their children. This collection provides ample information. Recommended for all parents, teachers, and recreational supervisors." P. C. Black

Library J 96:1631 My 1 '71 90w

ARNOLD, DENIS, ed. The Beethoven reader; ed. by Denis Arnold and Nigel Fortune [Eng title: The Beethoven companion]. 542p il $17.50 Norton

780 Beethoven, Ludwig van

ISBN 393-02149-1 LC 77-139374

"This collection of essays, written by a group of . . . British scholars, was prepared for last year's bicentennial of Beethoven's birth and is designed to present an overview of Beethoven's output by categories, together with a critical judgment of his artistic position. . . . The stress throughout is on tracing the sources of Beethoven's style, the innovations he made, and the impact he had on contemporaries and successors." (Choice) Index of names. Index of Beethoven's works.

"Although all his compositions are mentioned, there is no attempt to give detailed analysis of each one. . . . As a one-volume stylistic study, [this] is superior to many others issued in the recent past. Of particular value is Alan Tyson's study of the music printing industry of the time and Beethoven's relations to it. There are eight black-and-white illustrations, not all of equal value. . . . There is no bibliography, except that found in footnotes; the major authorities are used. The audience is that of the musically literate, not necessarily the music specialist." Choice 8:1184 N '71 200w

"This well-planned symposium lives up to its name. It is a useful companion in that it refers to every work of Beethoven the listener is likely to hear. . . . There are twelve contributors, most of them well-known authorities. . . . The final section of the companion, 'The View of Posterity' by Elsie and Denis Arnold, is a straightforward anthology of critical opinions through the years from Berlioz to Stravinsky. Some are quoted at unnecessary length, and there are only the briefest linking comments by the compilers." TLS p494 Ap 30 '71 1100w

ARNOLD, ELLIOTT. Forests of the night. 344p $6.95 Scribner

ISBN 684-12533-1

LC 70-162745

"The hero is of German-Jewish descent and served on an American bomber that firebombed his erstwhile home town, Würzburg. He goes back there, to the nostalgically and somewhat unrealistically re-created city, to search out his own soul and his relation to the people and place from which his family went to the Final Solution. His experiences include an encounter with some brutal neo-Nazis and a sad realization of the fact that in a war the world loses." (America)

Reviewed by W. B. Hill

America 125:432 N 20 '71 70w

Reviewed by R. J. Williams

Best Sell 31:310 O 15 '71 900w

Reviewed by Sara Blackburn

Book World p2 Ja 2 '72 250w

"This well-written novel of suspense is presented in an unemotional narrative style which still manages to convey a strong sense of mood, atmosphere, and eyewitness participation. . . . Character delineation is good, though uneven, the pace unhurried, but relentless. Recommended for all but the most circumscribed fiction collections." R. L. Middleton

Library J 96:2538 Ag '71 110w

"Arnold spins a tale of neo-Nazis that keeps the reader hanging on every hairpin turn of the plot. No tiresome stereotypes here, thank Heaven—no heel-clicking Prussians or clumsy Fascists out of pop melodrama. The author's atavistic conspirators are camouflaged to present a low profile against the luxuriant Bavarian landscape, making them all the more plausible and threatening. . . . [The author] develops Bauer's quest with a fine attention to detail that embraces both the town and its citizens. . . . [He] presents moral questions without moralizing, a considerable achievement considering the tempting possibilities of Hitler's legacy." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p20 D 19 '71 210w

ARNOLD, H. J. P. Photographer of the world; the biography of Herbert Ponting. 175p pl $8.50 Fairleigh Dickinson univ. press
B or 92 Ponting, Herbert George
ISBN 0-8386-7959-5 LC 75-156270

This is an account of the Englishman who was "the official photographer of the 1910 Scott expedition to the Antarctic, although he traveled extensively in the Orient as well. This biography chronicles his successful career prior to the polar expedition of 1910-13 and the years of his decline through a succession of business failures following World War I." (Choice) Index.

"The book is a useful supplement to The great white south [BRD 1922], Ponting's own account of the Antarctic journey, on which it heavily relies. It also details his development of the kinatome, an early cartridge-loading motion picture projector of more than routine interest. Extensive notes; . . . reprint of 1969 English edition. For specialized collections on film and photography."

Choice 9:958 O '72 110w

"Ponting (1870-1935) was an outstanding travel photographer who deserved this competent and well documented monograph. . . . Always a loner, he visited China, India, Japan, Spain, the Alps and other parts, his first major commission being the Russo-Japanese war. . . . His lasting fame, however, rests on his still and moving photography of Scott's second Antarctic expedition. . . . Ponting's experiences and work on this expedition are fully described in this book and make entertaining reading not only for those who have had to take photographs under exceptional physical difficulties, but for anyone with a bent for adventure."

TLS p48 Ja 15 '70 400w

ARNOLD, JOSEPH L. The new deal in the suburbs; a history of the Greenbelt Town program, 1935-1954. 272p $10 Ohio state univ. press

309.2 Cities and towns—U.S. City planning—U.S.

SBN 8142-0153-9 LC 74-141494

"This study describes one major city planning project undertaken by the federal government in the 1930s in the hope that it would force a fundamental shift in the wasteful and unhealthy pattern of urban growth. The greenbelt towns were built to demonstrate that urban expansion by the construction of complete new towns would provide superior safety, convenience, beauty, and a deep sense of community spirit—all at a new low cost." (Introd) Bibliography. Index.

"This is a clear and well organized study, but one occasionally wishes for more on important subjects such as the opposition in Congress, the real estate agencies, and the surrounding communities. Nevertheless, the reader learns much about the Greenbelt town program, especially about the numerous and conflicting groups within it; he also learns of such unanticipated difficulties as the architects' lack of experience in designing low-cost housing. The chief reason for the failure of the program, Arnold concludes, over and above the confusion in aims, the conflicting ideas, and association with the New Deal, was that the concept of town planning, especially its socio-economic side, went against long held American views. . . . Recommended for use in upper level courses in 20th-century American history, urban history, and planning."

Choice 8:1506 Ja '72 270w

"With the publication of [this book] . . . we now have all the documentation we could ask about the history of the New Deal new town experiments. [This] is a well-written, carefully researched monograph which carries the story from its inception in 1935 to the final sale of the towns in 1949. . . . One of the most useful parts of Arnold's book is his documentation of the subsequent experiments in community life, local government, and cooperative retailing which went on in the towns in the years after 1938." S. B. Warner

J Am Hist 59:468 S '72 900w

ARONSOHN, RICHARD B. The miracle of cosmetic plastic surgery [by] Richard B. Aronsohn [and] Richard A. Epstein. 350p il $12.50 Sherbourne

617 Surgery, Plastic
LC 78-124333

This volume coauthored by a doctor who has specialized in cosmetic surgery of the head and neck for the past fifteen years gives information "on the nose, face, eyes, skin, hair, breasts, stomach, and thighs. . . . [The authors discuss] the benefits, limitations, risks, costs, amounts of discomfort, and details of each operation, including before and after photographs and . . . technical drawings of the areas cut and the proper dimensions of the desired results. Case histories are included. The last chapter deals with the 'untouchables'—those who for psychological or physiological reasons should not have surgery—and alternate ways of correcting faults." (Library J) Glossary of medical terms. Index.

"Should have a particular appeal to the layman considering cosmetic surgery. . . . Easy to read and there is a glossary of terms for classification of unfamiliar terminology. The text, although not written for the health professional, would be useful to this group if bibliographic references to professional literature had been included."

Choice 8:1210 N '71 270w

"Though many technical terms are used, a medical glossary is included and the writing is lively and clear. Recommended for college and public libraries." Juliet Woodbury
Library J 95:4186 D 1 '70 180w

ARONSON, HARVEY, jt. auth. The defense never rests. See Bailey, F. L.

ARONSON, THEO. Queen Victoria and the Bonapartes. 260p il $8.95 Bobbs

B or 92 Victoria, Queen of Great Britain. Napoleon III, Emperor of the French. Eugénie, consort of Napoleon III, Emperor of the French
ISBN 0-304-93871-8 LC [72-181426]

"The British royal family, headed by Queen Victoria, was close to Louis Napoleon Bonaparte III and the Empress Eugénie during their reign in France and exile in Britain. This is an account . . . of a personal intimacy which fluctuated (as did the cordiality of the entente) with Queen Victoria's differences with her government on the subject of France." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"A readable book which will appeal to a person who likes history, biography, or a good tale. It has pathos balanced with humor, information with color, interpretation with sympathetic understanding. It begins with the considered effort of Napoleon III to win . . . the prestige of the house of Hanover. . . . One-third of the volume deals with the mutual admiration between the dowdy Queen and the chic ex-Empress. Victoria defied protocol, her government's foreign policy, even her German relatives, to offer Eugénie and the Prince Imperial a home and honor in England. The account for the most part comes from hitherto unpublished entries from Victoria's journal. Bibliography of contemporary sources and index are useful."

Choice 9:703 JI/Ag '72 190w

"The exile receives detailed treatment, and it comes as a surprise to learn that Eugénie lived on until 1920. Sources used are reliable, but well worked over. The author's intent is not to serve the scholar, but to interest the general reader. This is done with grace, if not depth. A pleasant, but not an important, book." Dorothy Sinclair

Library J 97:2086 Je 1 '72 130w

"[The Bonapartes'] state visit to England in the spring of 1855 . . . was in every way a great success, and for the young Queen [of England] and the younger Empress it was the beginning of a lifelong friendship. . . . It is this friendship with which Mr. Aronson is chiefly concerned. The subject is a somewhat domestic one, but it is domesticity on the loftiest possible plane—a daily routine of walk and tea and gossip guided at every point by a straitjacket protocol. It is also an ambience to which Mr. Aronson sympathetically responds. He has a feeling for the period, a liking for his principals . . . and he writes with an eloquent and smiling simplicity."

New Yorker 48:95 Je 24 '72 200w

ARP, HANS. See Arp, J.

ARP, JEAN. Arp on Arp: poems, essays, memories; ed. by Marcel Jean; tr. by Joachim Neugroschel. (Docs. of 20th cent. art) 574p il $17.50 Viking

840

SBN 670-13332-9

LC 70-162658

This anthology is "based on the French edition of Arp's writings, Jours effeuillés (1966), [and] includes principally those poems and essays written by Arp in French. . . . [It is] supplemented by Marguerite Arp's memoir of Arp, Bernard Karpel's bibliographical survey, and Arp's 43 illustrations." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index of authors and titles.

"[Although] most of Arp's writings of the Dada period, which are in German, are omitted, this selection of his written work from 1920-66 does give a solid picture of the range and depth of Arp's verbal art. . . . So close is the correlation between Arp's visual and verbal expression that it could almost be said that his writings are a plastic art made with words. . . . [This] is a valuable addition to the Arp literature."

Choice 9:958 O '72 130w

Reviewed by R. R. Harris

Library J 97:2175 Je 15 '72 30w

"What we have [here] is a 574-page book containing about fifty repetitions or superfluous pages, many poems a judicious editor would have omitted, and a number of texts . . . close to untranslatable. . . . [This anthology] is ultimately exasperating in spite of its good intentions and respectable translations. A 200-page selection made primarily by the translator from both the German and the French, with a careful choice and placement of reproductions, would have given Arp a far greater opportunity to find American readers, young and old. As it is, they will be discouraged by bulk, price, unsteady quality, and even confusion about the raison d'être of the book. Arp on Arp is not a single work but a grab bag put together by a devoted and literal-minded French editor. . . . [It is, however] full of hidden pleasures. . . . In spite of the odds, every creature in any way drawn to poetry should come out to see and hear Arp." Roger Shattuck

N Y Rev of Books 18:24 My 18 '72 2400w

ART since mid-century; the new internationalism; with contributions by Werner Haftmann [and others] foreword by Jean Leymarie. 2v il col il $39.95 N.Y. graphic

709.04 Art. Modern—20th century

ISBN 0-8212-0384-3 LC 70-154332

"These volumes consist of essays by different authors treating various movements of contemporary art since 1945. Volume 1 covers abstract art; Volume 2 deals with figurative art, including Expressionism, Surrealism, and pop art. Discussions of each individual art movement range over its history, its relationship to other movements, and its important artistic exponents. An appendix contains the personal statements of European and American artists, taken from books, catalogs, and interviews [on their] . . . reactions to 20th-Century artistic and social life." (Library J) Index.

"[This work offers] a clear, rich presentation of the complexity and internationalism of art . . . through the late '60s, though not a comprehensive account of its history and operating ideas. . . . The general essays written by experts of international repute and the excellent reproductions are organized chronologically and stylistically rather than geographically. . . . (Both volumes are weighted in favor of French, German, and Italian art). All the essays offer penetrating, often fresh, interpretations. . . . Although the absence of documentation in most of the essays and the lack of bibliographies limit the use of this work by scholars, it is recommended for libraries with an art section."

Choice 9:797 S '72 200w

"The reproductions in these volumes are up to the New York Graphic Society's high standards. However, the plates, while keyed to the text, are numbered but not titled; neither can they be found by title in the index. The reader must do a fair amount of searching to locate, for example, Rauschenberg's 'Odalisque.' This trivial but annoying liability should be corrected in future editions. Because of their scope, presentation, and quality of illustrations, these volumes are recommended." R. L. Enequist

Library J 97:2564 Ag '72 180w

ARTHOS, JOHN. Shakespeare: the early writings. 264p $10.50 Rowman & Littlefield

822.3 Shakespeare, William—Criticism, interpretation, etc.

ISBN 0-87471-109-6 LC 72-189538

The author's aim is to discuss "Shakespeare's use and critique of Plautine comedy, Greek romance, Platonic ideas, Petrarchan amplification, the medieval and the Christian, in the early comedies, the first history trilogy, the poems, and Titus Andronicus." (TLS)

"[Arthos compares] the early plays with their sources to establish the nature of the originality which was to lead to [Shakespeare's] greatness. . . . [He] brings readers face to face with the basis of [Shakespeare's] great drama." W. H. Magee

Library J 97:3590 N 1 '72 80w

"Like Prufrock, [Arthos] . . . finds it impossible to say just what he means. . . . [He] wears his reader down with poorly punctuated sentences composed of interminable generalities. Misinterpretations abound . . . [and his] critical summaries are as vague as they are verbose."

TLS p867 J1 28 '72 450w

ARUEGO, ARIANE, jt. auth. A crocodile's tale. Aruego, J.

ARUEGO, JOSE. A crocodile's tale; a Philippine folk story, by Jose & Ariane Aruego. unpag. col il $4.95 Scribner

398.2 Folklore—Philippine Islands. Crocodiles—Stories

SBN 684-12806-3 LC 75-37185

A crocodile decides to eat Juan, the boy who has just saved his life. Juan's appeals to a worn-out basket and a hat which float by are received without sympathy, because both have suffered from man's ingratitude. Saved at last by a clever monkey, Juan shows that he has learned the importance of being grateful. "Preschool to kindergarten." (Library J)

"Children who like folk tales should enjoy [this] . . . clever story." Sidney Long

Book World p6 (children's issue) My 7 '72 30w

Reviewed by D. K. Willis

Christian Science Monitor pB2 My 4 '72 40w

Horn Bk 48:259 Je '72 120w

"This folktale, aimed at pre-schoolers, frequently uses the word 'gratitude,' but the idea of being grateful doesn't come across. Rather, 'I'll do something for you if you do something for me' seems to dominate the story: a form of bribery, not gratitude. The Aruegos' illustrations are amusing." M. A. Fish

Library J 97:2227 Je 15 '72 180w

"[This book] deals gently with menace (plus a moral). . . . The simple text flows in and out of pleasant four-color pictures as Juan seeks and finds rescue and, because of the ungrateful crocodile, learns a lesson in gratitude." Shirley Williams

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p58 My 7 '72 60w

Reviewed by Karla Kuskin

Sat R 55:61 Ag 19 '72 110w

ARUEGO, JOSE. Look what I can do. unpag. il $4.95 Scribner

Picture books for children

SBN 684-12493-9 LC 73-158880

"The protagonists are two young carabao (water buffalo): one hops up on one foot, executes a somersault, and brags ('Look what I can do!'); the other imitates what the first one does ('I can do it too!'). From this first mild trick, the two progress to ever wilder stunts. . . . A third carabao who also brags 'Look what I can do!'—is firmly trounced by the first two. . . . Preschool to grade two." (Library J)

"There are just fifteen words in this story of two [carabaos] whose valuable message should be intelligible to the young non-reader. . . . [The] sprightly, cartoon-like drawings are the focal point." M. J. Bandler

Book World p3 (children's issue) N 7 '71 50w

Reviewed by J. F. Smith
Christian Science Monitor pB3 N 11 '71 110w

"A game of follow the leader gets out of hand in this humorous, virtually textless picture book illustrating the old Philippine proverb: 'A carabao who herds with a fence jumper becomes a fence jumper too.' . . . The illustrations—black-and-white cartoon outlines filled with washes of grey, beige, and on some pages brown, yellow, and orange-red—become more detailed, colorful and lively as the story reaches its dry-high-to-wet-low point, and then fade away again to beige and grey with the calm, perfectly logical ending." Janet Strothman

Library J 96:4177 D 15 '71 170w

"This is a really superb book of pictures. . . . A brilliant example of illustrative mime. . . . The action is so well carried by the pictures that words would be an intrusion." Barbara Novak

N Y Times Bk ■ p8 Ja 16 '72 60w

ARUEGO, JOSE. Pilyo the piranha. unpub. col. il lib bdg $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

Fishes—Stories
LC 77-123132

"Pilyo the piranha engages in a battle of wits to protect the lazy sloth, who is hanging in the tree over Pilyo's part of the Amazon River, from other predators so that Pilyo can have him for himself. . . . Pilyo forbids the other piranhas to eat him, they reluctantly agree, but then he decides not to eat the sloth himself and only wants to frighten him a little for his own good. The sloth slothfully sleeps on. . . . Preschool to kindergarten." (Library J)

"The story makes no sense, especially in its misrepresentation of piranhas (known to strip most victims to the bone in seconds): e.g., 'He [Pilyo] had bitten the sloth many times, but the sloth hadn't felt a thing through his tough hide.' The use of piranhas in this story, uncharacteristic as they are here, is merely a gimmick. And the result is not even amusing, despite the support the text gets from Aruego's typically humorous illustrations." R. S. Martin

Library J 96:1795 My 15 '71 220w

Reviewed by John Fuller
New Statesman 83:762 Je 2 '72 30w

"Can a picture book that stars a greedy piranha and has a supporting cast that includes a sloth, a boa constrictor, a jaguar and a harpy eagle be all bad? The answer is no. But it's not all good, either. Pilyo, the book's anti-hero, swims in a school (or perhaps I should say a cavity) of snaggle-mouthed piranhas. The sloth resembles Margaret Rutherford in a hairy fur coat. . . . But for all the expressive line drawings—they are delightful and amusing—the tale itself is curiously inept. It has a Perils of Pauline flavor without a resolution." Jane Yolen

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p44 My 2 '71 150w

"A very funny book by an American author-illustrator. . . . Even when he was not hungry Pilyo enjoyed frightening the animals who lived along the banks of the river—not an exemplary hobby for the central character of a children's book, but Pilyo's optimism and weird kind of integrity make him an endearing creature in spite of his nasty propensities." TLS p483 Ap 28 '72 100w

AS I crossed a bridge of dreams; recollections of a woman in 11th century Japan; tr. from the Japanese [by] Ivan Morris. 159p il maps $8.95 Dial press

895.6

ISBN 0-19-212553-2 LC [79-144386]

This translation of a "work written by an unnamed person whom [Morris] calls Lady Sarashina [an] aristocratic writer of early Japan, [includes] descriptions of traveling in the provinces in the 11th Century [as well as some poetry]." (Library J)

"The material is . . . subjective to the point of isolation, and spotted with poems that have driven the translator to despair because their full effect depends on double meanings and triple implications. Despite the impossibility of adequate translation and the necessity for an inordinate number of explanatory notes, the work is interesting because it reveals a familiar muddle of vague guilt and unfocused regret. This Japanese contemporary of King Canute would be quite at home in the twentieth century." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 228:103 J1 '71 90w

"Morris has translated [this book] with a great deal of sensitivity. It is easy to believe that he has caught exactly the fragile quality of the poetry the unknown writer loved to use. But many readers will search in vain for some word from her that will make her come alive." P. M.

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ag 5 '71 80w

"The work is intensely personal, revealing the writer's innermost feelings and thoughts. Another fine translation of a moving and significant work of Japanese literature; for most libraries." C. W. Stucki

Library J 96:1979 Je 1 '71 110w

"Like a tiny, concentrated beam of light, the words of Lady Sarashina's diary pierce through the opaque mists of a thousand years, illuminating various corners of an era and a tableau which neither Japan nor the world will ever see again. . . . As Ivan Morris points out, 'diary' is perhaps an inaccurate term to describe the writings of Lady Sarashina. They are not a 'daily' record of events but a book in which the material has been deliberately selected and shaped to reveal . . . certain facets of her life." N. J. Gallo

Pacific Affairs 45:115 spring '72 340w

ASAHI SHIMBUN, TOKYO. See The Pacific rivals

ASHBERY, JOHN. Three poems. 118p $5.95; pa $2.25 Viking

811

ISBN 670-70906-9; 670-00345-X (pa)
LC 79-173918

These three poems "open with a spiritual awakening to earthly things that also involves . . . man's ability to act either with or upon his destiny. Then Ashbery . . . [tells] a love story with cosmological overtones and concludes with a poem that consolidates and fleshes out the themes of the previous two, balancing them with . . . facts of his own autobiography." (Publisher's note)

"If there is any consistency in Ashbery's poetry, it is his overwhelming ability to write abstractly. He scatters words as deftly as a man firing a shotgun of paint at an empty canvas. The result is a dazzling display of technique. But the reader is left to wonder what the author meant and, more significantly, what the reader felt after reading these three poems." J. M. Warner

Library J 97:504 F 1 '72 170w

"I read each new book by John Ashbery with the same puzzlement and fascination. Ashbery's finely tuned style never lapses into the commonplace. Every poem creates a mood of density and discretion, which is almost magical. And yet one never knows quite what the poems are about. His fine elaboration of images and arguments forms a concealing net, a sort of camouflage that works not so much by covering over as by fascinating, so that one forgets to pursue one's hunger for logic amid the glories of pure language. Not since Hart Crane has an American poet made difficulty so thoroughly into a means of expression." Paul Zweig

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ap 9 '72 1700w

"In Three Poems, where discourse has 'come to mean what it had been called on for', where 'our narration seems to be trying to bury itself in the landscape', there are no lines at all, nor even clusters of enjambed statements: there are prose texts (something woven, as a snare or toil), 'a kind of trilogy meant to be read in sequence.' . . . Each poem or fiction (the words mean the same: a made thing, what Ashbery calls 'the created vacuum') begins with an aporia, a confession of failure or incompetence, and then builds on that admission in a difficult welter of pronouns. . . . To make poems which are, rather than which are about, the world . . . [Ashbery] invokes a poetics of continuity and encirclement." Richard Howard

Poetry 120:296 Ag '72 1050w

ASHBERY, JOHN—Continued

"[Ashbery] faces the . . . problem of lack of form and the wrestle with abstraction. His method is to assume doggedly that this problem will go away if he keeps going long enough. The most one can say is he seems to know what he is doing." Peter Dale
Sat R 55:57 J1 ■ '72 700w

ASHBY, ERIC. Any person, any study; an essay on higher education in the United States. 110p $4.95 McGraw

378.73 Education, Higher
ISBN 0-07-010022-5 LC 73-144765

In this book, which challenges "one of the basic premises of American higher education: that it should be for everyone . . . [the author discusses] some current problems in higher education, including the lack of consensus on what should be taught undergraduates, the high attrition rate of freshman students, the overemphasis upon the Ph.D. . . . testing, credentials, university administration and governance, and the extent of student participation in university policy-making." (Col & Res Lib)

"Ashby's descriptions are literate, cogent, and challenging. . . . Whether [he] is commenting upon the notable lack of success of co-operative enterprises, or arguing for the adequacy of ETS tests, or touting a less structured approach to university administration, he takes the reader back again and again to fundamental assumptions, for the 'gravest single problem facing American higher education is this alarming disintegration of consensus about its purpose.' . . . [Ashby] has raised questions which many academic librarians will find provocative, and which they and their faculty colleagues had jolly well better face realistically if they expect continuing support from the tax-paying public." E. G. Holley
Col & Res Lib 33:56 Ja '72 700w

"Though he is an outsider so far as American higher education is concerned, it is obvious that Ashby has done his homework. He is familiar with the literature, understands the complexities of our institutional structure, and has a vast array of statistics at his command. . . . [He] sees both our strengths and our weaknesses. This is a thoughtful, perspective, and stimulating commentary." Paul Woodring
J Higher Ed 42:766 D '71 500w

ASHBY, SIR ERIC. The rise of the student estate in Britain [by] Eric Ashby and Mary Anderson. 186p $7 Harvard univ. press

378.1 Colleges and universities—Great Britain. Students—Great Britain. Self-government (in education)
ISBN 0-674-77290-3 LC 79-23864

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by J. F. Naylor
Am Hist R 77:1442 D '72 600w
Economist 236:60 S 26 '70 460w

Reviewed by Colin Crouch
New Statesman 80:305 S 11 '70 1150w

Reviewed by Robert McCaughey
Pol Sci Q 86:725 D '71 600w
TLS p133 O 2 '70 400w

ASHE, GEOFFREY. Camelot and the vision of Albion. 233p $5.95 St Martins

942.01 Arthur, King. Great Britain—History—To 1066. Great Britain—Antiquities
LC 74-166481

"In part 1 the author expounds the Arthurian myth and its factual bases, influences, and tangents; in parts 2 and 3 he discusses the Arthurian mystique as it has occurred in the world before and after Arthur." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"As Secretary of the Cadbury Project, Geoffrey Ashe has been in on the work of excavation [of the reputed site of Camelot] since it began, in 1966. His book, he warns us, is not 'the book of the dig.' For most readers, however, it will suffice, since it answers the questions about the dig which they have been asking themselves." J. J. McAleer
Best Sell 32:6 Ap 1 '72 500w

Choice 9:809 S '72 190w

"[The author is concerned with] the potency of the Arthurian myth; the attraction that brought some 5,000 people each season to tramp around the undramatic earthworks at Cadbury castle; the endurance of the half-belief in the once and future king. Mr Ashe's distillation of the matter of Britain is too strangely, too strongly reflective of his own particular interests. . . . In one of his flights of fancy he interprets the return of Arthur as meaning the present concentration of effort on his legend. But this extraordinary mêlée of fact and fancy, of argument and archaeology, is so typical of the progress of the Arthurian legend that the best compliment one can pay Mr Ashe's latest book is perhaps simply to say that it follows well within the tradition laid down by Geoffrey of Monmouth."

Economist 238:56 F 6 '71 750w

"Ashe, who has concerned himself extensively with the matter of Britain, especially with the Cadbury and Glastonbury digs, is best when dealing with the 'restoration-mystique' itself and its relationship to that of the Titan Age. Where, in later segments he attempts to ally this mystique, together with the myth of the Golden Age, to certain nationalist and revisionist tendencies, he is on shakier ground. His tracing of analogues in literary movements and figures seems, on occasion, weak, although this may be because he has chosen a small canyons for a 'titanic' subject." Jo-Ann Suleiman
Library J 97:683 F 15 '72 150w

"Ashe, with some rather unconvincingly loose links, traces the theme of slumbering Albion through Shelley, 19th-century dissident radicalism and the Mahatma Gandhi; and he finishes up in a state of hopeful suspense, with the Arthurian return just around the corner of the last chapter. . . . [He] believes that Arthurian legend is a source of 'spiritual regeneration'; it is hard to agree. Certainly its diverse and prolific existence is a tribute to that oddest of all the capacities of the English, to turn nostalgia into their most moving and heartfelt style. Arthur seems unkillable." Jonathan Raban
New Statesman 81:83 Ja 15 '71 1100w

ASHE, GEOFFREY. The quest for America. See The quest for America

ASHLEY, MAURICE. Charles II: the man and the statesman. 358p pl $10 Praeger

B or 92 Charles II, King of Great Britain. Great Britain—History—Stuarts, 1603-1714
LC 79-100906

In this account of the life and times of Charles II, the author is concerned with "politics during Charles's reign from 1660-1685, and its effects on the latter half of the seventeenth century in England." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"As a synthesis, this work should appeal primarily to the nonprofessional historian. It is however, precisely this audience which is likely to feel let down by the book. For despite its carefully balanced view of Charles, there are several problems. On the stylistic side there is a tendency to reintroduce characters using the exact same phrase each time. There are also a variety of essentially meaningless statements such as: 'Godfrey was a bachelor who was known to suffer from hereditary melancholia.' When it comes to the crisis of the Popish Plot and Exclusion Controversy, Ashley describes the events in a matter of fact way, playing down the drama. . . . Despite these faults, the book does update previous biographies and is therefore a useful addition to an undergraduate library."

Choice 9:120 Mr '72 170w

"This [is an] excellent revisionist study. . . . Ashley concludes that though Charles II was a habitual liar, there is little evidence to support the persistent legend that the king was a lazy, weak-willed monarch." W. W. MacDonald
Library J 97:674 F 15 '72 100w

Reviewed by Paul Johnson
New Statesman 83:719 My 26 '72 240w

"[This account] is generally sympathetic in tone, and indeed appreciative of Charles as a sovereign and as a man. . . . To his present biographer he appears not indeed as a statesman but as a consummate politician who knew his own mind and followed his own course, never seriously deflected from it by his ministers or his mistresses. . . . In as full and careful a study of Charles's life and character as any since Sir Arthur Bryant's classic biography of forty years ago [King Charles II, BRD 1931], Dr Ashley continues to redress the balance in favour of a king who was often maligned by historians of earlier generations. . . . [but] the balance may at times tilt a little too far."

TLS p10 Ja 7 '72 500w

ASHTON, THOMAS L. Byron's Hebrew melodies. 234p $10 Univ. of Tex. press

821 Byron, George Gordon Noël Byron, 6th Baron—Hebrew melodies. Nathan, Isaac
ISBN 0-292-70141-1 LC 70-165921

A collection of thirty lyrics including "She Walks in Beauty" and "The Destruction of Sennacherib" originally written in 1814-1816 to be set to music by Isaac Nathan. "It is divided into three main sections with four appendices. The first details the history of the collaboration and the composition of the works, the second provides literary context, the third presents a fully annotated text. . . . [The volume] contains historical collation, contents of editions collated, calendar of manuscripts, calendar of editions [and] selective bibliography." (Choice) Bibliography. Index of titles and first lines.

"An excellent edition. . . . Of most interest to the romanticist is the discussion in section two of Byron's use of the national-melodies genre and the 'Hebrew melodies' as dramatic lyrics. . . . The emphasis on Byron's attitude towards Judaism, Jews, and Zionism may be of interest to some readers. But the main audience is specialized Byron scholars. For all graduate school libraries, and some undergraduate."

Choice 9:965 O '72 180w

"About half [of the poems] are on Jewish themes. Byron had no talent as a lyrical poet, and none of these poems is completely successful. . . . The explanatory notes, which explain very little, . . . are largely taken from previous editors. . . . Oddly, since [Mr Ashton] gives so much else, he does not give the melodies of the Hebrew Melodies. . . . On the evidence of this book, Mr Ashton finds it difficult to quote more than a few lines even from printed sources without some error in transcription. This work has all the trappings of scholarship, but it lacks any sense of scholarly economy and proportion."

TLS p573 My 19 '72 380w

ASHTON-WARNER, SYLVIA. Spearpoint; "teacher" in America. 223p $5.95 Knopf

371.1 Teaching—Personal narratives. Education—U.S. Education—Experimental methods
ISBN 0-394-47971-8 LC 72-877

The author of Teacher (BRD 1963) describes her experiences in a new experimental school in the American Rockies. "Miss Ashton-Warner looks at the 'native imagery' of our children man-made thing called television . . . and asks, 'Is the new generation of any post-industrial swiftly evolving society to end up two-dimensional only, a spear point to take off one day to some far habitable planet?' . . . [She records her] skepticism about our society, its direction, its worship of 'triple gods,' the dollar sign, the Adman . . . a legendary spirit called Feeling, its 'I wanna, I dowanna' children who need to learn that 'freedom is paired with responsibility and self-discipline.'" (Publishers' Weekly)

America 127:370 N 4 '72 250w

"Miss Ashton-Warner . . . writes engagingly and honestly of her experiences. . . . There [is no] visible organization to the book. It just rolls along chronologically. In the last analysis, it is the existential story of a woman's difficult, finally successful attempts to win over a group of children in a culture new and strange to her. . . . If [the purpose of the book] is to present an emotional struggle of its author and something of the flavor of a classroom of small children in a very loosely structured situation, and to do so movingly, entertainingly, then it succeeded. If its purpose is anything more theoretically ambitious, it failed." R. B. Nordberg

Best Sell 32:250 S 1 '72 650w

"This book is more an indictment of U.S. civilization than a guiding force/resource book for educators; it will be a keen disappointment to those who reveled in the author's earlier Teacher. Here . . . Ashton-Warner's petulance, frustration, and bewilderment, resulting from the attempt to transplant her Key Vocabulary and organic teaching methods from New Zealand to Denver, transform her diary into a diatribe. Small but repetitious, the book contains a few insights paved over by culture shock and the inability to come to terms with her new pupils, who remain, unhappily, strangers in a strange land." Shelley Neiderbach

Library J 97:2388 J1 '72 170w

Reviewed by Morris Freedman

New Repub 167:30 S 23 '72 1350w

"One finds in [Spearpoint] the same concern, the same vision, one found in [the author's earlier work [Teacher]. . . . Her subject here is not only the young. It is also America itself, and its future, and the way the future shapes itself in our children. It is they who are the 'spearpoint': the sharp edge of culture thrust forward into the future and toward the stars. She worries about the world they will inhabit and create, the world forming itself in their souls. . . . Through it all her touch is deft. . . . Her ideas don't make themselves felt as disquisitions on culture or anthropological theory. They are present, instead, as a continuous and quiet kind of common sense, grounded in detail, in fact. That her vision can make itself so strongly felt in such a quiet fashion, and in a book as sketchy and as casual as 'Spearpoint,' makes it somehow even more impressive." Peter Marin

N Y Times Bk R p59 S 24 '72 950w

"This teacher's stay in America wasn't conceived as a venture in comparative culture critique. Her book fights hard against glibness of moral judgment and is appreciative throughout of special gifts in the pupils in her American experimental school. . . . The 'problem' appears as an insufficiency of feeling and desire. . . . No book in itself can ward off defeat in the war for the life of the heart. But this striking, ponderable, beautifully shaped teacher's journal is a useful weapon, a powerful summons to awareness that feeling counts."

Benjamin De Mott

Sat R 55:97 S 16 '72 600w

Reviewed by Melvin Maddocks

Time 100:82 O 2 '72 850w

ASIA HOUSE GALLERY, NEW YORK. Scholar painters of Japan: the Nanga school. See Cahill, J.

ASIMOV, ISAAC. ABC's of the earth. 48p il maps $4.50; lib bdg $4.41 Walker & co.

551.03 Earth—Dictionaries—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-8027-6091-0; 0-8027-6092-9 (lib bdg)
LC 70-173815

"Starting with 'A' for Antarctic and ending with 'Z' for zone [the author] . . . defines two earth terms for each letter of the alphabet." (Publisher's note) "Ages eight to ten." (Sat R)

"As was true of the other titles in the author's ABC's series—ABC's of Space [BRD 1969] and ABC's of the Ocean [BRD 1971]—the definitions in this very general introduction are too difficult to be understood by those readers who would be attracted by the alphabet format. Fifty-two geological and geographical terms are explained with illustrations or diagrams provided for each. The brief definitions are generally adequate, and the print is large and easy to read. However, the black-and-white photographs are of poor quality; no pronunciation is indicated; some words are capitalized for no grammatical reason; and there is no index." Judith Sima

Library J 97:1908 My 15 '72 140w

"While the text is not comprehensive, it's simply written and gives good, accurate coverage, including some of the more dramatic events or formations in nature." Zena Sutherland

Sat ■ 55:75 F 19 '72 60w

ASIMOV, ISAAC. The land of Canaan. 306p
11 maps $5.95 Houghton

933 Palestine—History. Jews—History
ISBN 0-395-12572-3 LC 70-155557

The author "concentrates on the western end of the Fertile Crescent, the strip of land that forms the eastern coast of the Mediterranean . . . part of [which] was known as Canaan . . . [and which is now] split up between Syria, Lebanon, Israel, and Jordan. . . . [The book deals with what] this part of the world contributed . . . to modern civilization . . . [which includes the birth of] the modern alphabet, and . . . a religion . . . which now, in various forms, dominates Europe, the Americas, western Asia, and northern Africa." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Index.

"The author has provided the junior-high-school historian with a thought-provoking, readable study, which also demonstrates the need for reexamining the facts of history from various perspectives. Although no bibliography is included, a comprehensive table of dates is appended as well as lists of kings. Pronunciation for unfamiliar names is given in the text rather than in the index." M. M. B.
Horn Bk 48:60 F '72 250w

"[This is a] dull, careless account. . . . The discussions of the Persian and Punic wars provide the book's only interest, and these conflicts are treated in many other books. . . . There is no bibliography, the style is uninteresting, and the choice of words often crude." Bernard Poll
Library J 97:1919 My 15 '72 300w

"[Because the book's] span is from Neolithic times to 135 A.D. and the Roman dominance of Jerusalem, it includes such a mass of names, dates, and events that the reader may be overwhelmed. But the writing is lucid and cohesive, the information authoritative, and the discussion of Judaism and Christianity especially perceptive." Zena Sutherland Sat ■ 55:80 F 19 '72 110w [YA]

ASIMOV, ISAAC. More words of science; decorations by William Barss. 267p $5.95 Houghton

503 Science—Terminology. English language—Etymology
ISBN 0-395-13722-5 LC 79-187422

A sequel to Words of Science and the History Behind Them (BRD 1960). Index.

"This is a collection of one-page essays on words which have acquired scientific significance since 1959. Each essay provides the etymology of the word and a brief history of its scientific development. Radioactive fallout, ecology and zero population growth are among the 250 subjects covered. The text is clear and accurate, and Asimov treats even controversial topics objectively. Libraries using the previous book will also want to acquire this one." O. V. Fortier
Library J 97:3453 O 15 '72 100w

"Dr. Asimov's knowledge of his subjects embraces their etymology, lending, in most cases, a simple clarity to even the more complex definitions. . . . There is excellent balance struck among the disciplines of biology, anthropology, astronomy, chemistry and physics. Not much, if anything, has suffered neglect. This is an excellent work of modern day reference, surely—but, more than that, a book that can be read, enjoyably, simply for the sake of reading and learning. I can think of no upper age limit for its perusal." R. J. Anthony
N Y Times Bk R p10 S 10 '72 450w

ASIMOV, ISAAC. Treasury of humor; a lifetime collection of favorite jokes, anecdotes, and limericks with copious notes on how to tell them and why. 431p $7.95 Houghton

808.87 Wit and humor
ISBN 0-395-12665-7 LC 70-153957

"The jokes fall into eleven categories: Anticlimax, Shaggy Dog, Jewish, Ethnic, Marriage, Bawdy—among others. . . . Interspersing the jokes is a running commentary on humor and life; on the art of joke telling, its risks and taboos; on fads, stereotypes, origins, variations, and cartoons." (Horn Bk) "Index." (Library J)

"An irrepressible raconteur, [the author] has gathered a treasury of laughter from history and reading, from entertainments and personal experiences, and from life itself. . . . The collection sparkles with wit and wisdom." M. S. Cosgrave

Horn Bk 47:627 D '71 100w

"Few writers can handle words as can this accomplished author of science fiction, science fact, and now humor. Asimov, a noted scientist, demonstrates in this work that he has not only a sense of humor, but also an analytical mind concerning the essence of humor. The title conveys the content of the book, and nothing more needs to be said except that Asimov would be one popular guest to have at a party. However, since he will not be readily available, the next best thing is to take his book along. Very enjoyable." J. E. Buck
Library J 96:2318 J1 '71 100w

ASLANAPA, OKTAY. Turkish art and architecture. 422p 11 col pl $50 Praeger

709.561 Art, Turkish. Art, Islamic. Architecture, Turkish
LC 72-144222

The author presents the backgrounds out of which Seljuk and Ottoman art and architecture developed. He attempts "to bring together recent research and excavations in Turkestan, Anatolia, Iran and Afghanistan." (TLS) Glossary. Dynastic tables. Bibliography. Indexes of names and of general subjects.

"Despite its title, the emphasis of [this] book is architectural: . . . even though carpets, manuscript illumination, and ceramics are illustrated as superbly as the architecture which Aslanapa (professor of the history of art at Istanbul) obviously considers the supreme accomplishment of Turkish civilization. The plates in toto give perhaps the finest representation of this achievement ever published. . . . Aslanapa's style tends to the pedestrian: generally, one monument per paragraph in stately succession from the mid-ninth to the mid-19th century. But this book is likely to become the standard handbook on Turkish architecture. Few scholars will find much to argue with in the text or significant omissions from the classified, 40-page bibliography. For the student there is . . . a text that is both comprehensive and authoritative."

Choice 9:1282 D '72 170w

"As a general introduction, accompanied by excellent illustrations, this volume will be extremely useful to the person who wishes to acquire a background in the art and architecture of Seljuk and Ottoman Turkey. It will also be of great help to the Islamic specialist, for the author has distilled and synthesized numerous writings on Turkish art and architecture which are generally unavailable in Western libraries. . . . Broader in scope than A. Kuran's The Mosque in Early Ottoman Architecture [BRD 1969] and G. Goodwin's impressive A History of Ottoman Architecture [BRD 1971], Aslanapa's volume—as one would expect—does not end up presenting as detailed a treatment of Ottoman architecture as one encounters in Goodwin's book. For a basic collection of works on Islamic art and architecture all three books should be acquired." David Gebhard Library J 97:1700 May 1 '72 170w

"[This] is beautifully printed with lavish margins, plans, 250 black-and-white photographs and thirty-two colour plates. . . . However, the plates are not perfect. The frontispiece has a metallic gloss and, although technical difficulties excuse a suffusion of green in Plate IV, the colours of several others are misleading. Oktay Aslanapa has used old photographs to show buildings before decay or restoration, but often sharp prints would have been better. . . . [The book] covers mainly architecture. . . . Dr Aslanapa courageously attempted a task which demanded exceptional selective skill based on critical respect for the facts. The result is disappointing because he tends to ignore views opposed to his own and to present a hypothesis as a proven fact." TLS p279 Mr 10 '72 800w

ASPECTS of religion in the Soviet Union, 1917-1967; ed. by Richard H. Marshall, Jr.; associate eds: Thomas E. Bird and Andrew Q. Blane. 489p $19.75 Univ. of Chicago press
274.7 Russia—Religion. Church and state in Russia. Russia—Church history
ISBN 0-226-50700-9 LC 70-115874

These "studies treat various aspects of state relations with the Orthodox churches, the Roman Catholics, Mennonites, Muslims, Jews, and Protestants." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Helene Iswolsky
America 124:416 Ap 17 '71 440w

Reviewed by C. A. Frazee
Ann Am Acad 400:190 Mr '72 450w

"Somewhat broader in treatment than M. Hayward and W. C. Fletcher's Religion and the Soviet state: a dilemma of power [BRD 1970, this] will be of use to advanced undergraduate [and] graduate students. . . . Footnotes . . . and an appendix (Soviet religious law as of January 1, 1968)." Choice 8:563 Je '71 130w

"This collection of essays by qualified authors enhances our understanding of religion in the Soviet Union. . . . Many popular conceptions concerning Russian church-state relations are reaffirmed; numerous others are challenged, such as the notion that all religion in the Soviet Union is continuously and systematically persecuted. The editors . . . have compiled a scholarly . . . volume which will interest both the specialist and informed layman. Recommended for general as well as special collection." E. A. Engeldinger
Library J 96:1278 Ap 1 '71 140w

"Paul B. Anderson—a leading student of religion in the Soviet Union, to whom [this book] is dedicated—complains in his essay that too little time and thought have been devoted to the study of the subject. He lists a number of reasons for this, but omits the most obvious one—that religion has not been a factor of central importance during the five decades of Soviet history. . . . The most interesting essays . . . deal with . . . minority churches on one hand and with anti-religious policy on the other. . . . 'The dynamic quality of what used to be called the Russian soul' (to quote Paul Anderson) may find new outlets, but organized religion has no appeal to the young; upon this rock no new church will be built." Walter Laqueur
N Y Times Bk R p4 F 28 '71 450w

"The title of the book is cautiously chosen to forestall criticism of its uneven coverage. It 'makes no pretense at being comprehensive', as the editor explains. Even so, a book of this size (and price) leaves some curious lacunae. Most surprising of all is the absence of any contribution on Protestantism in the non-Baltic areas of the Soviet Union—as the result of recent efforts (by some of the contributors, among others) this is now a well-documented subject. Less well documented, less explored, and therefore all the more important, is the subject of the various Old Believer groupings. . . . [This collection] inspires confidence almost throughout and . . . gives the reader increased understanding of the stubborn survival of these survivals." TLS p1172 O 1 '71 1600w

ASTOR, MARY. A life on film; with an introd. by Sumner Locke Elliott. 245p il $7.50
Delacorte press

B or 92
LC 77-164844

This account of the life and film career of Mary Astor "is a companion volume to her previous My Story [BRD 1959]. . . . [Included are] details about late silent film days and early sound days and about the special problems in changing over to the talkies." (Library J)

"Parts of A Life on Film are distasteful—Astor's bitterness toward Elizabeth Taylor seems out of control, for example, and she wants to believe that when she won the Oscar the Academy Awards had integrity (actually they were just less flamboyantly corrupt)—but Astor knows what was good in her life and why and has few illusions about where she's been both personally and professionally, and she gives us a strong movie-life atmosphere. . . . [This book] could serve as a readable primer of film acting techniques; and as autobiography it compares favorably with An Unfinished Woman [BRD 1969], less intellectually pretentious and somehow more 'finished' than Lillian Hellman's book, although it won't win any literary awards." J. A. Avant
Library J 96:3316 O 15 '71 220w

"[This] new memoir is stimulating, disillusioned and caustic, dealing courageously with a largely wasted career. . . . There is no escaping the fact that Hollywood largely wasted Mary Astor. But we must be grateful that it supplies the material for her harsh, sad, witty, infinitely likable book." Charles Higham

N Y Times Bk R p50 O 17 '71 1050w

ASTURIAS, MIGUEL ANGEL. The bejeweled boy; tr. from the Spanish by Martin Shuttleworth. 188p $4.95 Doubleday

LC 79-160891

"This translation of El alhajadito . . . brings to five the number of novels by Nobel Prize-winner Asturias available in English in the U.S. Using elements of legend, folklore, the rude speech of his native Guatemalan hinterland, Asturias creates the Bejeweled Boy, hunched in the ruins of a little barn, crushing a scorpion, musing on the present and melding his observations with dreams of the past—the big house, built from wealth acquired by luring rich ships onto reefs with false beacons; of piggish servants maintaining linens, food, drink, and cigars in readiness for their masters, who never died but only went away and never came back; of a strange religion dominated by the Bad Robber—flanked by Jesus and the Good Robber—who believed only in the earth and man's return to it." (Library J)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 229:96 Ja '72 130w

"One senses that, like so many artists whose sensibilities have been formed under repressive regimes, Asturias has been expressing himself in code for so long that he has gradually lost contact with the original sources of his allusions. . . . It might be argued that the very meaninglessness of it all is, in fact, Asturias's meaning. . . . If that is the case, it seems to me that he has gone to a great deal of trouble for very little, an impression that is confirmed when one finally gets to the part of the book containing the parables. They are much like other parables one has read, extolling such things as modesty and conformity, niceness and sound thinking. It is an interesting commentary on the significance of The Bejeweled Boy that after 159 thunderously ambiguous pages, one is finally confronted with the Guatemalan equivalent of 'The Little Train That Could.'" L. J. Davis

Book World p10 D 19 '71 420w

"This novel was finished in 1961, some 40 years after Asturias began it. It is a loose-jointed, poetic evocation of scenes, legends, and dreams of the author's youth in Guatemala. The style and language recreate the air of timelessness of the myths of the Indians while expressionistically painting the aberrant, sometimes terrifying, picture of an impoverished disinherited peasantry. . . . [Asturias] uses a highly poetic language; unfortunately, despite the translator's obvious efforts, the poetry has mostly eluded him. It is not sufficient to tinker with English prose until it looks poetic. . . . One must also avoid errors which make the English less than decent English. . . . Nor is the rendering of Pispis' speech defect successful, since it is unpronounceable in English. . . . Not recommended."

Choice 9:219 Ap '72 90w

"Fishermen, traveling mendicants, an itinerant circus, a mysterious ship without a course, a huge bell which tolled scent rather than sound, all combine in a strange, plotless novel which has the color and appeal of the ancient culture, Mayan and Spanish, from which it springs." L. W. Griffin

Library J 97:213 Ja 15 '72 200w

ATHEARN, ROBERT G. Union Pacific country. 480p il maps $15 Rand McNally 385 Union Pacific Railroad. The West—History
LC 73-140766

This is an account of the Union Pacific Railroad's "expansion and its vital role in the settlement of the American West of the late 1800s. . . . [Included also is the] story of the Mormons' influence on the spread of the UP system." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"If not outright sympathetic to the railroad executives, the tone of the book emphasizes the positive side of their efforts. . . . The bibliography testifies to the extensive research for this study. . . . Athearn clearly demonstrates his ability to conform to rigid standards of research demanded by the profession and at the same time to write a book that will be widely read and enjoyed. A short and thoughtful epilogue testifies to his maturity as a historian." W. T. Jackson

ATHEARN, R. G.—Continued

Am Hist R 77:590 Ap '72 800w

"No one has done before what Athearn has in this volume. He has utilized company records and a variety of other sources to write a very attractive and readable, but scholarly account, of the impact of the Union Pacific and its branch lines on the country it served from the 1860's to the 1890's. Well placed maps, attractive illustrations, [and] notes . . . enhance the book's value. Everyone from railroad buffs to Western history scholars will like the book. Should be in both public and university libraries."
Choice 8:1377 D '71 170w

"This is social history at its best. Over and over again, and quite properly, Athearn plays the same refrain: 'Transportation was the key to economic development, which in turn meant political, social, cultural and other advances.' . . . Naturally, some of the developments described are familiar, but Athearn provides fresh insights and significant new perspectives, thanks largely to the invaluable sources at his disposal. . . . He uses fresh material in discussing the building of branches throughout U.P. country, while the portrait he paints of Charles Francis Adams, Jr., is original and significant. So is the illuminating account of the 1893-1897 bankruptcy. . . . This is certainly the most valuable history we have of the Union Pacific, and a consistently well-written one at that. I suspect that [it] will become, as it deserves to be, the authoritative work." R. C. Overton
J Am Hist 58:1029 Mr '72 650w

ATHENIAN. Inside the colonels' Greece. See Inside the colonels' Greece

ATKINS, G. POPE. The United States and the Trujillo regime, by G. Pope Atkins and Larman C. Wilson. 245p il maps $10 Rutgers univ. press

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations—Dominican Republic, Dominican Republic—Foreign relations—U.S.
ISBN 0-8135-0714-6 LC 79-163956

This is a "history of U.S.-Dominican relations during the lengthy Trujillo dictatorship. The authors start by asking: did U.S. occupation of the island from 1916 to 1924 pave the way for a dictatorship? . . . [They discuss] the needs of Caribbean security, the question of gunboat diplomacy, the moral versus the pragmatic approach to diplomacy, U.S. vacillation between favoring representative democracy or status quo authoritarianism, [and] the commercial instinct." (Library J) Bibliography, Index.

"All remnants of the myth of North American omniscience and omnipotence in the Caribbean . . . are ended by a careful reading of this account of the dilemma facing the United States in its Latin American policy. That dilemma is one that offers the choice of encouraging the growth of democracy, on the one hand, or the faithful observance of international commitments to non-intervention, on the other hand. . . . [The authors] have successfully joined forces in presenting the dilemma, one which has affected our relations with other countries besides the Dominican Republic, and which will undoubtedly recur again in the future. To say that the authors carefully and logically present the dilemma is not to imply that they have resolved it." Willard Barber

Ann Am Acad 404:274 N '72 550w

"While useful as a preliminary study, this book has severe limitations. Excluding introduction and conclusion, less than 100 pages are devoted to the title subject. The final chapter provides a good analytical summary which partly compensates for the lack of such analysis in previous chapters. . . . Most glaring is the absence of any sophisticated study of economic policy. The organization is satisfactory, but the writing style somewhat uneven and at times burdened by unnecessary jargon. Specialists in Inter-American diplomacy and political scientists will find the book of some value. Libraries will want to purchase it primarily for its outstanding bibliography, a 38-page listing of published sources and secondary accounts."
Choice 9:414 My '72 150w

"Although the authors have used the published Foreign Relations volumes, they did not consult the unpublished documents. In fact they have not made use of any manuscript collections. Atkins and Wilson follow a chronological format, but they devote most of their attention to political issues and pay little heed to the economic relations between the two nations. Furthermore, if the reader wonders what kind of man Trujillo was, this book does not supply the answers. From these standpoints the treatment is uneven. . . . Still, the authors . . . in some instances have supplied valuable insights in areas which few writers have explored." I. F. Gellman

J Am Hist 59:771 D '72 450w

"This is a solidly prepared study. . . . [It] is certainly the best basic work on U.S. relations with the Dominican Republic, and it is a companion piece to John B. Martin's Overtaken by Events [BRD 1966]. Most effective is the authors' moderation; they balance the account of U.S. strengths and efforts to democratize with the story of the failures. This book is a natural for Latin American collections." R. F. Delaney

Library J 96:3765 N 15 '71 160w

ATKINSON, BROOKS. This bright land; a personal view; drawings by Earl Thollander; pub. for the Am. mus. of natural history. 201p $5.95 Doubleday/Natural hist. press

574.9 Natural history—U.S.
LC 71-164726

The author describes various land areas and wildlife in the United States which have been damaged by encroaching civilization. Included are the Great Swamp in New Jersey, the California condor and redwoods, Biscayne Bay, the Everglades and the Grand Canyon. Portions of this book originally appeared in Audubon magazine and The New York Times. Bibliography, Index.

Reviewed by F. A. Lalley

America 126:489 My 6 '72 270w

"This compassionate book reflects a personal vision of a once radiant America, which has become 'not only tarnished, but deadly.' Temperate and astringent in tone, the book recounts the sorry plunderings of the land . . . as the population explosion and the gross national product chip away eternity. . . . The descriptions of the truly awesome creations—the condor, or the Grand Canyon—are moving and explicit. And there is an excellent bibliography. This is not another book on conservation politics or ecological techniques, but a distinguished philosophical query." Anita Nygaard

Library J 97:894 Mr 1 '72 140w

"[The former] drama critic for The New York Times . . . is also a good naturalist and a deeply concerned conservationist. . . . To show the contrast between the American 'paradise' of earlier centuries and America today is one of Mr. Atkinson's achievements. He does this with feeling and articulate skill. His descriptions may stimulate some readers who have not already done so to join the environmentalists in their efforts to save our country and ourselves from those who continue to destroy and exploit our land and water resources. . . . Some of Mr. Atkinson's chapters report on environmental battles that were won, lost or are still in the balance—each absorbing in its details of people and issues. . . . In another chapter . . . he captures the excitement of hunting birds with binoculars in fields and woods." J. K. Terres

N Y Times Bk R p23 Ap 9 '72 950w

ATKINSON, GEOFFROY. Prelude to the enlightenment; French literature, 1690-1740, by Geoffroy Atkinson and Abraham C. Keller. 221p $7.95 Univ. of Wash. press

840 French literature—History and criticism
LC 70-114416

Concerned with the intellectual atmosphere of France during the period, the authors combine "their own comments with a wide range of quotations from contemporary writers—among them Marivaux, Abbé Prévost, Saint-Evremond, Robert Charles, Mme de Tencin, Jean Buvat, and Abbé Pluche. . . . [They] examine attitudes toward literature and literary questions, changing approaches to reality, and the influence of foreign travel, especially to England, in broadening Frenchmen's horizons. They investigate attitudes toward love and morality and the increasing vogue for emotionalism . . . all of which show an emphasis on personal feeling that was to reach its peak in the Romantic era." (Publisher's note) Bibliography, Index.

"The principal strength of this book is the careful selection and presentation of a popular literature of sentiment, exotic adventure, revelations of the bedroom, and even social protest. The authors discover that the literature of science and reason found a smaller audience than did the literature of sensibilité. But herein, too, lies the book's weakness. The authors fail to analyze the audience for these books beyond the amorphous middle class. . . . [Professor Keller] makes the matter of the audience so crucial to his discussion of the literature . . . that one is left begging for a social analysis of this public and its taste." Robert Isherwood

Am Hist ■ 77:798 Je '72 600w

"There is a real wealth of primary textual material here—especially that drawn from secondary bourgeois authors. The basic idea behind the study is a valid one: that the real ferment in literature and civilization usually makes itself clear first in secondary authors. . . . [However] the study concludes by complicating rather than simplifying our accepted notion of the period between classicism and enlightenment. . . . Citations make up most of the work; they are sometimes repeated ineffectually. The interpretive and connective material is uneven and does not always point up the primary material to best advantage. The collection of quotations from secondary works should prove valuable to all scholars of 17th- and 18th-century France." Choice 8:1456 Ja '72 230w

"The main lesson to emerge from this copious and varied collection of quotations (all translated, with originals in footnotes) is that many of the novel features of Renaissance thought survive and take on a new lease of life in this period, while many of the most distinctive characteristics of Romanticism can be discerned even before Rousseau. . . . The authors rather engagingly boast that they have read all ninety volumes of the Journal des Scavans, and draw quite heavily on them for illustrative material." TLS p838 Jl 16 '71 430w

ATLANTIC brief lives: a biographical companion to the arts; ed. by Louis Kronenberger; associate ed. Emily Morison Beck. (An Atlantic monthly press bk) 900p $15 Little 920

LC 73-154960

This reference book appends "essays averaging about 1,500 words, to 211 of its 1,081 skeleton biographies of outstanding figures (none of them living) in art, literature and music." (Newsweek)

"[These lives] are serious, clean, and compulsively accurate—the middlebrow reference book par excellence. . . . The fun here is in seeing who rates an essay and who is merely relegated to a capsule biography consisting mostly of dates of birth, death, and major achievements in between. . . . The usual Anglo-Saxon prejudice against Italian and German writers shows up in a notable lack of essays on Ariosto and Pirandello, on Grillparzer, Schiller, Hölderlin, Heine, or Hesse. . . . I'd say that with all the Oxford Companions around, this one is . . . [valuable] first, for getting people's dates right . . . [and] secondly, the essays, especially those by creative writers . . . are balanced, judicious, and pleasantly informal assessments of the 200-odd souls who made it most worthwhile for us to bother getting up in the morning." Richard Freedman

Book World p1 S 5 '71 700w

Choice 8:1569 F '72 150w

"[This work] is altogether a welcome innovation until one looks at a copy and begins to examine the essays. First of all, the selection of entries is questionable—no film artists are included; Camus is listed but not Sartre, Mary Wollstonecraft but not Simone de Beauvoir. But the real snag is with the essays, whose authors are so distinguished that one expects insightful, individualized judgments from cultivated sensibilities instead of the ponderously stated banalities that one gets. . . . For any reference collection Atlantic Brief Lives is superfluous at best (even the bibliographies are mostly accessible elsewhere); and, despite all the high-mindedness, the aesthetically inclined reader, for whose browsing pleasure this volume seems to have been designed, will probably reject it." J. A. Avant

Library J 96:3312 O 15 '71 230w

"This large volume turns out to be a hit-and-miss affair. The criterion of choice of subjects seems to be editor Kronenberger's enthusiasms, with no underlying system of period, place or school. The data provided can be found in numerous other reference works. The selected essays are disappointing: a few brilliant, most slight."

N Y Times Bk R p64 S 12 '71 90w

"Inevitably, we see the faults first: the bias toward the modern and the Anglo-Saxon . . . and the omissions. . . . Some of the essays are simply straightforward . . . and some are silly. . . . Some are dull . . . and a few are irritating. . . . And yet it is the personal crotchets of the essayists that make the best of their pieces so good. . . . The best of the essays show the writers seeming to enjoy the challenge of brevity, knocking off aphorisms at every hand." P. S. Prescott

Newsweek 73:96 O 11 '71 420w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 54:47 D 4 '71 100w

ATWOOD, ANN. Haiku: the mood of earth. unp col il $5.95 Scribner

811 Nature—Poetry—Juvenile literature. Nature photography—Juvenile literature
SBN 684-12494-7 LC 70-162737

"The book contains 25 original haiku, each on a separate glossy page and accompanied by two full-color photographs. . . . Grade four and up." (Library J)

Reviewed by Julian May

Book World p2 (children's issue) N 7 '71 220w

"A unique presentation—of interest to the poet, the photographer, and the nature lover. . . . Many of nature's moods are explored, and the result is visual and intellectual delight." B. R.

Horn Bk 47:621 D '71 190w

"A visually stunning poetry-cum-photography book by the author/photographer of New Moon Cove and Wild Young Desert [both BRD 1970]. In an informative introduction, Atwood explains the nature of haiku and how 'some of its elements'—e.g., the 'second glance' and the magnification of one aspect of the subject—can be adapted to photography with the aim of 'getting inside nature.' . . . The photographs, which generally consist of a long shot and a closeup of one subject, help to pin down the meaning of some poems that might otherwise elude young readers—e.g., 'In a sea creature's shell/flashing in waves of sunlight—the waking of wings.' It's an instructive addition to the poetry shelf and the 10¼" x 9¼" beautifully designed format is sure to attract browsers." M. A. Dorsey

Library J 97:279 Ja 15 '72 120w

AUBREY, JOHN. Aubrey on education; a hitherto unpublished manuscript by the author of Brief lives; ed. by J. E. Stephens. 204p $9.25 Routledge

370.1 Education—Philosophy
ISBN 0-7100-7218-X

A late Restoration, hitherto unpublished, "educational treatise by the 17th-century antiquarian, John Aubrey (1616-97), best remembered for his Brief lives [BRD 1957]. Stephens edited the work for publication from the holograph MS in the Bodleian Library at Oxford. Aubrey began the work (which Stephens calls Ideas of education of young gentlemen) in 1669 and continued it for some 15 years. . . . Index." (Choice)

"An important . . . [but] largely unfinished [treatise]. . . . The work is slight (largely jottings and memoranda) which Stephens has organized and arranged, and for which he has provided an introduction and historical notes. Obviously influenced by Milton and Locke (whose schemata for the education of young gentlemen are vastly more important and repre-representative of 17-century educational effort), Aubrey's modest opus is another register of opinion on the education of the 17th-century gentlemen, and the means whereby it was to be achieved. Aubrey's penchant for anecdote provides a wide range of reference to his contemporaries. . . . Recommended for special collections in the history of education."

AUBREY, JOHN—Continued

Choice 9:698 J1/Ag '72 170w

"The editor's views of the 17th century have received some unfavorable notice from the experts, but most of us will be in his debt for making available this perky, spicy piece. Aubrey's design for a school is distinctly practical. He lays out the property, draws up the curriculum, specifies the staff to be engaged, offers advice on diet, exercise, punishment, prayer, and out-of-school activities." William Walsh

Encounter 39:64 O '72 550w

AUCHINCLOSS, LOUIS. Edith Wharton; a woman in her time. (A Studio bk) 191p il $10 Viking

B or 92 Wharton, Edith Newbold (Jones)
SBN 670-28911-6 LC 77-146606

This account contains "literary criticism . . . gives a . . . picture of Wharton's era, background, influences (such as Henry James) . . . and the early 20th-Century society here and abroad she knew and depicted." (Library J)

"[This] is a penetrating, well-judged, not unsympathetic characterization of the strong-jawed 'Pussy' Jones, who educated herself to become the dowager-duchess of American fiction. . . . [The] illustrations, so beautifully reproduced, enable us to see the decorative habitat, the ineffectual husband (childless, he is always photographed holding an armful of puppies), and the luxury with which Edith Wharton surrounded herself. . . . Auchincloss is an understanding critic of her work." Edward Weeks

Atlantic 228:134 D '71 750w

Reviewed by W. B. Hill
Best Sell 31:439 Ja 1 '72 140w
Choice 9:364 My '72 180w
Economist 243:80 My 13 '72 450w

"Written with style and grace, knowledge and sympathy, this [biography] . . . will please admirers of one of America's most honored women novelists. . . . Libraries serving the general reader should have Auchincloss' admirable study; and the 113 pictures make it a worthy supplement to the other Wharton books in college and research collections." William White

Library J 96:3600 N 1 '71 100w

"So far, there are three main ways of writing about Edith Wharton—all of them unsatisfactory. One might call them the 'Our Edith,' 'their Edith' and 'nobody's Edith' schools of thought. Louis Auchincloss is an 'our Edith' man all the way. Snugly ensconced in the New York Social Register, he explains Mrs. Wharton to all those non-WASP types out there, and up to a point he doesn't do badly. That point is reached when he calls The Age of Innocence [BRD 1920] 'the finest of her novels.' . . . Although . . . [Mrs. Wharton] may never have known what it was to be truly loved, she did know what it was to love passionately. Auchincloss either doesn't know much about her love life or isn't telling. I understand her private papers are now available to scholars; no doubt we can expect the who, the when and the where in due course." Vivian Mercier

Nation 214:21 Ja 3 '71 2200w

"[Auchincloss has provided] a charming picture book about [Mrs. Wharton] which amounts to little more than a coffee-table valentine. The pictures are splendidly evocative. . . . [This is] a book designed to be decorative rather than deep. . . . A more serious flaw than superficiality is that, especially in the critical passages, Auchincloss has liberally plagiarized from his own ten-year-old essay on Mrs. Wharton in Pioneers and Caretakers [BRD 1965], sometimes quoting entire sentences verbatim from the earlier work. That is his privilege, I suppose, but it does suggest the sort of 'sharp practice' which Mrs. Wharton, in her deep-bred puritanism, would have roundly condemned." Richard Freedman

Sat R 54:64 D 4 '71 600w

TLS p510 My 5 '72 500w

AUCHINCLOSS, LOUIS. I come as a thief. 231p $6.95 Houghton

ISBN 0-395-13939-2 LC 77-190053

When New York lawyer Tony Lowder "becomes involved with overdue loans and the Mafia, he believes he can only expiate by confessing, thus relinquishing a promising career. His partner beats him to the punch but Tony's soul-searching establishes new relationships and changes old ones." (Library J)

Reviewed by J. B. Breslin
America 127:130 S 2 '72 700w

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 230:[107] S '72 750w

Reviewed by J. E. Oppenheim
Best Sell 32:275 S 15 '72 400w
Choice 9:1288 D '72 240w

Reviewed by Marilyn Gardner
Christian Science Monitor p19 N 15 '72 500w

"As usual, the author's meticulous prose and familiarity with the very and the nearly rich are evident throughout this very enjoyable novel. Recommended." R. H. Donahugh

Library J 97:2638 Ag '72 100w

"Auchincloss is a writer of serious conviction and purpose, and even when the book fails as fiction its themes hold together. . . . Auchincloss is a writer of moral and ethical issues as well as manners, and his fiction works on both levels. I Come As a Thief is concerned not only with how much freedom a person has in his society but also with how much freedom he has been granted by God. The answer, to which Auchincloss returns in novel after novel, is that if he has the freedom to sin he also has the obligation of expiation; Auchincloss is, for all his wit and sophistication, a stern Christian who demands that the people in his world pay for their transgressions. His is a refreshing conservatism; there is still something to be said for a firm religious vision, a lucid prose style, and a clear understanding of one's world." Jonathan Yardley

New Repub 167:30 S 16 '72 800w

Reviewed by T. R. Edwards
N Y Rev of Books 19:22 O 5 '72 700w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks
N Y Times Bk R p6 S 3 '72 1050w

"Mr. Auchincloss demonstrates his knowledge of New York society (perhaps to his credit, his picture of high-finance crime is not so convincing), but he shows rather limited capacity for expressing feelings other than that of social vanity. We can comprehend Tony's impulse toward evil and his conversion to good, but they seem thin and unreal. The intricate family politics that surround Tony's acts are fully worked out, but in a blandly impartial manner. It seems as though Mr. Auchincloss's tact and decorum, which are so helpful in capturing a wide range of personal mannerisms, hold him back from entering very deeply into his characters."

New Yorker 48:78 Ag 26 '72 190w

"This [is a] staggeringly silly novel. . . . [Does it matter] that the book is relentlessly superficial or that the characters have no more life than a connect-the-dots puzzle or that the language has the elegance of an over-reaching governess? ('Mafosan family' is a special favorite). . . . At least [the author] makes no demands, his story is sprinkled with interior-decorating touches, and his publisher doesn't embarrass his readers with a lurid jacket. But it is a sobering thought that our melodrama has come to this." Joseph Kanon

Sat R 55:60 Ag 26 '72 500w

Reviewed by John Skow
Time 100:100 S 18 '72 300w

AUDEN, W. H. Academic graffiti; il. by Filippo Sanjust. unp $5 Random house

821 Humorous poetry
ISBN 0-394-47183-0 LC 70-159331

Here are 61 clerihews about famous people. Arranged alphabetically, they proceed from Aquinas and Adams to Wyatt and Xantippe. Fifteen of them appeared in The New Yorker in 1971.

"Mr. Auden's mock-solemn misinformation about distinguished old parties momentarily persuades me that the clerihew is a not wholly useless verse form. [The] illustrations are appropriately funny and libelous." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 228:135 D '71 30w

"Some of the pieces are clever, but most are forced and sound as if they were composed while the port was being passed. Auden is unsurpassed in our time as a writer of light verse, but this 'work' is a jeu d'esprit for his left hand. Since 30 of these pieces have appeared before in Homage to Clio [BRD 1960], by all means make sure you have (or can fit into your budget) that earlier book before buying this."

Choice 9:210 Ap '72 90w

"[These verses] seem to want to be thought deliberately bad, even where Sanjust's drawings (which are not all witty or helpful) do actually serve to improve them. Some are silly, some are also inapposite, and the whole enterprise suggests a cheerful whim turning inexorably into a drearily mechanical joke. Nos 10 and 22, on Buber and Hardy, are, to be fair, good, with the aid of their illustrations."

Alan Brownjohn

New Statesman 82:791 D 3 '71 110w

AUDEN, W. H. Epistle to a godson, and other poems. 77p $5 Random house

821

ISBN 0-394-48203-4 LC 72-1428

This collection "includes 33 short poems. Generally, the poems reflect Auden's continuing concern with appropriate moral stances. Anticipating his 'divorce' from life, Auden thinks back nostalgically to an 'open-hearthed, nannied, un-T-V'd world, where/cars looked peculiar.'" (Library J) Some of these poems have appeared previously in various periodicals.

"In spite of his many displeasures with the world as it wags, Auden's 'Epistle' is neither negative nor gloomy. It is, on the contrary, at once cheerful, civilized and elegant. . . . Its maker reveals himself as a man in love with the rites of life, in tune with 'the small but journal wonders of Nature and of households,' more given to reverence and enjoyment than to dolor and complaint." Victor Howes

Christian Science Monitor p11 S 20 '72 650w

"[Auden's] insistent moral attitude is presented with [his] usual technical brilliance. The metrics range from prim, self-styled doggerel to free verse, while the diction is a fascinating mélange of coinages, Jabberwockian nonsense, foreign terms, and vulgarisms. Though the poems are sometimes cranky and too moralistic, they nevertheless testify to Auden's continuing great importance." Peter Dollard

Library J 97:2610 Ag '72 200w

"This is quiet poetry—sometimes serene, sometimes politely caustic. Auden's is a masterly talent out of what now appears as another era; he is here preoccupied with age, sickness, death—and perhaps most of all with what it is like to feel that one has been put away on a shelf. . . . The characteristic movement of his poems is circular, a slow and leisurely jaunt around some fixed point—an object, an event, an idea. . . . If Auden is didactic about anything it is that we must respect and accept what we have, like gravity, and not lament what we haven't. Since we have now an aging Auden we shouldn't ask him to turn somersaults but should continue to be grateful not only for his enormous wisdom but also for his kindly, well modulated and always slightly surprising presence." Reed Whittemore

New Repub 167:26 S 23 '72 230w

New Statesman 84:567 O 20 '72 800w

Reviewed by Calvin Bedient

N Y Times Bk R p4 S 24 '72 1000w

"The blend of the clinical and the classical has never left [Auden's] verse. It is particularly notable in this, the first book of poems issued since Auden returned to Oxford and England for good last May after 33 years in the U.S. . . . Auden reveals sentiment only after a display of armed irony, often recognizing how little the wisdom of the past may be able to say to the present. . . . [He] feels less need to qualify in attacking the present, its verbose pretensions, the decline of learning and language. Freud, up-to-date behavioral anthropology as well as a gift for sardonic aphorism unmatched in poetry are all lightly trained on one of our much-vaunted achievements when the poet describes the moon landing as a 'huge phallic triumph' . . . made possible only/ because we like huddling in gangs and knowing/ the exact time." Timothy Foote

Time 100:61 S 4 '72 2000w

Reviewed by Laurence Lieberman

Yale R 62:275 D '72 1150w

AULT, PHIL. Wonders of the mosquito world. 64p il $3.50; lib bdg $3.23 Dodd

595.7 Mosquitoes—Juvenile literature
LC 77-114242

This book describes the life cycle of the mosquito, its habits and behavior, and its harmfulness to man. Index. "Grade six and up." (Library J)

"Excellent photographs and diagrams illustrate this well-written [book]. . . . The vain efforts to control this pest with DDT are described, as is research in genetics intended to produce mutants which, hopefully, will cause the species to die out. While this book is written for readers with little or no knowledge of mosquitoes they should have some background knowledge of insects and an understanding of basic biological terms." Anne Greenwood

Library J 96:740 F 15 '71 110w

"There is a particularly useful chart showing and contrasting the different stages of growth of the anopheles, aedes and culex mosquitoes. . . . The book gives an excellent potted history of man's struggle against the mosquito from Hippocrates's observation, more than 2,000 years ago, that fever was more prevalent in swampy areas to . . . Reed's tracking down of the Aedes Aegypti female mosquito as the carrier of yellow fever. There is an index, somewhat oddly arranged . . . [but] reasonably comprehensive."

TLS p489 Ap 28 '72 180w

AVEDON, ELLIOTT M. The study of games. [by] Elliott M. Avedon and Brian Sutton-Smith. 530p il $9.95 Wiley

790 Games. Games—Bibliography. Game theory

ISBN 0-471-03839-3 LC 74-136709

Subject areas covered in this volume "include the history of games, anthropological and folklore studies, and games in recreation, the military, business and industry, education, medical and psychiatric diagnosis and treatment, and social science; there are also theoretical discussions of the structure and function of games." (Library J) The second volume of this projected two volume work will be devoted to play. Chapter bibliographies. Bibliography of bibliographies. Index of authors and researchers. Index of historic personages. Cultural index. Subject index. Index of games.

"The growing interest in game phenomena shown by researchers in a variety of disciplines makes this sourcebook a welcome reference work. . . . Extensive bibliographies provide the book's chief reference value. However, not only scholars but casual readers as well will be interested in selections on such far-ranging topics as games in Shakespeare, kissing games in Ohio, and chess in psychotherapy. A worthwhile addition for reference collections." R. H. Lipsett

Library J 96:620 F 15 '71 100w

"Both the interested amateur and the professional can find much to enjoy and apply from this book. . . . [It] is conveniently organized into short chapters. . . . Every survey course has its weaknesses, and this book is the closest thing to a survey course on games that we have. . . . [It] is weakened by the superficiality of its chapters on business, education, therapeutic, and social scientific uses of games. . . . The book's strengths are in sources and historical treatments. The humanistic orientation of the authors is sensitive to mythic, aesthetic, and cultural origins and examples of games." C. C. Abt

Teach Col Rec 73:462 F '72 800w

AVERY, CATHERINE B., ed. The New Century handbook of Greek literature. See The New Century handbook of Greek literature

AVERY, CATHERINE., ed. The New Century handbook of Greek mythology and legend. See The New century handbook of Greek mythology and legend

AVERY, CATHERINE B., ed. The New Century Italian Renaissance encyclopedia. See The New Century Italian Renaissance encyclopedia

AVERY, CURTIS E. Love and marriage; a guide for young people, by Curtis E. Avery and Theodore B. Johannis, Jr. 170p il $4.95 Harcourt

301.42 Marriage
ISBN 0-15-249531-2 LC 73-151027

This book's "purpose is to help the young to discover their own ideas about marriage and, if necessary, adjust them in accordance with the basic principles of marriage. There are ten categories of ideas based on what social scientists consider to be the ten most important areas of married life." (Best Sell) Bibliography.

"Recognizing the increasing trend toward early marriage, the authors have provided for young people contemplating wedlock a timely and interesting book. It is not a 'how-to' marriage manual. . . . No set formulae are offered, but factors that may influence the attitudes of young people are examined and some reports of typical situations are provided to stimulate thought and discussion. A frank and realistic approach to its subject, this book should prove helpful to all couples who are thinking of marriage." John Fitzpatrick

Best Sell 31:234 Ag 15 '71 120w

"Not a textbook, not a book for general reading, not a reference book, but a little of each. . . . There are as usual, chapters on 'Sex and Marriage' and 'Planning for Parenthood'—near the end of the book. Such arrangement of material, though common to many titles of this type, just doesn't accord with reality. No matter where the sex information is put in a book, it is still the first section readers turn to, so it might as well be put at the beginning. Secondly, the material as arranged here fosters the idea that sex is sort of tacked on to marriage after the planning of shared activities, working out of savings programs, etc. This is obviously not true. Although the authors have provided some well-written sections, young adult readers are likely to be pretty scornful of this book." J. G. Polacheck

Library J 97:287 Ja 15 '72 160w

AVERY, GILLIAN. A likely lad; il. by Faith Jaques. 222p lib bdg $4.59 Holt

ISBN 0-03-080292-X (lib bdg) LC 77-155871

"The 'Likely Lad' is Willie Overs, son of a small shopkeeper in Victorian England. Mr. Overs, a self-made man, is determined that Willie go into the insurance business and work his way up to fame and fortune. Willie . . . would like to stay in school. . . . Willie's future is determined by a series of unplanned events. First, he learns of the existence of his rich great-aunt Maggie . . . and out of curiosity goes to meet the irascible old lady. Then, when he runs away because he feels responsible for the theft of his father's bicycle, Willie finds a different kind of life in the country. By championing the cause of poor Nance Price, who has taken him in, he impresses the local squire, Lord de Staseley. Mr. Overs is finally made to change his mind and Willie is allowed to continue school and pursue a university career. . . . Grades four to six." (Library J)

"As in the Victorian novel, there are elements of melodrama, coincidence, and humor. But the most delightful element in the story is found in the convincing re-creation of the life of a small, closely-knit family of the lower bourgeoisie—the speech, the attitudes, the standards, and the patterns of living. It should be noted, however, that for full appreciation and enjoyment of the authentic Victoriana, the reader needs a knowledge of the social structure of the times, particularly the rigid class distinctions. Black and white sketches succeed in recapturing the mood of the Victorian household." B. R.

Horn Bk 48:150 Ap '72 190w

"Most readers will not easily identify with the timid, fearful 12-year-old hero who cries at the slightest provocation, but characterizations are excellent and middle-class Victorian life is very effectively portrayed." Nancy Berkowitz

Library J 97:1168 Mr 15 '72 200w

Reviewed by Ann Thwaite

New Statesman 82:662 N 12 '71 40w

"In short, a poorish plot; a well-sustained piece of social anthropology; and a great deal of excellent comedy."

TLS p380 Ap 2 '71 700w

AVIAN biology; v 1; ed. by Donald S. Farner [and] James R. King; taxonomic ed: Kenneth C. Parkes. il $30 Academic press

598.2 Birds
ISBN 0-12-249401-6 LC 79-178216

"This first volume includes chapters on Classification, Origin and evolution, Systematics and speciation, Adaptive radiation, Patterns of terrestrial bird communities, Sea bird ecology and the marine environment, Biology of desert birds, Ecological aspects of periodic reproduction, Population dynamics, Ecological aspects of reproduction, and Ecological aspects of behavior." (Choice) Bibliography.

"[This is] a replacement for A. J. Marshall's Biology and comparative physiology of birds. [It] is an entirely new work in which only the occasional chapter is substantially the same as in Marshall's work. It provides, in one source, information on recent advances in many ornithological fields. Each chapter is written by an expert in his respective subject and includes a comprehensive review of the literature. . . . Belongs in every library with serious ornithological collections."

Choice 9:526 Je '72 130w

"About six of the chapters are outstanding for completeness of coverage and the comprehensive bibliography; two or three are updated versions of chapters in Marshall; only a couple (because they deal with only some phases of a subject) are a little disappointing. . . . Of greatest interest will be the chapters dealing with ecological adaptations. . . . Certain generalities can . . . now be made." Allen Keast

Science 175:1233 Mr 17 '72 850w

AVINERI, SHLOMO, ed. Israel and the Palestinians; ed. and with an introd. by Shlomo Avineri. 168p $10 St Martins

327.5694 Jewish-Arab relations
LC 70-145690

These essays and articles, which deal with 'Israel's relations with the Palestinian Arabs . . . revolve mainly around the prospects and problems of a possible Palestinian state, and whether Israel should accept the idea as a basis for its policy.' (Library J) Index.

"[This] valuable collection of essays and articles . . . [represents] the thinking of eight Israelis and two Arabs (one Israeli Arab and one from the West Bank), and are therefore weighted on the Israeli side. However, all the writers are sympathetic to the Palestinian plight, and have thought about it seriously. Those who are suspicious of the Israeli establishment should certainly read Moshe Dayan's article, but those who are over-enthusiastic for the Israeli cause should take serious account of the intransigent attitude of many Israelis which he is clearly criticizing. The book should undoubtedly be on the shelves of libraries concerned with the Middle East. Its chief weakness is the ephemeral character of many of the contributions."

Choice 8:1510 Ja '72 160w

"The Jewish writers are mainly moderates, and most are Arabists. Their positions range from a view that the West Bank should never be returned to Jordan but should be independent, to one favoring the replacement of Hashemite Jordan by a new state of Palestine. However one may disagree with individual points, the essays are well written, thoughtful and most interesting; and the book is highly recommended for rounding out larger academic and special collections." D. W. Littlefield

Library J 96:3617 N 1 '71 130w

AYA, RODERICK, ed. The New American revolution [ed.] by Roderick Aya and Norman Miller; with an epilogue by Christopher Lasch. 342p $7.95 Free press

301.6 Radicals and radicalism. U.S.—Social conditions
LC 74-142353

This "collection of essays . . . [deals] with the process which many now term 'revolution' and with the social groups who are—or are not—bringing it about. . . . [Included are] essays by Franz Schurmann, Richard Flacks, William Kornhauser, and Christopher Lasch. . . . Those by Nathan Caplan, James Turner, W. E. Perkins, and J. E. Higginson on the black revolt indicate that considerable differences exist among its theorists." (Library J)

"This collection ranges from the trite and fatuous to the stimulating and seminal. Close to one-third of the book is devoted to Franz Schurmann's essay on 'System, Contradictions, and Revolution in America,' which alone makes the book worth buying. . . . The most disappointing part of the book is the three essays by Nathan Caplan, James Turner, and W. E. Perkins and J. E. Higginson dealing with the blacks. . . . Christopher Lasch sums up the disparate essays by noting that the authors have used very different definitions of revolution, that socialism is obsolete, and that military power, co-optation, and technocracy makes the prospects of conventional revolution very unlikely in an 'advanced country.' The introduction (unsigned but presumably by the editors) is a pedestrian summary of the book and can safely be skipped." P. L. van den Bergh

Am J Soc 77:981 Mr '72 550w

Reviewed by Robert Martinson
Contemp Sociol 1:536 N '72 2050w

"[These essays] bring together a number of academic perspectives that . . . warrant close attention by the informed reader. . . . While the authors all take committed positions on the question of revolution, there is a great deal of good sense and clear analytical thinking to be found here. . . . All in all, the book should find a responsive audience on both sides of the generation gap." H. J. Steck

Library J 96:2528 Ag '71 120w

AYENSU, DINAH AMELEY. The art of West African cooking; drawings by Diane Robertson. 145p $6.95 Doubleday

641.5 Cookery. West African
LC 76-180056

The author "was reared in Ghana and has adapted her recipes for her own family experience. Much African cookery is done to taste, so she has [worked] . . . out measurements. Her book is divided into the usual categories of soups, seafood, meat and poultry, rice and vegetables, a shopper's guide. . . . Index." (Library J)

"[This] is a different and challenging collection of recipes, especially for fish and rice-and-vegetable dishes. For the cook who would like to try something different, take a look at this cookbook. It should pique appetites dulled by too conventional and common dishes." Friede Gruenrock

Best Sell 32:178 J1 '72 60w

"There have been several African cookbooks, but this is only the second one I have located devoted exclusively to West Africa. The other one is Ellen Gibson Wilson's A West African Cookbook [BRD 1972]. Both are born of the current interest in black culture. The two books are extremely similar, and a library with limited funds would need to choose between them. One of the main differences is that Ayensu's book is almost exclusively a cookbook. Wilson's attempts to include more history and geography. . . . The recipes are well worked out and simple enough for the amateur to try." Neva White

Library J 97:2095 Je 1 '72 150w

AYER, A. J. Bertrand Russell; ed. by Frank Kermode (Modern masters) 168p $6.95; pa $2.25 Viking

192 Russell, Bertrand Arthur William Russell, 3d Earl SBN 670-15899-2; 670-01950-X (pa)
LC 76-181979

"In this book I have attempted to give . . . an account of the major incidents of Bertrand Russell's life, and an exposition of the whole range of his philosophy." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"The confrontation or conjunction of Ayer and Russell is a notable event and has produced a remarkable book—brilliantly argued and written. In one sense Ayer—a logical positivist—is the critic best qualified to deal with the ineradicable metaphysical elements in Russell's position. On the other hand, the indefinite multiplicity of possible approaches to the problem of knowledge tends to confirm a major thesis of existentialism: the absurdity of any purely intellectual commitment. At all events, Russell emerges as a figure reminiscent of Bernard Shaw, partly in virtue of Russell's socialism and iconoclasm—his popular reputation as a devil's advocate—but also because of his paradoxical moralism and the exaggerated tenor of his opinions." Martin Lebowitz

Nation 215:375 O 23 '72 1950w

"Ayer considers Russell to be, except possibly for Wittgenstein, the most influential philosopher of our time. In this book [he] gives a lucid account of Russell's philosophical achievements. . . . Ayer intends his exposition to be non-technical, and by and large he succeeds. However, there are many pages here that will be thought quite difficult by everyone except the specialist. The questions to which Russell addressed himself are hard ones, and understanding them requires some hard work. Ayer has not been able to avoid making considerable demands on the reader. But that seems inevitable; I doubt that even Isaac Asimov could have made things any easier." James Rachels

N Y Times Bk R p6 O 22 '72 1100w

AYER, A. J. Probability and evidence. (Columbia univ. Dept. of philos. The John Dewey essay in philos. no2) 144p $7 Columbia univ.

160 Probabilities
ISBN 0-231-03650-7 LC 71-185572

"This three-part work, based upon the author's 1970 John Dewey lectures, consists of the title essay, a discussion of [R.] Harrod's Foundations of Inductive Logic [BRD 1957] and a paper on conditionals. The first lecture begins with an analysis of Hume's proof that belief in law-like connections cannot be rationally justified. It discusses successively the concept of a law of nature, three classes of probability judgments (those relating to the calculus of chances, statistical judgments, and judgments of credibility), and confirmation theory. . . . The essay on Harrod concludes that he has not found the correct answer to Hume in trying to base induction merely on formal logic and pure mathematics. The paper on conditionals is an interpretation of non-truth-functional conditionals and an analysis of causality." (Library J) Index.

"In this new book, as in his many earlier contributions to the theory of knowledge and metaphysics, Professor Ayer states his theses with admirable clarity and argues forcefully and straightforwardly in support of them. . . . Of particular interest is Ayer's careful examination of an attempt by the economist Sir Roy Harrod to answer Hume in a book which, as Ayer says, has not attracted the attention it deserves."

Economist 242:52 F 19 '72 480w

"This is a valuable contribution to philosophy." Robert Hoffman

Library J 97:2402 J1 '72 190w

AYERS, H. BRANDT, ed. You can't eat magnolias; ed. by H. Brandt Ayers and Thomas H. Naylor; with an introd. by Willie Morris. 380p $8.95 McGraw

917.5 Southern States—Civilization
ISBN 0-07-002635-1 LC 73-39499

A collection of twenty-two essays which attempts "to assess how the South can make economic and social progress without destroying its traditional values in the process." (New Repub)

"[The contributors are] a relatively young group of Southerners both black and white. Aware of both the myths and the facts, this group of historians, economists, politicians, newspapermen, and educators . . . reflect the changes in the contemporary South. . . . [The book] comes at a time when the old collective conscious racism is in retreat, at a time when the South is rapidly becoming urban and industrial. . . . Although the essays are uneven in content and style and reflect a great diversity in point of view (and, at times, there is too much rhetoric), there are points of unity. . . . These are provocative if tentative attempts to explore new dimensions in a time of change." Hubert Humphreys

Library J 97:1691 My 1 '72 230w

"There is a good deal in the book on such matters as 'human resource development,' the widespread hunger that continues to plague the South, political alliances and strategies, education and economic institutions—pretty dry reading, much of it, flavored with a decided element of boosterism; but in such pieces as one by Jack Bass on hunger and another by James Clotfelter and William Hamilton on the new populism, there is solid stuff to be found. What is important about the book is not the repudiation of the past that its title suggests, but the repeated insistence that southerners learn the lessons of that past and preserve the best parts of its legacy." Jonathan Yardley

AYERS, H. B.—Continued

New Repub 166:22 J1 15 '72 550w

AYLING, STANLEY. George the Third. 510p il $12.50 Knopf
B or 92 George III, King of Great Britain
LC 72-189771

In this account of the life and political career of George III, viewed in the context of his age, "we see him at work, we see him enjoying his recreations, we see him in the centre of his family, we see him discharging the sovereign's task of representation, and we see him battling with illness and madness." (TLS)

"[The author] has written a readable book. But despite all his detailed research, despite his successful effort to write a lively athletic prose, his subject remains essentially gray. . . . Ayling doesn't ask us to revise drastically our judgment of the king, only to flesh it out. The principal 'new' information the book incorporates is the medical diagnosis of the King's four periods of madness as attacks of porphyria. What the reader savors amid Ayling's too patient accumulation of detail are the quotations from the principals themselves; would that more of them could have been included." Barbara Breasted
Christian Science Monitor p10 S 20 '72 370w

Economist 243:80 My 27 '72 550w

"[Ayling] is certainly a gifted writer. His extensive study of the voluminous printed sources and scholarly monographs on his subject has resulted in a thoroughly satisfactory biography. The account of George's political involvement is accurate, unbiased, and complete; that of his private life is candid and perceptive. Ayling writes with style and wit that never intrude upon each other, and he achieves an exceptional balance between the personal and the public, the earlier and the later aspects of George's career. This is a brilliant synthesis which American readers will find most eminently satisfactory." R. R. Rea
Library J 97:2572 Ag '72 140w

"[This is a] discursive study . . . but a very good one in its own way. In fact, for anyone new to the 18th century who wants a marginal 'age of George III' attached to the king's own life, this is the volume [to] choose." John Raymond
New Statesman 84:398 S 22 '72 330w

Reviewed by J. H. Plumb
N Y Rev of Books 19:44 D 14 '72 1500w

"The conspicuous virtue of this biography is that it restores personality to the King. . . . Ayling is like a splendid manipulator of a magic-lantern; he displays without preaching and reveals without argument. His book may be described as one of record and statement rather than of deduction and conclusion."
TLS p652 Je 9 '72 450w

AZNAVOUR, CHARLES. Aznavour by Aznavour; an autobiography; tr. by Ghislaine Boulanger. 283p pl $7.95 Cowles

B or 92
LC 75-183824

The autobiography of the French singer and lyricist.

"Aznavour's portrait of Piaf, the savage, egotistical little guttersnipe who took Paris by storm, and his description of life in war-torn France, are among the most rewarding sections of the book. If you have an avid interest in the fine points of seduction—approach, confrontation and finale—Aznavour is just what you've been looking for. Most readers can skip this one with a clear conscience." Sister Gregory Duffy
Best Sell 32:110 Je 1 '72 350w

"[The author] is an obvious burnisher of his own apple, and, for my taste, a tedious one. His story . . . is one of struggle for discovery, of existence in a world of cheats and con men, of life in the underworld of Paris clubs. He describes his setbacks on the road to fame and fortune, but with an air of self-satisfaction and assurance in his destiny that lacks any hint of humility, let alone of perspective. What bothers me about Aznavour's autobiography is its absence of self-revelation. What he gives us is the surface of himself when he might have told us more about the emotional background of his lyrics and their sources within himself." Alden Whitman

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ag 6 '72 300w

"Aznavour, who probably is best known in America, not as a singer, but as the star of Truffaut's Shoot the Piano Player, reveals himself to be a gentle, sensitive, decent man. His telling of his own struggle to the top is even more clichéd than Mme. Bertheaut's account of the early Piaf career [Piaf, BRD 1972]. One can understand why the book was published in France, where Aznavour's reputation is considerable, but it is more difficult to understand what interest it will hold for an American public." Richard Seaver
Sat R 55:52 Ag 12 '72 450w

B

BABB, LAWRENCE. The moral cosmos of Paradise lost. 166p $7.50 Mich. state univ. press

821 Milton, John—Paradise lost
SBN 87013-149-4 LC 75-119842

In addition to defining the "poetic functions of matter and space in Milton's epic . . . [the author has] included Milton's ideas about human physiology and psychology." (Foreword) Bibliography. Index.

"Proceeding on the thesis that the setting of Paradise lost is not easily understood by the 20th-century reader, Babb sets out to clarify Milton's cosmos by furnishing a compendium of basic information that would have been commonly available to the 17th-century reader. There are chapters, for example, on 'the new astronomy,' 'the supralunar world,' and 'space, matter, and time.' Babb's explanations are . . . usually accurate, and they are thorough almost to the point of tedium. Although very elementary and too frequently patronizing . . . [this] book will undoubtedly find a ready audience, especially among beginning students of Milton, for it does offer essential information in a form not available elsewhere."

Choice 8:384 My '71 180w

"Written for possible use by the 'uninitiated reader' who might be 'the intelligent college upperclassman', the book is lucid and straightforward, declining to read 'anything between Milton's lines' . . . Milton's knowledge of contemporary astronomy, physics and psychology has been extensively discussed. Babb draws fully and helpfully on these discussions, subscribing to the view that Milton's 'habit of mind is deductive' and that his science is 'bookish and authoritarian'. . . . [But he] falls short in putting before us the inclusiveness and the cohesiveness of Milton's aesthetic design. . . . The force with which Milton annexes both his drama and his cosmos to the imaginative logic of his poem could have been brought out more persistently and tellingly."

TLS p1120 S 17 '71 450w

BABB, SANORA. An owl on every post. 217p $5.95 McCall pub. co.

B or 92 Frontier and pioneer life—Colorado
SBN 8415-0037-1 LC 75-122113

This is "the story of the author's childhood on the vast flat plains of Colorado. She lived with her parents, sister and grandfather in the middle of nowhere on an isolated 320-acre farm. They did not even have a house to live in, but a one-roomed hut dug out of the earth in which they all lived, ate and slept. The time is 1913. The family were pioneers, struggling to grow enough to make a living. . . . The children learnt to read from their one book—The Adventures of Kit Carson—and from the old newspapers that covered the hut walls. . . . Their nearest neighbour is a half-mad old recluse." (TLS)

"[The author] writes well, relating vividly and with fine and fond recollection what life was like in those pioneer days in Colorado and Kansas just before World War I. Recommended for public, academic, and high school libraries." Stanley Swanson

Library J 95:4164 D 1 '70 170w

"This is a book that defies critics and categories. . . . This life, which must in many ways have been a living hell, is recreated through the eyes of childhood as something warm and full. . . . [The account] is, of course, sentimental, folksy and selective. But children's perceptions too are selective, and Sanora Babb's experience seems to restate the obvious but forgotten things. . . . As a document . . . [this book] is masterly. Sanora Babb says of [it] 'I enjoyed writing a song to the plains, a small tribute to my parents, my grandfather and others who settled on those treeless plains and lived quietly courageous lives under primitive circumstances.' Hers is a small song, and not grand opera. But hearing it is a significant and salutary experience."

TLS p1424 N 12 '71 470w

BACH, RICHARD. Jonathan Livingston Seagull; phot. by Russell Munson. 93p $4.95 '70 Macmillan (N Y)

LC 75-119617

A parable about "a seagull who loves to fly. While his fellows [are searching for food]. . . . Jonathan is out alone high over the ocean, teaching himself the principles of aeronautics. He is eventually banished from the flock for daring to violate the earth-bound traditions of gull society. In his solitary existence he continues to practice the advanced arts of flight, and eventually he is taken to a higher world where there are other gulls who, like him, seek perfection. . . . After overcoming time and space and discovering that he is indeed 'a perfect, unlimited gull,' he is ready to learn the meaning of kindness and love and thence to return to earth to tutor other outcast gulls in the art of flying." (Christian Century)

Reviewed by W. B. Hill

Best Sell 32:521 F 15 '73 400w

"There's enough symbolism and allegory in the story to delight the most avid symbol hunter. Moby Dick it's not. . . . But symbols it's got. And the great virtue of this book is that it means precisely what you want it to mean. . . . No matter what your age, sex, race, annual income, religion or politics, somewhere in the context of your life you can find a use for Jonathan's message that there are 'no limits.' Obviously the aggressive insurance salesman may interpret that message somewhat differently from the youth absorbed in mind-expanding psychedelics. What Bach has done in essence is to market that panacea of the '50s, the power of positive thinking, in the packaging of the '70s. . . . A film of Jonathan is in the works." J. C. Lyles

Christian Century 89:1185 N 22 '72 1000w

Reviewed by E. M. Cole

Library J 95:4187 D 1 '70 70w

"Richard Bach here offers . . . a story about a seagull who has ambitions beyond those of most seagulls and who manages to transcend the limits of reality. Jonathan becomes super-seagull, with super power and insights. . . . The lyrical passages on flight and its wonders are truly special. Black-and-white photographs add to the effectiveness of this fable which is deceptively simple and open to several levels of interpretation. YA's are asking for this. So be sure to include it in your collections." Regina Minudri

Library J 97:4093 D 15 '72 120w [YA]

"[The book is] the year's—and perhaps even the decade's—pop publishing miracle. . . . People are beginning to compare Jonathan to [Antoine] Saint-Exupéry's The Little Prince [IBRD 1943] and Kahlil Gibran's The Prophet (favorably or not, according to taste) as a book likely to stay around forever. . . . [The book] owes something to science fiction (thought movement, for example). It is also a mélange of contradictory religious messages. One is Hinduism (the goal of life is absolute perfection). Yet Jonathan emphasizes the self over all else, and that runs counter to Eastern religions. Insistence on the power of the self also undercuts the book's Christian overtones. . . . [However], even against what seems to be common sense, it is essential to believe in the possibilities of individual endeavor. There, suddenly, stands Jonathan Livingston Seagull, an Horatio Alger in feathers." Time 100:60 N 13 '72 5350w

BACHELARD, GASTON. On poetic imagination and reverie; selections from the works of Gaston Bachelard; tr. with an introd. by Colette Gaudin. 111p $6; pa $2.25 Bobbs

801 Poetry. Criticism—Philosophy LC 73-148015

"Bachelard adheres to Jung's concept of the archetype because he is unwilling to limit a symbol to its causes, but rejects the belief in the historical and ancestral background of the archetype. . . . [He] is convinced that reverie, because it is controlled, more than dream, which is spontaneous and not experienced consciously until recounted, puts the subject in touch with himself. In analyzing poetry, the phenomenologist Bachelard looks upon the image in terms of the 'reverberations' it causes within him. In this manner he in turn becomes a creator and is also able to communicate with the poet on the poet's terms." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"A useful and well done little book. The editor-translator is a former student of Bachelard whose preface states clearly the salient aspects of his philosophy of criticism and whose choice of excerpts, accurately translated, gives an extremely good idea of the impact this major figure has had in contemporary criticism. It is, in fact, impossible to understand the developments in French criticism today without, as a minimum, the grasp of Bachelard's views which this book gives. With only four of his many studies available in English, the comprehensive selection here is all the more valuable. . . . It is indispensable for college and university libraries and highly recommended to general libraries as well."

Choice 9:512 Je '72 160w

"An excellent introduction illuminates this volume. . . . When Bachelard traces the prevailing image in the works of Nietzsche, Lautréamont, et al., he discovers new and surprising poetic relationships which add living and dynamic qualities to his world." B. L. Knapp

Library J 97:1436 Ap 15 '72 160w

BACK, KURT W. Beyond words; the story of sensitivity training and the encounter movement. 266p $7.95 Russell Sage; for sale by Basic bks.

616.8 Group relations training SBN 87154-077-0 LC 73-182935

The title of this "book derives from the central property of sensitivity training—its rejection of history, of enduring structures, of abstraction and symbolism, in favor of direct, concrete group experiences that are immediate and intense. . . . The five sections of the book deal successively with the societal setting from which the movement arose; its scientific origins; its current practices; . . . the divisive dilemmas within the movement and forecasts about future developments and demise." (Science) Bibliography. Index.

"Especially interesting are the many references to personal communications with leaders in the movement which are used throughout. The book is clearly written and is recommended for laymen and upper level college students who already have a good idea of what sensitivity training is. Excellent bibliography."

Choice 9:1044 O '72 120w

"[Back's] book is probably one of the few on the subject that combines a reasonable balance of critical perspective, cultural insight, and plain old scholarly perspiration. . . . [However] an ambivalence enters his analysis. On the one hand [he] recognizes that the 'mental' sciences have not healed the hurts the other sciences—especially biologically—have inflicted. Yet his methodology and loyalty to scientific objectivity at all costs shuts out a certain compassion. He dubs encounter an ersatz religion, but can visualize nothing better. But the book is useful. Its broad authoritative hand comes down hard on the argument that encounter groups rarely change people, except—and this is rarely discussed—to damage them in various ways." David Mutch

BACK, K. W.—Continued

Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 14 '72 450w

"A very level-headed, thorough account of 'T-groups' and the encounter movement in the U.S. and abroad. After a succinct review of the social setting, scientific base, and practices of sensitivity training, Back, a professor in the department of sociology and [psychiatry] at Duke University, comes to the disquieting conclusion that research on the effectiveness of encounter experiences is at best either poorly designed or inconclusive." W. R. Knievel
Library J 97:1816 My 15 '72 100w

"In this study, Kurt Back sets out to 'capture a development in the science of man at the climax of its career as a social movement.' His subject is sensitivity training, and it will be a long time before a better summary of it appears. . . . Chapter 9, 'Psych-Resorts,' [contains] the best summary available of what happens inside sensitivity groups. . . . One value of [this] exposition is a practical one. The person who is undecided about participating in sensitivity training can use Back's analysis to reflect on his own circumstance, judge its deficiencies, and decide whether for him sensitivity training or some substitute activity might gratify needs that are unsatisfied within our society." K. E. Weick Science 176:1113 Je ■ '72 2000w

BACKER, JOHN H. Priming the German economy; American occupational policies, 1945-1948. 212p $6.75 Duke Univ. press
330.943 Germany—Economic policy. Germany—History—Allied occupation, 1945-1955
ISBN 0-8223-0243-8 LC 70-142289

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by E. F. Ziemke
Am Hist R 77:1476 D '72 460w

Reviewed by F. A. Breier
Am Pol Sci R 66:225 Mr '72 900w

Reviewed by John Gimbel
Pol Sci Q 87:672 D '72 600w

BADILLO, HERMAN. A bill of no rights: Attica and the American prison system [by] Herman Badillo and Milton Haynes. 190p $6.95 Outerbridge & Lazard; for sale by Dutton

365 Prisons—New York (State). New York. State prison. Attica
SBN 0-97690-071-6 LC 78-190490

An account of the 1971 rebellion of prisoners in the state institution located at Attica, New York. Annotated bibliography.

"With the help of veteran journalist Haynes, Badillo retells the day-to-day story of the Attica uprising. With copious footnotes (unfortunately gathered at the back of the book) the authors re-create those bloody days with their elements of horror and atrocity. . . . The most important part of this volume, however, is its look at the American penal system and its proposals for reform. In sum these may be reduced to four points: 1. A major commitment to the idea of noninstitutional corrections and a valid, substantial effort at rehabilitation; 2. An enforced code of civil rights for all prisoners; 3. A system of Ombudsmen to ensure impartial inspection and enforcement of the law within the prisons; and 4. Better trained guards and more black and Spanish-speaking guards. Every citizen should be concerned about this matter. . . . Highly recommended for public libraries and for college collections." Charles Dollen
Best Sell 32:130 Je 15 '72 400w

"I find the book extremely valuable, whether the authors are setting down the hard facts of what happened from hour to hour, or attempting to analyze the basic causes. . . . or broadening their analyses to include the whole prison system and are pleading for change. . . . 'Attica has faded in memory,' the authors say in one of the last chapters of the book. 'The only action taken in 120 days has been to issue the inmates uniforms in a new color: green rather than gray.' But Attica must not fade in memory. Politicians, administrators, the 'man in the street' must be made aware of what is going on behind the prison walls and how that differs from the rights actually given also to offenders by the U.S. Constitution. That is why it is so important that this book should have been written and so important that it be read." Gunnar Marnell

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ag 16 '72 1050w

"The work is not polemical; indeed, given the intensity of the problem, it is surprisingly dispassionate. The concluding essay succinctly summarizes the plethora of prison reform writings and is the strength of the book." D. L. Norrgard
Library J 97:2709 S 1 '72 160w

"A denunciatory account of the massacre at Attica in which Badillo, a Democratic congressman from the Bronx, acted as part of the Observers' Committee which tried vainly to negotiate a settlement between rebelling inmates and the New York State Correction officials. Lashing out at the lock-'em-up-and-throw-away-the-key philosophy which governs prison rule in general, Badillo finds Governor Rockefeller and State Correction Commissioner Oswald particularly blameworthy in this vivid account of the preparations for slaughter by trigger-happy officials. . . . The authors draw up a damning indictment of the institutionalized bestiality which characterizes lock-ups in general. . . . Though [Badillo's] emphasis is legalistic his anger is genuine and his recommendations sound. . . . This sweeping assault on the prison system ('a destructive and monumental failure') includes some data on recidivism and the challenge to reconsider the entire fortress mentality which precludes real rehabilitation."

N Y Rev of Books 18:35 Je 15 '72 320w

Reviewed by Bryce Nelson

N Y Times Bk R p1 D 17 '72 550w

BAGDIKIAN, BEN H. The effete conspiracy and other crimes by the press. 159p $6.95 Harper

071 American newspapers. Government and the press
SBN 06-010179-2 LC 70-184371

The author "is critical of publishers who are responsible for creating a primarily 'conservative and anachronistic' daily press. Too many newspapers rely on press releases by government and public relations firms for the news. They allow family or conglomerate control to warp reportage, and they do not seek truth in covering business practices, poverty, and race relations. Many publishers, Bagdikian feels, must welcome Administration attacks upon such 'deviants' as the Washington Post and the New York Times for their liberal attitudes." (Library J) Index.

"As a study of issues facing the American press, the book fails. Bagdikian . . . sets out to analyze the institution of the American press, but ends up with a collection of interesting stories about conservative publishers, fighting to preserve the status quo, 'manipulative' public relations agents (next to publishers, the villains of the book), and conglomerates (a close runner-up). The best third of the book is devoted to a discussion of the love-hate relationships that Presidents Kennedy and Johnson had with the media, and an analysis of the different ways the Presidents dealt with the press. . . . All in all, it is not a very solid book for a college library although important for journalism collections."

Choice 9:1116 N '72 160w

"As tough as his charges are, Mr. Bagdikian delivers them in a manner that suggests that the only proper response is: 'Thanks, I needed that!' His book isn't long. . . . But it is tightly written and doesn't lend itself to skimming. He cites several congressional studies of the news media, but his personal observations are more provocative. His credentials are solid. He has worked as a reporter, foreign and Washington correspondent, national editor, and assistant managing editor. He has won his share of prizes, including the Pulitzer Prize. . . . His insight into the Washington scene is especially forceful. . . . Mr. Bagdikian agrees with Vice-President Agnew that the press is out of step with the electorate. Mr. Agnew says the press is too liberal; but Bagdikian's survey shows it to be much more conservative than its readers." R. C. Bergenheim
Christian Science Monitor p13 S 13 '72 440w

"Bagdikian's loosely organized collection of essays about journalism and politics . . . is interesting reading for anyone concerned with communication in a republic." Collin Clark
Library J 97:2371 J1 '72 100w

"When Spiro Agnew is no longer a household word, he may yet be remembered for his attack on the press. . . . But Agnew had things all backward. The problem was and is not an effete conspiracy by the Eastern Establishment. As Ben H. Bagdikian, the media critic and assistant managing editor of the Washington Post makes abundantly clear, the newspapers of this country are overwhelmingly Republican and conservative. They usually operate without real competition. They most often simply accept the official administration version of events. And they are generally less interested in service than in profits. . . . Bagdikian sees in the Nixon Administration an excess of zeal in its efforts to manipulate and intimidate the press." T. J. Jacobs
N Y Times Bk R p17 J1 30 '72 1200w

BAGLEY, DESMOND. The freedom trap. 254p $5.95 Doubleday
LC 70-171277

"Owen Stannard (alias Rearden), a counter-intelligence agent, is sentenced to prison for a diamond robbery. Everything about the crime is authentic, even the sentence. The security is absolute—only two people . . . know the true story and identity of Stannard. . . . [who] is sprung from prison together with a top Russian spy . . . [and] passed along an underground route to Ireland. Stannard breaks free when his cover is blown. Then begins a . . . chase of the organization which freed him, a chase which ends in [Malta]." (Best Sell)

"[This exciting story is] highly recommended to suspense fans. Michael Caine or Sean Connery would have a movie field day with this one."

Best Sell 32:22 Ap 1 '72 110w

Reviewed by H. C. Veit

Library J 97:520 F 1 '72 140w

Reviewed by Elizabeth Storey

Library J 97:1624 Ap 15 '72 140w [YA]

"For a fast-moving adventure story about jail, Communist agents, double agents and master criminals, try [this novel]." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p34 Mr 5 '72 40w

"Bagley's good Icelandic thriller . . . [Running Blind, BRD 1971] is followed by another at least as cunning and enjoyable. A crook—a simple kind of crook, it seems—does a job, gets caught, goes to jail, and then the fireworks, metaphorically speaking, begin, and, literally, bring about the ending. The geography is spacious, the invention one of Chinese-boxing, and the only doubt is whether A would suppose that B, double-crossed by C, would still find the dibs waiting in the numbered account."

TLS p1370 O 29 '71 80w

BAGLIN, DOUGLASS. People of the dreamtime, by Douglass Baglin and David R. Moore. 135p il col il maps $12.95 Weatherhill
301.2994 Ethnology—Australia—Juvenile literature

In this study entitled in Australia The Dark Australians, "after outlining their history, in particular their belief in their spirit ancestors of the 'Dreamtime,' [the authors] focus . . . on the problems the aborigines face today." (Library J) "Age twelve and up." (Best Sell)

"[This is an] attractive and sympathetic study. . . . For the more generously budgeted high school library, this would be a most attractive and informative book that will intrigue young readers."

Best Sell 30:218 S 1 '70 100w [YA]

"The photographs are combined well with the text. This is an attractive folio likely to appeal to the general reader, although perhaps too slight at this price for many libraries." Norman Horrocks

Library J 95:2821 S 1 '70 120w

"The pictures present an honest cross section of life as it is lived today by most black Australians. Because their lives are not especially pleasing or attractive, neither are the photographs. People in cast-off clothing squatting on the fringes of white settlements, enveloped in an atmosphere of boredom and flies, can be a depressing subject. . . . The book is a plea that white Australia stop ignoring the needs of its black citizens . . . [but] the reader who wants a fuller understanding of the scenes portrayed in many of the pictures may be frustrated by the overgeneralized discussions presented in the text." R. A. Gould

Natur Hist 80:107 F '71 200w

BAHR, HOWARD M., ed. Disaffiliated man: essays and bibliography on skid row, vagrancy, and outsiders. 428p Can$9.50 Univ. of Toronto press

016.3011 Tramps—Bibliography. Alcoholism—Bibliography. Social psychology. Social psychology—Bibliography
SBN 8020-1613-8 LC 73-483312

"Essentially an annotated bibliography . . . the volume also includes three . . . survey essays on homeless, 'disaffiliated' males (by Caplow; Rooney; Bahr), one on widowers (Bernardo), and one on religious defection (Mauks). . . . The annotated bibliography [is] divided into various subtopics (e.g. Taverns and bars, 'The law,' etc.)." (Choice)

"Although Bahr discusses the concept of 'disaffiliation,' it is not very clear how it differs from 'alienation' or what its special analytical usefulness for understanding homeless men is. . . . [The bibliography] will inevitably prove useful to researchers on homeless men and skid row. It includes long o.p. material as well as very recent publications; especially helpful are the foreign sources (although rather few are cited). The brief abstracts will also aid researchers in identifying pertinent literature. Should be considered for acquisition by well stocked research libraries, particularly those which service students of social problems. Index."

Choice 8:144 Mr '71 180w

"Bahr has drawn together five essays relating to his concept of disaffiliation, and 300 pages of annotated bibliography on twelve related subtopics. The essays vary widely and . . . tend to stand alone. . . . The long annotated bibliography offers an excellent general reference work of abstracts on topics directly or sometimes indirectly relevant to skid row or disaffiliation: skid row and its men; . . . treatment, punishment, and rehabilitation of homelessness and alcoholism; employment and unemployment; transiency among youths; and journalistic or literary accounts of homelessness. There are also sections on voluntary associations, on aging, and on anomie, isolation, and marginality." R. V. Koor

Contemp Sociol 1:145 Mr '72 550w

BAHRENBURG, BRUCE. The Pacific: then and now. 318p il maps $7.95 Putnam

919 Islands of the Pacific. World War, 1939-1945—Pacific Ocean
LC 70-151200

"Based on a series of articles originally published in the Newark News, this book is a report of visits to many of the battlefields of the Pacific theater of World War II: Pearl Harbor, Guadalcanal, Rabaul, Nagasaki, etc. Résumés of military action are [included] with touristic impressions and comments by local residents." (Library J) Index.

"[This book] emphasizes the continued presence of colonial attitudes, poverty, exploitation, and racism at such battle sites as Wake, Guadalcanal, Tarawa, and Okinawa. . . . In spite of its stress on timely subjects, this type of impressionistic travelogue will probably be of limited use for the general college audience."

Choice 8:1234 N '71 120w

"This book is well enough written and is rather interesting, but each chapter reads too much like the previous one. Taken as Sunday supplement reading—a chapter a week—the material would be more effective. For consideration by public libraries." R. G. Schipf
Library J 96:2636 S 1 '71 100w

"The only basis for the slight appeal this book possesses is the nostalgia of ageing veterans. . . . The attempt to weld a travelogue on to a history does not succeed. The history has been told often and better elsewhere, while the author's obsession with battlefields prevents him from having much that is interesting to say on the melancholy but highly interesting subject of the kinds of society that are emerging in the South Pacific during the last third of our century." George Woodcock

BAHRENBURG, BRUCE—Continued

Pacific Affairs 45:157 spring '72 200w

"These articles . . . do not add up to a good, or even a very useful, book. . . . More and larger pictures, less moaning about the present and mooning about the past, and still less military and political history might have made a better book." Theodore Ropp
Social Studies 63:339 D '72 190w

BAILEY, F. LEE. The defense never rests, by F. Lee Bailey with Harvey Aronson. 262p $7.95
Stein & Day

345 Trials
ISBN 0-8128-1441-X LC 70-179487

"Bailey tells about his defense of Dr. Sam Sheppard, Albert DeSalvo, and [other] clients. . . . [Included also are] his views on the law and its shortcomings . . . [and his] suggestions for improving the administration of justice. . . . He advocates better training of criminal lawyers through an extra year of criminal law courses followed by a year as clerk to a trial judge, a year as an assistant prosecutor, and a year as an aide to a defense lawyer." (Library J)

Reviewed by M. J. Sheeran
America 126:541 My 20 '72 180w

Reviewed by I. R. Hill
Best Sell 31:454 Ja 15 '72 600w

"[Bailey] has published an adulatory book about himself. . . . It is not in any respect an important book—a tacked-on final chapter, 'The State of the Law,' is merely a small collection of ideas for improving the law, all of them distinctly half-baked—but it will be of interest to those who like to read about hard-fought courtroom battles. . . . All in all . . . [the book] is interesting enough to make one look forward with some anticipation to Bailey's almost inevitable book about the litigation that is most conspicuous for its absence from his present volume, the trial of Captain Ernest Medina." J. R. Waltz

Book World p10 D 26 '71 1100w

"In recounting the facts and his handling of these cases, [Bailey] reveals a good deal about himself. . . . He is very critical of the grand jury system, roadblocks that make essential evidence inaccessible to defense attorneys, incompetent trial juries, plea bargaining, and prisons that are 'colleges of crime' rather than institutions of rehabilitation. . . . This absorbing book reads like a Perry Mason novel (thanks, no doubt, to Aronson) and is recommended for both instruction and diversion." O. J. Werner

Library J 97:57 Ja 1 '72 210w

"Almost without exception, the cases are so fascinating that all Mr. Bailey need do is relate them to satisfy courtroom buffs and tyros alike. . . . Most of his criticisms (about the dangers of police lineups and the lack of adequate pretrial discovery for the defense, for example) are valid, but one gets the impression that they are made as an afterthought, without any effort being made to sustain them. The book has other flaws. All good trial lawyers have large egos—it is essential equipment for their calling—but Mr. Bailey's sometimes gets in the way and annoys." Patrick Wall

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ja 23 '72 600w

"No one will accuse F. Lee Bailey of being the sort who hides his brief under a bushel, but his book is as free of egotism as it is breezy, blunt and immensely readable. Bailey offers very little about himself. . . . The fascination of books like this lies in the revelations of behind-the-scenes activity, the conversations between lawyer and client, the way a defense is prepared. Bailey doesn't disappoint. . . . (Unlike Perry Mason, Bailey doesn't always win. Three of the 40 accused murders he has defended have been convicted.) [His] dominant theme throughout is the myriad injustices inherent in our judicial system. . . . What remedies does Bailey propose? One suggestion is that criminal suspects be allowed to plead not guilty and attempt to demonstrate their innocence before a costly trial. . . . His arguments are convincing. . . . This book cannot be recommended too highly." Arthur Cooper

Newsweek 78:96 D 20 '71 700w

BAILEY, PEARL. Talking to myself. 233p $5.95 Harcourt

B or 92
ISBN 0-15-187990-7 LC 78-153679

The singer and entertainer offers "her thoughts, as she wrote them down in hotels, airplanes, and at home, on a variety of topics ranging from her relationship to God to her resentment of certain fans who crassly intrude upon her privacy. Some verse is included." (Library J)

Reviewed by I. N. Pompea
Best Sell 31:395 D 1 '71 250w

"Not too long ago Pearl Bailey put the story of her life into a book called The Raw Pearl [BRD 1968]. Perhaps the success of that book or the very experience of putting it together did much to convince her that writing, like performing, is a good way to share oneself with other people. . . . The book is a rather unsatisfying experience, despite Bailey's genuine sincerity. Regrettably, it is not really the kind of sharing experience the author wanted it to be." C. M. Weisenberg

Library J 96:3748 N 15 '71 130w

"Pearl's musings on various subjects—politics, show-biz, morality, egotism, friends, religion, etc.—in her own inimitable, off-the-cuff, anecdotal manner. The homespun philosophy breaks down under close scrutiny, but the delivery compensates."

N Y Times Bk ■ p20 Ap 16 '72 30w

BAILEY, RONALD W., ed. Black business enterprise; historical and contemporary perspectives. 361p il $12.50 Basic bks.

309.2 Negro businessmen
ISBN 0-465-00690-6 LC 76-147008

Part 1 of this collection of articles "consists of essays on the history and evolution of black business. The contributions in Part 2 present the problems involved in making 'black capitalism' work as a solution for black economic development. Part 3 establishes models and guidelines for alternatives to black capitalism, such as cooperatives and community development corporations. The readings in Part 4 point out that the problem is far from being solved, that black people must play a larger role in the total economic system, and that racism may not end until there is a black-controlled government." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Liberal arts students can now read, in one book, 26 clearly written pieces representing the evidence and arguments of all leading advocates of business related action. . . . Some articles urge more black capitalism (e.g. R. McKersie, R. America, A. Brimmer, C. Tate, L. Kelso, T. Cross), some reject all capitalism as exploitative (e.g. J. Boggs, R. E. Wright). Some argue for cooperatives of various kinds (e.g. A. Ulmer, J. Forman). Bailey includes a wide range of opinion and gives each advocate enough space to present a large portion of his argument. The volume offers diversity of opinion, in contrast [to] T. Cross' Black capitalism [BRD 1969, which] is the program of only one man . . . presented in great detail."

Choice 9:400 My '72 140w

"This is one of the best books to be published to date on the current problems concerning black business and economic development. The 30 contributors include [people] . . . prominent in various phases of the black movement for better economic conditions, bankers, sociologists, and economists. . . . The book provides a comprehensive picture of the dilemmas facing black people in their efforts to improve their economic status and presents some methods through which a start can be made to overcome the problems. Most of the contributions originally appeared as periodical articles or as parts of books—a few were published as much as 20 years ago but most within the past three years. Included is an excellent bibliographic essay which summarizes the literature on the subject. Highly recommended for all academic libraries, for medium-sized to large public libraries, and for special collections." D. E. Thompson

Library J 96:2764 S 15 '71 200w

BAINES, JOHN M. Revolution in Peru: Mariátegui and the myth; pub. for the Latin Am. studies program. 206p $7.50 Univ. of Ala. press

B or 92 Mariátegui, José Carlos. Peru—Politics and government. Revolutions
ISBN 0-8173-4721-6 LC 72-148690

This volume is concerned with "the Peruvian Marxist José Carlos Mariátegui. It treats the longer term and immediate historical circumstances of the period in which he lived (1895-1930) and analyzes his works." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"What we . . . lack is an incisive analysis of Mariátegui's historical period and his role in it. Unfortunately this political biography falls short of that goal. Baines . . . is at his best when dealing with general Marxist theory and Mariátegui's revisionism, but he fails to demonstrate a profound understanding and conceptualization of Peruvian history with all its nuances and subtleties. This shortcoming is evident throughout and severely limits the scope of the book. For this reason the work will appeal largely to undergraduate and beginning graduate students. . . . [However, the] bibliography is marred by very serious omissions."

Choice 9:1200 N '72 180w

"The book provides an adequate summary of the man and the times, as well as of his intellectual output. . . . While the work clarifies, on the one hand, Mariátegui's unorthodox approach to Peruvian problems, on the other, its decidedly anti-Marxist tone raises questions. One cannot but think that if written by a more sympathetic person the book would read differently." H. A. Spalding

Library J 97:1318 Ap 1 '72 130w

BAIRD, GEORGE. Alvar Aalto. See Aalto, A.

BAJEMA, CARL JAY, ed. Natural selection in human populations; the measurement of ongoing genetic evolution in contemporary societies. 406p $9.95; pa $4.95 Wiley

573.2 Natural selection. Evolution. Genetics. Population
ISBN 0-471-04380-X LC 72-154322

This is "a collection of twenty-five papers previously published . . . that deal with man's continuing genetic evolution and evolutionary future. The papers are arranged in groups dealing with Natural selection in relation to physical characteristics, Natural selection in relation to disease, Natural selection in the future genetic composition of man." (Choice) Bibliography.

"The papers concerned with measurement of the cost of selection to the species provide the most worthwhile material in the collection. In the opinion of this reviewer, closer adherence to the approach suggested in the subtitle would have enhanced the value of the book although it might have limited its readership. . . . For the most part, the [editor] has done a skillful job of selecting materials relating to one another. Where relevance seems somewhat remote, he has been able, by means of transitional and introductory sections, to maintain a continuity of thought superior to that found in most such volumes. . . . What is troubling, however, is the presence of occasional gaps, even where good materials are readily available." W. A. Stini

Am Anthropol 74:971 Ag '72 950w

"Among the authors represented are such well known authorities as James Crow, Theodosius Dobzhansky, Garrett Hardin, Peter Medawar, and Hermann J. Muller. Many of the articles are of a general nature; some require a fair level of genetic and statistical sophistication on the part of the reader. In short, a useful book of readings to commemorate the 100th anniversary of Darwin's publication of The descent of man."

Choice 9:390 My '72 150w

BAKER, JAMES THOMAS. Thomas Merton: social critic; a study. 173p $8 Univ. press of Ky.

309 Merton Thomas. Social problems
ISBN 0-8131-1238-9 LC 76-132827

In this study "Baker deals with Merton's role as social critic and . . . the development of his thought." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"As its Protestant author intended, this work proves to be a labor of obligation and love. . . . Baker unravels with lucid scholarship and sympathetic insight the fundamental thread that ran through all of Merton's works, from his early poetry and first spiritual writings to the social and ecumenical teachings of the 'liberated' 1960's—namely, 'the theme of unity: unity of man with God and of man with man.' . . . [He] acknowledges Merton's 'rather glaring errors in judgment' on various social issues . . . [but] fails to note that Merton's lapses from Christian realism stemmed from a serious misunderstanding of the social philosophy of Thomism."

Choice 9:659 J1/Ag '72 290w

"So many books have appeared about Thomas Merton since his death that it is impossible to feel compelled by a doctoral dissertation which fastens on a side of Merton which is already brightly illuminated. . . . Baker's book will be of interest in direct proportion to the surviving interest in Merton himself; that translates to lesser rather than greater concern, I fear. . . . [The] book needs a cautionary note, for its lack of appreciation for the early Merton's intelligence and for at times its unconscious demeaning of his profoundly mystical side." John Deedy

Critic 30:87 Ja '72 350w

"A Baptist theology student in Kentucky who was able to rest his theories about Merton by corresponding and visiting with him here presents a study of Merton. . . . [Baker] concludes that the value of Merton's social criticism lies not in its originality, but rather in the fact that Merton applied the traditional monastic concept of peace as the fruit of charity and contemplation to modern secular man and thus bridged the gap between the medieval and modern worlds. G. M. Casey

Library J 96:2656 S 1 '71 100w

BAKER, LEONARD. Brahmin in revolt; a biography of Herbert C. Pell. 350p il $7.95 Doubleday

B or 92 Pell, Herbert Claiborne
LC 75-160866

A biography of the late millionaire who was a Democratic congressman and foreign minister to Portugal and Hungary. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by J. C. Dougherty

Best Sell 31:550 Mr 15 '72 600w

Choice 9:428 My '72 260w

"A personal friend of FDR with the same sense of noblesse oblige, Pell enjoyed the world of the old order and was well aware of its decline after World War I. Baker, using interviews and family papers, captures the mood and style of the man and his milieu, though he offers no profound insights. Pell served with verve and style in various diplomatic positions, but was usually in conflict with the professionals at 'Foggy Bottom.' FDR appointed him to the first War Crimes Commission, and the story of his dedicated but brief and controversial service on the commission is fascinating. A delightfully written biography." Hubert Humphreys

Library J 97:674 F 15 '72 150w

Reviewed by E. G. Windchey

Nation 214:570 My 1 '72 1400w

"Herbert Claiborne Pell . . . was one of the last of our great eccentrics. . . . Mr Baker's able biography keeps pretty close to Pell's career as a New York Democratic politician. . . . Roosevelt, a schoolmate, friend, and neighbor, appointed him to the War Crimes Commission, but the State Department fought the proposal and, to all intents and purposes, won. (The story of this bureaucratic infighting is one of the most valuable things in the book.) It is too bad that the author stuck so strictly to Pell as a minor politician, but at least that job is done, and some persevering academic may bring him to life as a writer and as a perceptive social critic."

New Yorker 48:115 Mr 4 '72 300w

BAKER, ROBERT F. The highway risk problem: policy issues in highway safety. 175p $9.95 Wiley-Interscience

614.8 Traffic accidents. Accidents—Prevention
ISBN 0-471-04388-5 LC 79-153079

Baker, a former director of the Office of Research and Development of the Federal

BAKER, R. F.—Continued

Highway Administration's Bureau of Public Roads "discusses the relationships that highway risk has to mobility and resource priorities. He believes that safety measures that can reduce risk might also cause an intolerable reduction in mobility. Further, he argues, these measures should be made to compete with other life-saving programs (cancer research, pollution control, etc.) for the limited funds available. He complains that these considerations of mobility and efficient resource allocation are neglected by high-level policy makers contemplating new safety programs." (Library J) Index.

"[This] is a perfectly respectable volume with a misleading title. Few will expect to wade through the legislative history of the Highway Safety Acts of 1966 toward the status of highway safety in 1969, without being rewarded by more than technical tables, the methodology of the Bureau of Public Roads, and a maze of details appertaining thereto. The book is a source of data and abstract analogies which seem somewhat pointless in context, as the book goes nowhere. It poses questions, but stops short of solution." G. F. Mott

Ann Am Acad 402:197 J1 '72 450w

"While these concepts are interesting and deserving of exposure, the book is seriously flawed by an almost maddening reiteration of the author's arguments and supporting material. Suitable primarily for specialized collections and large public libraries." Daniel La Rossa

Library J 96:3628 N 1 '71 130w

BAKER, RUSSELL. Poor Russell's almanac. 212p il $6.95 Doubleday 817 U.S.—Civilization
LC 73-171278

This is a selection, arranged chronologically with an . . . essay for each given day, from the author's columns for The New York Times. He covers such subjects as 'New Year's Day, data processing, TV commercials, the Miss America pageant etc.'" (Publishers' Weekly)

"[Baker] is extremely talented at stroking ■ platitude until it purrs like an epigram. . . . This is the kind of all-purpose book which can be picked up, a few articles read while waiting for the bus, and then put down. . . . It pokes fun at a lot of people and a lot of things—both real and imagined. But most of the time its poker is dipped in satire rather than poison." Phil Elderkin

Christian Science Monitor p11 F 3 '72 420w

"Russell Baker has published other selections of whimsy and irony from his 'Observer' column in the New York Times, including All Things Considered and No Cause for Panic [both BRD 1965. This volume] carries on in the whimsy and humor department, but irony and social criticism seem to have been replaced by a literary blandness. . . . Pleasant snippets and snatches for interrupted reading, recommended for the browsing shelf." J. M. Carroll

Library J 96:4102 D 15 '71 100w

New Repub 166:29 F 26 '72 200w

"At his best, Baker fills his allotted space . . . with bizarre, often bleak fantasies about human foolishness. At his second best, he holds a funhouse mirror up to the nature of the consumer state. . . . [This] collection of columns and comment is composed largely of such ticklish visions. The more painful versions often have to do with a variety of middle-aged, middle-management saps who have congealed in mid-marriage and mid-mortgage. 'Misery no longer loves company,' says Baker. 'Nowadays it insists upon it.' . . . [The author] is a fine stylist whose columns frequently unfurl to defend the language against corruption. But to read 212 pages of him at a sitting is a mistake." R. Z. Sheppard

Time 99:63 Ja 17 '72 550w

BAKKE, E. WIGHT. Campus challenge; student activism in perspective [bv] E. Wight Bakke [and] Mary S. Bakke. 573p $14.50 Archon bks.

378.1 Students—Political activity
ISBN 0-208-01205-2 LC 77-150394

For this analysis of student activism "the authors traveled to Japan, India, Mexico and Colombia. . . . They also took account, they said, of American experience at Berkeley, Chicago, Northwestern, Columbia, Harvard, San Francisco State, Kent State, Wisconsin and Swarthmore. . . . [They verified] that student activists are in the minority, at least in the populations they sampled. They discovered that activists could be classified as reformers, revolutionaries or reactionaries, each group being distinguished by a different set of 'presuppositions.'" (New Repub)

"[This is a] cross-cultural, sociological, and historical analysis. . . . It is weakest in discussing the advanced industrial nations of North America and Western Europe. While the scope is very broad, the Bakkes do a remarkably good job of taking all relevant factors into consideration. . . . As a whole it is a dispassionate, useful comparative analysis. . . . The Bakkes have little to say about the American situation and some of their data on foreign countries is out of date. But as a thoughtful compilation of research studies, the volume is quite impressive. It is a must for any library and will be a valuable research tool for those interested in students and higher education."

Choice 9:256 Ap '72 160w

"This book accomplishes the rare feat of providing a full-scale cross-cultural study of student activism without ever positing any theoretical framework. Yet the volume is one of the most useful of the spate of books on students protest in recent years in that its discussion is wide ranging and the authors deal with many of the variables which contribute to student activism. They never bring their long and thoughtful 'laundry lists' of variables into a comprehensive theory. Perhaps this is because there is no such theory." P. G. Altbach

J Higher Ed 43:672 N '72 1050w

"Whether the Bakkes found the secret [of the youth dissent] or any other information not disclosed by casual observation, is not easily determined. Layer upon layer of turgid, pontifical verbiage shield the contents. . . . They predicted in conclusion that student dissent 'will wax and wane with the swings in the occurrence and intensity of events or circumstances the response to which indicates indecision and confusion, on the part of governors and the governed, about the essential character and nature of a university and a nation.' But is that a prediction or a word bog?"

New Repub 166:30 Ja 29 '72 320w

BAKKE, MARY S., jt. auth. Campus challenge. See Bakke, E. W.

BAKUNIN, MICHAEL A. Bakunin on anarchy: sel. works by the activist-founder of world anarchism; ed. tr. and with an introd. by Sam Dolgoff; pref. by Paul Avrich. 405p $10 Knopf

335 Anarchism and anarchists
ISBN 0-394-41601-5 LC 79-136351

This volume portraying Bakunin's ideas "includes a biographical sketch of Bakunin and a summary of anarchist principles of the period." (Sat R) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] is a comprehensive selection. . . . The text is annotated but not as fully as one might expect in a scholarly publication, and some notes are confusing as to the source from which the selection is made."

Choice 9:714 J1/Ag '72 150w

"Readers interested in anarchist thought in general or in Bakunin's ideas in particular will welcome this volume. It is a judicious collection of selected writings, mainly by Bakunin. . . . Many of these writings have never before been published in English. Dolgoff's introductory essay is thoughtful, his introduction to the individual pieces are quite useful, and James Guillaume's sensitive and informative biographical sketch of Bakunin is especially noteworthy. The overall result is a well-nigh unprecedented opportunity to range over the broad spectrum of Bakunin's somewhat rambling and unsystematized thought." Hyman Kublin

Library J 96:4098 D 15 '71 100w

"The difficulties in the way of preparing an adequate selection of Bakunin's writings are peculiarly severe. . . . The greatest part of Bakunin's literary output was polemical in nature, and inspired by particular political junctures. Not only was he not a systematic thinker in the technical sense of being a system-builder, but often the import of his ideas has to be deduced from the political context in which they were enunciated. . . . Within the limits imposed by this peculiarity, arising paradoxically from the generalizing power and philosophic scope of Bakunin's utterances, Samuel Dolgoff has compiled a useful introduction to his thought." Emile Capouya

Sat R 55:88 Mr 4 '72 950w

"[This anthology of Bakunin's writings] gives a fairly representative picture of his insights into 'modern' industrial society and of his reactions to the contemporary socialist movement. Unfortunately, too many of the selections—and the editor's commentaries—are devoted to the debate between Bakunin and Marx. . . . The picture of Bakunin we obtain . . . is that of a passionate critic of emerging capitalist bourgeois society, as well as of a most eloquent advocate of total individual and human freedom. . . . In reading Bakunin one cannot help but be impressed by his spiritual honesty and the eloquence of his plea for humanitarian libertarianism and his denunciation of the constricting features of the emerging industrial order." Marc Raeff
Yale R 61:625 Je '72 500w

BALABKINS, NICHOLAS. West German reparations to Israel. 384p $12.50 Rutgers univ. press

327.5694 Germany (Federal Republic)—Foreign relations—Israel. Israel—Foreign relations—Germany (Federal Republic). World War, 1939-1945—Reparations
ISBN 0-8135-0691-3 LC 70-162724

This study concerns the Luxemburg treaty signed in 1952 by the Federal Republic of Germany and Israel. There are "background chapters on the development of the anti-Semitic policies of the Nazi regime and their economic implications; a history of reparations, focusing on German reparations after World War I; West Germany's economic recovery after 1945; and Israel's postindependence economic situation . . . [followed by a] consideration of the evolution of German-Israeli contacts which led to the reparations agreement of 1952. [The author] discusses the agreement's implementation over the next decade and a half in terms of its impact both on West Germany and on the economic development of Israel." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by G. L. Mosse
Am Hist R 77:1094 O '72 650w

"The successes and failures of the programs for using . . . [the] payments to build up Israel's infrastructure take up about a third of the volume; this section alone is worth the price of the book. The research is admirable and the analysis judicious. The work is completely accessible to all—no expertise in either economic analysis or historical knowledge is assumed, and every step is carefully explained in highly readable layman's prose. Should be in all libraries—neighborhood as well as college and university. Anyone with a scholarly interest in West Germany or Israel will want to own this."

Choice 9:540 Je '72 180w

"This study is essential to an understanding of West German-Israeli relations, although it is not the author's purpose to consider that rapprochement in other than its economic aspects. Recommended for academic libraries and collections strong in Jewish and Israeli affairs." B. S. Viault

Library J 96:2764 S 15 '71 190w

BALAKIAN, ANNA. André Breton; magus of surrealism. 289p il $10 Oxford

B or 92 Breton, André. Surrealism
ISBN 0-19-501298-4 LC 78-83006

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by James Hill
J Aesthetics 31:126 fall '72 220w

Reviewed by Roger Shattuck
N Y Rev of Books 18:19 Je 1 '72 1700w
TLS p442 Ap 21 '72 280w
Va Q R 48:xv winter '72 140w

BALANDIER, GEORGES. Political anthropology; tr. from the French by A. M. Sheridan Smith. 214p $6.95 Pantheon bks.

321.1 Power (Social sciences). Society, Primitive
ISBN 0-394-44115-X LC 69-20192

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Jean Danielson
Am Anthropol 74:43 F/Ap '72 950w

Reviewed by M. J. Swartz
Am J Soc 78:250 Jl '72 650w

Reviewed by H. S. Plunkett
Contemp Sociol 1:343 Jl '72 400w

BALAWYDER, ALOYSIUS. Canadian-Soviet relations between the world wars. 248p Can $12.50 Univ. of Toronto press

327.71 Canada—Foreign relations—Russia. Russia—Foreign relations—Canada
ISBN 0-8020-1768-1 LC 70-163802

The author discusses "the diplomacy of a British dominion and a socialist state, anti-Bolshevik hysteria, trade relations, and Canadian Communist and Comintern policies." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Professor Balawyder's study . . . is a doctoral thesis. Worse, it still reads like one. I cannot escape the unworthy thought that this book tells us more than we will ever want to know about Canadian-Soviet relations at a time when they scarcely existed. The most interesting section is that devoted to the Comintern's relations with Canada's Communist party, but much of this material has been treated . . . [elsewhere] in more detail and in better prose." J. L. Granatstein
Canadian Forum 52:16 S '72 250w

"The book is especially useful on the influence of political and ethnic groups in Canada upon the government's attitude towards the Soviet Union. . . . Good index. In summary, Balawyder knows his materials but fails to analyze them fully."

Choice 9:1021 O '72 170w

"Apart from basic faults of style, the book also contains many errors of scholarly mechanics, including the use of poor sources, errors of citation, and a muddled bibliography." Joseph Boudreau

Library J 97:1806 My 15 '72 120w

BALDICK, ROBERT. Dinner at Magny's. 253p pl $5.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

848 Authors, French
LC 76-172624

"A reconstruction, through the use of letters and journals, of six conversations which took place at Magny's restaurant in Paris between 1862 and 1872. The principal conversationalists are Flaubert, Turgenev, the Goncourts, Gautier, and George Sand. They discuss subjects ranging from current events through religion, but touch most frequently upon sex and literature." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Richard Freeman
Book World p7 F 20 '72 470w
Choice 9:632 Jl/Ag '72 190w

"The aging writers live through the siege of Paris and the Commune; their ranks are thinned by death and disease; their tone becomes increasingly somber. Baldick's scholarly apparatus is impeccable and the fragments he has culled are brought together into a narrative that flows easily and sometimes entertainingly. A literary curiosity." Dorothy Nyren
Library J 97:198 Ja 15 '72 110w

"The Magny diners liked sex talk. Gautier says he has fathered 17 children, but once a year is enough for him now. . . . The Goncourts prod these sex fantasies. Marriage is ruin to artists. Women are animals or machines. . . . It is Turgenev who brings these sex-obsessed misogynists to a halt. . . . He cannot bear to hear sex, love, and women spoken of in this way." V. S. Pritchett
New Statesman 81:706 My 21 '71 2400w

"The conversations are stilted, and often read like translations. They give far too large a part to the sensational; and we feel we have stumbled into some inferior smoking-room, where a huddle of elderly men are vying with one another to dredge up blue jokes and dubious stories. The scholar will find nothing here; the general reader will wonder why les diners Magny became a legend if they were so utterly vulgar."

BALDICK, ROBERT—Continued

TLS p641 Je 4 '71 450w

Va Q R 48:xlix spring '72 120w

BALDINGER, STANLEY. Planning and governing the metropolis; the Twin Cities experience; foreword by Victor Jones. 286p maps $17.50 Praeger

309.2 Twin Cities metropolitan area—Politics and government. Metropolitan government LC 74-131946

This "case study of the Minneapolis and St. Paul experience traces the issues and decisions that established a community environment conducive to regional government, outlines the specific responsibilities of the Metropolitan Council of the Twin Cities Area; and describes its current experiments with low-cost housing, a revised criminal justice plan, new methods of tax assessment and distribution, public land acquisition, control of air and water pollution, and a newly coordinated health care system." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography.

"Baldinger holds a degree in urban planning and . . . [one] in political science from the University of Minnesota, so that he has observed at first hand the coming into being of one of the most advanced organizations for dealing with metropolitan issues. He has talked with most of the leading personalities. He is careful to withhold judgment on a venture only three years old. But he can explain knowledgeably the forces—perhaps unique—that created this [unit of government]. . . . He can [also] explain how and why it has worked better than anyone hoped. . . . [His book] stresses the indispensable linkage of politics and planning which the participants have recognized. . . . This report and analysis are highly recommended." C. S. Ascher

Ann Am Acad 398:206 N '71 260w

Choice 8:731 J1 '71 210w

BALDWIN, JAMES. No name in the street. 197p $5.95 Dial press

301.45 Negroes. U.S.—Race relations LC 71-37456

This is "a collection of autobiographical fragments . . . and a statement of [the author's] current position. . . . [It] contains episodes from Mr Baldwin's youth in Harlem, self-exile in Europe, and involvement in the early days of the Civil Rights movement. . . . [To this] he adds some reminiscences of Martin Luther King, and of a brief brush with Hollywood." (TLS)

"More eloquent than W. E. B. DuBois, more penetrating than Richard Wright, and more involved than either, James Baldwin in this new statement stands as the arch-accuser of white civilization and of the United States in particular. . . . [He] writes that 'as social and moral and political and sexual entities, white Americans are probably the sickest and certainly the most dangerous people, of any color, to be found in the world today.' One must brace oneself emotionally to read such an indictment, but one should, for with all its intemperance and lack of common pity, it contains truths not to be denied. . . . Baldwin is right in saying that the black and white confrontation is crucial . . . but wrong in not perceiving that there are millions of thoughtful white Americans intent that reconciliation shall work." Edward Weeks

Atlantic 229:108 Je '72 550w

Reviewed by Cornelia Holbert

Best Sell 32:111 Je 1 '72 1000w

Choice 9:1209 N '72 200w

Reviewed by R. W. Haney

Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 21 '72 700w

Economist 243:76 Ap 22 '72 500w

Reviewed by Janet Freedman

Library J 97:1453 Ap 15 '72 160w

Reviewed by Todd Gitlin

Nation 214:469 Ap 10 '72 1600w

Reviewed by David Brudnoy

Nat R 24:750 J1 7 '72 900w

Reviewed by Colin McGlashan

New Statesman 83:531 Ap 21 '72 400w

Reviewed by Murray Kempton

N Y Rev of Books 18:3 Je 29 '72 1300w

"Baldwin's prose is a consummate literary adaptation of the stylistic features of black preaching. . . . [The style] seeks to communicate known religious truth through the emotions and senses. Baldwin uses the same style for secular purposes. . . . [His] intent is not to explicate but to dramatize. What is important about Baldwin's essays is the style and eloquence with which he evokes the torment and human devastation of American racism and his ability to make us feel, if only momentarily, that redemption is possible." Mel Watkins

N Y Times Bk R p17 My 28 '72 4000w

Reviewed by P. S. Prescott

Newsweek 79:85 My 29 '72 850w

"[This] reconstruction of James Baldwin's activities and states of mind during the Sixties . . . is less powerful, rhetorically, than The Fire Next Time [BRD 1963], and, although self-referential, contains nothing to match the family remembrances in Notes of a Native Son [BRD 1955]. The writer is restless, rushes himself, seems bored with the drill of conventional dramatization. . . . Yet, despite the book's faults, despite the trials and afflictions of his spokespersonship, this author retains a place in an extremely select group: that composed of the few genuinely indispensable American writers." Benjamin DeMott

Sat R 55:63 My 27 '72 2750w

"[This] is not an easy book to read: nor can it have been easy to write. . . . [The author] has chosen to fragment his material and wed it to a polemic in the high rhetorical style of Black nationalism: 'The Western party is over and the white man's sun has set. Period.' This desertion of formal design . . . in such a fastidious writer can hardly be anything but deliberate. The confusion and despair that Mr Baldwin now feels is reflected in the form in which he has chosen to cast his material. . . . This awkward, personal book, while not one of the major achievements of James Baldwin the writer, is clearly of fundamental significance for James Baldwin the human being."

TLS p469 Ap 28 '72 850w

BALDWIN, ROBERT E. Nontariff distortions of international trade. 210p $6.95 Brookings

332 Commerce

ISBN 0-8157-0786-X LC 78-109436

This study provides a "discussion of nontariff distortions and makes proposals for measures aimed at reducing their scope and extent. Included are quotas and restrictive state-trading policies; export subsidies and taxes; discriminatory government and private procurement policies; selective indirect taxes; selective domestic subsidies and aids; restrictive customs procedures; anti-dumping regulations; and restrictive administrative and technical regulations." (Ann Am Acad) Index.

"Baldwin's book fills a lacuna in the literature of international economics. The study assumes special importance in view of recent increases in nontariff barriers, and proposals made for their future extension, especially in the United States. . . . Whatever the scope of application of nontariff barriers in the future . . . [the author] is to be complimented for the painstaking collection of information. . . . Readers of this book, whether economists or political scientists, will increase their understanding of international economic policy in the industrial world in general, and in the United States in particular." Bela Balassa

Ann Am Acad 400:217 Mr '72 420w

"[This is] the first complete treatment of nontariff barriers to international trade to be found in the literature. . . . Throughout, the discussion is of very high quality which, together with its breadth and depth of coverage, renders this volume the standard work in the field. As this is a rapidly evolving field of empirical and theoretical research, new developments will eventually date the book. At present, however, it represents a mandatory acquisition for both teaching and research libraries."

Choice 8:262 Ap '71 150w

BALESTRINO, PHILIP. Hot as an ice cube; il. by Tomie de Paola. 33p $3.75 Crowell 536 Heat—Juvenile literature. Temperature —Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-690-40414-X LC 70-139092
The author "explains heat action as molecular movement . . . [and shows] why heat expands and cold contracts." (Library J) "Ages seven to nine." (Sat R)

"[This book is] aimed at the age range where reading is still a freshly acquired art. Getting any significant part of the kinetic-molecular theory across to this age group is certainly worthwhile, but success is hard to evaluate. I think Mr. Balestrino has done a very good job. . . . The distinction between heat and temperature comes across quite well." H. C. Stubbs

Horn Bk 48:289 Je '72 120w

"Balestrino's mention of the existence (to a small degree) of heat in ice cubes suggests the importance of relativity in science. Amusing black-and-white sketches accented now and then with variant combinations of yellow and blue into green and brown clarify and expand the text." E. C. Trimble

Library J 96:4195 D 15 '71 60w

"[This is a] brief, clear presentation of the topic." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 54:60 N 13 '71 30w

BALK, ALFRED, ed. Our troubled press; ten years of the Columbia journalism review; ed. by Alfred Balk and James Boylan. 393p il $10 Little

070.4 Journalism. Columbia journalism review
LC 75-161855

"Articles selected from the Columbia journalism review, whose goal is 'to assess the performance of journalism in all its forms, to call attention to its shortcomings and strengths, and to help define—or redefine—standards of honest, responsible service.' . . . Articles cover misleading news coverage, biased and monopolistic ownership and inadequate writing including . . . the compounding of public confusion in the drug scene, the failure to cover both sides of race relations . . . the mis-use of media by government officials and media owners, the adulteration of news with pseudo-news or unlabeled advertising." (Choice)

"An excellent collection. . . . Selections illustrate the magazine's attempt to be a conscience and a goad to stimulate higher standards and better practices. A readable, lively, provocative, and, in the long run, optimistic book, for those who are interested in mass media as well as those who believe in the value of criticism and self-examination in an institution vital to a democracy."

Choice 9:199 Ap '72 130w

"This selection of some of the best from . . . [this] fine and too little read journal presents a stunning and not very pretty picture—documented and beautifully written, mainly by people whose basic sympathies are with the press. . . . This brilliant anthology, apart from its obvious essentiality for all journalists or would-be journalists (not to mention publishers), is 'must' reading for anyone seeking honest insights on our society and its leaders as they have often gone unreported during the past decade. . . . An essential library purchase." Eric Moon

Library J 96:3128 O 1 '71 200w

BALL, JOHN. Five pieces of jade. 277p $5.95 Little

LC 70-175477

The black detective of the Pasadena police, Virgil Tibbs is called in to investigate the murder of an elderly collector of rare and ancient jade. To complicate matters, the victim's ward, Yumeko, is an ainoko, the illegitimate child of a Japanese woman and a black GI. In the midst of the racial compote, the Red Chinese are suspected of flooding California with a new and improved narcotic which gives a delicious high but is instantly addictive. Among the suspects are other collectors of jade—another Chinese, a lawyer, a financier." (Library J)

"The whole narrative reads like the script of a Jack Webb production. Too many details about the police in Los Angeles and Pasadena, too many indicated but incomplete clues, too many phone calls. Maybe the chief emphasis was intended to fall on Tibbs and sex, which steps in at every chance. Only fair reading for anyone who is not a Tibbs aficionado."

Best Sell 32:22 Ap 1 '72 150w

Reviewed by H. C. Veit

Library J 97:521 F 1 '72 120w

"There is nothing wrong with the plotting. But there is a great deal wrong with the stiff writing, which reads as though it was written by a foreigner with the aid of a 10-cent dictionary. Says Tibbs to a suspect: 'I understand your reluctance to continue and I believe I know the reason for it. I want to ask you one more question nonetheless.' This kind of bright dialogue goes all through the book. When, by the way, is the last time anybody used 'nonetheless' in actual speech?" Newgate Calender

N Y Times Bk R p40 Mr 12 '72 70w

"Tibbs is as much a model of perfection as the late Wimsey, and perfection today strikes priggish. But Tibbs is also a good detective who actually ratiocinates, and hereby solves a nice tight murder puzzle involving some expertise in jade, acquiring—it seems—a splendidly exotic yet highly suitable mate in the process."

TLS p1235 O 13 '72 60w

BALL, M. MARGARET. The "Open" commonwealth. (Duke univ. Commonwealth studies center. Publication, no39) 286p $8.75 Duke univ. press

341.24 Commonwealth of Nations
ISBN 0-8223-0285-3 LC 78-171937

By "open" the author refers to the freedom of members of the organization to contract other ties. She examines the political, social and economic framework of the association, which in 1970 contained more than 30 members, and gives instances of consultation and cooperation in these fields. A separate chapter is devoted to the Commonwealth Secretariat. Bibliography. Index.

"Other scholars have attempted the same survey, but none has done so well as Ball in showing how the Commonwealth Secretariat can build upon an on-going network of international ties which exist between Commonwealth member nations. The book is, unfortunately, rather dull and certainly specialized; it is under-researched, in that there are many articles and reports relevant to the subject not listed in the bibliography."

Choice 9:278 Ap '72 100w

"This volume is very informative and presents an up-to-date examination of the framework and organization of the Commonwealth of Nations. It is especially rich in information concerning the administrative instrumentalities of the contemporary Commonwealth. . . . The more interesting parts of the book center on this aspect of an 'open' Commonwealth. Technical assistance, foreign aid, political consultation and economic interests remain important links between these nations, but the author concludes, . . . the general line of Commonwealth development of the future will be closer to that of other international organizations than to the family relationships of the past." Recommended." J. H. Thompson

Library J 97:879 Mr 1 '72 130w

BALL, PATRICIA M. The science of aspects: the changing role of fact in the work of Coleridge, Ruskin and Hopkins. 163p il $8 Oxford

820.9 Coleridge, Samuel Taylor. Ruskin, John. Hopkins, Gerard Manley. Nature in literature
ISBN 0-485-11123-3 LC 70-858588

This study is concerned with "the shifting premises and purposes of observation in Coleridge, Ruskin, and Hopkins. . . . [The author] first discusses Coleridge's tendency to view all objects as 'essentially fixed and dead' and therefore useful only as symbols and as means for subjectively projecting into them his own thoughts and passions. Then she shows the contrasting development in Ruskin of the anti-subjective 'science of aspects,' i.e. close perception of the object in itself and for itself . . . generally what Hopkins means by inscape. But Hopkins also shows Romantic influence by 'subordinating the physical world to the needs of his moral vision.' Thus the relationship of the three is 'reciprocal' not 'linear,' Hopkins fusing the Coleridgean and Ruskinian strains." (Choice)

BALL, P. M.—Continued

"Although tightly organized and profusely illustrated from primary sources, the book is slow going, and the author is not as lucid on Hopkins as on the others. Recommended."

Choice 9:56 Mr '72 170w

"[Ball] has a shrewd sense of what is going on in the technique of observation of each of these three writers, but her insistence on treating them as truly comparable betrays a disharmony in standards, 'the animating presences' as Henry James called them, behind her responses." William Walsh

Encounter 38:61 D '71 300w

"By comparison with Coleridge and Hopkins, Ruskin appears as a timid and poorly integrated figure. Miss Ball accounts for this by pointing to the crucial differences between their attitudes to God. Living in the backwash of the Romantic movement, Ruskin felt the pressure to produce impressive work, 'as good as Byron's, only pious,' though his more natural predilection were to discriminate stones. The account of the demise of Ruskin as a poet is excellent. Hopkins, on the other hand, was a different man, born at a different time, and was able to make the most of the dual inheritance of Romanticism and faithfulness to fact: not Gradgrind's facts, but a body of material inherently charged with the grandeur of God. . . . [This book] is eminently worth reading for anyone interested in seeing the manner in which the 'two cultures' (now supposedly so separate) could be fused by imaginative minds."

TLS p1280 O 15 '71 800w

BALLARD, EDWARD G. Philosophy at the crossroads. 305p $10 La. state univ. press

190 Philosophy, Modern

ISBN 0-8071-0523-6

LC 72-130663

This study offers "interpretations of Descartes, Hume, Kant, Husserl, and Heidegger. . . . Seeking to understand philosophy's tensions today and its future prospects, Ballard conceives it as 'the interpretation of the transitions over the significant boundaries or crossroads of human life and concern,' and he delineates two contemporary strains. One stresses objective completeness—exactitude; the other, the significance of the human subject—insight." (Choice)

"The author's clarification of Husserl is helpful, and his sympathetic exposition of Heidegger is most useful, for it is neither that of a devotee nor that of a needling critic. No contemporary analysts are treated though their uncritical acceptance of technological culture is recognized. Nor do Aquinas, Hegel, or Marx enter the 'dialogue.' A well planned and documented study with a pithy originality. Very well written too."

Choice 9:378 My '72 180w

"Ballard's essay is recommended as a useful sketch of one aspect of the history of philosophy presented in a moderately popular manner." J. M. Perreault

Library J 97:1018 Mr 15 '72 140w

BALLINGER, LOUISE BOWEN. Sign, symbol & form [by] Louise Bowen Ballinger & Raymond A. Ballinger. 191p il col il $18.50 Van Nostrand-Reinhold

659.13 Signs and signboards. Signs and symbols

LC 73-163314

The authors, associated with the Philadelphia College of Art, present "photographs of signs and symbols found . . . primarily in Europe [and some in] . . . the Eastern U.S. There is a brief explanatory text for each of the eight sections." (Library J) Bibliography.

"An exciting and profusely illustrated book about urban communication as it manifests itself by means of signs and symbols seen in the street. The rich material covers a wide range of aspects of nonverbal signs and symbols—from actual form (the golden pretzel of the bakery) to unclassified forms (of flowers and plants), and decorative signs—including materials and fabrication, lettering and numerals, architectural signage, and signage for travel and direction. . . . Should be of particular appeal to planners, urban designers, and others interested in urban communication as a means of enriching the environment."

Choice 9:797 S '72 160w

"The illustrations are imaginative and well executed, bearing out the authors' thesis that you can tell more about a people from their signs than from their words. There are numerous books in this general area . . . yet nothing quite compares. A wonderful, although not essential, acquisition." Bill Katz

Library J 97:2080 Je 1 '72 100w

BALLINGER, RAYMOND A., Jr. auth. Sign, symbol & form. See Ballinger, L. B.

BALLO, GUIDO. Lucio Fontana. 268p il col il $30 Praeger

703.04 Fontana, Lucio. Art, Abstract

LC 78-154353

This book describes the life and work of the abstractionist sculptor and painter who founded the spatial movement in art, "based on the concept of the unity of time and space. Fontana's works were typified by smooth canvases through which he made perforations and incisions. . . . [his] monograph traces Fontana's artistic record: his early training in Milan, his sculptured works and drawings, his association with the Altamira art school in Argentina, and the spatial works which have come to characterize his art." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Scholars interested in Fontana's career will find the book very useful. Disappointing, however, is Ballo's failure to set adequately Fontana's development into the context of 20th-century art and the failure in his resolve 'to reconstruct the psychic personality of the artist' and to relate the findings to his creations. . . . Other objections: 1) the maddening absence in the text of figure number references to the illustrations; 2) the frequent omission of location, medium, and dimensions of the art works; 3) the abstruseness of language."

Choice 9:49 Mr '72 160w

"The illustrations, many in color, are generously and lavishly presented throughout the book, and they complement the text written by the poet, critic, and teacher Ballo, who was close to Fontana for many years. Bonus features of the book include all the spatial manifestoes in English translation, a full bibliography, some of Fontana's unpublished papers, and chronological data on the artist's life. This is a very fine acquisition for all art collections." W. J. Dane

Library J 96:3998 D 1 '71 180w

"Though not without its share of art-world jargon, Mr. Ballo's text is written with evident affection for its subject, and the subject itself turns out to have had a more interesting artistic development than most of us, who knew only this Italian modernist's late work, had ever imagined. . . . The ample and well-produced plates bring us a great deal of unfamiliar work." Hilton Kramer

N Y Times Bk R p74 D 5 '71 100w

BALY, DENIS. Atlas of the biblical world, [by] Denis Baly and A. D. Tushingham; consultants: R. P. Roland de Vaux [and others]. 208p il col il maps $12.95 World pub.

220.9 Bible—Geography. Atlases, Historical.

Near East—Description and travel

LC 71-107641

In addition to "information about the political and historical geography . . . [of] the lands of the Bible . . . [this atlas also] contains information about the . . . physical characteristics of the land, plant life, and climate. . . . The book begins with the Middle East as a whole, discusses the effects of the climate and natural regions of this larger area, and then focuses on the Levant, and finally on Jerusalem itself in the final chapter." (Choice) Bibliography. Index to text. Index to maps.

"This new atlas is . . . unique. More than any other, it concentrates in a scientific way on the geology of the entire Ancient Near East, Anatolia, Egypt, Mesopotamia and Persia. Geographical terms are always carefully defined. . . . A special feature is the chapter on Jerusalem by Prof. Tushingham, associate director of the Jerusalem excavations carried out by Miss Kathleen Kenyon. This is the most authoritative discussion of the archaeology of Jerusalem in any atlas."

America 127:447 N 25 '72 310w

"Both authors are eminently qualified specialists in their fields, and they have produced an excellent atlas containing 48 attractive and informative maps, many in beautiful color. The text is illustrated with 69 photographs never published before, 16 of which are in color. Excellent bibliographies for study of cartography, geography, and archaeology. . . . Many students of the Bible will find this book extremely interesting and helpful."

Choice 8:1569 F '72 180w

"The co-developers of this atlas had not only the right concept (start from scratch) and their publisher's support, but also the help of expert consultants and their own skills to back them; the result is a really worthwhile volume."

Christian Century 88:1237 O 20 '71 80w

BAMBOROUGH, J. B. Ben Jonson. 191p
$4.50; pa $2 Hillary house
828 Jonson, Ben
LC [79-518868]

The author "seeks to show the development of Jonson's methods and artistic temperament as continuous through . . . [his] plays, poems, masques, and prose works." (Choice)

"The section on the masque is possibly the best short discussion on the subject available. Bamborough incorporates standard and reasoned interpretations of the works. . . . Especially notable is the fact that Bamborough emphasizes the theatrical nature of Jonson's plays, a fact often obscured by scholarship. Because Jonson is, no doubt, the most difficult Renaissance dramatist to understand and appreciate, there is a need for good introductory books—and this is a good one."

Choice 7:1506 Ja '71 170w

TLS p1187 O 16 '70 600w

BANDINELLI, RANUCCIO BIANCHI. See Bianchi Bandinelli, R.

BANHAM, REYNER. Los Angeles: the architecture of four ecologies. 256p 11 maps $6.95
Harper

720.9794 Architecture, American. Los Angeles—Description
LC 72-148430

The author describes the architecture to be found in the mountains, plains, beaches and freeways of the city. He attempts to show "the development of each of these areas . . . in historical and sociological perspective along with . . . descriptions of each pattern of settlement." (Arch Forum) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Other treatments of Los Angeles have suffered from excessive negativism; this one begins to fall apart because of its unbridled positivism. . . . I find the author's ecological approach to architecture fascinating and instructive—consideration of a city as the interrelation of people to their natural and man-made environment rather than narrower, esthetically pretentious discourses on 'Architecture' with a capital 'A.' . . . [The study] is not lacking traditional architectural history treatment. In four chapters scattered through the book, Banham skillfully and concisely summarizes material dealt with much more thoroughly by other sources. . . . City watchers and designers in general and Los Angeles lovers and haters in particular should not fail to read, ponder and enjoy this perceptive and enjoyable document." J. S. Margolies

Arch Forum 135:10 N '71 1850w

Reviewed by Richard Schickel

Commentary 52:97 N '71 1950w

"A rousing cheer . . . for Professor Banham's new guide to the City of the Angels. . . . The major achievement of the book is to put L.A. in its proper setting at last as a great historic city. Like Venice, it is unique and unrepeatable. . . . The loose structure of the book, interspersing straight injections of architectural history with monographs on the 'four ecologies' and their sub-systems allows the reader to simulate in a fashion the random movement of Angelenos within their city; sampling, rejecting and browsing at will. But such a structure also shows up the inevitable omissions. . . . In particular, the history of L.A.'s economic base, though touched upon at various points, is never clearly investigated. . . . [Yet the study] remains an indispensable introduction to one of the major environmental achievements of the 20th century." Stephen Mullin

New Statesman 81:500 Ap 9 '71 950w

Reviewed by Francis Carney

N Y Rev of Books 18:26 Je 1 '72 3000w

"Rumours of a prose-poem exalting the apotheosis of fifty-lane freeways as attained at Los Angeles—warnings of a hymn of praise that would instantly instigate Ban-the-Banham marches by all true British environment-lovers—are exaggerated. This book is a stimulating piece of thoughtful journalism. Los Angeles is a 'planners' whipping-boy . . . the place where a petrol-station can look like a mosque, a mosque like a snack-bar, and a snack-bar like nothing on earth. Good architects, mad architects and non-architects have had a field day there. So inevitably Professor Banham, with his nose for architectural news, was bound to celebrate Los Angeles: it is just his cup of Coca-Cola. The celebration is enjoyable, often shrewd, sometimes superficial and diffuse, as travellers' tales are."

TLS p372 Ap 2 '71 1150w

BANKS, J. A. Marxist sociology in action: ■ sociological critique of the Marxist approach to industrial relations. 324p $11.50 Stackpole bks.

301.5 Industrial relations, Marx, Karl
ISBN 0-571-09418-X LC 72-134898

Concerned with "the influence of Marxism on trade unionism in Western Europe . . . Banks discusses the main features and problems of industrial relations by reference to Marxist conceptions. He argues that the real test of the Marxist interpretation is whether it is falsified or confirmed by—as he puts it—'testable propositions about the behaviour of members of identifiable trade unions employed by identifiable business organisations'. . . . [He then examines] the experience of trade union organization among British steel workers to test certain propositions of Marxism." (TLS)

"[Banks deals] with problems which are either overlooked by many non-Marxist writers on industrial relations or treated by most Marxist writers in a traditional, dogmatic way. Banks's most important contribution in this respect is his analysis of the evolution of working-class political attitudes. . . . His analysis [is] presented with great knowledge and deep sociological insight. . . . What seems to be particularly relevant in Marxism nowadays are not so much the answers and solutions offered by Marx, but the questions that he asked, the factors and variables he regarded as essential, and the analytical procedures he used. It is exactly this general aspect of Banks's interest in Marxism that makes his study so valuable to students of industrial relations." Maria Hirszowicz

Am Pol Sci R 66:612 Je '72 480w

"Banks provides a superficial discussion of what he mistakenly and selectively believes to be Marxist concepts as they relate to contemporary British industrial relations, and concludes that there is a need to 'amend' the Marxist framework of ideas. One can understand this conclusion only by reading his discussion of such immense topics as 'Class consciousness and politics,' 'The vanguard of the proletariat,' 'The revolutionary elite,' etc., which he attempts to cover in a few pages and does each little justice. His reading of the British scene—both social and industrial—is remarkable in that his arguments are largely premised on the idea that Britain is, indeed, a socialist—rather than a capitalist—state."

Choice 8:1484 Ja '72 160w

"This book completes an historical case study of the English iron and steel industry from the early 1800's to the present, and thus gives us the first study of its kind to analyze change over time as it relates to the Marxist system of ideas. . . . [Despite some] criticism, this is an important book. It is the first sociological study of Marxist ideas on social change supported by a comprehensive empirical analysis covering an entire historical epoch of industrial relations. . . . The author has provided clear introductions and conclusions to most chapters, especially those serving as links between the three major parts of the book. The writing is clear and free of jargon, though somewhat terse. . . . There are separate subject and author indexes. The price is high but worth the investment for the interested reader." Paul Montagna

Contemp Sociol 1:71 Ja '72 1200w

BANKS, J. A.—Continued

"Mr Banks's book represents a brave attempt to tackle a fascinating problem, but it never quite comes off. He seems at times to lose his way either in unnecessary detail or in sociological abstraction. . . . His canvas is too small. Conclusions ought not to be drawn from one small area of activity. Marxism must rest or fall on its wider social analysis and judgments. . . . Mr. Banks deserves credit for tackling the difficult and neglected question of Marxism and industrial relations. There is much in his book which is stimulating, and he clearly has read widely in the relevant literature."

TLS p1488 D 11 '71 950w

BAR-ZOHAR, MICHAEL. Spies in the Promised Land; Iser Harel and the Israeli Secret service; tr. from the French by Monroe Stearns. 292p $7.95 Houghton

327 Secret service. Spies. Espionage, Israeli
ISBN 0-395-13641-5 LC 72-184117

An account of the "establishment and growth of the Israeli secret service from independence in 1948 until the resignation of Iser Harel, protagonist, in 1963." (Best Sell)

"This is an intensely interesting and exciting account." R. E. O'Brien

Best Sell 52:161 J1 1 '72 550w

"The pro-Establishment author freely expresses his political opinions on Sharett, Mapam, the CIA, Nasser, and the Russians; and he makes the Mossad and Shin-Bet out to be a bunch of highly competent and heroic boy scouts. Unrestrained biases make the book execrable history." D. W. Littlefield

Library J 97:1806 My 15 '72 90w

"The book . . . tells of the C.I.A. backing of Nasser and of an Israeli plot to bomb the British and American installations in Egypt in order to put the blame on Nasser."

N Y Times Bk R p[29] My 21 '72 120w

"[This account] brings no illumination to the . . . 1967 operations [of Israel's intelligence services]. The book is more a biography of Iser Harel, who built up Israel's intelligence network after independence and headed it until his resignation in 1963. This is an anecdotal record of espionage successes and failures, and brings us back to the world of drama and quotation-marks."

TLS p1222 O 13 '72 260w

BARAKA, IMAMU AMIRI, ed. African congress; a documentary of the first modern Pan-African congress; ed. with an introd. by Imamu Amiri Baraka. 512p $10; pa $4.95 Morrow

301.45 Negroes—Social conditions. Congress of African People
LC 78-159735

"The first Congress of African People held in Atlanta in 1970 brought together black cultural and political nationalists and sympathizers. The results of their labors are brought together in this volume. . . . Within the . . . divisions of 'Speeches' and 'workshops,' and subdivisions within the latter, everything uttered at or presented to the congress . . . [is] included." (Library J)

"[This] is a sort of grab bag of good, bad, and indifferent analyses of various aspects of the black condition and the black world to come. Only assiduous searching will uncover a few gems of prose here and there, such as poet Don L. Lee's splendid 'Dynamite Voices: Black Poets of the 1970's.' The work perhaps has its greatest value as a reference source of black nationalist ideas. Any effort to read it straight through leads to a state of almost catatonic boredom." Norman Lederer

Library J 97:1022 Mr 15 '72 150w

Reviewed by Martin Kilson

N Y Times Bk R p27 Mr 12 '72 750w

BARASCH, MOSHE. Crusader figural sculpture in the Holy Land; twelfth century examples from Acre, Nazareth and Belvoir Castle. 237p $15 Rutgers univ. press

734 Sculpture. Romanesque
ISBN 0-8135-6680-8 LC 74-129513

This is a "study of five related groups of sculptures, survivals of twelfth-century efforts by the Crusaders to build Christian monuments at appropriate sites in the Holy Land. . . . Dr. Barasch deduces that these sculptures are directly related to French Provencal sculpture of the first half of the twelfth century, and were produced by French artisans between 1150 and 1190. . . . The five groups of figural sculpture [range] from baptismal fonts to door frames and capitals." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Some of the examples have not been previously published; others such as the capitals and two heads from Nazareth receive their first extended treatment. All are fully illustrated with excellent black-and-white photographs. Barasch . . . writes with authority. . . . His careful analysis of form and content, if at times overly involved, provides a useful demonstration of method for the undergraduate major. The new material and interpretations will be valuable to the scholar."

Choice 9:357 My '72 150w

"In view of the disparate character of the sculptures, Barasch wisely refrains from sweeping conclusions, making only intelligent proposals for their significance to the developing picture of crusader art as a whole. The photos are adequate, but detail is often lost due to the harsh, strong lighting. Nonetheless, this is the best and most comprehensive publication on the Nazareth pieces, along with the new works."

Jaroslav Folda

Library J 97:1306 Ap 1 '72 160w

BARBER, JAMES DAVID. The presidential character; predicting performance in the White House. 479p $10 Prentice-Hall

973 Presidents—U.S.—Case studies
SBN 0-13-697458-9 LC 72-1134

The author "isolates and describes four basic character types exemplified by recent Presidents: passive-positive (Taft and Harding), passive-negative (Coolidge and Eisenhower), active-positive (F. D. Roosevelt, Truman, and Kennedy), and active-negative (Wilson, Hoover, Johnson, and Nixon). The 'positive' and 'negative' aspects refer to a President's relish or distaste for his role. Barber provides evidence of these characteristics in the future Presidents' first adult successes. . . . Index." (Library J)

Reviewed by A. S. Nanes

Best Sell 32:226 Ag 15 '72 800w

"Barber's long-awaited psychological study . . . promises to be at once a well-received popular book and an important scholarly contribution. . . . [He] presents a fascinating, well-written set of biographical sketches of the 10 Presidents, a detailed (and inevitably controversial) negative evaluation of President Nixon (as a passive-negative), and a theory of leadership. All in all, a highly significant book. A must for all collections."

Choice 9:1350 D '72 250w

"[Barber] finds that passive Presidents run the risk of letting the country drift into trouble and active-negative leaders may bring on disaster because of their compulsion to persist in dangerous policies regardless of the results. He also concludes that active-positive Presidents, who change their policies when necessary, are best able to deal with the real world. The author feels that analyses of future Presidential candidates should be conducted, using his guidelines, to predict their likely performance under stress. This is a fascinating work for the most part, though it is sometimes repetitious. Its thesis seems to have some validity, though other interpretations of Presidential character are certainly possible." C. E. Wadsworth

Library J 97:2405 J1 '72 120w

Reviewed by Robert Sherrill

Nation 215:21 J1 10 '72 2100w

Reviewed by Bruce Mazlish

N Y Times Bk R p[30] O 8 '72 1300w

"Barber's own bibliography is too selective; his sources for active-positive Presidents include too many unabashedly sympathetic accounts . . . while for his active-negative types he draws from an imbalanced selection of unfriendly sources. And, finally, it's one thing to analyze with hindsight . . . but when it comes to predicting presidential behavior, which Barber suggests voters should try to do, how do we know which traumatic and/or happy childhood experiences are the important ones? But these are negligible shortcomings of Barber's approach, and I think he has written a book as important as Garry Wills's Nixon Agonistes [BRD 1971]." Bill Moyers

Sat R 55:49 Ag 5 '72 1700w

BARBER, NOEL. The war of the running dogs; the Malayan emergency: 1948-1960. 284p p1 $7.95 Weybright & Talley 959.51 Malaya—History. Communism—Malaya. Guerrilla warfare
LC 78-188017

This is an account of the "postwar Communist insurrection [in Malaya] against the British colonial government. [It] focuses on the roles of prominent individuals on both sides." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Lael Pritchard
Best Sell 32:207 Ag 1 '72 480w
Choice 9:365 S '72 170w

"Some readers may discern a trivial note at moments in [this book] . . . others an adulatory tone; none will be left in doubt how Sir Robert Thompson acquired his world (and White House) reputation as hounder of 'CTs' (communist terrorists). . . . What were the true reasons for Britain's success in Malaya? Mr Barber does not attempt an analysis: there were aspects of the affair not susceptible to his episodic treatment, which instead presents the evidence for the rest of us to draw our own inferences from."

Economist 240:53 Jl 17 '71 650w

"The description of the various measures taken to win the loyalty of the people, particularly the Chinese, to the government is based mainly on official sources and reflects their bias. . . . Because of the author's talents as a storyteller the book should appeal to popular tastes, but it is not likely to find much favor with those better versed in the modern political history of Malaysia." C. R. Bryant

Library J 97:1319 Ap 1 '72 100w

"In telling the story of these 12 years of what was virtually a war . . . [Barber] repeats—and with great skill—the technique of a reconstruction of events through the eyes of some of the leading participants. . . . [He] draws heavily, although by no means exclusively, upon actual British expatriates caught up in major outside events as material for the graphic and dramatic presentation of his historical fact. . . . It should also be said to his credit that the carefully researched background, which is skillfully interwoven with the more dramatic parts of the narrative, vividly re-creates the whole ethos of the time. . . . The weakness of Barber's approach is that his treatment of the Malayan Emergency is episodic." Hugh Howse
New Statesman 82:210 Ag 13 '71 1200w

"Barber insists, both in his title and in his text, what was ordinarily referred to as 'the Malayan Emergency' was not a little war. . . . [He] has studied all the relevant publications both official and unofficial and has compiled from participants an anthology of splendid stories. . . . His judgments on the leaders of both sides are shrewd and illuminating. By his description of the fighting and his analysis of the rival ideologies, he forces on the reader the conclusion that it was a war which had to be won for the sake of the freedom and independence of South-East Asia."

TLS p1097 S 10 '71 1400w

BARBER, RICHARD. Samuel Pepys Esquire: Secretary of the Admiralty to King Charles & King James the Second. 64p il col il $3.95 Univ. of Calif. press
B or 92 Pepys. Samuel
ISBN 0-520-01763-3 LC 70-123622

This book about the diarist "is presented as four essays which form a catalog of the exhibition . . . held in London in November 1970. The first, A most Excellent Picture of It, deals with all the surviving portraits of Pepys, their history and authenticity. . . . Great Changes Here examines Pepys' part in the Restoration and the founding of his fortunes. . . . The Pleasure of the Play reflects the diarist's interest in theaters and spectacles, including the most dramatic of all, the Great Fire. The . . . last section, And So Home, offers a reconstruction of part of Pepys' home by Julia Trevelyan Oman, the designer of the exhibition." (Publisher's note) Chronology.

"The first [essay] . . . is, within the limitations of space and the book's purpose, a comprehensive and critical account. . . . The last two essays . . . illuminate aspects of [Pepys'] life less intensively treated elsewhere, and (like the first essay) can be read with profit and pleasure by expert and amateur alike. . . .

The essays reveal a substantial acquaintance with Restoration England. They are gracefully written, and the physical make-up of the book is singularly attractive." W. L. Sachse
Am Hist R 76:1544 D '71 320w

"[The value of] this slight book . . . lies wholly in the illustrations, which are well chosen and well reproduced. There are 13 representations of Pepys himself, as well as portraits (some of them very familiar) of notable contemporaries. What promises to be the most valuable and original section is a reconstruction of a part of Pepys' home; but here American readers will be disappointed, for our edition appears to lack about 20 illustrations included in the overseas version. The reconstruction is therefore represented only by a photograph of an oak bookcase, 'identical to Pepys' own.' Despite this unfortunate omission, the book is a useful pictorial supplement to the new edition [BRD 1970, 1971] of The Diary." E. Pearlman

Library J 96:1603 My 1 '71 100w

BARBOUR, ALAN G. A thousand and one delights. 164p il $7.95; pa $3.95 Macmillan (N Y)

791.43 Moving picture plays—History and criticism
LC 72-165568

The cover subtitle is "An Affectionate Pictorial History of Those Fantastic Films of the '40s, with Fond Recollections of the Best Saturday Afternoon Serials." . . . [Thus,] the author has concentrated on B movies and serials and has put together a . . . collection of stills. There are short introductions to the 12 . . . sections [of the book]." (Library J)

"A few color stills would have been welcome; but, on the other hand, no errors in captioning were found (a feat rarer than one might think), and the photos are of very high quality." Jerry Cao

Library J 97:82 Ja 1 '72 100w

"Genuine nostalgia. . . . Despite the corn in the captions it is hard to resist the fun Mr. Barbour asks you to share." Paul Showers
N Y Times Bk R p16 D 5 '71 40w

BARDI, P. M. Architecture: the world we build. 128p il col il $5.95 Watts, F.

720 Architecture—Juvenile literature
ISBN 531-02104-1 LC 77-153826

This survey of architecture extending "from 'the age of stone' to the twentieth century's technology [covers] Egyptian, Roman, Greek, Gothic Moorish, Polynesian, Renaissance, Mexican, Baroque, [and] nineteenth-century machine-age [buildings]. It concludes with a chapter on the . . . possibilities of future architecture." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index of names. "Grades five to eight." (Library J)

"An encyclopedia-style presentation of facts and dates summarizes man's building. . . . Profusely illustrated—though the pictures are occasionally an annoying distance from the descriptive text. Recommended for 7th grade up." Mrs. J. G. Gray

Best Sell 32:284 S 15 '72 180w [YA]

"This overgeneralized, superficial account . . . completely mismanages the subject of architecture for young readers. The text is a clutter of architectural chitchat, photos, and drawings. Extremely brief chapters covering historical periods, geographical areas, and general architectural information proceed without continuity. Despite the numerous illustrations, variations in Greek temples, Gothic and Romanesque churches are not depicted. American architecture and the structures of Latin America, Oceania, and Africa receive minimal attention. There is no subject index, insufficient explanation of italicized words, and too much subjective opinion." M. J. Shapiro
Library J 97:4070 D 15 '72 150w

"Appreciation of architecture is such a subjective matter that there is a temptation to praise or criticize a book on the subject just because it includes—or fails to include—certain types of design and building. Mr. Bardi is disarming in that he seeks to explain the old and the new. His survey ranges from caves and Maori huts through medieval castles to modern expressionism; from stone temples and Inca cities to the work of Corbusier, Lloyd and beyond. Splendidly reproduced illustrations, many in colour, lend support to the arguments."

TLS p815 Jl 14 '72 100w

BARFIELD, LAWRENCE. Northern Italy before Rome. 208p il maps $12.50 Praeger 913.37 Man. Prehistoric. Italy—Antiquities
LC 75-163100

This account of the area "between the Alps and the Apennines [covers] . . . the prehistory and protohistory of the area. . . . The presentation follows conventional classificatory lines, culture by culture, . . . [in an attempt] to round out the picture with what is known of the economic and social development of the successive phases." (TLS) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"Barfield has masterfully pulled together a great number of detailed reports of difficult access, although sometimes the details on the Palaeolithic and the Iron Age are a little out of focus. As usual in the 'Ancient people and places' series the index is brief, but the well organized bibliography is extensive. Clearly if not beautifully written, the book will amaze those unaware of the distinctive North Italian early cultures which were more closely related to life-ways in Central Europe than in Peninsular Italy."

Choice 9:558 Je '72 120w

"[Northern Italy's importance] which extended far beyond its own natural boundaries . . . makes welcome Barfield's concise authoritative illustrated account. . . . [He] is well qualified to describe the current archaeological scene and, as an outsider, better qualified than most to view it dispassionately within its larger European setting. Dr Barfield's account follows the familiar pattern of the [series]. . . . Although some measure of over-simplification can hardly be avoided the reader is scrupulously reminded of the limitations of the evidence. It will be a very well-informed specialist who does not find matter for thought in this clear, balanced presentation of the archaeological evidence from an area which holds the key to many problems still unresolved."

TLS p1189 O 6 '72 900w

BARFIELD, OWEN. What Coleridge thought. 285p $15 Wesleyan univ. press

821 Coleridge, Samuel Taylor
ISBN 0-8195-4040-4 LC 73-153100

"Barfield presents Coleridge's ideas . . . organized to demonstrate . . . what his ideas were and how they developed." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Unfortunately, Barfield radically underestimates both the complexity and the relevance of the central question of Coleridge's copious borrowings (mostly from, but not limited to, German sources). . . . As an exposition of Coleridge's thought, this book can be safely read only by a handful of specialists; but it may appeal to the growing audience of those interested in Barfield's fascinating amalgam of Christianity, occultism, and Romantic aesthetics."

Choice 9:366 My '72 180w

"Noting that the comparative approach has dominated recent Coleridge scholarship, the author rejects the 'complex and allusive web of comparative philosophy,' expounds Coleridge's thought in its own terms, and reveals its self-consistency. Barfield, who supports his elucidation of Coleridge's philosophy with an extensive and judicious selection of quotations, demonstrates that the law of polarity is the basis of Coleridge's thought about man in nature, man in society, and man in God. He notes that Coleridge's object was 'to goad his readers into thinking for themselves.' The same can be said of Barfield. This book should send the student back to Coleridge's prose with a clearer understanding of important fundamentals." Mary McBride

Library J 96:3758 N 15 '71 100w

"[This book] ought to be read and pondered as few other books that have been or [I venture] will be published in this decade. For we should not, like the Ancient Mariner, slay any source of our enlightenment even by neglect, and we have much to learn from Coleridge, in politics no less—even more—than poetry, if only we can penetrate the depths of his thought. If we do not penetrate those depths . . . we do neither ourselves nor assuredly him the justice Mr. Barfield's work would have us do. And it is pleasant to have an introduction to Mr. Barfield as well."

J. C. Lobdell
Nat R 24:292 Mr 17 '72 380w

"This [is an] important and provocative book."

TLS p943 Ag 11 '72 3150w

BARKER, RODNEY. Education and politics, 1900-1951: a study of the Labour party. 173p $10.25 Oxford

329.942 Labour party (Great Britain). Education and state. Great Britain—Politics and government—20th century
ISBN 0-19-827185-9 LC 72-186746

This is a "monographic study of British Labour party attitudes and policies concerning education, from the beginning of the party to the end of the second Attlee Government in 1951." (Choice)

"The stated purpose of this study of the British Labour Party is to penetrate the broad facade of ideology and examine opinion on the single issue of education. It is based mainly upon unpublished sources, including official papers in the Public Records Office, materials in the Labour Party Research Department at Transport House, the R. H. Tawney papers in the British Library of Political and Economic Science, and the C. P. Trevelyan papers at the University of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. The result is a book that ably sets forth the complicated currents of thought in the Labour party on this question." C. F. Brand

Ann Am Acad 403:184 S '72 750w

"Barker has done a meticulously documented examination of this major theme. He writes plainly and factually, and his judgment and interpretative ability are impressive."

Choice 9:844 S '72 180w

BARKIN, KENNETH D. The controversy over German industrialization, 1890-1902. 307p il $11.50 Univ. of Chicago press

338 Germany—Economic policy. Germany—Industries, Agriculture and state
SBN 226-03712-6 LC 78-101359

This "study finds that the Prussian Junker insistence on government aid in the form of high tariffs on grain was a function of their failure to cope with the modern age and thus proof of their expendability as a ruling class. Barkin . . . also treats the support against industrialism given by such economists as Adolf Wagner, Karl Oldenberg, and Max Sering." (Am Hist R)

"The book's narrow economic approach imposes economic values: industrialism is good; anti-industrialism is bad—an old-fashioned view for 1970. Barkin describes the conservative anti-industrial criticism but does not sympathize with it. . . . [Although he] recognizes the predominantly religious, ethical, and esthetic motivation of the conservative economists, he deals with the Junkers as if their motives were purely economic. Although the book is full of tables on prices, cost of living, agrarian production, exports, and so forth, no data are provided on Junker holdings of stocks and bonds, their level of education, actual career choices, marriages, church attendance, theological orientation, for example. . . . This book describes an important aspect of the phenomenon in Germany, but it does not explain it." J. A. Nichols

Am Hist R 77:540 Ap '72 430w

"[This analysis] is impaired by two self-inflicted handicaps. In overly emphasizing the issues of foreign trade, the author could not penetrate to the core of the 'conservative' and 'liberal' ideologies in the controversy. In not taking seriously the conflict between two kinds of capitalist subsystems, the conservative ideology had to appear as nothing but a purely German 'irrationalism,' the origin of which was rather arbitrarily attributed to the 'vitality' of the corporate tradition in German thought. There is no hint in this study of the similar alliances and strains between estate and industrial capitalisms in large parts of Latin America or of contemporary Spain." Arthur Schweitzer

Ann Am Acad 393:151 Ja '71 460w

BARLEY, M. W. The house and home; a review of 900 years of house planning and furnishing in Britain. 208p il $12.50 N.Y. graphic

728 Architecture, Domestic. Architecture, English
ISBN 0-8212-0351-7 LC 72-162716

A "study of the planning, development and elevation of ordinary houses in Britain based on social and economic needs rather than architectural fashions." (TLS) Bibliography.

"[An] instructive and excellently designed [book]. . . . There is not a word of polemic in Barley's treatise, but the very precision of his scholarship, the equipoise with which he states facts and withholds comparisons to modern times rouses the reader to a moist-eyed longing when purpose rather than effect was the desideratum in domestic architecture. There are 239 photographs, beginning with details from the Bayeux tapestry showing 11th-century houses and ending with high-rise blocks of flats, aggressively boring, arrogantly standardized, in present-day London." Jean Stafford

Book World p13 Mr 12 '72 950w

"The author encounters several serious difficulties in his presentation which he fails to resolve: he vacillates between vernacular and nonvernacular architecture; he neglects to relate the English architectural experience—particularly in the Middle Ages—to the art of Europe; and he does not really explore the effect that vernacular architecture had on late 19th-Century English architecture. . . . Another shortcoming is that the time period discussed by the author—900 years—is simply too extensive to be adequately encompassed in a single short volume. Still, this is an original treatment which offers some new material." David Gebhard

Library J 97:188 Ja 15 '72 140w

TLS p1614 D 24 '71 60w

BARLOW, ELIZABETH. The forests and wetlands of New York City. 160p il $8.95 Little 574.5 Natural history—New York (City). New York (City)—History. Ecology LC 70-161851

"Barlow recalls a time when the city was part of the 'new' world and all was fresh and pleasing. She has gone further, and in the polluted . . . city of our time has found some pockets of natural beauty that still remain. Her book is a . . . plea for the preservation of these existing spots and for the restoration of others." (Library J)

Choice 8:1602 F '72 180w

"After reading this account of the destruction of our environment one feels, to paraphrase Reginald Heber, that 'every prospect pleases and only man is vile.' The prints, maps, and photographs which illustrate the book are well chosen; the print is good; and the book is recommended for all area libraries with the hope that it will be widely read." T. E. Smith

Library J 96:3152 O 1 '71 160w

"The writing in this book is as careful and as beautiful as the subjects it describes. The author's prose (and excellent photos) perfectly evoke the brooding masses of schist and tall tulip trees that form northern Manhattan's Inwood Hill Park; the Netherlands of Jamaica Bay; the marshes of Pelham Bay; the glacial ponds and deep forests of the Green Belt. Many a reader will want to get up one of these crisp mornings and see for himself that New York City is not just concrete and steel." Joe Ferris

N Y Times Bk R p12 D 26 '71 500w

"An illustrated natural history of the New York metropolitan area, with an emphasis—guardedly hopeful—on what's left."

New Yorker 47:187 N 27 '71 100w

"The essays . . . are part history, part praise song and part anxious pride. This is a fine book for the literate of word and wood." Philip Morrison

Sci Am 225:108 D '71 130w

BARLOW, FRANK. Edward the Confessor. 375p il pl maps $10.95 Univ. of Calif. press

B or 92 Edward, the Confessor, Saint, King of England. Great Britain—History—To 1066 ISBN 0-520-01671-8 LC 70-104107

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by W. A. Chaney

Ann Am Acad 403:185 S '72 400w

Reviewed by H. R. Loyn

Engl Hist R 86:790 O '71 1650w

TLS p1255 O 20 '72 500w

BARNARD, CHRISTIAAN. Heart attack: you don't have to die. 178p il $6.95 Delacorte press

616.1 Heart—Diseases LC 74-180050

The "South African heart surgeon describes for the layman how the heart works, what can go wrong with the organ and what can be done about it." (N Y Times Bk R) Glossary. Originally published in South Africa in both Afrikaans and English editions.

"Dr. Barnard has based this informative, lucid, and lively book on three deeply held personal opinions: the physician has a responsibility both to science and to his patients; it should not be the aim of every physician at all times to conquer death; and patients must be kept informed. . . . Barnard correctly believes that the concept of life and death as a basis for decisions about transplantation is not an ethical one at all, but rather is concerned solely with the medical meaning of the word 'dead.' He defends heart transplantation if the surgeons maintain the distinction between science and technology and if they take special care with the quality of their techniques." W. K. Beatty

Library J 97:889 Mr 1 '72 300w

"There is a good short history of corrective heart surgery, an explanation and estimate of the value of heart transplant, clear descriptions of various heart diseases."

N Y Times Bk R p28 Ap 30 '72 70w

TLS p922 Ag 4 '72 250w

BARNAVE, ANTOINE PIERRE JOSEPH MARIE. Power, property, and history; Barnave's Introduction to the French Revolution and other writings; tr, with an introductory essay by Emanuel Chill. 156p $8; pa $2.45 Harper

944.04 The State. France—History—Revolution, 1789-1799

ISBN 0-06-131556-7 LC 77-146078

This book concentrates upon Barnave's "work as a 'philosophical historian' and political thinker. . . . [Chill's introduction] analyzes his subject's thought, places it . . . in its 18th-century context, and . . . considers Barnave's anticipation of important 19th-century concerns. There are also some gleanings from Barnave's notebooks." (Choice)

"Students of French history and European intellectual historians alike should find this book useful."

Choice 9:120 Mr '72 120w

"Chill has provided us with a (not altogether skillful) English translation, prefaced by a seventy-four-page Introduction. . . . He says nothing . . . about Barnave's place in the historiography of the Revolution . . . [and] he makes no attempt to assess how far Barnave's explanation of the Revolution is plausible. 'This,' he says, 'is not the place to explore . . . the objective validity of Barnave's historical generalizations.' Why not? Of all the questions that . . . [the book] raises this is surely the one that the university student (for whom Professor Chill's translation is presumably devised) will want to ask first." C. B. A. Behrens

N Y Rev of Books 18:30 Ja 27 '72 1500w

BARND, WILLIAM J. India, Pakistan, and the great powers; pub. for the Council on for. relations. 388p maps $12.50 Praeger

327.54 India—Foreign relations. Pakistan—Foreign relations. Asia—Politics LC 72-115104

This "is a survey of the role of the world powers on the subcontinental scene during the last twenty-five years." (TLS) Bibliography. Index.

"How vital to U.S. interests is the Indian subcontinent? . . . One can overstate the importance of South Asia and view it solely in a Cold War context. But it is equally dangerous, Barnds argues, to understate the area's relevance, as though its future were of little concern, or no concern at all, to American interests. Opting for the middle-of-the-road view, Barnds discusses the role the United States should play in the economic development of India and Pakistan and its policy toward regional conflicts and the defense of the subcontinent. A most timely book in view of the recent Indian-Pakistani conflict and the generally hostile criticism of the role played by this country during the confrontation." V. S. Kearney

BARND, W. J.—Continued

America 126:[545] My 20 '72 130w

"This excellent volume is a useful and intelligent guide to the conflicts which plague South Asia, to American interests in the region and, necessarily, to America's historical role in such conflicts. If one were able to place a single book in the hands of those responsible for making or influencing U.S. policy towards India and Pakistan, this would be it. Thorough, well informed, and balanced, Barnds' study could not have been more timely. One only wishes for an inexpensive paperback edition." S. P. Cohen

Ann Am Acad 402:136 J1 '72 400w

"Barnds worked in the Office of National Estimates of the CIA from 1956-66, focusing on South Asia. The result is this book in four parts dealing with the struggle for independence and development of foreign policies of India and Pakistan; the involvement of China, the U.S., and the Soviet Union; Sino-Indian and Kashmir disputes and the U.S. role in South Asia in the light of U.S. national interests. The book has a moderate style and adequate footnotes. . . . maps and tables and should serve the general public well. . . . Barnd's overall advice to the U.S. is to limit its direct involvement in South Asian military affairs and, to the extent possible, its political quarrels. From a CIA expert this is a voice of sanity."

Choice 9:878 S '72 200w

"[Barnds's book] is a patient and generally objective record of moves [in] . . . South Asia and he puts in fair perspective the long-range significance of the United States decision to arm Pakistan in the early 1950s which led almost immediately to the development of a close Indo-Russian relationship. . . . On such matters, Mr. Barnds is sound and informative; his approach to strictly Indo-Pakistani affairs is simplistic, however, and the subtleties of the relationship pass him by."

TLS p736 Je 30 '72 550w

BARNES, J. A. Three styles in the study of kinship. 318p $8.75 Univ. of Calif. press

301.42 Kinship. Ethnology—Methodology
ISBN 0-520-01879-6 LC 74-142057

"In this volume Barnes analytically decomposes aspects of the work of three major kinship theorists, representing maximally contrasting theoretical positions (styles), in order to contribute to the development of 'a truly cumulative theory of kinship.' The theorists . . . are George Peter Murdock, Claude Lévi-Strauss, and Meyer Fortes. A chapter is devoted to the work of each, and the analysis is restricted to the study of kinship and the construction of models." (Science) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 9:1047 O '72 150w

"Although the three authors are ostensibly concerned with very similar substantive puzzles, they are, when considered pairwise, as different from one another as a whale is from a fish: they can be compared, to a limited extent, only because they swim in the same medium. This problem, which Barnes clearly recognizes, indicates that myths are far easier to take to pieces than they are to put together again. . . . [The author] has made a valuable contribution to the development of a paradigmatic conception of the unfolding of anthropological thought." I. R. Buchler

Science 176:635 My 12 '72 1550w

"Each part [of this book] is based on a very wide reading and gives a fair account of what the subject has done, together with the reasons why it will not do. The exposition is clear and determinedly agreeable, and should present few difficulties to an informed student of anthropology. . . . [However the book] is not entirely likely to satisfy the interests that it might be expected to arouse. . . . Those few social anthropologists who concentrate on kinship will not be instructed, either theoretically or technically, by the rather blunt and superficial treatment (especially in the section on Lévi-Strauss) of issues that elsewhere have already been demonstrated to admit a far more rigorous and trenchant style of analysis. . . . The study of kinship, in whatever style, is scarcely a light-hearted matter—but, all the same, why should it be so dull?"

TLS p1395 N 5 '71 1250w

BARNES, MARY. Mary Barnes: two accounts of a journey through madness, by Mary Barnes and Joseph Berke. 351p il $7.50 Harcourt

157 Mental illness—Personal narratives
ISBN 0-15-157730-7 LC 76-187704

"Mary Barnes fought her schizophrenia for 30 years. At times she was confined to a mental hospital, yet at other times she was well enough to practice and teach nursing. She entered R. D. Laing's London therapeutic community, Kingsley Hall, where with the encouragement of her therapist and coauthor Joseph Berke and the support of the community she regressed to infancy and gradually was able to reintegrate her personality. . . . The authors [provide] alternating accounts of her 'journey.'" (Library J)

Choice 9:1358 D '72 140w

"[Mary Barnes] developed her artistic gift especially to express her religious feelings; from the illustrations, it seems an impressive gift. . . . [The book] will provide absorbing reading for those concerned with psychotherapy utilizing Laing's theories." Carol Eckberg

Library J 97:1725 My 1 '72 100w

"To read Mary's account of her childhood makes one want to cry out in pain. As usual, we look for villains to blame, but such is her compassion that we find only people trapped by life, deceiving one another in their blindness. . . . It is the great merit of this book that it reaffirms the potentialities of therapy in the most unlikely of instances. I would question that these potentialities can be best realized within a Laingian framework, which seems to me to have a built-in obscurantist trend. Yet despite all that remains doubtful here, one cardinal truth is reaffirmed: The secret to therapy is in the relationship, in a bond which fundamentally accepts the other person while permitting growth and individuation." Joel Kovel

N Y Times Bk R p13 J1 2 '72 1300w

"This is a book that must be fully experienced as painful, disgusting and frightening, or else pushed out of mind altogether. . . . The reader who perseveres will be forced to feel something of what Mary Barnes and her therapists went through for five years. At the age of forty-two . . . she moved into the permissive therapeutic community established at Kingsley Hall. . . . [She] has now described her experiences in a story full of violence and honesty. Her own account is interspersed with a briefer narrative of many of the same events by her therapist 'Joe', Dr Joseph Berke. It is clear that his part in the drama was as heroic as that of the patient. . . . As a document the book will not begin to reconcile the split in the understanding and treatment of insanity, but it may work on individuals."

TLS p1354 O 29 '71 600w

BARNES, PETER. Pawns; the plight of the citizen-soldier. 284p $7.95 Knopf

355.1 U.S. Army—Military life. Military law
ISBN 0-394-43616-4 LC 72-136344

The thesis of this book is "that the erosion of constitutional safeguards against the use of American citizens in non-defensive military ventures is the direct cause of the major crisis in the army today. . . . First delineating the evolution of the American army from its democratic origins to its present role as 3,000,000-man police force of the world, Barnes . . . [discusses] the process by which young Americans today are [handled] by the military." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by E. A. Dooley

Best Sell 31:493 F 15 '72 800w

"Barnes suggests there is just a touch of crookedness about a contract that promises 'U.S. Army, Europe, Term of Enlistment Four Years,' and puts a young man in Vietnam for three of the four. . . . Having convinced the recruit that he is a sucker, the army then proceeds to convince him he is mindless. Obedience is everything. Follow orders and shut up. Barnes . . . asks why. . . . The Barnes List of Remedies is long and brilliant. I doubt that the Pentagon will pay the slightest attention. I doubt that literate America will pay much attention either because, as Barnes says, 'there is nothing civilian society would like more to forget about than the army." Robert Sherrill

Book World p10 Ja 9 '72 1050w

Choice 9:1350 D '72 250w

"The author shows how . . . today the military no longer merely defends the nation from foreign aggression, but is also actively involved in 'the conduct of what may fairly be called non-defensive foreign policy.' A major portion of the book is an analysis of (with excellent proposals for improving) military justice, which, because of its callous disregard for individual rights, makes soldiers less than second-class citizens. Strongly recommended for all general collections." Michael Gabriel

Library J 96:2783 S 15 '71 140w

Reviewed by Brenda Gray

Library J 97:1628 Ap 15 '72 150w [YA]

Reviewed by David Vaught

Nation 214:342 Mr 13 '72 800w

"A critical look at the life of the ordinary G.I.—the 'pawn' of the title. . . . The author based his contentions on interviews with a hundred of the military, mostly on the West Coast. He adds some history of army justice, treatment of dissenters, C.O.'s, etc. He doesn't mention recent changes in Army basic training, but it would have been too early to tell about their effectiveness. Nothing new here, but well done."

N Y Times Bk R p28 Ja 9 '72 110w

"[The author] does not cope—perhaps nobody can—with the huge anomaly that ours is a society that has never wanted or valued a large military establishment and has no good sociological or customary place for one. Reading Mr. Barnes, one feels that Americans and their present-day armed forces resemble nothing so much as a one-room apartment dweller who has been given a Great Dane: both parties are uncomfortable, harassed, snappish, and querulous."

New Yorker 47:95 Ja 29 '72 160w

BARNES, TIMOTHY DAVID. Tertullian: a historical and literary study. 320p $20.50 Oxford

230.1 Tertullian (Quintus Septimus Florens Tertullianus)

ISBN 0-19-814362-1 LC 77-884190

The author deals with "the sources for Tertullian's life and dates. . . . [and] reveals how the traditional biographical treatment of Tertullian has perpetuated a story based on the slightest of foundations. The chronology of Tertullian's long list of writings is subjected . . . to [an] analysis on the basis of cross references, stylistic changes, references to contemporary events, and changes in doctrine. . . . [It is] possible, the author maintains, to believe that Tertullian could have been born as late as 170 and died soon after the date of his last work. . . . The second half of the book contains . . . background material on the conflict between Christians and pagans in Africa at this early . . . period." (Library J)

Reviewed by J. R. Bram

Library J 97:2830 S 15 '72 300w

"The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church. Tertullian is rightly remembered for that sentiment, one of the main themes of his work. But he never said (Mr Barnes insists) 'Credo quia absurdum'. He said that the Resurrection was certain because it is impossible, in a difficult argument which Mr Barnes discusses with dazzling brevity. . . . [Barnes is] a scathing sort of writer and packs a mean footnote." D. A. N. Jones

New Statesman 83:21 Ja 7 '72 400w

TLS p422 Ap 14 '72 350w

BARNET, RICHARD J. Roots of war. 350p $10 Atheneum pubs.

327.73 U.S.—Politics and government—20th century. U.S.—Foreign relations LC 71-184725

This work seeks to determine "who decides how American power is to be used in the world and why. . . . Barnett first examines the structure, membership, and credo of the national security bureaucracy [which he maintains has] . . . for the past generation defined and aligned the American national interest behind counterrevolutionary violence and spurious world order. He next surveys the interpenetration of the national security bureaucracy and America's expansionist political economy. Finally he assesses the relationship between public opinion and American imperial policy." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by W. F. Kimball

America 126:637 Je 17 '72 1000w

"[This is] the best book . . . we possess on the subject of what has come to be known as the cold war policy establishment, and on the relationship of that elite of policymakers to the financial interests of this country in the 1950s and 1960s. Barnett calls this elite the 'national security managers.' . . . His discussion of their service ethic, and of that ethic's relationship to their uses of power and their commitment to counter-revolution, seems to me convincing. . . . His examination of the relationship between the growth of this national security establishment and the worldwide expansion of American business is equally discriminating. . . . Barnett's national security managers were no narrow elite imposing their views in defiance of the popular interest. . . . They were representative of their generation." W. O. Pfaff

Book World p5 My 28 '72 1350w

Choice 9:1200 N '72 200w

"[This book] is a three-staged analysis of America's persisting plans to engage in permanent war in the name of permanent peace. . . . Though sometimes rambling and repetitious, Barnett's comments are always provocative of fuller thought. For this reason, they should be made available to concerned readers."

Library J 97:1722 My 1 '72 220w

"[Barnet attempts] to determine why this nation, with its conviction that it means only to do good, has brought such misery to the world in the past quarter-century. What we've done and how we've done it are clear, but the why remains elusive. Perhaps we're still too close to the cold war for a definitive view, but Barnett is persuasive. He seeks no simplistic answer but pursues an inquiry in three main areas: those who govern, the governed, and the nature of American capitalism. I think most readers will be especially interested in his unrelenting critique of the 'national security managers.' His analysis of American capitalism, in which he convincingly questions the Marxist doctrine that capitalism is to blame for everything, is provocative and understandable." R. J. Walton

Nation 214:573 My 1 '72 850w

Reviewed by H. S. Commager

N Y Rev of Books 19:7 O 5 '72 6450w

Reviewed by Ronald Steel

N Y Times Bk R p3 Je 12 '72 2200w

"As a group, [the author] observes, 'the national security managers have probably wielded as much power as any group of mortals in history.' Drawn primarily from law and banking, they were well-educated and power-hungry. Barnett views them as amoral, insensitive, ruthless, and hypocritical men with a predilection for violence and 'fascinated by lethal technology.' The portrait is somewhat overdrawn, but it possesses substantial truth. . . . At the end of his book, Barnett calls for a major reconstruction of the American social and economic system as a prerequisite to the creation of a new 'generation of peace.' Unfortunately, his apocalyptic formulas for the future do not possess the cogency of his critiques of the past." E. B. Tompkins

Sat R 55:68 My 20 '72 390w

BARNETT, CORRELLI. The collapse of British power. 643p $15 Morrow

327.42 Great Britain—Foreign relations—20th century. Great Britain—Politics and government—20th century. National characteristics, English. Commonwealth of Nations—History ISBN 0-688-00001-0 LC 71-182972

"Once, as the author points out, the British were thoroughly hard-nosed and aggressive in foreign policy, but with Wellington's victory at Waterloo, there appeared the first signs of a moral change that was to leave them fatally unprepared to meet the challenges of the determined imperialists guiding other nations in the twentieth century. . . . [Barnett] proceeds to the identification and the anatomy of the root causes of the decay which reduced Britain at the end of World War II to 'an American satellite.'" (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

BARNETT, CORRELLI—Continued

"The author has written a book which will infuriate liberals and conventionalists alike. No surviving member of the League of Nations Union will be able to read it without a tremor; crusted old schoolmasters whose great-uncles served in the Mutiny will be appalled; but the line of argument, severely realist, merits attention. . . . The first two thirds of [the] book is based on wide and deep reading of history books and on [Barnett's] own meditations; in the closing third, he dissects British armament and foreign policy in the 1930s, with the help of the recently opened cabinet archives and all the advantages of hindsight."

Economist 244:65 J1 8 '72 500w

"Barnett's robust, lively, and provocative essay [concerns] . . . the loss of Britain's international power. For Barnett the key explanatory variable is found in the idea of national character; hence, his book ranges from religion to technology, from educational philosophy (he sees the 19th-Century public school as an arch villain) to literature, from diplomatic-military history to manners and morals. The golden age of British power and character for Barnett is the 18th Century, and he writes eloquently of [those] glorious days. . . . [His] history is old-fashioned and revisionist with a vengeance. To live in a Hobbesian world one must use force and power. To survive, orderliness, docility and decency are the deadly vices." H. J. Steck

Library J 97:3309 O 15 '72 200w

"There is a tiny scintilla of truth in Barnett's thesis which makes it worth while refuting. It is true, for instance, that the reorganised public schools held back British science and technology in the 19th century. . . . But religion had little to do with it. . . . Nor is it true that the public schools produced woolly-headed internationalists. On the contrary. They produced land-grabbers. . . . The trouble with Barnett is that his knowledge is too firmly anchored in the 20th century. A subtle blend of realism and idealism has always been the key to success in English policy. . . . Moral passion has never been an obstacle to English realism: quite the reverse. . . . Much of Barnett's book is well argued and documented, and I would not wish to deter readers from examining his thesis. But I must say I found his whole approach to international relations cynical, repugnant and unconvincing." Paul Johnson

New Statesman 84:21 J1 7 '72 1000w

"[Barnett] is a kind of pro-British iconoclast, lamenting the downfall of British power, convinced that it was not inevitable, and contemptuous of the intrinsic qualities which former generations saw as virtues, but which he sees as self-induced defects. The composition of his book is peculiar. After a short opening chapter describing the catastrophe of 1940, there follow three chapters examining the fundamental weaknesses of the British system. The first, ironically entitled 'All That Is Noble and Good', is a devastating criticism of pre-war education, especially in the public schools. . . . The belief that the Empire was a source of strength is exposed as a myth. . . . More than half the book, entitled 'Covenants Without Swords', . . . tells the story of the inter-war years, based on the Cabinet papers and other official sources, and supported by the memoirs and biographies of the chief participants in British political life. . . . Mr Barnett's thesis is powerfully and at times overbearing argued. . . . In the last few pages, he describes how the United States took advantage of Britain's desperate predicament in 1940. . . . This bitterly anti-American diagnosis of the problem is again unsatisfactory as a total explanation."

TLS p789 J1 14 '72 600w

BARNETT, DAVID. The performance of music; a study in terms of the pianoforte. 232p $10.95 Universe bks.

786.1 Piano music. Music

ISBN 0-78663-155-3 LC 70-172483

"The author views performance as consisting of a trinity of essentials: the composer, the performer, and the listener. Although this concept is not new, Barnett adds such ideas as the performer's 'judgment of relative salience'; that is, that the physicist's notion that intensity is the only means by which a pianist may vary the tonal quality of a given note does not really explain the full variety of tonal quality available to a pianist. Tonal quality is also dependent upon the totality of the note relationships." (Library J)

"Barnett is that rare amalgam: a performing artist who is also a practicing academician. Happily, his book is a reflection of his intelligence and ability in both of his fields of endeavor. . . . Aside from his suggestions to the future professional performer, perhaps the largest contribution Barnett makes is his un-failing belief that every normal human can become a satisfying (at least to himself) musician. Although this book is addressed to the lay musician, the performance-minded music major will doubtless benefit from it, too."

K. C. Rosenberg

Library J 97:2607 Ag '72 160w

"Considering the vastness of his subject, some of Dr Barnett's points seem disproportionately laboured and his terminology will depress a few English readers. Thus the individual's control of time intervals is illustrated by the unison clapping of fans at a baseball game but under the general heading of 'Innate Responses to Natural Salience'. Pianists, as opposed to aestheticians, will find the discussion of Matthay, Cortot and Schenker stimulating. . . . The author's own experiments in musical analysis will cause many players to reconsider their responsibilities in coming to grips with the nature and style of the individual work."

TLS p893 J1 28 '72 700w

BARNESLEY, ALAN GABRIEL. See Fielding, G.

BARNESLEY, JOHN H. The social reality of ethics; the comparative analysis of moral codes. (Int. lib. of sociology) 452p $16.75 Routledge

170 Ethics. Sociology

ISBN 0-7100-7286-4 LC [72-192788]

"Barnesley tries to clarify the metaethical concepts used, he believes, somewhat uncritically by sociologists. The book is divided into three parts: a summary of beliefs about the nature of culture, morality, and moral argument; a review of theories and methods of sociological research; and a survey of different types of relativism and their implication for sociology. Its conclusion is that, although descriptive relativism is related to ethical relativism, it does not entail it, and that 'the sociological awareness' is relativizing because it recognizes the contingency of social arrangements." (Library J)

"The book, unfortunately, is a hotchpotch of sociology, methodology, and scissors-and-paste philosophy. The author uncritically collects these from the works of numerous philosophers, but does not himself philosophize; instead, he bandies words quite irresponsibly and does not even understand the connotations of his own concepts. He not only fails to present sustained analyses, but manages to make interesting issues dull." Robert Hoffman

Library J 97:3593 N 1 '72 140w

"One turns to [this book] with the highest expectations. To some extent they are fulfilled, at least in parts of the book, but it is impossible not to be disappointed by the extent to which Dr Barnesley avoids direct answers to the interesting questions he raises; he avoids them because of his methodological eclecticism and because he can take so much of what passes as the empirical study of comparative morality with a straight face. . . . One must be glad that The Social Reality of Ethics was written. Moral codes and the way they are integrated or not integrated into social systems is a very legitimate object of sociological study and Dr Barnesley has surely opened up again the issues which Hobhouse and Ginsberg made central. There are also new questions to be answered, and there clearly is the need for the rebuilding of a lost sociological sub-discipline."

TLS p1147 S 29 '72 1000w

BARON, STANLEY. The desert locust. 228p pl maps $7.95 Scribner

632 Locusts—Control

ISBN 684-12702-4 LC 73-180626

"The last plague of locusts ended in 1963, after 15 years of devastation. An account of the discoveries made during this plague and the successful destruction of an embryonic one in 1969 forms the core of Mr Baron's book." (Economist) Index.

"[This] is a fascinating story and one that, despite unnecessary lapses into travelogue, is well told. The locust, Mr Baron points out, must be fought on two fronts: scientific [and political]. . . . But that requires co-ordination between the government of some 45 countries, many of which are needless to say, at loggerheads—Ethiopia and Sudan, Mali and Chad, for example. In the locust's breeding grounds politics usually overshadow pragmatism. It can only be hoped that Mr Baron's book will not become topical. It need not if the world is wise, but otherwise a return to the eighth plague of Egypt is all too possible."

Economist 242:46 Ja 16 '72 370w

"A journalist who worked as a publicity agent on a locust control project in North Africa and the Near East offers a history of locust plagues, a gourmet guide to the locust, and the life history of this destructive insect. . . . The remainder of the book provides a fascinating description of Baron's experiences on the project." Kenneth Groeppe

Library J 97:1336 Ap 1 '72 80w

"Baron builds a clear account of his war. It is truly a war, waged in behalf of the hard work and bread of millions, by a coalition of 42 nations through the UN with field stations, radio links, trucks, aircraft, stores of insecticides and skilled teams of combatants who must know the enemy, the land and the farmers for whom they fight. The locust is in recession now; it has been proved controllable. . . . There are misgivings even in this tale of a moral war. The insecticides kill more than locusts." Philip Morrison

Sci Am 227:127 N '72 1800w

TLS p975 Ag 18 '72 600w

BARONE, MICHAEL. The almanac of American politics; the senators, the representatives—their records, states and districts, 1972 [by] Michael Barone, Grant Ujifusa [and] Douglas Matthews. 1030p il $12.95 Gambit

328.73 U.S.—Politics and government—1945—Yearbooks

ISBN 0-87645-053-2 LC 70-160417

This work "contains . . . data for each congressional seat in the country. Each state and congressional district is . . . described in terms of its political background, present climate, and political future. Typical information . . . includes 1970 census figures, share of federal outlays by major government departments, defense contractors with over $5-million contracts, the economic base, a map showing districts, and a description of the voting population. An employment profile (blue collar-white collar) is included and the significant ethnic make-up of the district noted. . . . For each incumbent Senator and Congressman biographical information, committee positions, ratings by political groups (Americans for Democratic Action, Americans for Constitutional Action, and seven others) and voting record on 15 key issues (ABM, SST, 18-year-old vote, Clean Water Act, etc.) are included. Election results are also given." (Library J)

"Those who find baseball boring and the horse track expensive have a golden opportunity this summer to learn the art of handicapping the political horses. If you can afford only one tip sheet, this is it. . . . Fresh, alive, well organized. And where else would one learn that Representative Barry Goldwater, Jr. 'was once seen dozing in the Senate gallery while his father was making a speech'? Get the paperback. A new edition will be needed every two years." M. J. Sheeran

America 126:542 My 20 '72 140w

Choice 9:1201 N '72 200w

Economist 243:63 Je 3 '72 160w

"Although most of the information is currently available in scattered sources, the authors have done an excellent job of assembling it in readable format in a single source. Reasonably priced, this is a superbly useful work on contemporary American politics." T. J. Michalak

Library J 97:861 Mr 1 '72 240w

Reviewed by D. J. C. Brudnov

Nat R 24:597 My 26 '72 270w

"[This is] an up-to-date political profile of those who run our government in Washington and those who sent them there. . . . More important, the Almanac happens to be most readable with its expert descriptions of districts, and interpretations of the people who live and vote in them."

New Repub 166:22 Mr 25 '72 400w

"Between the statistical tables, prose sparkles with comments on colorful figures—people like Bella Abzug and Birch Bayh. The authors discern the conservative spots in many a professed liberal and the liberal streaks in many a conservative. Here are their records, power bases, and political chances." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 55:70 My 6 '72 90w

BARR, ALWYN. Reconstruction to reform: Texas politics, 1876-1906. 315p il maps $8.50 Univ. of Tex. press

320.9764 Texas—History. Texas—Politics and government

ISBN 0-292-70135-7 LC 73-165911

The author "analyzes political developments based on the shift from a rural frontier society and economy toward commercialization of agriculture, industrialization, and urbanization. He explores cultural, religious, ethnic, and regional influences on politics . . . [and] relates Texas politics to national trends and events. . . . Negro political participation and the motivations and process behind the black disfranchisement in Texas are described." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"This excellent study . . . based upon thorough research in manuscript collections and newspapers, is an important contribution to our knowledge of the Gilded Age and Progressive Era. Although Texas appears at first glance a typically one-party Democratic Southern state, Barr shows that its greater ethnic and economic diversity made for important differences from the Southern pattern. . . . Barr largely eschews the statistical approach in favor of a more descriptive and narrative account. His book . . . [ranks] among the best Southern state studies of the period." Choice 9:125 Mr '72 200w

"[Barr] devotes well-organized and well-written chapters to . . . the campaigns of 1876, the Greenback challenge, public land policy, prohibition, farm discontent, railroad regulation, Populists and silverites, and the advent of progressivism. . . . Dominant but faction-ridden Democrats, numerically weak and patronage-minded Republicans, aspiring but generally frustrated Negroes, and evanescent third party movements all receive due attention. . . . Long on details and specifics, the volume would be stronger if more analysis was included. Its interpretive sections are sound but not particularly imaginative. [The book is written] in an unadorned, straightforward style. Solid research, organization, and clear writing are [its] traits." Monroe Billington

J Am Hist 59:164 Je '72 400w

BARR, STRINGFELLOW. Voices that endured; the great books and the active life. 214p $5.95 Prentice-Hall

901.9 Civilization. Books and reading

ISBN 0-13-943738-X LC 70-138946

The author deals with the "works of some 20 'practical scientists'—books that 'ask what a man ought to do,' treatises in ethics, politics, economics. His summaries and evaluations are presented in five chapters: 'The Dialectical Republic'—Plato, Aristotle, Lucretius, the Stoics; 'The City of God'—Augustine, Aquinas (and by extension Dante); 'The City of Man'—Machiavelli, Hobbes (with an excursus on Shakespeare's plays) . . . Spinoza, Locke, Montesquieu, Rousseau, Gibbon, Kant, and the Federalist thinkers; 'The Great Mercantile Republic'—Adam Smith, Mill, Marx; and, finally, 'The City of Torment,' featuring Freud and his Civilization and Its Discontents [BRD 1930]." (Library J)

"This book could be read as a preliminary to a reading of the great authors, as one looks at a map before undertaking a journey into unfamiliar territory; or it could be read as an epilogue, a backward glance: an old reader who has engaged in the Great Conversation and guided generations of students through lesser conversations about it, tells, with deceptive simplicity and adding his own insights, the continuing story of man's search for the good, the true, and the beautiful. High-

BARR, STRINGFELLOW—Continued
ly recommended for all libraries. No index or bibliography but extensive notes."
Choice 8:1326 D '71 130w

"After a gracious and stimulating introduction, Barr (who was president of St. John's College when it initiated the 'Hundred Great Books' curriculum) takes us on an intellectual helicopter ride. . . . Frankly, any college student would find this book a great 'pony' and review resource; yet Barr's hoverings do help reveal the topography of each book. Recommended for college libraries." B. W. Fuson

Library J 96:2507 Ag '71 160w

BARRETT, WILLIAM. Time of need; forms of imagination in the twentieth century. 401p il $10 Harper

901.94 Civilization, Modern. Art and society
SBN 06-010216-0 LC 72-95940

The author of Irrational Man (BRD 1958) presents a "study of nihilism in modern fiction, concluding that literature is approaching obsolescence because it rests on assumptions of traditional value and historical necessity that have yielded to man's loss of his sense of unity with the natural world. Barrett sees art's reflection of this loss in its fragmentation of time and reduction of the human form and human significance. He traces the artist's struggles with meaninglessness in Camus, Hemingway, and Faulkner; then examines progressive rejections of culture, logic, and ultimately, objective being itself, in Hesse, Kafka, and Beckett." (Library J) Index.

"If the author were content simply to rework the analyses of other critics his book would remain redundant and unnecessary. But there is another 'positive' dimension of modern literature, he reminds us, and it is in exploring this 'reaction to the ominous drift of our time' that the author is most challenging. . . . Clearly [he] is in sympathy with those writers who would go beyond the limits of rationalism and despair toward faith in the vital primal forces of life itself. . . . Here is an excellent source-book for those rare intimations of harmony and meaning that have surfaced in twentieth-century art and literature." J. V. McDonnell

America 127:156 S 9 '72 650w

"The book is decidedly brilliant, and absolutely readable and probably high grade literary criticism. [However] the main thesis is fundamentally slippery, and there is not one tiny conclusion that does not defy capture. Certainly, [Barrett] has not stated his major insight; the reviewer would have to read into the book to state one." Edward Gannon

Best Sell 32:208 Ag 1 '72 700w

Reviewed by John Wain

Commentary 54:98 D '72 1400w

"[Barrett] poses Forster and (interestingly) Joyce as traditional writers who are nonetheless drawn into this orbit of negativism, and includes incisive digressions on distortions of forms in related 20th-Century arts. His book is vitiated by some unjustifiably trite literary analyses, and by an annoying habit of unconvincing expansion and generalization. Still, it succeeds in immersing us in a context of peculiarly energetic and fascinating upheaval. Fortunately, one can reject much of Barrett's reasoning and still profit enormously from his labors." Bruce Allen

Library J 97:2096 Je 1 '72 170w

"Within its self-imposed limits the whole is an excellent introduction to modernism for the reader who has some knowledge of the vocabulary of the movement and is willing to work along with the author."

New Repub 167:31 O 14 '72 350w

BARRY, ANNE. Bellevue is a state of mind. 178p $5.95 Harcourt

362.2 Mentally ill—Institutional care
ISBN 0-15-11750-0 LC 72-153680

Posing as a psychotic, Barry writes about her experience as an inmate of a psychiatric ward for women in a New York city hospital during one week in 1969.

"Barry's observations gathered while posing as a mental patient are free from the distortions caused by the real patient's symptomatology and the patient-professional's familiarity with hospital routine. . . . [The author] is a most perceptive observer who catches the essence of ward living. Lay readers should find the book absorbing; professionals may not." Harold Wilensky

Library J 96:2523 Ag '71 150w

Reviewed by Brenda Gray

Library J 97:1181 Mr 15 '72 190w [YA]

Reviewed by James Walt

New Repub 166:25 Mr 4 '72 700w

BARRY, JOSEPH. Passions and politics; ■ biography of Versailles. 538p il $12.95 Doubleday

944 Versailles—Description. France—History—Bourbons, 1589-1789
LC 78-168286

This is the story of Versailles "and of the people who lived there, of the passions that assailed them, the politics and forces that motivated and bent them. . . . Barry presents . . . portraits of kings, queens, mistresses, princes, princesses, prelates, courtiers, diplomats, soldiers, gardeners, architects, artists, writers, and musicians—the . . . horde of men and women who, for nearly two centuries, ruled and misruled France from the magnificence of Versailles. . . . [He] brings the story down to the days of de Gaulle via Napoleon, Bismarck and the signers of the famous treaty in the great Hall of Mirrors." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"With a journalist's eye for a good story, backed by a great deal of unobtrusive scholarship, Mr Barry carries us rapidly through a long stretch of French history. . . . [He] obviously fell in love with Versailles and wishes to share his pleasure with his readers. With a series of vignettes, of portraits and profiles, he has filled a coherent canvas. This entertaining book is also a vivid and subtle piece of social history."

Economist 245:72 D 30 '72 330w

"As a serious history of Versailles . . . this work is very limited and chronologically confused. The confusion arises from the feeling one gets that the author has several juicy bits of gossip to impart and can't wait to tell the reader. Although this makes for light, chatty, entertaining, and often very interesting reading, one is frequently distracted by slipshod writing: shifts in tense, awkward constructions. Since the author occasionally quibbles with his sources and has very extensive footnotes, it doesn't seem likely that such a casual result was intended." E. H. Jones

Library J 97:494 F 1 '72 90w

"Barry's handling of . . . [his] subject is passionately anecdotal, and he seems rather backward in his handling of one of the chief forces in the life of the aristocracy, namely manners, with the result that each king is dealt with, in the good American way as a sort of individual entrepreneur (and lover) rather than as a manifestation of a complex of custom and convention. . . . The theme in the Barry book that probably makes it a characteristic and contemporary work despite its invincible antiquarianism is that People Are No Damned Good, especially the high and mighty." Reed Whitemore

New Repub 167:23 Jl 8 '72 2000w

BARRY, RICK. Confessions of a basketball gypsy: the Rick Barry story. by Rick Barry with Bill Libby. 216p il $7.95 Prentice-Hall

R or 92 Basketball
ISBN 0-13-167445-5 LC 76-173700

This is an account of the basketball career of Rick Barry a "small town boy . . . from all-American basketball stardom at the University of Miami [who believed] that he could beat the big money men of modern sports. He lost. . . and this is the story of his six years of shifting from one pro team to another, sometimes at his own behest, but usually at the dictates of legal actions. . . . Barry [is] now with the New York Nets of the ABA." (Library J)

"Keeping track of Rick Barry's basketball career is a little like reading 'Pilgrim's Progress.' In both situations, the protagonist travels and encounters temptation. . . . Most of this book is unflattering to the title character because Barry admits his conceit and other weaknesses. Also, he and Bill Libby include some less-than-complimentary comments by the many people involved in this continuing story. . . . Readers interested specifically in Rick Barry's career will enjoy this book about a roundballer who has given 100% on court in spite of his off-court problems." J. A. Phillips

Best Sell 32:7 Ad 1 '72 230w

"[Barry is] unusually candid and open about himself, without betraying any confidences. But Libby's overuse of statements by relatives, owners, and others, with only a few exceptions, merely pads and diminishes these otherwise honest admissions by a creature of big-business greed and deception in today's sports." Charles Farley

Library J 97:2424 J1 '72 130w

BARTH, EDNA. Holly, reindeer, and colored lights; the story of the Christmas symbols; il. by Ursula Arndt. 96p $4.95 Seabury

394.26 Christmas—Juvenile literature. Signs and symbols—Juvenile literature
LC 71-157731

The author of Lilies, Rabbits and Painted Eggs (BRD 1970) describes Christmas customs from around the world. "The book considers each of the symbols, traces its historical roots—whether pagan, Christian, or mythological—and tells of the part it plays in present-day Christmas celebrations. The customs associated with plants, flowers, foods, and lights are just a few of the traditions explained. The book also contains many Christmas legends." (Horn Bk) Bibliography. Index. "Grades three to six." (Library J)

Horn Bk 47:598 D '71 110w

"The author describes particular objects and customs—the tree, candles, gifts, three kings, Santa Claus, Christmas colors, etc.; their origins in Nordic, Druid, Roman, etc. beliefs and practices; and the present-day manifestations and interpretations of them around the world. Her explanations are not always sufficiently comprehensive. . . . Nevertheless, much concrete information is offered here, and though the writing, with its set pattern of exposition and short paragraphs, occasionally becomes dull, the fascinating nature of the material easily carries the book." D. G. Staviv

Library J 96:3486 O 15 '71 250w

"This is a book I would buy, mainly because it tells me everything I have always wondered about the Christmas tradition overload. . . . It becomes clear in this book [that] we are dealing with accumulations from pagan times, medieval times and regional cultures—even India—which flow together at Christmas in a general round-up of the sacred and profane from all human history. I very much like this way of introducing my child to the notion of comparative religions and social anthropology." Jane O'Reilly

N Y Times Bk R p91 D 8 '71 120w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 54:45 D 11 '71 20w

BARTH, J. ROBERT, ed. Religious perspectives in Faulkner's fiction; Yoknapatawpha and beyond. 233p $8.95 Univ. of Notre Dame press

813 Faulkner, William. Religion in literature
LC 75-185896

The Jesuit editor of this volume brings together twelve essays by critics of Faulkner which center on the religious dimensions of the American writer's work. Father Barth includes his own commentary at the end of each essay. Most of these essays first appeared in such publications as Thought, Accent and in previously published monographs. Bibliography. Index.

"As with most collections of essays, the material in this volume is not as even as if it had been written by one author. The essays which deal with one work . . . are largely textual and reflect to a great extent the complexity of Faulkner's genius. On the other hand, the general essays, such as Fr. Barth's 'Faulkner and the Calvinist Tradition' and Harold J. Douglas and Robert Daniel's 'Faulkner's Southern Puritanism,' highlight valuable aspects of Faulkner's religious sensibility, but because of limited space, all the nuances of this sensibility cannot be fully developed. . . .

[The book] will serve college classes well as a starting point for discussion either in religious studies or in literature." Patrick Samway

America 127:325 O 21 '72 850w

"Although intended primarily for the student of modern literature and theology, this collection should also be useful to any serious reader of Faulkner. . . . [Barth's commentary] sharpens the divergence of critical opinion, clarifies broad areas of agreement, and raises questions which involve the reader in a kind of dialogue with the ten commentators. The complexity of Faulkner's moral vision, his place in the continuum of American Puritanism, and his use of the several religious traditions of the Western world are demonstrated by several contributors. The religious dimensions of freedom and fate, alienation, the use of myth, and the redemptive value of human suffering are recurring themes in these essays. . . . No single point of view or methodology dominates this collection, whose distinguished contributors include Cleanth Brooks, John W. Hunt, and Hyatt H. Waggoner. Barth's own introductory essay, 'Religion and Literature: the Critical Context,' is especially recommended." Mary McBride

Library J 97:2398 J1 '72 190w

BARTH, JOHN. Chimera. 308p $6.95 Random house

ISBN 0-394-49139-9 LC 72-3389

"Barth's three interlocked novellas are based on the stories of Scheherazade, Perseus, and Bellerophon, combined in a way that suggests an attempt to present the artist as mythic hero." (Atlantic) "Dunyazadiad" first appeared in slightly different form in Esquire magazine, June 1972. "Perseid" first appeared in Harper's magazine, September 1972.

"The old tales are so overlaid with stylistic smartaleckry, plus women's lib rhetoric and lumps from Roget's Thesaurus that their principal effect is to raise echoes of Jurgin [by J. B. Cabell, BRD 1919] and The Private Life of Helen of Troy [by John Erskine, BRD 1925] two works that nobody should be asked to remember." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 230:135 O '72 70w

Choice 9:1288 D '72 160w

"If you can accept [the] . . . playfully anachronistic tampering with the three legends that comprise 'Chimera,' you will probably have no trouble swallowing the intrusion into Arabic and Greco-Roman lore of such matters as ecology, women's lib, hallucinogenic drugs [and] the Kama Sutra. . . . [This book] continues the kind of self-reflexive horseplay, the kind of 'look Ma, no hands' stylistic mannerism that dominated Barth's last collection of pieces, called 'Lost in the Funhouse' [BRD 1968]. . . . [Some readers] may find Barth's 'riddles and battles and monsters and clues and false trails and stuff' amusing. There will be others, like myself, who are waiting for Barth to develop the considerable gifts he displays in 'The Floating Opera' [BRD 1956]."

Christian Science Monitor p10 S 20 '72 450w

"The protagonists of these witty confessions are walking psyches, at war with ultimate ambivalence. (Far from clarifying what is ambiguous, Barth deepens it—by retelling familiar stories, deploying their unsettled alternatives so as to virtually insist on their unreality). [He] employs literary devices that multiply confusion [including] . . . the removal of all barriers posed by time and history. . . . [The] slangy sexy idiom . . . further blurs distinctions between past and present. The existential dilemma of heroes striving to comprehend their herohood finds parallel in novelist Barth, whose journeys toward self- and literary discovery mingle amusingly with theirs. . . . Whether or not we trust [his] Chinese-puzzle technique, he is surely one of the few contemporary novelists whose future work we must anticipate with growing excitement." Bruce Allen

Library J 97:2638 Ag '72 350w

Reviewed by Don Crinklaw
Nat R 24:1136 O 13 '72 380w

Reviewed by Michael Wood
N Y Rev of Books 19:33 O 19 '72 1400w

Reviewed by Leonard Michaels
N Y Times Bk R p35 S 24 '72 1400w
New Yorker 48:125 S 30 '72 90w

BARTH, JOHN—Continued

Reviewed by P. S. Prescott
Newsweek 80:108 O 9 '72 650w

Reviewed by R. Z. Sheppard
Time 100:[80] O 2 '72 1100w

BARTHELL, EDWARD E. Gods and goddesses of ancient Greece, by Edward E. Barthell, Jr. 416p $25 Univ. of Miami press

292 Mythology, Classical
ISBN 0-87024-165-6 LC 72-129664

This volume "contains 137 genealogies of the deities mentioned in [Greek literature].... Dr. Barthell begins his treatise with The Older Gods... then moves on to The Rise of Zeus and The Olympian Deities. He discusses the Greek mythological view of the origin of man, particularly of the men who inhabited the Greek Peninsula and its colonies. There are two chapters on the descendants of Poseidon; ten on the descendants of Zeus. Six chapters on The Trojan War and three on The Odyssey summarize those epics with particular attention to the relationships of gods and goddesses among themselves and towards the human beings involved." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index.

"This superb work will be of special interest to and help for students of classical mythology. The charts of the genealogies are particularly well worked out."

Best Sell 31:480 F 1 '72 220w

"Ancient authors are mentioned with great frequency but never so precisely as to allow one readily to consult them. The formulae are: 'Hyginus calls,' 'Homer mentions,' 'Apollonius Rhodius names,' etc.... Whether the [genealogies] alone make the book worth $25.00 is questionable."

Choice 9:116 Mr '72 170w

"A large and impressive book on Greek mythology. A work of intense research. It is the project of a devoted amateur who has covered all the sources and who has dedicated himself to putting the information together in one story.... He has patiently searched through much material in order to link all the divinities and demigods in a few huge family trees. Needless to say there is little concern here with more recent scholarship which is interested in theories dealing with the formation of mythology and with folklore themes." Jean Rhys

Library J 97:1015 Mr 15 '72 110w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 55:70 My 6 '72 100w

BARTHELME, DONALD. Sadness. 183p $5.95 Farrar, Strauss

ISBN 0-374-25333-1 LC 72-84774

A collection of 16 stories most of which appeared originally in slightly different form in The New Yorker.

Reviewed by Earl Shorris

Harper 246:92 Ja '73 700w

"Barthelme's continuing reliance on narrative voice rather than plot and characterization frequently makes one feel that his paragraphs have been 'yoked by violence together.' That wrenching effect is usually precisely his intent, since the disjointedness of things is one of his major concerns. Barthelme is less 'black' here than in his earlier books, but his baroque style still seems too elaborate for his subject matter. The narrative distance in 'The Rise of Capitalism' is so great, for example, that the reader tends to share the disinterestedness of the narrator.... The book will find its own very small and probably academic audience, but most readers will prefer more conventional fare." Peter Dollard

Library J 97:3613 N 1 '72 160w

Reviewed by Guy Davenport

Nat R 24:1413 D 22 '72 800w

New Repub 167:28 N 11 '72 1000w

"Before 'Sadness'... most of Barthelme's best stories put you into the problem of art in a world hostile to the continued vitality of imagination.... The best stories in 'Sadness' put us into a different, though related problem. Not parables so much as monologues spoken by neurasthenics, they throb with distress at what one of them calls 'the present era's emphasis on emotional cost control' and 'its insistent, almost annoying lucidity.' Like the parables about art, they yearn for an openness whose best sign is seeing beyond life into mystery. But, like the parables about art, they show the dreadful diffusion of 'knowingness.'" C. T. Samuels

N Y Times Bk R p27 N 5 '72 2400w

"The recurring theme in many of these stories is man's temptation toward conventional life. Examples: 'St. Anthony's major temptation,' he writes in a story about the saint at large in the city today, 'in terms of his living here, was perhaps this: ordinary life.'... At least four of the stories in 'Sadness' are better than any Barthelme has written so far. I particularly recommend 'Critique de la Vie Quotidienne' and 'The Catechist,' which is another temptation-to-worldliness story. This, his fourth and best collection of stories, provides continued evidence that Barthelme is one of the most exciting writers around." P. S. Prescott

Newsweek 80:130 N 6 '72 750w

Reviewed by John Seelye

Sat R 55:66 N 25 '72 750w

BARTHES, ROLAND. Mythologies; sel. and tr. from the French by Annette Lavers. 158p $5.95 Hill & Wang

808 Culture, Style, Literary
ISBN 0-8090-7193-2 LC 75-185427

The author of these essays, written between 1954 and 1956, "presents both an ideological critique of the language of so-called mass culture and an... analysis of that language.... Barthes sees such everyday social phenomena as films, wrestling matches, detergents, and strip-tease as part of a contemporary reality which, nonetheless, is determined by history." (Publisher's note). Originally published in France in 1957.

Reviewed by Mark Poster

Library J 97:3606 N 1 '72 130w

"In these short, spirited essays, Barthes investigates what he calls 'petit-bourgeois culture' (what we call 'Pop'). However, beneath the raffish subject matter—'The Face of Garbo,' 'The Brain of Einstein,' 'Operation Margarine'—a systematic 'unmasking' takes place.... [The author] is a wily observer of 'naturalness' and the 'falsely obvious.' A vivid polemicist (Marx, Freud, and Sartre are part of his well-equipped arsenal), Barthes has something too of the classic artistry of Montaigne.... In methodology he owes an immense debt to Ferdinand de Saussures, the great Swiss linguist who died in 1912, but Saussures could never have imagined the sinuousness of Barthes's style or the zest of his insights.... The selections [in this English edition]... are ample, and the translation fine."

N Y Rev of Books 18:37 My 18 '72 290w

"Barthes is one of the very few literary critics in any language of whom it can be said that he has never written a bad or uninteresting page.... [He] is neither an academic critic, nor a reviewer, but strictly an occasional writer.... Each of the little essays in this book wrenches a definition out of a common but constructed object, making the object speak its hidden, but ever-so-present, reservoir of manufactured sense.... Barthes's tools in his discourse are the italic and the telling epithet, startling emphasis where a disguise had been intended." E. W. Said

N Y Times Bk R p5 J1 30 '72 300w

"The pieces are very witty, despite the fact that the author's repeated and humorless attacks on the bourgeoisie take on the quality of a vendetta. He insists that myths are creations of the right, not of the left; as a man of the left, he is resolutely anti-myth. Perhaps he has missed the point: the left is, so to speak, stuck with a myth—the perfectibility of man—in which nobody believes. But when M. Barthes is on target—for example, demonstrating the similarities between advertising margarine and peddling obedience or social deference—he is unbeatable: funny and true."

New Yorker 48:127 S 9 '72 170w

BARTÓK, BÉLA. Béla Bartók letters; coll. sel. ed. and annot. by János Demény; prefaced by Sir Michael Tippett; tr. into English by Péter Balaban and István Farkas; translation rev. by Elisabeth West and Colin Mason. 466p il $20 St Martins

B or 92
LC 70-124146

These letters, which are divided into five chronological sections, "show the development of Bartók's art as pianist, composer and orthomusicologist. [They also portray his] defense of his native tongue and . . . observation of his surroundings . . . [as shown in his] letters to his mother and friends. . . . [The letters end] with the years of exile in America and Bartók's untimely death of leukemia in 1945." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. General index. Index of Bartók's compositions referred to in the volume.

"[In these] informative, colorful and gratifying . . . letters, Bartók is revealed as a peculiarly sensitive person who had his fair share of the 'slings and arrows' of adversity. In them we also find references which indicate his erudition and affinity with the world of fine arts and literature. More than that there is considerable helpful information with regard to a meaningful interpretation of his music. Though scholarly, the book loses none of its fascination; it is highly readable throughout. Invaluable to the performing musician, essential for the listener, the book is top-drawer quality all the way."

Choice 9:377 My '72 120w

"At last, the first volume of Bartók's letters ever to appear in English. Four volumes appeared in other languages between 1948 and 1960. While much of the material presented here was published in those earlier compilations or in periodicals, a number of items now appear for the first time. And many more of the 289 letters will be new to non-Hungarian readers. Bartókians. . . . The translations are smooth; the annotations, thorough (though it is annoying to have them at the back of the book). . . . The message of a lonely individualist like Bartók is desperately needed in this day of musical groupthink. For this, his words, as well as his music, must be cherished." Dika Newlin

Library J 97:1439 Ap 15 '72 100w

"Less than half" of Bartók's known letters are included, but it is unlikely that any giving insight into the recesses of his personality were excluded. . . . The letters give us little new information, but they confirm and sometimes make vivid what we have learnt from Bartók's friends and pupils and from Halsey Steven's excellent study of The Life and Music of Béla Bartók [BRD 1953]. Without them, knowing that many musicians have been called collectors of folk music, we might fail to recognize the enormous work in which Bartók persisted right up to his death to ensure that Magyar, Slovakian, Rumanian, and even Turkish and Arab musical treasures should not be lost for ever."

TLS p1456 N 19 '71 1200w

"The selection admirably reveals the penetrating intellect, the absolute integrity, the personal and artistic struggle of one of the century's most important geniuses and will be both essential and engrossing for layman and professional alike."

Va Q R 48:xcii summer '72 170w

BASSANI, GIORGIO. Behind the door; tr. by William Weaver. 150p $5.95 Harcourt

ISBN 0-15-111697-0 LC 72-75413

"The setting is Ferrara in Italy and the novel centers on a Jewish high school student. Coming from a comfortable and polished family, the youthful narrator is shy, cultivated, and genteel. At school he meets Carlo Cattolica who is snobbish and aloof although he is the class leader. The unnamed narrator becomes closely acquainted with another classmate, Luciano Pulga. . . . The crowning disillusionment occurs when Cattolica informs the narrator that Pulga has been very critical of his friend. The protagonist refuses to believe this until a meeting is arranged so that he can hear [from behind a door] Pulga falsely destroying his character and relating outright lies." (Best Sell)

Reviewed by Daniel Coogan

America 127:554 D 23 '72 650w

Reviewed by P. A. Doyle

Best Sell 32:293 O 1 '72 300w

"This is scarcely a novel in the traditional sense, and seems to beg to be looked at in relation to all of Bassani's work rather than by itself. The more you read Bassani, the more you realize he is constructing a major roman-fleuve of mid-20th-century Ferrara, Italy. This 'novel' is a fragment which fits into [his] The Garden of the Finzi-Continis [BRD 1965]. In that novel, it is the narrator's failure in math which leads to his first encounter with the garden. Behind the Door picks up during the following school year, after he has taken his make-up exam and is starting in a new school with new classmates. . . . [By the end] his life pattern has been set; rather than face any challenge, he will always stand 'behind the door.' This episode is of major significance to the entire roman-fleuve, for it is this same unwillingness to observe and to act which is the crux of character and event in each story or novel. Bassani is a major writer, and this work is necessary for an understanding of his creations." R. D. Olson

Library J 97:2638 Ag '72 300w

"Weaver's translation [is] the artistic peer of the novel. . . . Steeped as he is in the world of this novel, Weaver has lifted it bodily, without once interrupting its breathing, into an English garment as elegantly natural as the Italian in which Bassani originally clothed it. There is an art to editing, too. . . . [The editors] knew that they were handling a work of art, and they would no more have subjected it to their own notions than, say, a dealer in paintings would have undertaken to improve on Modigliani. This is a singularly felicitous combination, this very beautiful little novel." C. L. Markmann

Nation 216:91 Ja 15 '73 900w

"This well-translated short novel . . . is a complex and subtle yet highly dramatic work which fully deserves to rank with such classic explorations of identity as Joseph Conrad's 'Secret Sharer' and Thomas Mann's 'Tonio Kröger.' 'The Garden of the Finzi-Continis,' about Jews living under Mussolini's racial laws, transcended its highly charged, potentially overwhelming historical material in drawing provocative connective lines between ethnic, social and sexual aspects of personal identity. Yet that longer, poetically conceived work is less important than the apparently slight 'Behind the Door' which carries the ontological implications of such connections further. . . . By the end of the book, without reducing matters to any simple formula, the narrator has managed to understand, but—most sobering perception of all—his understanding is of no help to him. . . . [for] he can not find 'the courage to fling [the door] open.'" Peter Sourian

N Y Times Bk R p7 O 1 '72 1250w

New Yorker 47:153 O 7 '72 100w

Time 100:114 O 23 '72 350w

BASSET, BERNARD. Let's start praying again; field work in meditation. 152p $4.95 Herder & Herder

240 Prayer

ISBN 0-665-00003-0 LC 78-176365

The author "records his effort to test his theories and conduct his personal 'field work' in prayer. Believing that private prayer must be personal and free, the author adapts to his own needs the religious writing of his favorite authorities—St. Thomas More, St. Ignatius, Dom Chapman, C. S. Lewis, Simone Weil, Teilhard, et al." (Library J)

"[An author] who has endeared himself to thousands of Americans makes a strong case here for personal prayer. He shares findings from his 'field work,' having spent the past two years in a semi-eremical situation on the Isles of Scilly, off the coast of Wales. He has read the best authors on prayer and sifted out what is suited to his needs. Now he urges others to find what is best for their prayer—what TV shows to watch, what books to read, what posture to take in prayer. He knows that no two earnest Christians will pray the same way, but all must make new efforts." E. S. Stanton

America 126:547 My 20 '72 80w

Christian Century 89:259 Mr 1 '72 10w

"Father Basset, an urbane and genial English Jesuit, has written numerous books and articles about prayer, and as a retreat master for 25 years has instructed many. . . . With rueful humor, he describes his experiments with Yoga and transcendental meditation, and confesses that he had been misguided in encouraging people to substitute activities for regular periods of mental prayer. This is a witty, civilized book; and although it is written within a Roman Catholic context, it should have a wide appeal." G. M. Casey

Library J 97:1725 My 1 '72 120w

BASSIOUNI, M. CHERIF, jt. auth. Storm over the Arab world. See Fisher, E. M.

BASSO, KEITH H., ed. Western Apache raiding and warfare. See Goodwin, G.

BATES, H. E. The blossoming world; an autobiography; il. by John Ward. 181p $6.50 Univ. of Mo. press

B or 92

ISBN 0-8262-0106-7 LC 71-149009

"This second volume of H. E. Bates's [proposed 3 volume] autobiography begins in 1926 . . . where he left off in The Vanished World, the first volume of his autobiography. . . . He picks up his story with his first trip to the Continent. Marriage and four children follow, along with his lifetime house, the converted Granary. He recalls his travel to America to publish with The Atlantic Monthly. . . . [records the literary world] of the 1930s; continues through Britain at war, and ends with his commissioning as a short-story writer in the Royal Air Force." (Publisher's note)

"[This volume] is essentially impersonal, but it is professionally informative."

New Yorker 47:86 Ja 8 '71 180w

"The second volume of H. E. Bates's autobiography takes us from the day . . . when, at the age of twenty, he went to Jonathan Cape to discuss the publication of The Two Sisters [his] first novel . . . up to September, 1941, when Mr Bates, author of more than 400 short stories, was recruited by the Air Ministry to become the internationally famous Flying Officer X. . . . [This book] is the product of an artist deeply conscious of continuity: the continuity of places (the Northamptonshire of his birth and the Kent of his adoption), the continuity of literary tradition, his early masters and his later peers, even the continuity of business association which has led him in forty-five years to have only two publishers."

TLS p1217 O 8 '71 950w

BATES, ROBERT H. Unions, parties, and political development; a study of mineworkers in Zambia. 291p $12.50 Yale univ. press

331.8 Mineworkers' Union of Zambia. Labor and laboring classes—Zambia. Zambia—Politics

This is "an analysis of the problem of role conflict for the leaders of the Mineworkers' Union of Zambia . . . [as well as an] analysis of the determinants of relative success or failure in turning post-independence trade unions from distributionist to productionist policies. . . . Bibliography. Index." (Choice)

"This is the first full-scale study of the mineworkers union in Zambia and follows on the earlier work of A. L. Epstein, Politics in an Urban African Community [BRD 1958]. . . . The thesis of this book is that unions are less effective in performing output functions than is the political party. . . . The study suffers from some significant defects. First, the ho-hum thesis which defects the author from significant issues. . . . A second problem originates in the author's value-neutral stance vis-à-vis various issues. The author takes government policy as given without raising questions as to how such policies are interpreted by differing strata, especially the mineworkers. . . . The author has [also] failed to grapple with a third problem, a crucial feature of Zambian social structure: government, party, and union officials have individual mobility opportunities open to them; mineworkers do not." W. H. Friedland

Ann Am Acad 400:154 Mr '72 550w

"Despite its nominally narrower focus, this study offers more insights of wider utility than contained in the collective efforts of more established scholars to present a comprehensive picture, e.g. Labor and economic development [BRD 1960], edited by Walter Galenson, or Role of labor in African nation-building [BRD 1969], edited by W. A. Beling. The author's style is unfortunately pedantic and laboriously academic. However, the inherent excitement of the events narrated and the intellectual challenge of his generalizations are sufficient to overcome the dullness of the writing. Sources are well documented—often from archives not readily accessible outside of Zambia. Excellent bibliography, including references to other bibliographies; useful index but it is marred by several irritating omissions. An important book, not only for Africanists but for any scholar concerned with general development theory."

Choice 9:100 Mr '72 200w

BATTERSBY, MARTIN. The decorative Thirties. 208p il $20 Walker & co.

747 Art industries and trade. Decoration and ornament. Interior decoration
ISBN 0-8027-0353-4 LC 70-159516

In this account of interior design in the 1930's, 'Battersby, author of The Decorative Twenties [BRD 1970], distinguishes between the curvilinear, fanciful 'art déco' of the 1920's and the more severe, rectilinear 'modernism' of the 1930's. . . . The emphasis is on English and French developments during the Depression years. . . . [when] Cubism, Surrealism, industrial design, and new materials such as plastic were among the forces that led to a smooth-surfaced, streamline look in decorative objects. Battersby covers interior design, furniture, ceramics, glass, fashion, and textiles." (Library J) Bibliography.

"[The book] seems to be aimed at a general audience or for the trade market and is of little value for the student. The text is weighted down with too large a supply of names and dates without a corresponding flow of discussion to keep the readers' interest. One is left, consequently, with a sense of the period that lacks any overall view or evaluation. It is rather like having a decade worth of interior decoration magazines consolidated into one volume. The brief bibliography mentions only books that would be found in any general library."

Choice 9:357 My '72 110w

"With the ever-increasing interest in Art Deco, this book will be a welcome addition to most general collections, as well as to those specializing in the decorative arts. This is a serious, detailed, well-researched, and well-organized study that will remain valuable long after the current fad has passed. . . . [The author's] black-and-white illustrations are a bit drab, but those in color are so delightful one wishes there were more of them. [This] is a satisfying book that shows 'moderne' items in the sometimes ludicrous settings they were designed for—not as isolated jokes in 1971 interiors. This view of them may not be so appealing, but it's historically sound." Jill Fischman

Library J 96:4086 D 15 '71 200w

"[This volume] celebrates variety rather than proposes underlying principles, but maybe that is where the study of this bit of the recent past is at. Lively illustrations." Lawrence Alloway

Nation 213:665 D 20 '71 40w

"The more luxurious items reproduced in [this book] . . . come mainly from the homes of the wealthy, the big liners and the Paris fashion houses. Some of them are a reminder that Surrealism was the dominant art of the Thirties." Robert Melville

New Statesman 82:866 D 17 '71 170w

TLS p740 Je 30 '72 500w

BAUER, ERNST. The mysterious world of caves. (Int. lib.) 129p il col il col maps $4.95 Watts, F.

551.4 Caves—Juvenile literature

ISBN 531-02102-5 LC 70-153824

"The author begins with the challenge of exploring underground, and explains the equipment needed as well as the training and the techniques required. He then discusses some of the drawings found in ancient caves. This is followed by a chapter dealing with cave animals and plants. Another chapter explains how caves are formed. . . . Some of the great caves of the world are described in the concluding portion. [Glossary. Bibliography. Index.] Grade seven and up." (Best Sell)

"Many young people would enjoy exploring caves. They will enjoy exploring some of the great caves of the world through the pages of this book. . . . Throughout the book color photographs reveal their beauty. . . . The clear, excellent drawings and the many photographs add greatly to the value of the book. Recommended." Francis Carmody

Best Sell 31:521 F 15 '72 120w

"Well put together and illustrated, but not [a book] you can imagine any child wanting to possess or even take out of the library; [it comes] in that well-known category of books for glancing at." Claire Tomalin

New Statesman 82:666 N 12 '71 10w

"Lucid, effective reading to help understanding and to stimulate the imagination. Admirably illustrated and produced [this represents] good value for library or individual purpose alike."

TLS p1521 D 3 '71 20w

BAUER, JOHANN. Kafka and Prague; text by Johann Bauer; phot. by Isidor Pollak; design by Jaroslav Schneider; tr. by P. S. Falla. 191p $14.95 Praeger

B or 92 Kafka, Franz. Prague
LC 73-153833

In this book "photographs of Prague and . . . passages from Kafka's diaries and letters [paint a] picture of Prague at the turn of the century." (Economist)

Reviewed by Forrest Ingram

America 126:266 Mr 11 '72 200w

"The text is brief but still fairly comprehensive on the history of the city, Kafka's family and youth, as well as his mature years. This is a world which has largely slipped away from us, and readers of Kafka should welcome the creation of this avenue back into that world."

Best Sell 31:426 D 15 '71 130w

Reviewed by Alan Pryce-Jones

Book World p6 D 26 '71 230w

Choice 9:219 Ap '72 140w

"Fans of Franz Kafka and Prague have at last an illustrated book worthy of both their favourites. . . . [This book is] a powerful evocation of the bureaucratic nightmare which inspired 'Trial' [BRD 1937] 'Castle' [BRD 1930] and many of Kafka's works. [There are] some breathtakingly beautiful atmospheric photographs."

Economist 241:62 O 30 '71 260w

"The text is dry and unimaginative and the translation mediocre. . . . There is an over-emphasis on official documents in the second half of the book; an impression of the bureaucracy Kafka loathed could have been conveyed by less abundant evidence. Unfortunately some of the illustrative matter is poorly integrated with the text." S. M. Batzdorff

Library J 97:489 F 1 '72 150w

"I recommend this book . . . to your coffee table. [It] contains large, stunning photos of trivial documents, post cards, Kafka alone and with girlfriend, and an eternally murky Prague which, presumably, was discovered by cameras inside Kafka's head. The text promises important revelations, but these are never produced; it is, however, nicely written and, even if it justifies neither itself nor the photographs, it contains many well-chosen quotations from Kafka which justify themselves. A few of the photographs, to lovers of Kafka, may be worth the price of the book." Leonard Michaels

N Y Times Bk R p1 N 21 '71 850w

TLS p1548 D 10 '71 180w

BAUER, WALTER. Orthodoxy and heresy in earliest Christianity; 2d German ed, with added apps, by Georg Strecker; tr. by a team from the Philadelphia seminar on Christian origins; and ed. by Robert A. Kraft and Gerhard Krodel. 326p $12.50 Fortress press

273 Church history—Primitive and early church. Apologetics. Heresies and heretics
ISBN 0-8006-0055-X LC 71-141252

Bauer takes issue with the view that "heresy in the first Christian centuries consistently represented a later perversion of an original orthodoxy. The self-revelation of Jesus was said to be followed by the disciples' propagation of the gospel, resulting in churches which had a basic harmony in faith and doctrine. Heretical groups were to be found only on the fringes of the orthodox church. After studying Christianity in various sectors of the Roman Empire, Bauer . . . argues that in some areas the initial form of Christianity was actually heretical according to later standards, and that orthodoxy as defined by the church councils triumphed at a relatively late date." (Publisher's note) Index. First published in Germany in 1934.

"[When] first published in Germany . . . this provocative and programmatic volume did not receive adequate attention, because of the unfavorable political situation and its very technical style. . . . To me the criticisms concerned with Bauer's method and argumentation (excessive reliance on hypotheses and conjectures, frequent use of the argument from silence, tailoring texts to fit the general thesis, etc.) have some validity. Also significant is his failure to define the theology and practice of orthodoxy in more detail. Furthermore, much of the historical analysis will have to be redone in the light of more recent discoveries. Finally, there is a need to explore the theological significance of the triumph of Roman Christianity. Bauer's own description ('a curious quirk of history') hardly seems adequate." D. J. Harrington

America 125:75 Ag 7 '71 450w

"Four years after Bauer's death in 1960, Georg Strecker published a revised German edition in which he introduced the annotations and corrections of the author, [and] added two chapters, the one on Jewish Christianity, and the other on the reception of Bauer's thesis by various scholars. . . . [This is] the first English translation of this classical study in the history of Christian thought. The final chapter was completely revised and expanded by Kraft in consultation with Strecker, bringing the discussion up to date. Highly recommended for scholars."

Choice 8:1594 F '72 180w

BAUGHMAN, E. EARL. Black Americans; a psychological analysis; with a foreword by M. Brewster Smith. 113p il $6.95; pa $2.95 N.Y. academic press

155.8 Discrimination. Negroes—Psychology
LC 70-152748

"Baughman's intent is to examine the relationship between race membership and an individual's experience and behavior in light of social and behavioral science research. . . . In sequential order [he] addresses himself to the concepts of race, intelligence, scholastic performance, self esteem, rage and aggression, psychopathology, socialization and the family, and leadership and education." (Am Anthropol)

"[The author] has produced a brief and very readable elementary introduction to a set of topics of critical importance for an understanding of Black Americans. His work is directed to undergraduate psychology and education students as supplementary reading. . . . While the book does have some shortcomings, it is refreshing to read a reasonable and balanced approach to problem areas fraught with emotional arguments and controversy." G. L. Albrecht

Am Anthropol 74:985 Ag '72 750w

"While the strength of this book lies with the author's insistence on confronting theoretical controversies with empirical data, its major weakness is in the exclusion of much significant research on blacks and whites. Three chapters on the affective states of blacks—'Self Esteem,' 'Rage and Aggression,' and 'Psychopathology'—make little use of the extensive research literature on alienation, anomie, alcoholism, suicide and homicide, and mental illness. . . . Baughman's suggestions regarding education . . . are most disturbing. After arguing that integration of public schools has demoralizing effects on black children who must compete with the better-prepared white children, he suggests that it might be better to integrate schools beginning at the first grade and proceed in a 'grade-per-year' desegregation plan. . . . This book, despite its good intentions, may arouse suspicion and hostility in its black readers." W. L. Yancey

Am J Soc 78:450 S '72 800w

"[This is] a lucid, dispassionate survey of a number of aspects of the black American's situation. . . . [The author's] treatment of the various educational issues—e.g. the Jensen controversy—is the most thoughtful and rewarding part. His parsimonious, well organized, and relatively jargon free style is especially commendable."

Choice 8:916 S '71 160w

BAUGHMAN, JAMES P. The Mallorys of Mystic; six generations in American maritime enterprise; pub. for the Marine hist. association. 496p $17.50 Wesleyan univ. press 387.5 Shipping—Mystic, Connecticut. Mallory family
ISBN 0-8195-4048-X LC 70-184363

An "account of the Mallory family's activities in the always hazardous and ultimately declining area of American maritime enterprise. . . . Baughman has written from an 'inside-out' perspective to emphasize the intensely personal nature of this complex business enterprise and the key role of those individuals who, as 'maritime specialists,' managed the Mallory fortunes from the colonial period through 1941. . . . Bibliography. Index." (Choice)

"A handsomely produced work distinguished by its meticulous scholarship, expert analysis, and wide-ranging scope, this . . . is an exemplary piece of business history and essential for all libraries. . . . Basing his account on extensive manuscript sources, published official documents, and authoritative monographs, Baughman supports his briskly informative text with detailed annotation, a large amount of illustrative material, and 75 pages of tables, figures, and statistical appendices which cover the Mallorys' involvement in sailmaking; whaling and sealing; steam and clipper shipbuilding; tramp, liner, and tanker operations; and ship management and investment."

Choice 9:1171 N '72 170w

"This thoughtful book is a model research report that not only deals with a wide range of U.S. maritime history, including shipbuilding, whaling, sailmaking, brokerage, and trade as it affected six generations of Mallorys, but also provides an underlying theory of management that links the successive episodes of the story. In this case study, the author is concerned with the conceptualization of American maritime entrepreneurship in action and presents such analyses as: 'the basic proposition of the Mallory business strategy may be stated as profit maximization constrained by the ethics of their zealous Protestantism.'" P. A. Kalisch

Library J 97:1710 My 1 '72 170w

BAUMAN, RICHARD. For the reputation of truth; politics, religion, and conflict among the Pennsylvania Quakers, 1750-1800. 258p $10 Johns Hopkins press

261.7 Friends, Society of
ISBN 0-8018-1178-3 LC 79-143626

"This book attempts to combine historical-anthropological perspectives in the study of Quakers and their role in political crises in colonial Pennsylvania. . . . The fourteen chapters cover: aspects of political behavior before 1750, crises over political participation, the growth of reform, cleavages and patterns of political behavior, Quakers and public morality, the campaign against the slave trade, and relations with the Indians." (Am Anthropol) Bibliography. Index.

"There is much [in this book] to convince the reader that the author is more familiar with Quaker history than he is with anthropology or methodology. The central problem of the book is clear enough: why did the Quakers of the 1750s find religion and participation in government incompatible while those of the 1790s did not, which Quakers experienced role conflict and which did not, and why? . . . Although the bibliography reflects sources in both American civilization and in anthropology the integration of the two fields of study has in the opinion of this reviewer not been fully achieved." J. A. Hostetler

Am Anthropol 74:874 Ag '72 350w

"Bauman's contribution consists in clarifying the different responses of Quaker leaders to the time of troubles after 1750, in re-emphasizing that the reformers who counseled a withdrawal from politics were still acting politically since they too were bent on influencing the 'setting and pursuit of public goals,' and in reminding us that, as Quakers struggled during and after the American Revolution to find an outlet for their political energies that would not conflict with their religious testimony, they discovered a commitment to the oppressed and disinherited members of their society that has ever since given them an influence in moral stewardship out of all proportion to their numbers." G. B. Nash

Am Hist R 77:1502 D '72 550w

"The justification for this study has to be the introduction of new insights from anthropology which illuminate reasonably familiar material, and either anthropology has not developed the insights or Bauman has failed to identify and use them. . . . Bauman's most important insight, unfortunately never fully developed, is that withdrawal is just as political a response as involvement and has many ramifications. This theme could have received a good deal more extended treatment. If the author could have done with more on withdrawal as political response, he could have done with less labored pontifical exegesis of lengthy quotations." J. M. Bumsted

J Am Hist 58:997 Mr '72 400w

BAUMANN, WALTER. The rose in the steel dust; an examination of the Cantos of Ezra Pound. 211p $5.95 Univ. of Miami press 811 Pound, Ezra Loomis—The cantos
SBN 87024-141-9 LC 73-102691

The author examines a number of recurrent motifs 'in the Cantos and has related them to one another under three large rubrics. These are 'Pound's preoccupation with the mythical aspects of his vision of the world' (Part I: 'Towards the Ideal City'); his use of Odyssean motifs— . . . (Part II: 'In the Wake of Odysseus'); and his personal life in the American prison-camp near Pisa after his arrest. . . . (Part III: 'The Point of Crisis'). To aid his presentation, Mr. Baumann has selected Cantos 4 and 82 as his main centers of reference for Parts I and III; . . . for Part II, which deals with the Odyssean theme, he harrows the whole of the Cantos." (Am Lit) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] is a useful and intelligent handbook after its fashion. Mr. Baumann . . . moves through the two selected cantos line by line, treating them under such headings as 'Ancient Blood Feud,' 'The Dawn Lyric,' 'Artemis: Merciless Beauty' and 'Despair.' Altogether, he mobilizes his thoughts under some forty-four such topics. In Parts I and III he begins with the canto of concentration in each instance, then widens his range to include references elsewhere in the cantos to the same topic and to think about the total bearing of the thoughts so brought together. . . . Nothing here is really new, save that Mr. Baumann helps to show, almost as a computer might, how certain ideas are built into the Cantos in such a way as to help make them a living body (my formulation, though, not his). Helpful, certainly, and therefore praiseworthy." M. L. Rosenthal

Am Lit 44:333 My '72 950w

"Following the lead of older commentators in assigning a fugal development to the work even though recent studies reject that notion, Baumann has written a book that is perhaps most valuable for its close reading of two cantos that have not been given the consideration they merit." Walter Waring

Library J 95:2262 Je 15 '70 100w

BAUR, JOHN I. H. Joseph Stella; research by Irma B. Jaffe. 154p il col il $15 Praeger

759.13 Stella, Joseph
LC 74-125486

"The aim of this book is to present . . . [a] group of illustrations covering the varied phases of Stella's career and to provide a . . . study of his life and work." (Pref) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"[This volume is] well-illustrated and well-documented. . . . [It] will serve the general reader, the student, and the specialist . . . [and is] recommended for art collections and public libraries." M. E. Landgren

Library J 96:2483 Ag '71 20w

"[Baur's] excellent essay contains samples of [Stella's] strange prose, and some still stranger biographical details." Rackstraw Downes

N Y Times Bk R p77 D 5 '71 60w

BAUSANI, ALESSANDRO. The Persians; from the earliest days to the twentieth century; tr. from the Italian by J. B. Donne. 204p il pl maps $8.95 St Martins

955 Iran—History
ISBN 236-17760-5 LC 71-149313

"The author examines the shaping of the major Persian dynasties, from the first empires of the Medes and Achaemenids, the Seleucids and the Parthians, the . . . empire of the Sassanids, through the . . . adoption of Islam, and the dynasties stemming from Central Asia, to the . . . era of the Safavids. . . . The book concludes with a discussion of the problems of modern Iran." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"A fine translation . . . [of the work which was] published in Italy in 1962. This excellent book gives the outline and much valuable detail—covering most of Persian history—to the present (1953). The scholarship is impeccable and the interpretations are really first class. There are three maps, a good number of excellent photographs by Wim Swaan, and a very useful bibliography—including a lot of material in Russian."

Choice 8:1505 Ja '72 80w

"This good, interesting introduction to and interpretation of Persian history stresses cultural and economic aspects rather than politics. The author indicates the interaction of Iranian civilization with those around it and relates it to commonly known facts and to modern Iran, making much of the whole, particularly the pre-Islamic period, meaningful to the educated general reader." D. W. Littlefield

Library J 96:3605 N 1 '71 90w

BAUTIER, ROBERT-HENRI. The economic development of medieval Europe [tr. from the French by Heather Karolyi]. 286p il col il $7.95; pa $3.95 Harcourt

940.1 Europe—Economic conditions. Middle Ages—History
ISBN 0-15-127438-X; 0-15-518780-5 (pa.)
LC 73-141798

In this account of the evolution of medieval "trade, agriculture, and industry . . . [the author] divides the period from the end of the fourth to the end of the fifteenth century into three phases: the early Middle Ages, which saw the decline of economic activity in the wake of the destruction of the Roman empire, but included such times of resurgence as the Carolingian Renaissance; the classical Middle Ages during which wide commercial links were established; and the late Middle Ages which after a century of financial and social crises, culminated in a period of discovery and technical progress." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"With 158 plates (23 in color), this volume is certainly the best illustrated survey of medieval economic history available; the text itself, translated from the French original which was composed before 1966, is good, although it already shows signs of age. . . . [Bautier's volume remains] an effective summary of the entire range of medieval history, and should attract the interest of teachers and librarians interested in keeping a good collection of medieval surveys available to students."

Choice 9:405 My '72 160w

"Medieval economic history is not normally accounted a best-selling subject. But Robert-Henry Bautier has written a summary survey which should widen its appeal: an up-to-date outline, of interest to both general and specialist readers. . . . Clear in exposition, packed with vivid detail, and admirably illustrated (with everything but maps), it is also enlivened throughout with original facts and ideas on the whole course, chronology and geography of medieval economic growth."

TLS p165 F 11 '72 300w

"While somewhat disproportionate attention is given to France and to commercial activity, the work can be recommended . . . reflecting as it does much recent scholarly advance in the field, and being mercifully free from the opinionated doctrinairism that so long dogged its proper understanding."

Va Q R 48:lxix spring '72 160w

BAWDEN, NINA. Anna apparent. 211p $6.95 Harper

SBN 06-010249-7 LC 72-79703

In this life-story novel, "Anna begins as Annie-May Gates, a neglected . . . child, abandoned . . . after her mother has disappeared in the London blitz. Rescued by Crystal, a spoilt, demanding lady with nothing to do while her husband and son are gone to the war, Anna is transformed into a devotedly grateful daughter. She marries the son, Giles, displacing without uproar his first wife, Tottie; later, she uses Tottie's flat for assignments with her journalist lover, Daniel. Called from one of these to an emergency at her son's school, she is involved in a car accident which . . . tips Anna a little out of her mind, but into the keenest sense of her self she has ever had." (TLS)

"Can a person stifle her true nature and react only as people who are close to her and love her want her to? This novel explores a personality which is submitted to just such tensions. . . . Nina Bawden is a writer who combines the ability of the storyteller with that of the psychologist; she delves skilfully into the relationships of her characters and presents them dramatically." I. N. Pompea

Best Sell 32:342 N 1 '72 300w

"Unfortunately Miss Bawden has not been content to keep within the limits of her considerable powers. In her latest work her pessimistic view of human nature has hardened into the state where she is only able to paint the mean side of her characters. If some minor character is given a few endearing human qualities the whole person is over-sweetened and sentimentalised. . . . There is stuff here for a good novel. It is the pretentious way it is handled that betrays it. So does the pseudo-trendy language and the obsession with excretion. And it does so because none of it is organic to the sort of writer Miss Bawden really is. In this novel she is herself trying on an unnatural and unbecoming persona." Shirley Toulson

New Statesman 84:442 S 29 '72 350w

"It is depressing to find a writer whose skills are as finely tuned as Nina Bawden's involved in such a clotted chronicle as this. There is enough fuel in 'Anna Apparent' to run a daytime TV serial for at least a year. Maybe more. . . . Tune in next week." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p43 O 15 '72 200w

TLS p1185 O 6 '72 160w

BAYLOR, BYRD. When clay sings; il. by Tom Bahti. unp $4.95 Scribner

970.4 Indians of North America—Art—Juvenile literature. Indians of North America—Antiquities—Juvenile literature
SBN 684-12807-1 LC 70-180758

"There are desert hillsides where ancient Indian pottery still lies half buried in the sand. . . . Now Indian children make a game of searching for bits of clay that were once somebody's bowl or mug. . . . As in Before You Came This Way by Baylor and Bahti [BRD 1969], this is a lyrical treatment of archaeology and the art of Indians of the Southwest. . . . Grades one to four." (Library J)

"A handsome book, in which the rhythmic arrangement of text and illustration is dramatic and effective. . . . Good earth-colors in browns and tans contribute to the vitality of the book in which life in the past is given meaning and interest for children of today."

B. R.

Horn Bk 48:382 Ag '72 210w

"Great immediacy is lent by the reflections on the pre-historic people who might have used these fragments and by the parallels of thought and feeling drawn between then and now. Bahti has filled the pages with evocative pen-and-ink line drawings representing the primitive figures and designs found on the pottery; these have been arranged against a background collage of subtle brown, sienna and beige. The striking effect of the illustrations is matched by Baylor's word images concerning how some pieces were used, how others were made—'Once somebody sitting on the ground outside a high cold cliff-house thought: 'I'll make this bowl as pretty as I can.''" A. M. Bergman

Library J 97:1898 My 15 '72 150w

Reviewed by Dee Brown

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p7 N 5 '72 80w

BAZANT, JAN. Alienation of church wealth in Mexico; social and economic aspects of the liberal revolution, 1856-1875; ed. and tr. by Michael P. Costeloe. 332p maps $17.50 Cambridge

332 Church and state in Mexico. Catholic Church in Mexico
ISBN 0-521-07872-5 LC 74-149441

The author traces developments in "church conflicts with the state after Independence and throughout the turbulent years of 1856-75." (Choice) Originally published in Spanish in Mexico.

BAZANT, JAN—Continued

"Bazant has settled in a general way some of the arguments raised in the bitter polemics that have raged for over a century between clericals and anticlericals. First, his best estimate of the value of all Church real estate and mortgages is between seventy and eighty million pesos (in contemporary not present-day currency). This is a far cry from the oft-repeated claim that the Church owned one-half of the wealth in Mexico. . . . Second, the Lay Lerdo of 1856 . . . and the expropriation law of 1859 had their roots in Mexican history. . . . In a sense the laws on Church property of the Reforma period are a culmination of historical precedents, not a sharp break with the past. . . . The English version is a faithful translation of the original. . . . This is a major work. It is not easy to read, especially for laymen unversed in banking, finance, and mortgage contracts. Its organization and style leave much to be desired, but its findings are often fascinating and its conclusions provocative." K. M. Schmitt

Am Hist R 77:849 Je '72 350w

"Scholars will find this an exciting book. . . . Tracing the intricate dealings of the church with both liberal and conservative regimes required a craftsman. In not taking up the cudgels as either a polemicist or apologist, Bazant adds enormously to our understanding, both economically and socially, of nationalization. . . . Costeloe is an excellent translator, a task made more difficult by ecclesiastical terms of obscure origin. For both graduate and undergraduate libraries. Good index; excellent bibliography."

Choice 8:727 J1 '71 200w

BAZIN, ANDRÉ. What is cinema? essays sel. & tr. by Hugh Gray. v2 200p $6.95 Univ. of Calif. press

791.43 Moving pictures
ISBN 0-520-02034-0 LC (67-18899)

"The first volume of What Is Cinema? [BRD 1967] presented Bazin's writings on the ontology of cinema and the meaning and function of techniques in film making, as well as specific evaluations of films and directors. . . . Half of [the essays in this second volume] deal with the Italian neorealists, especially De Sica and Rossellini, whose absorption of leftist politics into film technique Bazin considered the beginning of a European cinematic renaissance. The rest treat assorted subjects: Chaplin, Jean Gabin, the American Western, and the distinctive style of Howard Hawks." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The first essay is perhaps the best essay ever written on Cinematic realism. Its anti-Expressionist bias is so convincing that one must read it clutching Lotte Eisner's The haunted screen [BRD 1970] with his left arm."

. . . In a beautifully enthusiastic foreword, Francois Truffaut claims that 'Andre Bazin wrote about film better than anyone else in Europe.' Outside of Europe, one may find his equal (Eisenstein, certainly), but it would be impossible to name more than ten books more intelligent or more valuable."

Choice 9:829 S '72 130w

"The late André Bazin was one of the greatest film critics and very likely the most influential of them all. The auteur school of criticism, of which Andrew Sarris is the chief American exponent, springs from Bazin, whose writings were also the major source of inspiration to the nouvelle vague directors (Godard, Truffaut, et al.) and whose spirit is the unifying thread in the several critical movements that have filtered through Cahiers du Cinéma. . . . As a film esthetic, the [first] book was simultaneously basic and complex, rigorous and open; . . . as a follow-up these newly translated essays are not a disappointment. . . . In the excellent translations by Hugh Gray, these painstakingly structured essays are difficult yet exhilarating reading. Bazin does not entertain while he informs; but both volumes of What Is Cinema? are rich in distilled insights, and anybody interested in movies and movie criticism should have access to them." J. A. Avant

Library J 96:4105 D 15 '71 300w

"Bazin's virtues reside in his suggestiveness and his openness, rather than in any esthetic system that might be extracted from his work. He has the great critic's gift of speaking about a specific work in terms that enlighten you not only about the work but also about the entire context of its art. . . . Unfortunately, many of Bazin's admirers would like us instead to see his ideas in the context of timeless philosophy. . . . Instead of being inspired by his grace and insight to understanding films a little better, we are implicitly asked [in Gray's introduction] to treat Bazin as the main subject of explication. The footnotes, so eager to tell us what a book of hours is that gross errors in reference are overlooked, turn simple analogies, allusions and metaphors into incantatory objects." Leo Braudy

N Y Times Bk R p27 F 13 '72 1450w

BEACH, VINCENT W. Charles X of France: his life and times. 488p il $16.50 Pruett pub.

B or 92 Charles X, King of France. France
—History—1799-1914
LC 69-14471

This account of the life and political career of Charles X also deals with "the role of the émigré in the French Revolution, the relationships among the various members of the Bourbon family, the machinations of the Comte d'Artois (Charles X) from before the Revolution through the reign of his brother, Louis XVIII, and . . . his final exile after the Revolution of 1830. . . . Almost half the book deals with the period before Artois became king." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"One of the reasons why we have not had a scholarly biography of Charles before this has been the difficulty of gathering relevant sources. It is to Beach's credit that he has been able to unearth important unpublished primary materials in special collections at the Public Record Office and the British Museum as well as in important public collections in France. These were supplemented by newspapers, records of parliamentary debate, and a large memoir literature (much of which is unfortunately either hagiographic or, as in the case of de Boigne, maliciously anecdotal). The secondary works drawn on for authority are also substantial, although they are often introduced rather ponderously." D. P. Resnick

Am Hist R 77:1457 D '72 450w

"Perhaps the reason this book reads like a doctoral dissertation is because several of Beach's graduate students helped in its preparation and made 'important contributions' to it. Nevertheless it is a good life-and-times biography, valuable for collateral reading at any level of college, offering insight into a number of historical problems. . . . There is no other biography of Charles X in English, and none in any language that provides the professional documentation and up-to-date research that Beach and his students have assembled here. Good bibliography, index, illustrations, but no genealogical charts and only one map—Paris in 1789."

Choice 8:1075 O '71 110w

"In this detailed study . . . the main emphasis is on the short six-year reign of Charles. Unfortunately, a good topic is handled in a rather mediocre fashion. The reader will often get the impression that the text is padded. Many quotations and much historiographical material in the first chapter could easily have been relegated to footnotes or omitted. The greatest weakness is that Beach has failed to offer any real analysis of his material. Rarely is there any discussion of the choices Charles had in making a decision and why he made the choice he did. The book's main appeal will be to undergraduate history majors, and first-year graduate students working in the field of the Restoration in French history." Judah Adelson

Library J 96:4086 D 15 '71 210w

BEALER, ALEX W. Only the names remain; the Cherokees and the trail of tears; il. by William Sauts Bock. 88p lib bdg $5.75 Little

970.3 Cherokee Indians—Juvenile literature
LC 71-169008

This is an account of the "advanced civilization [of the Cherokee Indians] and a detailed description of how they were driven out of their lands by the American government. . . . [Included also is such] information [as] the extent of their assimilation into white cultural patterns . . . [as well as] descriptions of the gold-seekers moving into the homes of the Cherokees . . . [and] of white settlers trying to remove the Cherokees from their lands. Grades four to seven." (Library J) Index.

"The story of the unique development and tragic dissolution of the power [of the Cherokees] is poignantly told in . . . [this] lucid account. . . . The author's narrative style . . . is dramatic and immediate." M. M. B.

Horn Bk 48:278 Je '72 200w

"The moving account of the 'trail of tears' when the Cherokees were so brutally moved westward brilliantly conveys the reality that genocide and immorality are an integral part of American history and did not originate with our presence in Indochina. The black-and-white drawings are stylized and sometimes wooden, yet fit the mood of the text." Isadora Kunitz

Library J 97:1909 My 15 '72 200w

"This is a worthy recounting except for the sparsity of details about the long exodus to the West." Dee Brown

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p22 N 5 '72 40w

BEAN, GEORGE E. Turkey beyond the Maeander; an archaeological guide. 267p il pi maps $11.50 Rowman & Littlefield

914.96 Muğla, Turkey (Province)—Antiquities
ISBN 0-87471-038-3 LC 77-872116

This companion to the author's Turkey's Southern Shores (BRD 1969) "covers the geographical area of ancient Caria, the modern vilayet of Muğla, which lies to the south of the Maeander river." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[Bean] has put together a most entertaining book about rather unpromising material. Glossary of terms; . . . photographic plates; . . . plans, and maps; . . . short bibliography containing material as late as 1970; an index which is not as complete as it should be; and a large fold-out map. The book is worth having if only for the short but masterful Chapter One which discusses the problems of ancient Caria and the Carians. . . . [It] will appeal to classical scholars, art historians, and travelers who seek the unusual."

Choice 9:417 My '72 150w

Reviewed by R. H. Dyson

Class World 66:66 S '72 300w

"For some years Professor Bean has been at work on a series of books which are exactly the right weight for the discerning traveller. They are concerned only with the classical sites. . . . Byzantine and Islamic monuments are not described. . . . This is an indispensable book both because of its information and because of the author's civilized, leisurely account of the classical remains. He is able also to bring the past inhabitants to life. . . . [However] more reference to the writings of nineteenth and twentieth-century visitors and archaeologists would have been interesting. . . . Occasionally one would wish for more information . . . [and better] line drawings."

TLS p339 Mr 24 '72 950w

BEAN, LOUIS H. How to predict the 1972 election. 240p il $6.95 Quadrangle bks.

324 Elections—U.S. Politics, Practical
LC 78-187324

The author "who by profession is an agricultural economist, has been practicing [political forecasting] since 1948 as a hobby and a preoccupation. . . . From his newest book you will get answers to questions like these: If unemployment drops one percent, how many Republican congressmen will be saved from defeat? Which state is the best national barometer?" (Christian Science Monitor)

"It's fun to do your own political forecasting. Louis Bean tells you how—and he's the best. You may not get it right the first try and you may have a little trouble shielding your predictions from your hopes. But you will learn a lot about the art (it is certainly not a science), a lot about past voting patterns and how they bear on this year's elections by reading how Mr. Bean does it. . . . The book, completed several months ago, does not give a flat forecast of the presidential winner—particularly since the Democratic nominee was then not known. However [Bean's] analysis of voting trends persuades him that the Democrats hold the advantage and he sees a sure Democratic victory but for one great uncertainty . . .

whether the Democratic nominee (George McGovern) is a 'typical' candidate." Roscoe Drummond

Christian Science Monitor p11 J1 19 '72 400w

"As an antidote to some of the ideologically slanted works that have come out in recent years touting philosophies of the Right and the Left, this little volume is most effective. It reminds us that most voters, most of the time, operate on an earthy mixture of instinct, hunch and force of habit, responding to only two or three basic stimuli. . . . [Mr. Bean points] up the inherent, if concealed, vulnerability of an incumbent Republican President whose party remains a very weak number two, and he warns against GOP complacency, a refrain that has been taken up by some worried Republicans themselves." A Bakshian

Nat R 24:962 S 1 '72 250w

N Y Times Bk R p52 S 24 '72 90w

BEARD, JAMES. How to eat (and drink) your way through a French (or Italian) menu [by] James Beard; with the assistance of Gino P. Cofacci. 192p $6.95 Atheneum pubs.

641.03 Cookery, French—Dictionaries. Cookery, Italian—Dictionaries
LC 70-108820

The author has prepared a "guide to French and Italian dishes, those most frequently found on restaurant menus abroad, so that an American in Paris or Lyons or Rome or Florence can determine for himself . . . what is being offered, how it is cooked, and the way in which it is served." (Publisher's note)

"Beard has performed an invaluable service for the tourist to France and Italy by providing translations of the dishes on each country's menus. . . . If you've been frightened off before by a gibelotte de lapin, now you can look it up under the 'Game' section and learn that it is a young rabbit stew served with fried toast. This small, easily carried book is also recommended for use in fine French and Italian restaurants in New York, San Francisco, and points in between." George Aguirre

Library J 96:2505 Ag '71 100w

"[This] is a complete and accurate lexicon."

Nika Hazelton

N Y Times Bk R p30 D 12 '71 40w

BEARD, JAMES. James Beard's American cookery; with il. by Earl Thollander. 877p $12.95 Little

641.5 Cookery
LC 70-165755

The author discusses "the history of American food, its ties to other countries, the ways immigrants adapted their cooking to the very different resources of the new world, . . . the influence of social conditions, in short the emergence of an American way of eating. . . . The recipes include 28 categories of foods, from cocktail food to sandwiches, pickles and preserves and candy. . . . There are over fifteen hundred of them, and . . . they include all the cooking styles of America, past and present. . . . Also included is . . . kitchen information, such as the best way of preparing potatoes, the grading of beef and how to bake perfectly." (Nat R) Bibliography. "Index." (Library J)

"Personally, I do not subscribe to [Beard's theory of an American cuisine]; but a cookbook has more than a thesis; it also has recipes. As usual, Beard has written a good book. His recipes are clear and easy to follow. Some of the recipes are not for the beginning cook, but most can be used by the novice. For more adventurous cooks there are recipes for head-cheese, and several for pigs' feet and other hard-to-find dishes. The book is attractive, and it is illustrated with line drawings of various antique cooking implements. The vicarious cook will enjoy this book as much as the cooking cook." Sue Pearce

Library J 97:2598 Ag '72 150w

"The arrival of a new cookbook invariably fills me with all the enthusiasm of a tired, elderly mule. I have, as my Recording Angel knows, read, reviewed, cooked by and written so many cookbooks that I feel I owe nothing to anyone on the subject. But when a book like [this one] comes into one's life, all that for years has been shoddy, meretricious, untested swiped from others, and so on in the cookbook line, is forgotten in the joy of having a masterwork in one's hands. N.B.: I have never said this of any cookbook before. . . . There are recipes that you will not find anywhere else. . . . There are recipes for all levels of cooking skill, all budgets, for all occasions when people eat. Because of their simplicity, the recipes, even the simplest ones, produce very elegant food." Nika Hazelton

BEARD, JAMES—Continued

Nat R 24:653 Je 9 '72 1100w

BEARDEN, ROMARE. Six black masters of American art [by] Romare Bearden and Harry Henderson. (Zenith bks) 119p il $3.95; pa $1.75 Doubleday

920 Negro artists. Artists, American
LC 70-175358

This book contains biographies of Joshua Johnston, Robert S. Duncanson, Henry Ossawa Tanner, Horace Pippin, Augusta Savage and Jacob Lawrence. Index.

"Zeal to show the achievements of black art in America has pitted the authors into the inexcusable fault of overstatement and conjecturing without proper documentation. Where biographical documentation is unavailable it is best to let artistic productions alone reveal the artists' talents. Sharper plates with less text, at least for the obscure periods of the 18th and 19th centuries, would have saved the situation. . . . Unscholarly studies such as this are detrimental to the cause of black studies."

Choice 9:1119 N '72 160w

"Emphasizing the barriers each had to overcome in order to achieve artistic recognition, fictionalized conversations introduce and add interest to each chapter; the information given is clear, accurate and as complete as possible. More fictionalization appears in the section on Joshua Johnston, about whom most details are conjecture. The lack of a bibliography is an unfortunate omission. . . . However, this is a highly readable, liberally illustrated text."

Karen Biddle

Library J 97:2235 Je 15 '72 150w

"A substantial book; it not only brings six black artists to the reader—but, within its small size, brings them alive in the vital context of each respective time. It ranges from Joshua Johnston (a 'freedman' of the early 1800's moving mysteriously from one prominent white family to another as a portrait painter) to Jacob Lawrence, awarded the Spingarn Medal in 1970 for 'eminence among American painters.'"

Fred and Lucille Clifton

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p30 My 7 '72 70w

BEARE, GEORGE. The bee sting deal. 183p $5.95 Houghton

ISBN 0-395-13942-2 LC 72-1848

"The island of Jarma has entered into a treaty with Persia for a causeway between mainland and island that is not popular with many Jarmani. Victor Stallard, a free-lance investigator-adventurer, and his girl friend [Cynthia Godwin], an assistant editor of a London newspaper, get involved." (Best Sell)

"One of the most violent adventures one could find. There is, also, plenty of muted sex to titillate the impressionable. But all-in-all it is merely an esoteric caper."

Best Sell 32:283 S 15 '72 100w

Reviewed by H. C. Veit

Library J 97:3186 O 1 '72 50w

"Every writer has his quirks. One anticipates them with fondness or irritation or amusement, as the case may be. In mystery fiction, for example, there is Rex Stout's pre-dilection for breaking off dialogue with a dash. ('So he came to me and I never—') There is John Dickson Carr's avoidance of 'he said.' . . . And now there is George Beare's whispering. . . . [Victor and Cynthia] spend much of their time whispering. The greater the stress they are under, the more they whisper. Others would wail or groan, or cry out. Not Victor and Cynthia. By their whispers shall ye know them. . . . In addition to angry whispers, stupid whispers and fear whispers, there are love whispers, teary whispers, despair whispers, whisper whispers. [Beare] has written an action novel about Near East intrigue, but that is less important than the fact that he has established himself as the greatest contemporary master of the whisper." Newgate Calendar

N Y Times Bk R p14 Ag 27 '72 300w

"A London newspaper editor is murdered and a young woman reporter on his staff is beaten up; the reporter and a tough (but suitably attractive) maritime adventurer and two others are dumped ashore in Angola and pursued by assassins; they confront their pursuers in the South African veldt and the blood flows freely; they are captured and imprisoned on an island in the Persian Gulf—all that and much more happens before we learn the sinister meaning of the force that calls itself Bee Sting. A good, fast, complicated thriller."

New Yorker 48:184 O 14 '72 80w

BEATTY, WILLIAM K., Jr. auth. The medical garden. See Marks, G.

BEAUJOUR, ELIZABETH KLOSTY. The invisible land; a study of the artistic imagination of Iurii Olesha. 222p $8 Columbia univ. press

891 Olyesha, Yuri

ISBN 0-231-03428-8 LC 71-130959

Mrs. Beaujour examines the Russian author's "search for self-definition, domination, and control in the images, themes, and devices characteristic of his artistic imagination. [She] also shows the increasing conflict between the demands imposed upon him and other Soviet writers in the 1930s and 1940s. This conflict reduced Olesha to almost complete artistic silence for twenty years." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[Olesha's works] are colorful and fantastic. Beaujour's book, scholarly and minute, examines Olesha's vision of the artist in relation to the world. All but specialists will have a tough time with this one. For large collections."

S. A. Haffner

Library J 95:4261 D 15 '70 130w

"This is a very perceptive, interesting and useful book, indispensable to both students and teachers of Soviet literature." E. B. Mayer

Mod Lang J 56:59 Ja '72 500w

"Professor Beaujour has written an interesting, and in some respects, convincing analysis of Olesha. She is good on the early stories . . . and she resurrects some little-known but important works of the 1930s. Unfortunately, this generosity does not extend throughout the whole book; in a revealing slip she betrays her own insensitivity to Olesha's values, when she speaks of his devices as 'mechanisms'. A more sympathetic approach might have produced more rewarding results. Her final judgment, then, is a blinkered one, because she has approached her subject with preconceived notions of the artist's function."

TLS p341 Mr 24 '72 800w

"One of the finest Soviet writers, Iurii Olesha (1899-1960), is known in this country only for his famous novel 'Envy.' [in Love and other stories, BRD 1968]. . . . Olesha was a stylistic innovator of the first magnitude, and not all of his work is easily understandable. [He] suffered the usual difficulties of creative writers under Stalin; refusing to try to write like a socialist Turgenyev, he wrote nothing at all during the last ten years of his life and very little in the decade before that. [This] biography provides an excellent introduction to [his] work."

Va Q R 48:xv winter '72 100w

BEAUVOIR, SIMONE DE. The coming of age; tr. by Patrick O'Brien [Eng title: Old age]. 585p $10 Putnam

301.43 Old age. Aged

LC 75-189781

The first part of this book is an "objective study of the old, of how they have been treated in different times and environments—from the nomadic South American Indian tribes, who leave their old behind to die when they become useless, to the ancient Chinese, who revered them—and of how we deal with them in present-day western societies. The second part studies the old as they see themselves and react, mentally and physically, to the arrival of old age." (Economist) Index.

Reviewed by C. J. Huelsbeck

America 127:47 J1 22 '72 430w

"[This] study of old age was published in France as La Vieillesse, and in England under an exact translation: Old Age. How amused Mlle. de Beauvoir must be to find her suspicions of America's hypocritical readers confirmed by the name bestowed on her book here. . . . The change neatly underlines her point: no one, not even the aged themselves, really wants to hear or think about the grim last days of life, narrowing down to the grave. . . . It is one of Mlle. de Beauvoir's strengths that she does not wince away from the unpleasant. Nor—another strength—does she wallow in it. She is, above all else, a just judge of the great issues of life, at once compassionate and objective. Her sympathies are engaged by the old, but so is her mind, and it is a powerful mind; best, I have always thought, when grappling with issues of profound moral nature. . . . The purpose of her book is to examine society as it is revealed by treatment and image, not simply to describe and deplore the valuation set on the aged." Elizabeth Janeway

Atlantic 229:94 Je '72 2350w

Reviewed by Denise Rankin
Best Sell 32:115 Je 1 '72 750w

Choice 9:584 Je '72 150w

Reviewed by Charles Whitman
Christian Century 89:988 O 4 '72 750w

Reviewed by Edward Grossman
Commentary 54:56 Ag '72 3900w

Reviewed by Cyril Connolly
Critic 30:73 J1/Ag '72 1400w
Economist 243:suppl 13 Ap 8 '72 500w

Reviewed by Carol Eckberg
Library J 97:1453 Ap 15 '72 160w

Reviewed by C. B. Luce
Nat R 24:956 S 1 '72 2000w

Reviewed by Doris Grumbach
New Repub 166:131 My 20 '72 1700w

"[This study] both covers unique ground and is one of the best ever written. Though [the author] has done her homework in psychiatry and geriatrics, this isn't the book's chief merit. . . . What she has produced is a book in the French philosophic tradition (excellently translated here so that it loses none of its style) expressing what it means and how it feels to become old, to join that underprivileged and disadvantaged minority—soon perhaps to become a majority—which all of us must eventually join unless society mends its attitudes." Alex Comfort
New Statesman 83:349 Mr 17 '72 850w

Reviewed by V. S. Pritchett
N Y Rev of Books 19:3 J1 20 '72 3500w

"An extraordinary, altogether engrossing, large work. . . . I cannot take issue with it since in its sweep I have learned all that I know about the matter. Personal experience and observation are confirmed and enriched at every point by the learned intensity of the book and the generosity of the feelings. A fluent use of history and literature, the portraits of great and humble persons who were given long life, the lessons of philosophy and the power of social indignation—these come together in a prodigious outburst of energy and imagination. In the interest of understanding and completeness everything is considered—medical evidence, thoughts on sexuality, psychological humiliation, fear, retreat, adjustments or the lack of them, geriatric fact and fancy. And we always return to the 'bad health, poverty and solitude' that are the destiny of most old people." Elizabeth Hardwick

N Y Times Bk R p1 My 14 '72 2600w

"[This book] is bound to be a great value to scholars of various kinds and to doctors, not to mention people of any age. . . . But Mme. de Beauvoir is simply unwilling to give equal space to a line of argument that opposes her own. She never wants her reader to look forward to old age. . . . If even writers vary substantially in the way they regard old age—as Mme. de Beauvoir, out of her great respect for them, allows us to see—what might she have found had she gone out to a working-class district of Paris and talked with a few of the aging men and women who live there?" Robert Coles

New Yorker 48:68 Ag 19 '72 2900w

Reviewed by P. S. Prescott
Newsweek 79:100 Je 5 '72 750w
Time 99:96 My 22 '72 400w

"[This] massive study (reviewed in the TLS, June 18, 1970) now appears in an agreeable translation. . . . The book remains as it impressed at a first reading: a monument, tirelessly researched, exhaustively documented, but dispersing its impact because of its very comprehensiveness and lacking the kind of life to be found variously in Peter Townsend or in Muriel Spark when they are dealing with the same subject." TLS p388 Ap 7 '72 60w

BECK, C. M., ed. Moral education; interdisciplinary approaches; ed. by C. M. Beck, B. S. Crittenden [and] E. V. Sullivan. 402p Can$12.50 Univ. of Toronto press

370 Character education. Ethics
ISBN 0-8020-1744-4 LC 76-151356

This book begins with an "introduction that examines various meanings of moral education and the history of the term, and relates these to the range of viewpoints presented in the papers that follow. The four main parts of the volume are concerned with the search for common norms within a pluralistic society, moral development and moral behaviour, and problems of methodology and practice." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies.

"[The book is] based on the proceedings of a conference on moral education held at the University of Toronto in the spring of 1968. The distinctiveness of the conference rests in the exchanges between philosophers interested in elucidating the conditions of moral thought and action, and in psychologists devoted to explaining the development of morality in young people. Points of disagreement are apparent in their various interpretations of the role of reason in acting morally and the possibility of teaching procedures of morality without teaching particular moral values. . . . [The book] gives explicit and continuous attention to the various roles of philosophy and the social sciences in the planning of an approach to morality in classrooms."

Choice 8:1624 F '72 200w

"Each section of the book is preceded by an introduction in which the complex strands of argument and discussion are ably identified and evaluated by the editors. . . . The volume gives heartening evidence of sustained and productive efforts to supply a theory of moral education in response to the urgencies of the times, using the resources of both contemporary philosophy and social psychology. . . . One does not come away from reading this book with any sense of problems resolved. Conflicts and perplexities over the meaning of morality and the manner of education for it are, if anything, deepened rather than dissipated. Nevertheless, the reader is rewarded by being put in touch with what a group of today's best philosophical and psychological investigators are saying . . . about problems that lie at the heart of the modern educational crisis." P. H. Phenix

Teach Col Rec 73:452 F '72 1100w

BECKER, GEORGE J., ed. Paris and the arts, 1851-1896. See Goncourt, E. L. A. H. de

BECKER, JOSEPH, ed. Conference on inter-library communications and information networks, Warrenton, Virginia, 1970. See Conference on interlibrary communication and information networks, Warrenton, Virginia, 1970.

BECKER, JOSEPH, jt. auth. Handbook of data processing for libraries. See Hayes, R. M.

BECKER, THEODORE. Government anarchy and the POGONOGO alternative. 250p $6.95 Stein & Day

353.009 U.S.—Politics and government
ISBN 0-8128-1461-4 LC 72-187545

In considering corruption in government in the United States, the author recounts various "cases of excess in government, the military, the courts, and in political campaigning to buttress his call for reform. . . . Based on his belief that the government needs complete rehabilitation, [Becker proposes a solution]. He calls existing government 'POGO,' or positive government. To monitor and control it he would create, using the analogy of antibodies in medicine, 'NOGO,' or negative ortho-government. NOGO, a countergovernment elected by the people, would be a complete mirror image of POGO. It would have complete freedom and independence to moderate all excesses in government." (Library J)

"Interesting reading on a subject of great seriousness." J. H. Thompson

Library J 97:2192 Je 15 '72 100w

"During recent years, government officials have performed so many unreasonable, improper and even illegal acts that in the eyes of many Americans government itself is now on trial. Bountiful material for an indictment is presented [here]. . . . 'Government Anarchy'

BECKER, THEODORE—Continued

covers much of the same ground as [Jethro Lieberman's recent book] 'How the Government Breaks the Law,' but with vastly more rhetoric and far less information. . . . Becker, professor of political science at the University of Hawaii, does, however, present the intriguing thesis that government has become a somewhat monolithic, self-protective force which deems itself above the law." Geoffrey Cowan
N Y Times Bk R p2 Ag 20 '72 400w

BECKFORD, GEORGE L. Persistent poverty; underdevelopment in plantation economies of the third world. 303p $7.50; pa $2.95 Oxford 333.3 Underdeveloped areas. Agriculture and state. Plantation life
LC 70-170256

This "book is primarily concerned with the historical experience of 'plantation America,' a region which extends from Brazil through the Guyanas, the Caribbean, and the Southern United States. . . . Beckford's thesis is that it was the plantations' dominance . . . that accounts for the underdevelopment existing in the regions under consideration. Throughout the course of the book a . . . list of negative attributes for development is traced back to the characteristic patterns of plantation agricultural production and marketing. . . . [Beckford concludes] that a thorough dismantling of the plantation economy is a pre-condition for development." (Ann Am Acad) Bibliography.

"[This study] makes an important contribution to our understanding of the dynamics of underdevelopment. . . . The focus of the book is on the patterns of change and stagnation which have been experienced in countries where the principal unit of production has been agricultural plantations. Beckford lists some thirty-three countries with a combined population of over 315 million as those which have plantation economies. . . . All scholars interested in the failure of development in plantation-dominated economies will have to consult this book in order to draw on the wealth of insights which Beckford has provided into that failure." J. R. Mandie
Ann Am Acad 402:194 J1 '72 500w

"Beckford, a lecturer in the department of economics at the University of the West Indies, cogently argues that underdevelopment arises out of the institutional environment—the economic, social, and political organization. Using both economics and related disciplines, he examines the nature and social costs of a plantation system. . . . considers the possibilities for achieving material advancement while preserving the quality of life that people regard as important, and concludes that virtual revolution may be necessary to end the plantation economies' dependence on exploitative advanced economies. This valuable study of a major type of economic organization found in much of the third world, including especially the Caribbean, is recommended." R. E. Will
Library J 97:1707 My 1 '72 120w

BECKMAN, MARGARET, jt. auth. New library design. See Langmead, S.

BECKWITH, JOHN. Early Christian and Byzantine art. 211p 11 pl $25 Penguin 709.02 Christian art and symbolism. Art, Byzantine
ISBN 0-14-056033-5 LC 79-23592

"The first seven chapters, about evenly divided between the Latin West and the Greek East, trace the beginnings of Christian art through the eighth century: the remaining five deal with the Post-Iconoclastic period through the Paleologian." (Choice) Bibliography.

"A long awaited volume . . . by the eminent English medievalist at the Victoria and Albert Museum, [this] fulfills a great need. Not since C. R. Morey's pioneer Early Christian art [BRD 1942] has a scholar attempted to survey the varied and scattered monuments of this period, and a comparison between the two brings out the vast increase of our knowledge since the Second World War and also the changes in interpretation. . . . Admirable as is the author's emphasis on political and theological questions, one is left without a clear picture of the artistic qualities of individual works. While some assertions may be questioned, the work, written with authority and with verve, will certainly be the major reference in English on the subject. It goes beyond the same author's Art of Constantinople [BRD 1962], in including all of the Byzantine world. The plates in adequate black and white are well selected."

Choice 8:211 Ap '71 190w

"During the past decade a whole series of books on Early Christian, East Christian and Byzantine art have appeared. . . . [This volume] takes a leading place among these. A good deal of repetition of facts, and even of ideas, is inevitable in the texts, and of course many of the outstanding works of art appear in the plates of all these books; but each author has his own particular viewpoint and has something of interest to add to the sum of knowledge, and this is certainly true of Mr. Beckwith. His most important contribution is probably the close attention that he pays to the Christian beliefs and doctrines that lie behind the art, especially with regard to the earlier periods."

TLS p988 S 11 '70 750w

BEDELL, GEORGE C. Kierkegaard and Faulkner; modalities of existence. 261p $8.95 La. state univ. press

111.1 Kierkegaard, Søren Aabye. Faulkner, William
ISBN 0-8071-0043-9 LC 71-181356

"The points of contact between the existential Christianity of Kierkegaard and the novels of Faulkner are . . . explored in Bedell's . . . study. He . . . outlines the conceptual framework of Kierkegaard's thought, especially the three 'stages' or 'modalities' of human existence, and then tests the Kierkegaardian concepts of the aesthetic, the ethical, and the religious modalities in an analysis of Faulkner's fiction." (Library J)

The application of Kierkegaardian terminology to Faulkner's works seems forced and gratuitous. Moreover, Bedell's practice of writing at times as though Kierkegaard were commenting directly on Faulkner's characters is disconcerting, to say the least. Although Bedell may have some valid observations to make about the religious and philosophical concepts of Kierkegaard, this commentary does not really improve one's understanding and appreciation of Faulkner."

Choice 9:1124 N '72 100w

"[Bedell offers] a fresh understanding of the 19th-Century theologian and the 20th-Century writer, both of whom interpreted the paradoxical and absurd quality of temporal human life against the backdrop of eternity. This impressive contribution to Faulknerian scholarship should be read in conjunction with J. Robert Barth's Religious Perspectives in Faulkner's Fiction [BRD 1972] by all students of modern literature and theology." Mary McBride

Library J 97:2601 Ag '72 140w

BEDIENT, CALVIN. Architects of the self: George Eliot, D. H. Lawrence, and E. M. Forster. 275p $7.50 Univ. of Calif. press

823 Cross. Mary Ann (Evans). Lawrence, David Herbert. Forster, Edward Morgan
ISBN 0-520-01873-7 LC 70-142056

This study is concerned with the problems encountered by three English novelists to fashion a new ideal of the self. 'Part One analyzes what the author calls George Eliot's ideal of the 'social self,' shows how refractory it was to the needs of honest fiction, and celebrates the triumph of Middlemarch over this novelist's characteristic limitations. Part Two examines the birth in Sons and Lovers [BRD 1913] of Lawrence's counter ideal, the 'vital self'—a self at once biological and mystical—and traces its vicissitudes through the later fiction, assessing its effects on Lawrence's achievement. Part three then explores Forster's ideal of the 'personal self,' demonstrates how it synthesizes the social and the vital, and tracks Forster's increasing disillusionment with it.' (Publisher's note) Index.

"Not literary criticism, as the subtitle suggests, but an essay in the history of ideas using three novelists as specimens, this book contributes nothing to the understanding of the art it milks for doctrine. If the reader can remember that he is reading about concepts of the self, not about novels, he may keep his composure and even profit; otherwise, outrage will deafen him to whatever the book does have to say. Bedient slides into psychobiography of the author just as he seems about to illuminate a character, then begs the question by declaring the author's best work to have been written somehow despite its creator."

Choice 9:809 S '72 230w

"[Bedient's] version of George Eliot sees her as improving an artificial moral scheme onto her fictions (with the exception of Middlemarch) and falsely emphasizing communal values over individual self-realization. This view of Eliot, which flies in the face of all significant recent criticism, seems to stem from a narrow, unhistorical attitude toward the entire 19th Century. Lawrence fares much better, but finally his 'magnificent world apart' does not have as much to offer to the individual seeker as does Forster's 'realm of balanced connections.' Most readers will be puzzled by Bedient's rankings. . . . In the book's favor are its important topic, rather lively style, and original viewpoint. However, originality can't count for much when controversial opinions are not presented with the weight of authority." Keith Cushman

Library J 97:501 F 1 '72 250w

BEDINI, SILVIO A. The life of Benjamin Banneker. 434p il $14.95 Scribner

B or 92 Banneker, Benjamin
SBN 684-12574-9 LC 78-162755

This account "of the life and deeds of the black astronomer and almanac maker . . . [also] deals with the economy of 18th-century Maryland, the . . . contributions of the Ellicott family to the area and the new nation, the surveying of the District of Columbia, and the methods used by early almanac makers in their computations. There is a . . . discussion of all the previous works on Banneker, including that of Martha Tyson, daughter of Banneker's friend George Ellicott." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Bedini has done a careful and scholarly job of reconstructing the society in which Banneker lived and worked and has provided a balanced assessment. The idiocy of a destructive racism which destroys genius and talent emerges quite clearly from the book; hopefully, its contemporary relevance will be recognized." T. M. Curran

America 126:267 Mr 11 '72 600w

"The 'sable astronomer' tempts the biographer, as he tempted the 18th-century anti-slavery forces, to a condescension that must be rejected on grounds of humanity no less than of science. This is the main problem with Bedini's book, apart from its irritating long-windedness on every imaginable subject, from tobacco-planting to Maryland geography, how every marginally related to Banneker's life. There is an abiding urge to extenuate error by appeal to circumstance, and to overinflate on like grounds a comparatively modest achievement. There is also a tendency to extenuate Banneker's frailties, no less his miscalculations. . . . There lingers over this book all too often the stale sweetness of misapplied cosmetics." E. M. Yoder

Book World p13 F 13 '72 750w

Choice 9:524 Je '72 170w

Reviewed by R. B. Davis

J Am Hist 59:696 D '72 700w

"Bedini's authoritative biography . . . will be welcomed by those interested in the history of American science as well as by students of black history. . . . Much of the legend surrounding Banneker is dispelled by the introduction of Banneker's journal and commonplace book, previously believed destroyed. The annotated bibliography, the appendix (which includes original material not readily available to the public), and the extensive note should be of great value to the scholar and student. Highly recommended for collections in the areas of black history, the history of science, and American history." B. E. Marks

Library J 96:3316 O 15 '71 200w

N Y Rev of Books 18:34 Mr 9 '72 290w

"So far as I know, Mr. Bedini . . . is the first writer to have dug up and brought together all of the available source material on Banneker. . . . [He] gets my good marks for his industry and for his very evident excellent intention of re-creating Benjamin Banneker as an important figure in American science and as a significant black man. On these accounts alone his book is a splendid accomplishment: It is thorough; it is conscientious; it does not patronize. But I must grade Mr. Bedini less favorably as a writer, for he is dull and plodding and does not always make the most of the materials he has assembled." Alden Whitman

N Y Times Bk R p36 F 27 '72 900w

Reviewed by Benjamin Quarles
Sat R 55:76 Mr 4 '72 800w

Reviewed by D. F. Musto

Science 178:151 O 13 '71 550w

Va Q R 48:lxviii summer '72 130w

BEECHHOLD HENRY F. The creative classroom; teaching without textbooks. 332p $8.95 Scribner 375 Education—U.S. Education—Curricula.

Teaching
SBN 684-12369-X LC 78-143946

"The textbook is almost a universal in American education. Beechhold contends that use of textbooks is damaging to students and does not prepare them for later life. Using the language arts as examples, he proceeds to demonstrate ways in which teachers can break away from text-structured curricula." (Library J) Annotated bibliography.

"[Beechhold's] criticisms are worth considering when he accurately points out how the textbook dictates the curriculum and fosters a 'read and memorize' process. Instead he suggests many 'think and do' activities directly related to life [and] gives many excellent practical teaching suggestions. Beechhold makes frequent reference to contemporary critics of traditional schools, Holt, Goodman, Illich, etc. . . . Chapter 3, 'Language,' is a rather lengthy discussion of grammar, more than is probably needed. But reading the book is easy despite some trite slogans . . . and excessive use of parentheses. . . . Paradoxically, the book might serve as a supplementary textbook as well as a useful reference for teachers."

Choice 8:1492 Ja '72 150w

"[The author's] lengthy lists of suggested articles read a little like 'enrichment exercises' from texts. In endeavoring to reform education, the author passes over two factors: changing the method the teacher uses is only superficial—the real change involves the way he looks at the curriculum and the students; and rigid adherence to any one method disregards the individuality of teaching and learning styles. The lengthy . . . bibliography includes not only recommended alternatives to texts, but also titles on education." Raymond Barber

Library J 96:2308 Jl '71 120w

"[Beechhold's] intent is admirable, but he does not know how to organize a classroom in such a way that a teacher can take his book and follow it along the paths needed to produce creative instruction. He feels strongly, and that is all to the good. He understands what is wrong with the textbooks, but he seems unaware of the gross confusion abroad in the land about how learning takes place. . . . Another weakness, the lack of an index, further reduces [this book's] value. On the other hand, a fine bibliography, as far as it goes, provides many exciting new references [though] many are omitted of the type that really help teachers." Jeannette Veatch

Teach Col Rec 73:597 My '72 1300w

BEELE, JOHN. Warfare in feudal Europe. 730-1200. 272p maps $7.50 Cornell univ. press

355.02 Military art and science. Feudalism.
Europe—History—476-1492
ISBN 0-8014-0638-2 LC 74-148018

The author "begins with the Carolingians and the problems of military feudalism in France, discusses the Normans in Italy, England, and Syria, and ends with military feudalism in Germany." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Beeler's book has the merit of brevity and readability. The scope of his essay, for that is what it essentially is, is enormous both in time and space. . . . [It is] difficult to assess the value of Dr. Beeler's findings on any particular issue, as his book is practically devoid of critical apparatus. This also means that the book is of limited value to scholars, as any serious student would have to search unaided for the monographs, articles, and sources that underpin the author's findings. . . . [A major work on this] subject would bristle with critical analysis and references. As it is, we have to accept Dr. Beeler's book largely on trust, an unhappy situation for the reader." M. R. Powicke

BEELER, JOHN—Continued

Am Hist R 77:1424 D '72 500w

"A short, authoritative, well written work. . . . There are no battle maps or pictures, since only one or two battles during these centuries can be reconstructed, but Beeler knows how successful commanders raised and used their small professional armies. Both the undergraduate and the teacher will find this good reading, and the six-page bibliographic note is a masterly condensation of what is known about the subject. Experts on the minutiae of castles and armor will probably learn even more than nonexperts. Highly recommended for all libraries as one of the best military history works of the decade." Choice 8:1374 D '71 130w

"Beeler examines 'the bases on which feudal service was exacted, the mustering and composition of armies and their subsequent operations in the field, and the quality and qualifications of their commanders.' Unfortunately, his use of numerous campaigns and battles to explain how feudal wars were fought may lose the reader unfamiliar with the history of the high Middle Ages. Regardless of this, the thesis that feudal commanders did employ strategy and tactics which may be identified by historians of today is well documented. Hopefully this book will both stimulate medievalists to reinvestigate the role of some of the basic facts of feudal warfare." K. G. Madison
Library J 96:1973 Je 1 '71 130w

BEERBOHM, MAX. A peep into the past, and other prose pieces; coll. and introduced by Rupert Hart-Davis. 125p $8 Stephen Greene

824
ISBN 0-8289-0169-4 LC 72-79560

This volume consists "of previously uncollected pieces, issued in honor of the 100th anniversary of [the author's birth]." (Library J)

"Two little essays on Oscar Wilde and some Oxford reminiscences are perhaps the greatest treasures, but aficionados will find delight everywhere." Keith Cushman
Library J 97:2398 Jl '72 100w

"[The items in this book] all deserve to have been collected, and there is no feeling that they have somehow been scraped together. . . . [There isn't] an uninteresting or inelegantly expressed piece in it. Time and again one comes across sentences that leap from the page, extraordinarily vivid, and instantly memorable. . . . There is one outstandingly, funny piece . . . called 'Ten Years Ago'."

Finally, mention must be made of 'A needed noun', an essay on the writing of prose. The admirable rule is put forward in it that 'A sentence that cannot be so punctuated that the reader shall be unconscious of the punctuation ought to be reconstructed altogether.' Readers who are irritated to distraction by punctuation like this, will be delighted by this essay. . . . [Rupert Hart-Davis] deserves nothing but praise and gratitude for putting together with a minimum of intrusive apparatus what is no less than a new book by Max Beerbohm." Richard Boston
New Statesman 84:262 Ag 25 '72 950w
New Yorker 48:196 N 4 '72 100w

"There is a brilliantly unsympathetic picture of Andrew Lang; a sympathetic and masterly appreciation of Wilde; a slight but charming little sketch of two retired and unimportant actresses, rather in the style of 'Seven Men' [BRD 1920]. But the most extraordinary item is the first, 'A Peep into the Past,' in which Max, in the character of a young admirer, goes to interview old Mr Wilde in Tite Street. Written when he was still an undergraduate, it strikes a faint but distinct note of youthful, and uncharacteristic, cattiness. . . . However, even if it does little or nothing to add to the author's reputation, the belated appearance of this hitherto unknown piece of juvenilia is very welcome, as it affords what must be the only known instance of the incomparable Max going just a little too far."

TLS p1043 S 15 '72 320w

BEERMAN, MIRIAM, ed. The enduring beast; ed. and il. by Miriam Beerman. 64p $4.95; lib bdg $5.70 Doubleday

821 Animals—Poetry. American poetry—Collections. English poetry—Collections
LC 70-173649

Paintings "accompany 25 short . . . poems and excerpts from poems expressing the wonder, delight, and darker feelings with which men have regarded animals. Most of the selections are by . . . 20th-Century American poets: Swenson, Moore, Corso, Frost, Bishop, Brinnin and others." (Library J)

"[This] is a beauty of a book . . . [which] will be cherished not only by its 12-16-year-old readers as intended, but by many of us who are over the hill. The poems range widely, in both time and mood, . . . [and] seem to have been picked more for what they say about the animals than for poetic excellence; but out of the 25 poems there are only five or six I would quarrel with, and that's not bad for any anthology. . . . The vital spirit of the book is the cherishing of all that some of us have already lost in our city lives, and all we stand to lose, everywhere and forever. Three epigraphs come at the head of the book's three parts, the first of which might stand for the whole (from Job 40:15): Behold Behemoth, which I made as I made you." Jean Valentine

Book World p10 My 28 '72 230w

"If some old favorites such as Dickinson's 'A Narrow Fellow in the Grass' are missing, the inclusion of some less familiar poems such as Roethke's 'Snake' is welcome. An appealing if not outstanding book for the browsing shelf, this may also meet the frequent student demand for collections of verse centered on a theme or subject." George Merrill

Library J 97:2247 Je 15 '72 100w [YA]

BÉGUIN, JEAN-PIERRE, jt. auth. Joint international business ventures in developing countries. See Friedmann, W. G.

BEHRMAN, S. N. Duveen. 232p il col il $12.50 Little

B or 92 Duveen, Joseph Duveen, 1st Baron. Collectors and collecting
LC 78-183995

"Behrman wrote a series of sketches of the art entrepreneur Joseph Duveen—who became Sir and later Lord Duveen . . . —In The New Yorker some years back and the collected sketches were published in book form in 1952 [BRD 1952]. . . . More or less the same text has been enhanced for this edition with 39 color plates added . . . and some 60 black-and-white plates, together with a catalogue of 500 masterpieces sold by Duveen to various collectors with a brief provenance and note of where they are now." (Best Sell)

"This is a handsome volume and deserves a place in collegiate and other libraries." R. F. Grady

Best Sell 32:266 S 15 '72 190w

"[This] richly enjoyable and frequently sardonic portrait of the most spectacular art dealer in the long history of the business . . . was well worth reprinting. . . . [The] reissue allowed the author the opportunity of a little touching up (he might have done more): the account of the notorious lawsuit brought against him in the matter of the rival Leonardo portraits of 'La Belle Ferronnière,' for example, is not only fuller but has the advantage of a likeness of the plaintiff, Mrs Andrée Hahn, and a well-illustrated page from what looks like the Illustrated London News at the time (1929)."

TLS p1218 O 13 '72 600w

BEHRMAN, S. N. People in a diary; a memoir. 338p il $10 Little

B or 92 Theater—U.S.
LC 70-186968

"At the age of 77, S. N. Behrman, author of five books and 20 plays, has extracted a memoir from the 60 volumes of a diary he has kept since 1915. It is . . . [a] collection of anecdotes involving . . . [theatrical and] literary figures." (N Y Times Bk R) Index.

BEHRMAN, S. N.—Continued

"The material . . . just isn't that memorable. There have been more exciting biographies of theatre personalities, and a reiterative name dropping just doesn't help this one. Broadway veterans will appreciate this, but who in the paperback crowd will?" Judson LaHaye
Best Sell 32:161 J1 1 '72 300w

"Examined by a writer as civilized, humane, and genuinely sophisticated as S. N. Behrman, names are transformed into perceptive human portraiture. . . . [He] has delved into his journals of a lifetime and extracted certain vivid memories of the remarkable individuals he has known and worked with. The recollections are shared in a manner at the same time intimate, candid, tactful, acutely observed yet sympathetic. . . . Apart from the light it sheds on a distinguished writing career, [the book] is at its most rewarding in its observations of the diverse, talented, and exceptional dramatis personae of the memoir. . . . Beyond its charm of expression, its urbanity and wit, its candid observations and perceptive reflections, this memoir is the summing up of a man who has cared—and deeply." John Beaufort
Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 28 '72 500w

"Playwright S. N. Behrman's life has been remarkably eventful, his view of it is extraordinary sane, and his uncomplicated prose is very clear and fine. [The book] drifts by in a leisurely series of vignettes, and the people are very interesting indeed—Garbo, the Lunts, Ina Claire, Sidney Howard, Robert E. Sherwood, Alma Mahler Werfel, Arnold Bennett, Jed Harris, and especially Siegfried Sassoon, who is the central figure of an eerie, perverse episode which Behrman recalls with skillful suggestions of horror. Behrman is overly fond of wise sayings (e.g., 'comedy is the saving grace which makes life bearable'), but there's not much in his autobiography to complain about; and people who like this sort of thing will be pleased." J. A. Avant
Library J 97:2081 Je 1 '72 130w

Reviewed by Harold Clurman
N Y Times Bk R p7 Je 25 '72 1300w
Reviewed by Walter Clemons
Newsweek 80:77 J1 17 '72 450w

"The chapters on Berenson, Maugham, the Gershwins are perfect small portraits, and throughout there are a hundred tiny, swift, almost offhand observations, recordings of facial expressions or something said, that thrust these people into sharp and shimmering focus and momentarily make the whole book come alive and glow. But there are also long stretches of dimness. . . . Behrman himself we see hardly at all. . . . What we want to experience is not simply vignettes of these people in his diary, but their relationship to him, and his to them—and thereby our relationship to both. We are with, in this book, a nearly invisible guide, and it is disconcerting. Only at the end . . . does Behrman begin to come into focus himself." E. F. Smith
Sat R 55:52 J1 22 '72 750w

BEICHMAN, ARNOLD. Nine lies about America. 314p $7.95 Lib. press

309.1 U.S.—Social conditions. U.S.—Politics and government
ISBN 0-912050-18-7 LC 76-37468

"An elaboration of a controversial article in the New York Times Magazine, this is an attack on the 'progressive intellectuals' writing social criticism. These intellectuals [Beichman argues] peddle Big Lies, promote the Communist line, and are undermining the country with their incitements to violent revolution." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The special value of this book lies in the examples it offers to support its case—in all, an exhibit of museum quality. And anyone with a sense of humor rugged enough to relish the discomfiture of frightened people whose language and ideas are going out of control will have a ball. A liberal capable of detached self-criticism will meet his image in the mirror and experience no little chagrin. A stout right winger will explode with delight and, in his haste, mistake Mr. Beichman—a liberal of long and intense practical experience—for one of his own." Saville Davis
Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 1 '72 700w

"Beichman has looked at our society and has seen that it is not as it has been described by those who have lately been describing it. This may seem an easy enough thing to do, but in a time when so much cultural reinforcement comes from seeing America as the hysterics do, it takes uncommon strength of mind and of character to give them the lie. . . . However, Beichman's reliance on the idea of the lie is itself the source of the book's major weakness. For often he is exposing not willful misstatements of fact—which is what I take a lie to be—but rather inadequate or irrational interpretations, and sometimes these interpretations are not so much even irrational as based on values with which he disagrees." Samuel McCracken
Commentary 54:80 Ag '72 1500w
Economist 245:69 O 14 '72 450w

"Beichman quotes extensively from Heilbroner, Sontag, Marcuse, and dozens of others; he refutes them with rhetorical passion, but very little reasoned argument. . . . Beichman has been a journalist for various periodicals, including PM and Newsweek, and is now teaching at the University of Massachusetts. He is thoroughly familiar with the literature on his subject, but he employs the same polemical excesses charged to his ideological foes and provides no new insights." Muriel Weins
Library J 97:2102 Je 1 '72 150w

Reviewed by Max Geltman
Nat R 24:645 Je 9 '72 1550w

Reviewed by Geoffrey McDermott
New Statesman p684 N 10 '72 1050w

Reviewed by Benjamin DeMott
N Y Times Bk R p33 O 8 '72 1400w

"Frequently warned that patriotism is the scoundrel's last refuge, Americans willingly weather hard lumps from the country's critics, within and without. Some wear the black-and-blue marks with pride (we can take it; we have nothing to hide), while others have come to feel we deserve them. For both kinds of people, scholar-journalist Arnold Beichman tries in this important, hard-hitting book to untangle the knotted logic behind some favorite smears (the 'lies' of his title) laid on America and Americans: we are 'insane,' 'genocidal,' 'Fascist,' 'materialistic,' collectively 'guilty,' pinioned under a fraudulent political system, in need of violent revolution. . . . Beichman is no cavalier polemicist who argues in self-evident truths; he proves what he contends, and gives more energy to a 'genuine exchange' with his opposition than they are likely to give him." S. K. Oberheck
Newsweek 79:97 My 15 '72 700w
TLS p1307 N 3 '72 500w

BEILENSEN, LAURENCE W. Power through subversion. 299p $8 Public affairs press

322.4 Lenin, Vladimir Il'ich. Subversive activities
LC 70-185254

"Beilenson defines subversion as governmental acts designed to influence or change events or governments in another country to the advantage of the subverting power. . . . He analyzes both the philosophy of subversion and its tactics and cites numerous historical examples to buttress the exposition." (Library J)

"Beilenson's study is timely, but also disappointingly superficial and politically biased. . . . Terms are used loosely: subversion is often equated with spying, and 'Leninism' covers everyone from Stalin to Mao, Castro, and Ho. While providing interesting summaries of historical episodes, Beilenson fails to produce in-depth analysis of externally directed subversion—especially of successful Leninist subversion, which he claims is so prevalent today. There is no coherent theory relating variables, importance, systematically relating variables, and accounting for subversion's success or failure. . . . The book's scholarly reliability is nearly negated by a final section consisting of a gratuitous and irresponsible prescription for anti-Communist subversion." Choice 9:878 S '72 160w

"[The author's examples] frequently appear repetitious and confusing, a mere catalog of revolutions, coups, intrigues, etc. Central to the author's argument is what he sees as 'the Lenin adaptation': preservation of the subversive base by avoiding offensive war, and substituting protracted subversion for war to achieve world-wide acceptance of an ideology. A concluding chapter suggests how the United States might profitably adapt Lenin's techniques to subvert his heirs." R. W. Schwarz

BEILENSEN, L. W.—Continued

Library J 97:2192 Je 15 '72 130w

"[Beilenson] presents the first world history of subversion: a pioneering tour de force. . . . A gigantic subject. Fortunately the author has the gift of conciseness and simplification." S. T. Possony

Nat R 24:412 Ap 14 '72 1200w

BEJA, MORRIS. Epiphany in the modern novel. 255p $7.95 Univ. of Wash. press

823 English fiction--History and criticism.
American fiction--History and criticism
LC 71-117725

"James Joyce gave the theological term 'epiphany' its literary meaning of 'a sudden spiritual manifestation.' . . . [Beja seeks to] place the epiphany within its philosophical and historical tradition and analyzes the ways in which Joyce, Thomas Wolfe, Virginia Woolf, and William Faulkner utilize such moments of vision." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"In concise lucid essays Beja . . . traces back to Pater, and to even earlier writers, impressionistic techniques; and he looks forward, although briefly, to contemporary 'consolidators' of impressionism (Malamud, Golding, Bellow, Styron, Wallant, Baldwin) as well as to 'experimenters'; (Beckett, Durrell, Barth, Robbe-Grillet, Sarraute, and others). Beja tends to ignore Freudian and other psychological elements in his writers' 'epiphanies,' but his treatment of structure is generally sound and informative. Recommended."

Choice 9:56 Mr '72 140w

"Beja demonstrates the central position that the sudden consciousness of intuitive insight has in modern fiction. . . . The four central chapters on . . . major writers are excellent, but perhaps even more interesting to the general reader are Beja's introductory and concluding chapters which trace the literary epiphany from its theological roots to its secular manifestation in contemporary paintings, novels, and films. Highly recommended." Mary McBride

Library J 96:4095 D 15 '71 130w

"This is no easy subject; nor is this an easy book. Yet despite a certain stiffness of style . . . this is as good a place as any for a reader to begin a study of fiction after James and Proust. Its themes are central; its signposts clear."

TLS p965 Ag 13 '71 1000w

BELL, ALAN P., jt. ed. Homosexuality. See Weinberg, M. S.

BELL, ARTHUR. Dancing the gay lib blues, a year in the homosexual liberation movement. 191p $5.95 Simon & Schuster

301.41 Homosexuality
SBN 671-21042-4 LC 78-159124

The author, a founder of the Gay Activists Alliance, a New York City group dedicated to homosexual causes, describes its activities during 1970.

"[Bell] writes in a breezy and flippant style and has turned out what amounts to a non-fiction novel about his own experiences in Gay Lib. His book is an encouragement to homosexuals to come out of the closet and for straight society to accept them when they do. . . . [The book represents a section] of the homosexual mentality as it exists today." G. D. Phillips

America 126:26 Ja 8 '72 200w

"It must be noted [this sad] book does give some small insights into the New York City homosexual milieu, and presents . . . background on the activities of the Gay Lib movement . . . but there isn't enough substance to it to make it worth the small amount of time necessary to read it. In addition to the lack of substance, the author's style is depressing. . . . [He] swishes and minces as he writes." Edward Bartley

Best Sell 31:402 D 1 '71 240w

"Represents Bell's narrow but personal account of his involvement in the struggle for human sexual rights. . . . He writes openly about the personalities, political struggles, and the direct actions of GAA [Gay Activists Alliance]. Bell also writes freely about his own thoughts and emotions concerning his sexual relationships since adolescence, his work relationships at Random House, and the honesty and openness with his parents. Bell's book reflects the sexism within the gay movement. . . . There is very little written to date on the gay movement—therefore this book is important but at best limited in scope."

Choice 9:582 Je '72 170w

Reviewed by J. K. Marshall

Library J 97:2109 Je 1 '72 120w

Reviewed by Jill Johnston

N Y Times Bk R p5 F 20 '72 600w

BELL, DANIEL, ed. Capitalism today; ed. by Daniel Bell & Irving Kristol. 185p $6.95 Basic bks.

330.1 Capitalism
SBN 465-00369-0 LC 74-150223

"Kristol discusses the changing morality of capitalism and concludes with a polemic against youthful dissidents. Bell's contribution raises . . . questions concerning the widening gap between the ethic of production and the ethic of consumption. Other essays touch upon trends in economic organization, the relevance of economic methodology, interpretations of developments in the stock market and the business cycle, and recent problems in the economies of Britain, Japan, and Sweden. The volume ends with a review of P. Baran and P. Sweezy's critique of Western capitalism, Monopoly Capital [BRD 1966]." (Library J) Index.

"Identical to the fall of 1970 special issue of the periodical, The public interest, titled 'Capitalism today,' in which eight economists, one sociologist, one political scientist, and two editors of prominent periodicals team up to examine critically various aspects of capitalism and modern life. . . . On the whole an excellent, very discerning, stimulating group of essays."

Choice 8:1362 D '71 220w

"This little volume, a disjointed and unbalanced collection of articles and reports, lacks an integrating theme. . . . As an issue of a journal, the collection is acceptable. As a volume for general and academic libraries, however, it cannot be recommended." Barry Seldes

Library J 96:2307 Jl '71 120w

BELL, GEORGE, ed. Black Christian nationalism. See Cleage, A. B.

BELL, J. BOWYER. The myth of the guerrilla; revolutionary theory and malpractice. 285p $7.95 Knopf

355.4 Revolutions. Guerrilla warfare
ISBN 0-394-47169-5 LC 71-154922

Bell seeks to show that guerrilla tactics are not necessarily successful in achieving revolution. "To document his position, the author furnishes three case studies: revolts in central and southern Africa, the Palestine struggle, and Che Guevara's Bolivian misadventure. . . . [He also examines] the classic theorists of the pattern of the guerrilla-revolution: Mao, Giap, and Ho Chi Minh." (Best Sell) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"The concepts of the justice of the cause, the time factor, and the supremacy of the masses are elements of the guerrilla that Bell demythologizes in a very methodical manner. . . . In the heart of his book, the author shows the futility of the African guerrillas who were beset by tribal rivalry, emerging nationalism, weak economies, and political opportunism, as they fought against the white southern African. . . . This is a competent account of guerrilla-revolution from a theoretical and practical viewpoint." J. J. Conlin

Best Sell 31:366 N 15 '71 370w

"An engaging book. . . . Bell, a specialist on military history, also provides a helpful but by no means thorough bibliography (with comments) for this solid volume."

Choice 9:112 Mr '72 160w

"Dr. Bell examines, not too sharply unfortunately, three guerrilla case histories. . . . [His] well-edited book is an important contribution to the literature on the guerrilla. It raises the disturbing question of whether or not Western democracies can learn the art of combating guerrilla politics." Arnold Beichman
Christian Science Monitor p11 Ja 13 '72
600w

"The author, a research associate with the Center for International Affairs at Harvard, puts to the test of history and logic the prevalent concept of guerrilla warfare as the ultimate means of upsetting technologically complicated social structures. He concludes that guerrilla revolution is a fantasy. . . . His inquiry is thorough. . . . An impressive piece of scholarship."

New Yorker 47:86 Ja 8 '72 100w

"If there are romantic revolutionaries in this country who regard guerrilla warfare as an infallible means for overthrowing Western imperialist powers and their client regimes in the underdeveloped countries, if they look upon it as a nursery of democratic ideals and school of civic virtue . . . then they are in need of Bell's reminder. Guerrilla war, he tells us, is war. . . . That being the case, Mr. Bell's dictum can do good service elsewhere than among the romantics of the Left. There are plenty of theorists among the professional military, and what might be called the paraprofessional military—those political scientists, sociologists, and psychologists specializing in counterinsurgency—who could also profit from his suggestion that guerrilla war is war. . . . [This is a ] wide-ranging, informative, and yet ultimately self-contradictory study."

Sat R 54:36 D 25 '71 1950w

BELL, JOHN PATRICK. Crisis in Costa Rica: the 1948 revolution; pub. for the Inst. of Latin Am. studies. (Tex. Univ. Inst. of Latin Am. studies. Latin Am. monographs, no24) 192p $7 Univ. of Tex. press

972.86 Costa Rica—History
ISBN 0-292-70147-0 LC 77-165920

A "study by an associate professor of history at Indiana which examines the antecedents of the rise to power of José Figueres in Costa Rica in 1948. Using evidence from newspapers, private files, and Central American books and pamphlets, it presents . . . [an] account of Costa Rican politics from 1940 to 1948. . . . Separate chapters are devoted to the social reform, the Communist involvement, and the fiscal irresponsibility of the time, with the opposition's reactions to each." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"So slender is the body of historical literature dealing with Central America that it is a noteworthy event whenever anything about the isthmus is published. And when the publication is as soundly researched a study as [this,] Central Americanists and their friends have reason to cheer at such a fleshing out of their field. . . . [The author] amply demonstrates the difficulties which Calderón encountered as a reformist president within a traditionalist party. . . . While the topical approach does serve to isolate the different issues, it causes some problems of clarity in exposition. On occasion, significant points are announced in one chapter but not explained fully until a subsequent chapter. . . . Despite these problems, the book is a positive contribution to an understanding both of the working of political groups in Latin America and of the development of a revolution in Costa Rica." J. E. Findling

Ann Am Acad 402:170 J1 '72 410w

"A well written study . . . [which gives] the Calderón and Picado regimes of that period their due without attempting to make them appear faultless. There is emphasis on the point that Figueres prepared for his military struggle well before it took place, and that antigovernment tactics before 1948 included unwarranted accusations and even terror. . . . The reasons for Figueres' popularity after 1948 are not explained; the narrative ends with the pointing out of the 'meagerness' of the Figueres junta's political base. The bibliography is very adequate and the index excellent."

Choice 9:427 My '72 140w

BELL, MICHAEL DAVITT. Hawthorne and the historical romance of New England. 253p $7.50 Princeton univ. press

813 Hawthorne, Nathaniel. Historical fiction. New England in literature
ISBN 0-691-06136-X LC 72-148169

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by J. H. McElroy
Am Lit 43:658 Ja '72 450w

Reviewed by Lewis Leary
New Eng Q 44:664 D '71 850w
Va Q R 48:xxvi winter '72 200w

BELL, QUENTIN. Virginia Woolf: a biography. 314p il $12.50 Harcourt

B or 92 Woolf, Virginia (Stephen)
ISBN 0-15-193765-6 LC 72-79926

A personal history of the writer by her nephew. Genealogy. Chronology. Bibliography. Index. Originally published in England in two volumes.

Reviewed by Victor Howes
Christian Science Monitor p19 N 15 '72
900w

"This fascinating and admirably written book passes the most difficult test: it stands up to the masterly autobiography by Leonard Woolf [The Journey Not the Arrival Matters, BRD 1970], who encouraged [the author] to undertake the task. It is rather short; letters are quoted sparingly. The author does not shrink from personal judgment on people and actions. . . . From personal knowledge and unpublished documents Professor Bell gives a far fuller account of [Virginia Woolf's] life than anything yet available. This volume covers her first 30 years, up to the point when she agreed to marry Leonard Woolf."

Economist 243[i.e.234]:61 Je 17 '72 550w
(Review of v 1)

"[Mr. Quentin Bell] is frank, where frankness is needed; he does not shrink from judgment, even where (as so often happens) his own parents are concerned; and his thumb-nail sketches of subsidiary characters are a delight. [The volume] is well written and concise. But he has a very different story to tell from last time. This [second] volume covers the period of her marriage and of the publication of all her books. . . . [It] also differs from the first in another way: there is much more quotation, since Mr Bell is able to draw on her diary, all unpublished except for the passages on her writing that appeared in 'A Writer's Diary' [BRD 1954]. . . . Virginia Woolf remains, not surprisingly, a mystery."

Economist 245:63 O 21 '72 550w (Review of v2)

"[Bell] has chosen to expertly shape everything toward his end of 'providing . . . a clear and truthful account of the character and personal development' of his subject. No attempt is made at literary criticism. Woolf's fiction isn't used for biographical purposes, and the author chooses not to indulge in any amateur psychoanalyzing. The biography is a model of tact and self-effacement. The fascination of Woolf's life speaks for itself; and surely the story of that life will be of interest to a wide audience, especially considering how gracefully and intelligently it is told here. Virginia Woolf is a work of great distinction, rich in insight and understanding. It is likely to be the biography for quite some time." Keith Cushman

Library J 97:3576 N 1 '72 140w

Reviewed by Stanley Weintraub
New Repub 167:33 N 25 '72 750w

Reviewed by V. S. Pritchett
New Statesman 83:827 Je 16 '72 2200w
(Review of v 1)

Reviewed by V. S. Pritchett
New Statesman 84:560 O 20 '72 2350w
(Review of v2)

"Bell's decision in this biography not to deal in an extensive way with [Woolf's] work is . . . regrettable. . . . Within the limitations he has imposed upon himself, he succeeds admirably in filling out the contours and illuminating the shadowy areas of her life which previously have been neglected. . . . The nagging question nevertheless remains: How satisfactory can the biography of a writer be if the author is unwilling (or unable) to grapple with the crucial facts of her imaginative life? In clearly distinguishing what he is doing from what literary critics do, Bell fosters an artificial distinction that has the unfortunate effect of impoverishing his own work." Michael Rosenthal

BELL, QUENTIN—Continued

N Y Times Bk R pl N 5 '72 3950w

Reviewed by S. K. Oberbeck
Newsweek 80:126 N 20 '72 900w

Reviewed by Benjamin DeMott
Sat R 55:67 D 9 '72 1750w

Reviewed by Martha Duffy
Time 100:93 N 20 '72 1400w

TLS p735 Je 30 '72 1100w (Review of v 1)

TLS p1278 O 27 '72 300w (Review of v2)

BELLA, STEFANO DELLA. Presenting Stefano della Bella; seventeenth-century printmaker, by Phyllis Dearborn Massar. 141p il $12.95 Metropolitan mus; for sale by N.Y. graphic

769
ISBN 0-87099-109-4 LC 70-162340

This is a "survey of all the various aspects of Della Bella; the subject headings range from Rome and War to Animals and Death. There is a... concluding section on Della Bella and Rembrandt and Della Bella as a source for other artists." (Choice)

"A charming book and an excellent introduction to this important baroque artist. . . . The book is beautifully designed, consisting mostly of large and excellent reproductions, some in color, with many details for dramatic effect; the minimal text is closely related to the illustrations and is more in the nature of captions to them. Altogether, this is a fine example of a scholar bringing her specialty to a wide public." Choice 9:52 Mr '72 130w

"The 17th Century in Italy produced several wonderful printmakers, but they have been sadly under-researched and under-published. This introductory volume begins to solve those problems for one of the most prolific and charming of the artists. Limiting the format of an exhibition, the plentiful reproductions are interspersed with moderate captions for each print, the captions pointing out the salient features and historical background for interpreting the etchings. . . . Massar unifies the sections [of the book] by successfully treating the entire work as an all-seeing portrayal of the life and society of Stefano's time." Andrew Robison

Library J 97:864 Mr 1 '72 110w

BEN-DAVID, JOSEPH. The scientist's role in society; a comparative study. 207p $6.95; pa $2.95 Prentice-Hall

500 Scientists. Science and civilization
SBN 13-796557-5; 13-796540-0 (pa)
LC 77-138464

The author presents an "analysis of scientific growth from antiquity to the present. . . . organized around the concept 'role.' He focuses on emergence of scientific role and institutionalization of science in 17th-century England. Separate chapters treat shift of scientific center from England to France during second half of 18th century, the bureaucratic organization of science in 19th-century Germany, and professionalization of research in 20th-century America. A central thesis is that decentralized authority systems are more conducive to variety in ideas and experiments than centralized systems." (Choice) Index.

"Ben-David's book is a classic of sociological analysis in general. . . . Those interested in the 'developing' countries will profit from his discussion of the 'peripheral' place of such countries in modern science and the implications for their science policy. Those who think that sociology cannot deal with social change should read this book. . . . [The] discussion of the unintended, unplanned outcomes in modern American scientific organizational development provides the delight we always feel when sociological analysis discovers for us something really new. . . . This is a book which deserves the widest possible study. Sociologists will find it of great value. . . . but it is also of direct relevance for educational and scientific policy." Bernard Barber

Am J Soc 78:232 Jl '72 950w

"[The] conception of science [is] biased in favor of a somewhat idealistic notion of rational, intellectual activity; no satisfactory sociological definition of science is developed. Some important generalizations, especially in the closing pages, are offered with little or no empirical support, though most arguments are well documented. Weak on present conflicts in the social relations of science, and human consequences of social organization of science. A unique and unquestionably important book for students of science and society."

Choice 8:1197 N '71 190w

BEN-GURION, DAVID. Letters to Paula; tr. from the Hebrew by Aubrey Hodes. 259p il $5.95 Univ. of Pittsburgh press

956.94 Palestine—Politics and government. Zionism
ISBN 0-8229-1102-7 LC 72-164702

"A collection of personal letters (1918-19, 1923-39) written to his wife and children by the Zionist activist who became first prime minister of Israel. [First published in Hebrew under the title of Mikhtavim el Polah ve-el ha-yeladim.] Glossary. Index." (Choice)

"The letters abound with candid political observations and evaluations of interest both to the general reader and to the scholar. Ben-Gurion's account of the activities of the British government in regard to Palestine is especially valuable. Although the volume is indexed and has a brief preface by the author, photographs, a cursory glossary, and sporadic notes, the editing is inadequate (except for brief biographical and historical notes on the jacket—which should be preserved—there is no general introduction); as a result, the nonspecialized reader may find the volume confusing. In spite of this defect, the book is a valuable primary source, recommended for all libraries with patrons interested in Zionism, British policy and the course of modern Jewish history." Choice 9:1033 O '72 150w

"The collection was first published in Hebrew in 1968, though some of [the letters] had been known earlier. As historical source-material—inside accounts of the rise of the National Home by one of its chief architects—they will have their place on every shelf. Like some other makers of history, Ben-Gurion is also a vigorous writer of it and as such he expressed himself, it seems, in letters to his wife. When all allowance has been made for editorial selection, they scarcely read like domestic letters and will not be valued as such. They lack the personal note."

TLS p1582 D 17 '71 130w

BENDICK, JEANNE. What made you you? 48p il $4.95; lib bdg $4.72 McGraw

612.6 Reproduction—Juvenile literature. Sex instruction—Juvenile literature. Heredity—Juvenile literature
SBN 07-004501-1 LC 72-165253

The author describes "how genes carry hereditary traits and [emphasizes] the continuity in families and the love that is part of human conception. . . . [She also discusses] copulation, conception, gestation, and birth." (Sat R) "Preschool to grade two." (Library J)

"A superficial, sentimental text and generally uninformative pictures combine to confuse readers about sexuality and reproduction. Inadequately described are such subjects as sexual intercourse—'Part of your father fitted into your mother like a key in a lock, like a foot in a sock. . . .'; the appearance and union of the sperm and egg; the role of genes—'Not blue jeans, but you genes!' . . . Nothing in the book explains why a child differs from his or her siblings when they all share the same genetic background, and Bendick doesn't tell why 'Right from the beginning you were a boy or a girl.' Even very young children can handle more substantial information than is offered here." D. G. Stavn

Library J 97:2475 Jl '72 220w

"[This is] a book for quite a young child ('can you count off nine months on a calendar?'). Amplifying the central theme are breezy summaries of love and reproduction (naked couples leering at each other in arch surmise, or embracing while standing up, apparently asleep), pregnancy, fetal life and childbirth, with special attention to the genes—the recipe for you. . . . The book's playful ambiguities . . . may amuse a young child.

They may also suggest that sometimes when you ask adults serious questions you get silly answers." Paul Showers

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p32 My 7 '72
190w

"The text is direct in tone and restrained in coverage, always stressing the unique quality of each human being." Zena Sutherland
Sat R 55:110 Mr 25 '72 80w

BENEDETTI, JEAN. Gilles de Rais. 207p maps
$6.95 Stein & Day

B or 92 Rais, Gilles de. France—History—
House of Valois, 1328-1589
ISBN 0-8128-1450-9 LC 72-185646

This is an account of the life and military career of Gilles de Rais, Marshal of France, who was hanged in 1440 for heresy and sodomy, portrayed in the context of the life and politics of the first half of the fifteenth century. Chronology. Index.

"Benedetti seeks in this somewhat popularized biography to interpret Rais as the ultimate perversion of a perverted society, the French nobility during the Hundred Years' War. The interesting attempt to analyze a case of sexual pathology in medieval society suffers from some organizational indiscipline and admittedly from an insufficient amount of information on Rais himself as opposed to his actions. However, it is of interest." R. C. Hoffmann

Library J 96:1006 Mr 15 '72 100w

"The life of Gilles de Rais, itself so monstrous and incomprehensible even to himself, passed very soon into legend, the red-bearded Marshal of France becoming the Bluebeard of fairy story. There is little likelihood of fresh evidence being adduced and the task of a modern biographer is to sift the conflicting material and produce a convincing interpretation; this is what Jean Benedetti has done. . . . [He] depicts very well the sort of futility that the chivalrous life was for Gilles's contemporaries, a sort of charade in which the Kings of France and England, the Dukes of Brittany and Burgundy and their attendant lords went through military motions in pursuit of fame and fortune."

TLS p122 F 4 '72 1200w

BENEDIKT, MICHAEL. Mole notes. 132p il $10;
pa $2.95 Wesleyan univ. press

818

ISBN 0-8195-4038-2; 0-8195-6018-9 (pa)
LC 78-161695

A collection of pieces on various topics including Molar labor and advent; the making of love; the power people, and planting anemones.

"Having to feel his way to discovery and definition of money, Scotch whiskey, love, art, metaphor itself, 'Mole' produces . . . pieces of insight or wisdom, exploding various current follies. The pieces are sprightly editorial fancies, often ingeniously, doubly metaphorical. Although Benedikt has earlier proved himself a bold verse master, these bright mockeries little resemble 'prose-poems' of the disjunctive or surreal kinds. . . . [They are curiously like excerpts from Restoration wit-writing. . . . Handsomely printed, wittily enhanced with archival mole plates, woodcuts, and other drawings. A high-pop item, classier than Brautigan. Brashly brilliant. For browsing shelf or libraries with large collections of the younger poets."

Choice 9:210 Ap '72 140w

"The subjects dealt with are pretty much those one would expect a philosophically inclined mole to give attention to. . . . At first glance, this work of Benedikt's appears to be an immense prose-poem; but it is instead what Benedikt himself calls an 'open' poem—one in which form appears, if at all, as a by-product of sense and feeling. This particular example of the genre—which may in fact be the poet's own invention—is witty, stark, antic, acerbic, and totally lovely. Mole's quality is never in doubt; neither is Benedikt's." Peter Gelatly

Library J 96:2778 S 15 '71 210w

BENESCH, EVA., ed. Collected writings, v2.
See Benesch, O.

BENESCH, OTTO. Collected writings; v2, Netherlandish art of the 15th and 16th centuries, Flemish and Dutch art of the 17th century, Italian art, French art; ed. by Eva Benesch. 583p il $20 Praeger

759 Art—History
SBN 7148-1470-9

"The second instalment of articles by the late Director of the Albertina . . . [covers] the period from 1921 to 1965, the year after his death. . . . [The section on] Flemish and Dutch art of the seventeenth century [includes] Rembrandt, the subject of [Benesch's] first volume. A glance at Spanish art, and a final section on the drawings of all these schools [is included.]" (TLS) For volume one see BRD 1970.

J Aesthetics 30:403 spring '72 70w

"With Benesch research was so often prompted by his interest in a single work of art. The questions it raised were the beginning of a searching and frequently very fruitful inquiry. His interests, as this collection shows, were very wide and they informed one another. If today some of the conclusions and attributions seem with the benefit of hindsight too precipitate, we must lay against them all his very considerable successes. The volume abounds in new and convincing attributions, and in articles which were then opening up or clarifying new fields of interest."

TLS p240 Mr 3 '72 200w

BENEVOLO, LEONARDO. History of modern architecture [tr. by H. J. Landry]. 2v 374; 376-868p il $35 MIT press

724 Architecture—History. Architecture,
Modern—20th century
ISBN 0-262-02080-7 (v 1); 0-262-02081-5 (v2)
LC 77-157667

"A translation from the third Italian edition (1966), this . . . work examines developments in architecture and city planning since 1760 in their social and political context. The author believes that with the beginning of the industrial revolution, technical and cultural changes, rather than aesthetic formulas, have been the primary determinants of environmental change. His book is . . . a . . . study of such factors as laws, attitudes, international expositions, and even the teaching methods in schools of engineering." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Benevolo's viewpoint is broad, interpretive, and didactic. His text suggests a series of edited lecture notes. . . . Very well illustrated and footnoted."

Choice 9:1119 N '72 180w

"[The work is] best read in conjunction with academic study, rather than something that would appeal to even the informed general reader. The bibliography, relying heavily on very old titles and foreign language publications, is anything but a guide to further reading. English translations and American editions are not always given, even when available. The prose style is rather ponderous and not easy to read. The volumes are of manageable size, with good clear print. The black-and-white illustrations—line drawings, old prints, and photographs—are fair. . . . Despite the negative observations above, the work contains a wealth of information that will be of interest to architecture and planning students; and it should be in academic collections serving these readers." Jill Becker

Library J 97:3574 N 1 '72 250w

"Despite all the publishers have done to offer us an exciting book . . . Benevolo's own presentation is often, unfortunately, rather dull. . . . About the English background Professor Benevolo can be perceptive one minute and dim the next. . . . Some of the American judgments are odd. . . . A somewhat trying habit in both volumes is the use of illustrations not mentioned in the text. . . . Who are the intended readers? . . . Young historians and young architects, presumably, but volume one does not have enough 'hard' information for student reference. Perhaps those readers won't be looking very hard at volume one anyway. Yet it is full of interesting quotations and illustrations, especially about engineering and city planning. Students are better served in volume two, as there are not so many books that assemble the major building and town-planning works of this century between one set of covers."

TLS p1532 D 3 '71 1200w

BENGIS, INGRID. Combat in the erogenous zone. 260p $6.95 Knopf

155.3 Sex (Psychology) Lesbianism
ISBN 0-394-47550-X LC 72-2248

The author analyzes her sexual relationships with men and women.

"Bengis has written an intensely personal account of her relationships with men and women. . . . Her conclusions can be recommended as an unusually articulate and moving reaction to modern sexual freedom as well as to the feminists who feel that relationships with men are impossible." Meta Plotnik
Library J 97:3599 N 1 '72 250w

"The title is ingenious and perversely amusing. . . . Though Ingrid Bengis writes with fierce, almost embarrassing honesty about the war between and among the sexes, she has never given up hope for peace. Her battleground is both the bedroom and the human psyche. Her ammunition is her own most intimate experience. . . . Like theaters of combat, the book is divided into three sections: Man-Hating, Lesbianism, Love. In each the logic carries one along, despite intellectual and philosophical resistance, until the author's outrageous personal statements acquire a universalized integrity. Simple thoughts are revealed as convoluted, and complex feelings are untangled and rendered sharp and clear." L. C. Fogrebin
N Y Times Bk R p[46] N 12 '72 1250w

"The book is infinitely more graceful, and much less combative, than either the title or design would indicate. Ingrid Bengis is a deeply introspective young woman and a first-rate talent who's wrestling with some significant emotional questions as she attempts to understand the verities (and how they've been further complicated by contemporary mores) of why love affairs fail—for her and, by extension for other women." Genevieve Stuttaford
Sat R 55:60 D 23 '72 1000w

BENNETT, DAPHNE. Vicky; princess royal of England and German empress. 382p pl $10 St Martins

B or 92 Victoria, consort of Frederick III, German Emperor
LC 74-145442

In this account of the life of "the eldest daughter of Queen Victoria, . . . the author reconstructs her struggles with Bismarck and her other tribulations . . . [as well as] her efforts, along with those of her husband (the short-reigning Emperor Frederick III), to further representative institutions, to curb militarism, and to prepare their son (the future Emperor William II) for enlightened leadership." (Library J)

"In making heavy use of Vicky's own letters, Mrs. Bennett's narrative is at times highly emotional. . . . While [she] has undoubtedly provided a corrective to some earlier, more critical portraits of her subject, she herself seems to have sacrificed some measure of historical accuracy." F. X. J. Homer
Best Sell 32:209 Ag 1 '72 320w

"Vicky was willing to play a constructive, liberal part in the life of her husband's country, but, as Miss Daphne Bennett makes clear in the course of her lucid . . . biography, she was thwarted and made miserable throughout."

Economist 241:56 O 2 '71 150w

"Elsewhere presented as an interfering and disloyal member of the Prussian royal family into which she married, [Vicky] is here given a sympathetic treatment. . . . Most modern readers will sympathize with the plight of an intelligent and liberal-minded young woman out of place in a court with firm views on the limits of a woman's role. A readable and fairly convincing portrait which most libraries can use." Dorothy Sinclair
Library J 96:4002 D 1 '71 110w

Reviewed by Arthur Marshall

New Statesman 82:406 S 24 '71 250w

"[Mrs Bennett's] book is a remarkable achievement. Her few mistakes of fact are too tiny to deserve notice. She is an accurate and thorough historian although, perhaps of necessity, she has worked almost entirely from printed sources. (When she has used letters and papers in private possession' she has cited them in the reference by date alone, which is not a very helpful or sensible arrangement.) Her best gift is her skill in narrative; she keeps the reader always eager to turn over the page to find out what happens next. She looks at her characters with insight, seeing them in the round; they develop and change with the changing years. Only Bismarck remains static and slightly unreal; he appears simply as Satan incarnate, perhaps not a wholly unfair portrait."

TLS p1175 O 1 '71 550w

BENNETT, GEOFFREY. Nelson the commander. 322p il pl maps $12 Scribner

B or 92 Nelson, Horatio Nelson, Viscount
SEN 684-12886-1 LC 71-38567

A biography of the British naval hero "which traces his career from his days as a midshipman to his death at the Battle of Trafalgar in 1805. Bennett . . . examines Nelson's ability as a naval commander and concludes that his desire for fame, plus his belief in the annihilation of the enemy (a view not held by his contemporaries), caused him to attempt actions beyond the capability of his fellow admirals." (Library J) Chronologies. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Edward Weeks

Atlantic 230:126 N '72 600w

"In his conclusions Captain Bennett's efforts at objectivity are only partially successful. On the one hand, he does not hesitate to condemn Nelson's almost blatant dereliction of duty during his scandalous affair with Lady Hamilton. . . . Yet, in the end, Bennett's description of Nelson's abilities still smacks of hero-worship. . . . Above all, Bennett singles out Nelson's determination to 'annihilate,' and not merely to defeat his opponents. The book is profusely illustrated and provides several charts and diagrams to assist readers through the author's highly detailed accounts of Nelson's battles. Despite these aids, however, Bennett's frequent use of technical terms together with his often convoluted prose makes this less than easy reading." F. X. J. Homer
Best Sell 32:251 S 1 '72 300w

"[This is] an imaginative but critical analysis of Nelson's service career. . . . Captain Bennett has not contributed much to the stock of knowledge; his book is more valuable for its critical reappraisal of the subject. And it must be said that the promised study of the commander's career is not as specific as the title suggests. The historian will find an imbalance between description and synthesis and he may also cavil at one or two unsupported generalisations. . . . Both the historian and the general reader may find some of the footnotes fussy and irritating, and the twentieth-century comparisons irrelevant and unhelpful. But once they get into the book they will find it both useful and well worth reading."

Economist 243: suppl 6 Ap 8 '72 500w

"Written for the popular reader, Nelson the Commander nonetheless provides insights valuable to the specialist as well." K. G. Madison
Library J 97:2572 Ag '72 100w

"Captain Bennett's strongest point is the way he emphasizes Nelson's influence on naval practice in his own time, and later. . . . Conscientious and well-considered as this book is, there are at least two aspects of Nelson that remain to be explored. The first is what he himself wrote about war, the scattered but illuminating statements embedded in the seven volumes of letters and dispatches, edited during the last century by Sir Harris Nicolas. The second is what is set down in the logs of the ships in which Nelson served. Meanwhile, there is much to admire in the standard of the present book."

TLS p536 My 12 '72 200w

BENNETT, H. No more public school. 137p il $4.95; pa $2.95 Random house

371.2 Private schools. School administration and organization

ISBN 0-394-48040-6; 0-394-70768-0 (pa)
LC 71-39059

This book "is designed to show parents how to set up and efficiently operate a number of alternative schools—including the option of educating your child at home. The author . . . tells you how to get your child—legally or otherwise—out of school, how to organize a free school, how to teach and how to physically design a classroom, and finally, if all collapses around you, how to get your youngster back into public school. . . . Bennett will also show you how to get the young person into college." (Library J) Index.

"Although he is somewhat tedious and simplistic in his numerous outlines and step-by-step instructions, Bennett has written a genuinely valuable book. However, a serious omission is his failure to discuss funding." Herbert Liebman

Library J 97:1427 Ap 15 '72 160w
N Y Times Bk R p22 Ap 16 '72 70w

BENSON, MORTON, comp. SerboCroatian-English dictionary, by Morton Benson; with the collaboration of Biljana Šljivić-Šimsić, 807p $27.50 Univ. of Pa. press

491.8 Serbo-Croatian language—Dictionaries—English

"This Dictionary seeks to describe the lexicon of standard, contemporary SerboCroatian. An attempt has been made to limit the scope of the Dictionary to the vocabulary used in the speech of educated Yugoslavs and in the daily press. Important scientific and technical terms are included. The Dictionary gives some obsolete words and regionalisms which occur frequently in literature. Approximately 60,000 words are given. . . . SerboCroatian expressions cited in the Dictionary represent current Belgrade usage. American English is used in the glosses. It is assumed that the user of the Dictionary has some knowledge of SerboCroatian or has accessible a beginner's manual of the language." (Intro) The Roman alphabet rather than Cyrillic is used throughout. Bibliography.

"This dictionary will undoubtedly be greeted by a mixture of praise and criticism. The criticism will probably be aimed at the price; at the complex and detailed system of notation which Benson uses to indicate certain declensional and conjugational patterns; at what may seem to be the unnecessary inclusion of a large number of readily recognizable cognates; and at the fact that the scope of the dictionary has been limited to the vocabulary of an educated native of Belgrade. The praise will come from all those who need an up-to-date and fairly complete . . . lexicon of contemporary standard Serbo-Croatian with English glosses. For these people Benson has provided a first-rate reference work."

Choice 9:623 J1/Ag '72 150w

"This work is a model of lexicographic excellence. And if this were not apparent from the text alone, the compiler takes us into his laboratory, so to speak, and explains, in a detailed introductory account, the data considered for each article and the procedures to which he held. His principal sources of consultation, over and above his own findings and those of his collaborator, are set forth in a 45-item bibliography. All prefatory data are conscientiously duplicated in the two languages, on facing pages, thus eliminating the ethnocentrism common to bilingual lexica; and as the ultimate nicety, the work was issued simultaneously by Prosveta (Belgrade) and the University of Pennsylvania Press." B. H. Smeaton

Library J 97:1797 My 15 '72 200w

BENSTOCK, BERNARD. Sean O'Casey. (The Irish writers ser) 123p $4.50 Bucknell univ. press

822 O'Casey, Sean
ISBN 0-8387-7748-1 LC 72-124101

In his account of the twentieth century playwright Benstock analyzes "the plot, character, and action of most of O'Casey's major dramatic works. Also discussed are O'Casey's important autobiographical works. The author demonstrates how they relate to the playwright's dramatic form." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography.

The basic problems with this brief critique are that it tells us little or nothing new, that it rarely considers O'Casey with any really Irish context, [and] that there is too much plot summary. . . . There are three parts: the first argues that O'Casey is autobiographical but not too much so for the good of his work; the second, that his forte lies in 'paycock-type' and female characters; the third, that there is uncommon craft in his settings, stage directions, and color and clothes symbolism, and that he respects his characters despite their meanness. A slight book, but most libraries will want the entire series."

Choice 8:1195 N '71 150w

"[This is one of] more than 50 titles planned for the 'Irish Writers' series . . . intended to include 'significant Anglo-Irish writers of the 19th and 20th centuries.' . . . Benstock does a competent job on O'Casey. . . . The entire series will probably be useful in academic and many public libraries; but selective purchase is justified, if staff time allows." J. F. Moran

Library J 96:2642 S 1 '71 30w
(Correction: 96:4014 D 1 '71)

BENSTOCK, MARCY, jt. auth. Water wasteland. See Zwick, D.

BENTHAM, JEREMY. Of laws in general; ed. by H. L. A. Hart. 342p $19.25 Oxford

340 Law
SBN 485-13210-9

This book on jurisprudence was completed in 1782. "Bentham left his work in substantially complete but unpublished form at his death. It remained in manuscript . . . at University College, London, until 1939. At that time, Charles Warren Everett unearthed it and his edition of the work, the first publication, appeared in 1945 as The Limits of Jurisprudence Defined [BRD 1945]. It now emerges once more as Of Laws in General." (Am Pol Sci R)

"[This edition is] distinguished in its second incarnation by the editorial hand of the most eminent contemporary jurisprudential scholar, H. L. A. Hart. The work itself turns out to be a curious amalgam of daring, innovative suggestions and sterile, endlessly multiplied typologies. In his efforts to grasp the complete character of legislation, Bentham spun out extraordinarily complex classificatory schemes. While they produce the appearance of logical completeness, in the end the excessive division and subdivision of the subject matter only increases the complexity of the problem without offering anything by way of explanation. . . . The copious editorial notes deal exclusively with the ordering of the text and the clarification of points which might have been clear to Bentham's intended audience but are obscure today." Michael Barkum

Am Pol Sci R 65:202 Mr '71 700w

"The editorial notes . . . are admirable. They are succinct and unobtrusive, yet they hardly ever fail to tell the interested reader what he wants to know. . . . [A] question concerns Professor Hart's treatment of alternative readings in the manuscripts. He says that he has 'usually' printed Bentham's later thoughts, 'except where the original version gave greater clarity or consistency with the rest of the passage'. Should he not have printed both versions in these exceptional cases? An editor may feel sure that his author would not have wished to leave the obscurity or inconsistency introduced by a revision, but that is insufficient reason for giving only the earlier version."

TLS p125 Ja 23 '71 1000w

BENTLEY, GERALD EADES. The profession of dramatist in Shakespeare's time, 1590-1642. 329p $10 Princeton univ. press

822 Theater—England—History. Dramatists, English
ISBN 0-691-06205-6 LC 75-154990

"Beginning with a definition of the 'professional' dramatist, Bentley traces the society's acceptance of that profession, the playwright's relationship with his acting company, his pay (much higher than previous critics have supposed), his contractual obligations, his bouts with censors, his work with collaborators, his techniques of revision, and, finally, the publication of his works." (Choice)

"Although much of what Bentley offers here can be found elsewhere. . . . No other single volume contains in a short space such a wealth of material on the workaday conditions of the professional Elizabethan-Jacobean playwright. . . . The book will be of use to any serious student of the history of English drama."

Choice 9:1143 N '72 120w

BENTLEY, G. E.—Continued

"Professional dramatists and managers at their best (and even at their worst) earn money, and face competition, censorship, contracts, collaborators, plagues, and countless other occupational hazards. This book is a fascinating and most scholarly account of such theatrical adventures during the years 1590-1642. The title is innocently misleading; there is little about Shakespeare here, for few records of his professional dealings remain." J. H. Crouch

Library J 97:1737 My 1 '72 60w

BENTWICH, NORMAN. Israel: two fateful years, 1967-69. 115p $4.95 Drake pubs.

915.694 Israel. Israel-Arab War, 1967-—Influence and results
ISBN 87749-185-2 LC 72-179509

"A survey of the major issues facing Israel since the Six-Day War, with stress on Arab-Israeli relations. Bentwich takes a conciliatory approach to the Arabs and is critical of the Israeli government's inflexibility, he says that Israel can take initiatives for peace. . . . Other topics include the political and economic situation, with historical background; Jerusalem; education in Israel; the religious question; the Hebrew cultural renaissance and spiritual revival." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[Bentwich] tries to suggest the Arab point of view, but does so inadequately due to his Israeli perspective. . . . The author's bowdlerized, rosy view of Israel and his low-key presentation, even when critical, obscure more than they enlighten; his history is sloppy. The book is brief, general, and unoriginal, not to mention out of date." D. W. Littlefield
Library J 97:2339 J1 '72 120w

"[A] veteran Zionist whose past services to Israel entitle [him] to speak with authority, deplores the policy of reprisals as playing into the Arab terrorists' hands and suggest that the time has come for Israel to stop giving priority to peace negotiations with Arab states over generous actions nearer home. [This is a] wise and humane little book."

TLS p697 J1 2 '70 230w

BEOWULF; tr. with an introd. & afterword by Burton Raffel; drawings by Leonard Baskin. 102p $10 Univ. of Mass. press

829
LC 73-164441

"Raffel has provided a poet's translation of the poem, realizing in modern verse as much of the Old English epic as can survive translation. . . . [Baskin] has contributed a . . . series of line drawings, including full-page renderings of Beowulf, Grendel, and the Dragon." (Publisher's note) Glossary.

"[The illustrations] . . . effectively capture . . . the unearthly scragginess of the monsters and the muscular intelligence and craftiness of the hero. A beautiful book, amplifying what is becoming a classic translation."

Choice 9:643 J1/Ag '72 110w

"Aiming for a re-creation rather than a re-translation produces verse with the vigor and heavy rhythms of Old English poetry. Despite this power, however, many a favorite passage suffers. . . . Occasional mistranslations make, for example, both his helmet and Hrunt fail the hero. Baskin's illustrations show similar strengths and weaknesses. His full-length drawings of Beowulf and Grendel give us massive monsters. But his bust of Beowulf is only the artist in a boar helmet. . . . The union of picture and poetry in this expensive book will probably arouse interest and enthusiasm on the part of the uninitiated. It will not please the specialist as much, for it illustrates too well what is lost in popularization." H. T. Keenan

Library J 97:879 Mr 1 '72 170w

"Raffel—whose paperback translation [of 1963] now reappears splendidly printed and illustrated, and with an interesting 'Postscript' and a new 'Afterword on Translating Beowulf' thrown in, tells us over and over again that Beowulf is a 'great poem,' 'great poetry.' . . . And so when Raffel explains what his methods of translation are it is with some apprehension that we learn that his object is to re-create 'something that is itself good poetry.' If Beowulf is not itself 'great' poetry, as seems to be generally agreed, how much less than 'good' poetry are we to be fobbed off with in the translation? . . . Although Mr. Raffel's version is accurate and unpretentious, I can find very little poetry in it. I too often found my eyes wandering from the text of the vigorous drawings by Leonard Baskin that accompany it." F. W. Bateson

N Y Rev of Books 17:16 D 30 '71 900w

BERCKMAN, EVELYN. The fourth man on the rope. 234p $5.95 Doubleday

LC 74-175359

"This book is about a librarian, a collection of people in an English boarding house, thievery, murder [and an old trunk believed to be full of letters]." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Despite a certain atypical complexity of characterization, sensible prose, a fair grip on the rudiments of objective reality, and a general lack of physical menace either real or fancied [this] is, in its heart, a ladies' Gothic novel, and on that wheel it is broken. A feeble but harmless parody of a subtle, difficult, and fruitful genre, the 'ladies' Gothic' is perhaps the mildest form of pornography in existence and one of the silliest ways of filling up the printed page ever conceived by the human brain. . . . Every once in a while, especially in the first couple of chapters, the book shows signs of trying to turn into a real novel, but the author soon flogs it back into line." L. J. Davis
Book World p12 Ap 23 '72 450w

Reviewed by Henry Veit

Library J 97:2121 Je 1 '72 100w

"The big stylistic thing about 'The Fourth Man on the Rope' is the author's determination never to write 'He said,' or 'She said.' Berckman goes into the most fabulous maneuvers to avoid the locution. . . . Here and there, the evasions are so deliriously desperate they enter the realm of high art. 'She truncated,' 'He placated' and 'She croaked' come to mind. . . . You won't believe it." Newgate Callendar
N Y Times Bk R p36 Ap 30 '72 200w
TLS p500 Ap 28 '72 50w

BERESFORD, MAURICE, ed. Deserted medieval villages; studies: ed. by Maurice Beresford and John G. Hurst. 340p il pl maps $23.95 St Martins

914.2 Cities and towns. Ruined, extinct, etc. Excavations (Archeology)—Great Britain
LC 75-190102

"The book is basically a catalogue and review of all the archaeological work on deserted medieval villages since Beresford's Lost Villages of England was first published [BRD 1955]. It covers the whole of the United Kingdom, summarises all sites where any sort of excavation has taken place, surveys in particular the evidence that now exists for medieval 'peasant' houses, and gives a county-by-county list of all known sites, whether yet located or not." (Encounter) Bibliographies. Index.

"This important book is a goldmine of fascinating new information, and another pioneering revisionist study of medieval society. Although well illustrated, it is a technical book and deserves careful reading. It has no peer and should be in libraries wherever archaeology and medieval history are studied."

Choice 9:1187 N '72 200w

"Each year 30 or so such sites are 'lost' once again, but [this time] irretrievably, as our expanding social demands on our inherited landscape become increasingly destructive. This point is nowhere emphasised so well as by deserted medieval settlements. Owing to the dedication, perseverance, and scholarship of these two editors in particular, there is now a well-documented case of the destruction of this aspect of our archaeological heritage. This is a most important book, archaeologically, historically and, in a sense, politically." P. J. Fowler
Encounter 37:69 O '71 400w

"[Those parts of the book which] include Wales, Scotland, and Ireland . . . are written by other scholars, but the main body of the book is the result of a fruitful marriage between the historian Beresford and the archaeologist Hurst. It is an expensive book, handsomely produced, but is well worth every penny, for it is packed with new knowledge and speculations and guidance for future work. The book could be a bible for adult education classes, for it concludes with a detailed questionnaire relating to fieldwork on both old and new sites. . . . The authors discuss the chronology of desertions, and the causes, in detail, as well as the pattern of distribution. . . . [Mr Hurst's] review of archaeological research down to 1968, and his gazetteer of excavations [is fascinating]. . . . This is a superb book, beautifully illustrated with air and ground photographs, and with excellent line maps. It ends with . . . suggestions for further work. . . . It also makes clear how little we still know about many archaeological problems."

TLS p1268 O 15 '71 1400w

BERG, LASSE. Face to face: fascism and revolution in India; English tr. by Norman Kurtin [by] Lasse and Lisa Berg. rev ed 240p il $5.95 Ramparts press

309.154 India—Social conditions. India—Politics and government
ISBN 0-87867-014-9 LC 73-172233

This work, "originally written for the Swedish press . . . [deals with] agrarian and urban conditions in India, . . . land tenures, the caste system, Hindu religion and philosophy, and developmental economics. . . . The book [also] has chapters on living conditions and politics in southern, northern, and western India." (Library J) Bibliography.

"[This is a] potpourri of journalistic notes. . . . [The authors'] method . . . is open to question since they depended on interpreters to communicate with Indians speaking a variety of languages; and the abstracts of interviews conducted are very patchy in nature. . . . The comments on the various Communist factions, peasant restlessness, etc. are impressionistic in nature. The work is misleading and will not help either the general reader or the specialist." B. G. Gokhale

Library J 97:1442 Ap 15 '72 150w

"[The Bergs concentrated] their inquiries on the agrarian situation and what appeared to them to be emergent revolutionary pressures. [This book] may turn out to be for India's 1970s what Kusum Nayar's Blossoms in the Dust [BRD 1962] was for the 1960s; a perceptive leap, expressed through lively journalism, prefiguring an approaching political phase."

TLS p524 My 5 '72 450w

BERG, LISA, jt. auth. Face to face. See Berg, Lasse

BERGAMINI, DAVID. Japan's imperial conspiracy. 1239p il $14.95 Morrow

940.5352 Hirohito, Emperor of Japan. Japan—Politics and government. World War, 1939-1945—Japan
LC 74-102686

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by A. D. Coox
Am Hist R 77:1169 O '72 1150w
Choice 9:118 Mr '72 200w

Reviewed by Naomi Bliven
New Yorker 48:128 Mr 25 '72 1250w

BERGER, BRIGITTE. Societies in change; an introduction to comparative sociology. 302p $7.95 Basic bks.

301.2 Social change
SBN 465-07941-5 LC 77-126946

This book deals with "what American sociology and social psychology have to say about the origins and present conditions of the institutional structures of Western societies . . . [as well as with] what happens to social institutions (economy, power structures, social class, family) as industrialism spreads and urbanization develops. . . . Attention is [also] paid to the corresponding changes in personality structure and roles of individual men and women, old and young." (Choice) Index.

"Examples are drawn mainly from the U.S., Russia, and Japan. Unfortunately, the theoretical orientation is limited to Max Weber. The ideological overtones are those of middle-class, parochial liberalism. The American racist crisis is underestimated; China and India are viewed as 'arrested in traditional forms.' 'Imperialism' and 'colonialism' do not appear even in the index. No society is treated as an historical whole. Clearly written . . . jargon is minimal; new terms are defined and illustrated as they are introduced. . . . References encourage further study. A very good book—has no competitors at the moment."

Choice 8:1514 Ja '72 250w

"[Berger's] vision is global, the kind of perspective much needed to make sociology a science of societies. The comparative perspective is never forgotten as we are led on a fast tour over the human map across time and space. The author-guide is not only well-informed but also well-equipped with the tools to make some coherence out of the diverse and complex pictures that we see. . . . Throughout the book there are short excerpts from published works that are blocked off from the main text. They are there to support and/or supplement the text. The selections are in general excellent, concise, and to the point. They are [also] of great variety. . . . [This work] does not say what sociology is but shows what it does. Sociological concepts are used to present theme after theme that centers around the process of industrialization. This is sociology in action." Koya Azumi

Contemp Sociol 1:317 Jl '72 1400w

BERGER, JOHN. G. 311p $7.95 Viking
SBN 670-33341-7 LC 72-77006

G., the principal character of this novel, "is never named. Because he is half Italian he is called Garibaldi, but there is something of Don Giovanni in him, too. G. is illegitimate; born in 1887, he is raised by his mother's cousins in the English countryside. He is never loved, but at 15 he is seduced by his cousin Beatrice, who is more than twice his age. In time, G. goes to Switzerland, Italy and Trieste, seducing women as the first world war breaks out." (Newsweek)

Reviewed by R. D. Olson
Library J 97:3179 O 1 '72 170w

Reviewed by Ronald DeFeo
Nat R p1307 N 24 '72 500w

Reviewed by Arnold Kettle
New Repub 167:30 O 7 '72 1200w

Reviewed by Shirley Toulson
New Statesman 83:799 Je 9 '72 380w

Reviewed by Karl Miller
N Y Rev of Books 19:40 N 30 '72 1200w

"Some readers might think [this novel] superficially resembles The French Lieutenant's Woman [by J. Fowles, BRD 1969]—i.e., historical novel, intrusive author, passion in the twilight of Victoria. But 'G.'—in addition to its vividly portrayed characters and the crashing immediacy of its historical settings—is a complex novel of ideas that sets off in the reader meditations about sex, history and nature of the novel that could never have been excited by the flaccid ironies and self-important complacencies of John Fowles's work. . . . 'G.' belongs to . . . the tradition of George Eliot, Tolstoy, D. H. Lawrence and Norman Mailer, the tradition of fallible wisdom, rich, nagging and unfinished. . . . [Here is] a writer one demands to know more about. Not to sit at the feet of his aphorisms or unravel the tangles of his allusions, but to explore more fully an intriguing and powerful mind and talent." Leo Braudy

N Y Times Bk R p5 S 10 '72 1150w

"Berger is an Englishman who has raised some controversy with his Marxist politics, art criticism and his novels. He has developed an admirable prose style—lean, authoritative, didactic and on occasion curiously ambiguous. . . . The line of the plot is familiar and unimportant; what makes this novel so extraordinary is the author's inventiveness in narrative and essay form, his development of theme and symbol. . . . Sentences and paragraphs are dropped in for no other purpose than punctuation; elegant, dubiously relevant interpolations seduce the incautious reader. And yet much of it is marvelous. The over-all portrait, for instance, of upper-class life in Europe before the first world war. . . . Perhaps most astute of all is Berger's explanation of how Don Juans succeed." P. S. P.

Newsweek 80:81 S 11 '72 460w

"In so far as we are concerned with the over-all style or structure of G., one notices that Mr Berger attempts to translate Cubism into literary terms by employing and rather overtaxing many of the devices used in recent years by Sarraute, Sollers, Butor and the other novelists who have said farewell to naturalistic certainty and divinely certified mimesis. Mr Berger's entire narrative is broken up into hundreds of double-spaced sections, some of them constituting only a single line or phrase. . . . There are also passages which stretch the reader's credibility. . . . To emphasize that the failings of G are the result of a rich endowment of talents and of a bold, experimental intelligence . . . is not to explain these failings away. One comes away from G as from many modern paintings: provoked and stimulated, yet baffled and faintly resentful."

BERGER, JOHN—Continued

TL5 p645 Je ■ '72 1750w

BERGER, JOSEPH. Nothing but the truth. 286p $8.95 Day

B or 92 Prisons—Russia. Russia—Politics and government—1925-1953
LC 75-155021

The author, "a founder of the communist party in Palestine, was summoned to Moscow in 1932, arrested in 1935, and confined to prison for some twenty-one years. He writes . . . of life in the prison camps." (Best Sell) Index.

"This book is well-planned and seems to have been carefully checked before publication. . . . [It] brings into new and true light the reality of the Stalin era . . . with a wealth of material and valuable insights." W. J. Ciszek

Best Sell 31:409 D 15 '71 650w

"As a foreign Communist (he was a Comintern functionary), Berger was advantaged with greater objectivity than the native Russians whose fate he shared. His book displays a sophisticated analytical perspective on the persons and events characterizing the height of the Stalin years. The absence of sensation, avoidance of condemnation and nonliterary focus make this book as historically and politically useful as the memoirs of W. Leonhard, Child of the revolution [BRD 1958] . . . of the same period outside of the camps. Index includes brief biographical sketches of important figures."

Choice 8:1374 D '71 170w

"[Berger's] writing is calm, detached, almost clinical; the effect, however, is a nightmare without end. The leading personalities are dedicated Communists charged with treason. . . . The purgers followed the purged in a phantasmagoria of events that added to the horror. It is understandable that this history has produced a profound crisis in the ideology and system of Communist rule. According to Berger, it is still underestimated by the radical intellectuals in the West who make up the New Left. The author makes no affirmation or condemnation of socialism as such. Rather, he concludes with the hope that the young Soviet people will in time chart a new, bright course for their country and presumably for the cause of socialism." George Charney

Library J 96:3321 O 15 '71 270w

BERGER, MORROE. Islam in Egypt today: social and political aspects of popular religion. (Princeton univ. Program in Near Eastern studies. Princeton studies on the Near East) 138p $6.95 Cambridge

322 Islam. Egypt—Religion
SBN 521-07834-2 LC 70-113597

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Iliya Harik

Am J Soc 77:1004 Mr '72 700w

Reviewed by J. M. Yinger

Contemp Sociol 1:151 Mr '72 650w

Reviewed by H. A. B. Rivlin

Pol Sci Q 87:687 D '72 500w

BERGER, RAINER, ed. Scientific methods in medieval archaeology. (UCLA Center for Medieval and renaissance studies. Contributions: 4) 459p il $20 Univ. of Calif. press

913 Archeology
LC 72-7157

In this collection of papers on scientific archaeology, "W. F. Libby discusses [radio carbon dating] and how it placed contemporary science at the service of archaeology; others explore additional advantages, limitations and variations (e.g. sunspots) in radiocarbon analysis. C. W. Ferguson explains scientific dendrochronology (tree ring dating). Medieval timber frame buildings, especially cruck cottages, tithe barns, and covered markets, illustrate the uses of these two methods and their frequent superiority over traditional typology. [Discussed also are] thermoluminescence another (but more destructive) technique, and tephrochronology (the study of volcanic deposits)." (Choice)

"Less than one-third of the papers of this volume are concerned with the application of scientific techniques to archaeological problems. . . . In the end, these papers may have greater relative importance for the art historian and archaeologist than those on scientific techniques for dating because of the increasing number of unresolved problems we must face before we can use the new scientific approaches to dating with any certainty." H. L. Thomas

Am Anthropol 74:1501 D '72 500w

"The book suffers to some extent from the problem inherent in such a collection of papers—that of a certain amount of duplication of matters of principle—but far less than many other works of this type. . . . The editor should be . . . congratulated on the production of an extremely important work of value to both the student and the specialist. The contributions are supported by references to recent papers and well illustrated with tables, diagrams, and photographs." R. F. Tylecote

Am Hist R 77:492 Ap '72 1400w

"[These papers are] interesting, informative, and well illustrated. . . . Each article includes extensive footnotes which can constitute a good bibliography to this exploding field. These studies are technical, but easy to follow and should appeal to historians, archaeologists, art historians, and scientists. Lynn White's introduction places these discussions in perspective and suggests further topics for investigation. Highly recommended as a milestone in its field."

Choice 8:718 Jl '71 190w

"It is clear that radio-carbon dating not only is the granddaddy of scientific archeology but is still its greatest single preoccupation. . . . White's introduction . . . is perhaps more readable than most [papers] because it was prepared as an afterdinner speech rather than a scientific paper and the author had some responsibility for keeping his audience awake. Whatever its origin, it is written both to praise science for being scientific and to warn humanists that the simple 'scientific' solution to a problem can never replace reflective thought. This reflects the major dilemma of the archeologists." J. E. Fitting

Science 175:976 Mr 3 '72 360w

BERGIER, JACQUES, jt. auth. Impossible possibilities. See Pauwels, L.

BERGMAN, ANDREW. We're in the money: depression America and its films. 200p il $8.95 N.Y. univ. press

791.43 Moving picture plays—History and criticism. Moving pictures—History
ISBN 0-8147-0964-8 LC 74-159533

The author "divides the films of the Thirties into Hollywood genres—e.g. 'The gangsters,' 'Some anarcho-nihilist laff riots,' 'The G-man and the cowboy,' 'Frank Capra and screwball comedy'—and speculates as to why a particular genre was successful during a particular time in the Thirties and why it was unsuccessful during another time. He does this by two methods: first, by examining in detail a small number of representative films; and second, by examining not only the public statements of the Hollywood moguls but also the comments of theater-owners across the country and the popular press." (Choice) Filmography. Bibliography. Index.

"This work is well documented with a good bibliography and a six-page index. Hopefully, Bergman will one day examine the films of other decades. Highly recommended."

Choice 9:226 Ap '72 100w

"From his doctoral dissertation, the author has produced a provocative work based on viewing and analyzing almost 100 American films. . . . He concludes, probably correctly, that films helped convince Americans in the decade of lost hope that wrongs could be righted within existing institutions." Jerry Cao

Library J 97:82 Ja 1 '72 100w

BERGONZI, BERNARD. T. S. Eliot. (Masters of world lit. ser) 208p $6.95; pa $2.95 Macmillan (N Y)

821 Eliot, Thomas Stearns
LC 78-162337

The author, professor of English at the University of Warwick, discusses Eliot's life in chronological phases. He "considers the importance of Eliot's American roots (his boyhood in St. Louis and Gloucester, Massachusetts, his education at Harvard), and the relationship between Eliot's artistic intentions and the events of his age, as well as his friendships with such diverse personalities as Ezra Pound, Leonard and Virginia Woolf, Bertrand Russell, and Groucho Marx." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"In this latest volume of the [Masters of World Literature] series, [the author] has given us a readable and useful guide to a major twentieth-century poet, playwright and critic. . . . All in all, this book, like the others in the series, is one that college and university libraries will want. Students of modern poetry and of Eliot in particular should find it a useful guide to understanding Eliot's thought and technique." J. S. Phillipson

Best Sell 32:130 Je 15 '72 250w

"A pedestrian plod through the life and works. Surely the student can by now be allowed to forget the Old Possum's ridiculous, reactionary, nonsensical views on politics and society and concentrate on the poems and literary criticism. Yet the author insists on a most mechanical division of space, which works to the detriment of the poetry. The most telling feature of the book is its inability to react against the frequent enormities of Eliot's behaviour: where he is snobbish, anti-semitic, quasifascistic, you may be sure the event will be described as 'unfortunate', or some such brushaway adjective. . . . The most offensive feature of this dull work is its professional manner: 'Take a look at X's article, you should know about Y's views, don't bother about what Z said.' The study is conspicuously lacking in an author." James Fenton

New Statesman 84:195 Ag 11 '72 400w

BERGSMAN, JOEL. Brazil: industrialization and trade policies; pub. on behalf of the Development centre of the Organisation for economic co-operation and development. 281p $9; pa $5.75 Oxford

338.0981 Industry and state—Brazil. Brazil—Commercial policy. Brazil—Industries
ISBN 0-19-215325-0; 0-19-215336-6 (pa)
LC 76-141047

The author analyzes and discusses the "increase of industrial output in . . . Brazil. . . . [He] evaluates the policies affected by the Brazilians to spur the industrial sector of the economy and treats such topics as protection, subsidies, employment. . . (steel, automotive, food, and textile)." (Library J)

"A thoroughly competent, professional, interesting, and well written case study. A sympathetic critic of Brazil's industrialization efforts, Bergsman considers both the theoretical and empirical implications of a variety of postwar industrial promotion policies tried by a succession of Brazilian governments. . . . Would be a valuable addition to a library collection of economic development works, especially considering the paucity of good case study material available to teachers in this field." Choice 7:1411 D '70 130w

"The book is fairly well balanced between industry and agriculture, and the effect of inflation on the Brazilian economy is handled exceptionally well. . . . [This study is] well documented and . . . [reflects] a thorough knowledge of trade and economic development. . . . [It is] highly technical and will be useful primarily to the specialist in Latin American economic development." T. L. Welch

Library J 95:4253 D 15 '70 70w

"[The author] recognizes that protection is not the only important topic for an analysis of Brazilian industry, and in addition to a thorough discussion of trade policies his book provides an excellent survey of many of the other issues. Unfortunately however . . . [he] does not consider the connexion between recent 'liberal' economic policies and the take-over of much of Brazil's industry by United States corporations. Certainly this case-study shows that some liberalizing measures are needed (particularly in the direction of promoting exports) but it does not demonstrate that Brazil's strategy was fundamentally wrong."

TLS p1302 N 6 '70 500w

BERINGER, RICHARD E., jr. auth. Anatomy of the Confederate Congress. See Alexander, T. B.

BERKE, JOSEPH, jr. auth. Mary Barnes: two accounts of a journey through madness. See Barnes, M.

BERKMAN, TED. To seize the passing dream; a novel of Whistler, his women and his world. 431p $7.95 Doubleday

Whistler, James Abbott McNeill—Fiction
LC 73-176345

"Berkman probes the artist's relationships with his mother and with his mistresses, records . . . his celebrated feuds, and traces his friendships with George Du Maurier, Oscar Wilde, Degas, Monet, Manet, Swinburne, Dante Gabriel Rossetti, Marcel Proust, Aubrey Beardsley, John Singer Sargent, Toulouse-Lautrec, and many others. Here, too, are the stories behind his most famous works." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by H. T. Anderson

Best Sell 32:38 Ap 15 '72 140w

"[This] book is at least twice as long as it should be: even Whistler stories get boring if you hear enough of them, and the sex scenes are not sufficient to sustain reader interest. . . . In spite of all this, Berkman is far from being a bad writer; his descriptions of places and minor characters are often lovely vignettes of a much higher quality than the novel as a whole. And he obviously knows much about art. This might have been a good novel if it had been edited rigorously." A. D. Ross

Library J 97:1033 Mr 15 '72 130w

"If you'd like to know what Whistler's mother was really like off her rocker (a holy terror!) Mr. Berkman's novel will fill you in. It also fleshes out the life and times of the belligerent Butterfly himself: his esthetics, his artistic integrity, his Bohemian private life and his magnificent feuds. . . . Here are his famous court battle with Ruskin (slander), his less famous litigation with Sir William Eden, Anthony's father (breach of contract), his squabble with George du Maurier over being caricatured in 'Trilby,' etc. Mr. Berkman is dealing with one of the yeastier stages of modern cultural history, and he communicates a sense of its excitement and ferment." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p40 Mr 15 '72 170w

Reviewed by Roa Lynn

Sat R 55:52 Jl 15 '72 390w

BERKSON, BILL, jr. ed. Alex Katz. See Katz, A.

BERMAN, BARRY, jr. auth. Case studies in marketing. See Berman, L.

BERMAN, LINDA. Case studies in marketing: an annotated bibliography and index, by Linda & Barry Berman. 211p $5 Scarecrow

016.6584 Marketing—Bibliography
ISBN 0-8108-0403-4 LC 75-155282

"The Bermans index and annotate approximately 1,400 case studies from 28 well known marketing texts published between 1958-70. . . . In the first section, the classified bibliography, case studies are listed alphabetically by title in 15 broad areas within marketing consumer behavior, distribution, marketing research, etc. The subject index indicates the specific problem areas in marketing illustrated by each case." (Choice)

"The annotations help the reader select relevant case studies, which can then be obtained from the cited source. . . . Some of the newer areas of marketing—social issues in marketing and the marketing problems of minority enterprises—have not been touched upon. . . . Recommended."

Choice 9:489 Je '72 180w

"The case studies deal exclusively with American marketing, and they are all substantial; no need to worry about patiently sought out study turning out to be an oblique discussion consisting of only a few sentences. However, one cannot help but regret the blandness of many of the case studies listed. This is not really the fault of the compilers of the bibliography, but rather evidence of the great reluctance of American business to share research findings. Still, this will be a useful addition to business school libraries and special collections." R. H. Lipsett

BERMAN, LINDA—Continued

Library J 96:3112 O 1 '71 160w

BERMAN, SANFORD. Prejudices and antipathies: a tract on the LC subject heads concerning people. 249p $7.50 Scarecrow

025.3 U.S. Library of Congress. Subject headings
ISBN 0-8108-0431-X LC 73-159419

"The book is divided into 5 main chapters, each dealing with different types of prejudices, such as bias against ethnic minorities, the Third World, political views, sexual practices, behavior of youth, and the like. These chapters are followed by 'do-it-yourself' advice on how to attack other subject headings, not yet fully explored. In each chapter, objectionable subject headings and the recommended remedies are listed and discussed. . . . The book ends with an Index of some 890 headings, 269 of which are in a new form, proposed by Berman. . . . [His] case against LC rests on an indictment for its sympathies, antipathies, and technical prejudices overtly expressed in the choice of subject headings." (Library Q) Index to headings.

"This is a passionate, pungent, and provoking attack on the LC list of subject headings. . . . A good catalog reflects faithfully the face of the literature represented by it, warts and all; and if that face is not pleasant to behold, it is not the mirror that is to blame. Berman's 'Remedy' to discard the 'Jewish question' as a subject heading is to cover up and conceal unpleasant realities, and his suggestion of the possibility of putting the materials under such of the other headings as 'Genocide,' 'Holocaust, Jewish,' or 'Jews—Persecutions' will not serve 'equally well' the purpose of the catalog. . . . A list of subject headings is not a social treatise reflecting its author's philosophy or point of view. . . . But not all of [Berman's] criticisms are answerable, and there is much that deserves serious consideration and calls for remedial action." Seymour Lubetzky
Library J 97:658 F 15 '72 3300w

"[The author's] concern is honest, his argument often well taken, based on thorough and extensive homework on a very important and relevant subject. . . . He delineates the scope of subject prejudices by maintaining that 'the LC list can only 'satisfy' parochial, jingoistic Europeans and North Americans, white-hued, at least nominally Christian.' . . . The method of presentation is highly emotive. A vivid and colorful vernacular, . . . words frequently underlined for added emphasis, and a constant use of clichés . . . make one fully aware of the author's striving for the reader's empathy. . . . Some of the headings should have been replaced a long time ago, others will be reviewed with mixed feelings both by the reader who agrees and the one who disagrees with Berman in specific cases." J. Z. Nitecki
Library Q 42:355 J1 '72 1600w

BERMANT, CHAIM. The cousinhood. 466p pl $10.95 Macmillan (N Y)

301.45 Jews in Great Britain
LC 70-103682

"Nurtured by freedoms first granted under the Cromwellian Protectorate, a small but affluent group of English Jews had emerged as a 'cousinhood' by the end of the 18th Century. This study traces the fortunes of this Anglo-Jewish gentry—dominated by the Rothschilds, Cohens, Goldsmids, Sassoons, and a few other closely related families—through the Victorian and Edwardian years . . . up to the present." (Library J) Index.

"[This] is a series of interesting, if somewhat loosely linked, vignettes which cumulatively reveal a plutocracy that has played a significant role in English history." J. A. Casada
Library J 97:1806 My 15 '72 90w

"Mr. Bermant, himself an English Jew, thinks he is writing about Jews, but for Americans he is writing about England. For example, the earliest rich Jewish families, of which there were very few, seem to have vanished instantly into the English aristocracy, because their wealth made them desirable matches up and down the peerage."

New Yorker 48:94 Je 24 '72 140w

"Bermant has appointed himself a one-man chronicler of the leading Anglo-Jewish families (at least in terms of wealth) . . . [and] out of this promising material, treated with the right blend of deference and cock-snookery, Mr Bermant has made a vibrant portrait-gallery. . . . There remains a notable lack of intellectual stature among the Cousinhood. For all Mr Bermant's kindly gloss, there is little he can do to redeem Anglo-Jewry's reputation for intellectual dimness. . . . At the end of The Cousinhood there is a degeneration into the language of the gossip column. . . . This is a pity, because it tends to obscure Mr Bermant's serious achievement. He has in fact—for all his vagaries—made a valiant attempt to raise Anglo-Jewish historiography to a level where it can confront a large part of its subject-matter without adulation, apologia, or iconoclasm."

TLS p308 Mr 17 '72 1850w

BERNAL, J. D. The extension of man; a history of physics before the quantum. 317p ll maps $12.50 MIT press

530 Physics—History
ISBN 0262-02-086-6 LC 72-178982

"The first eleven chapters of this book are taken from a recording of the lectures given by the late J. D. Bernal to first-year students in physics at Birkbeck College, University of London. The work traces the history of physics up to the end of classical era at the end of the 19th century, just before the new discoveries of the subatom and relativity were made. The last chapter was added to the lectures to bring the book up to date. It carries the story through the 19th century and concentrates on those parts of the subject which brought physicists forward to the breakthrough at the end of the century." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The freshness of the colloquial chat is engaging. Of Alexander, Professor Bernal observes that 'he could not stand the drink and the climate of Babylon and died at the age of 33'. . . . On the other hand, off-the-top-of-the-head lecturing (as one suspects this was) may reveal serious defects of perspective when set down in print. Professor Bernal recognises this, and in a postscript to the lectures tries to apply corrections. But he could not take into account historical research since the lectures were last given in 1962—on."

Economist 242:54 F 19 '72 340w

"The application of physics to technology is discussed extensively, and is the subject of most of the over 100 illustrations in the book. Theoretical, philosophical, and sociological aspects of physics are considered. Although there is nothing really new in the book, its lucid presentation of the subject makes it a pleasure to read. This is an excellent book for physical science and engineering students, as well as for the general reader who wishes a short but interesting view of the development of physics up to the quantum era." B. L. Stern
Library J 97:2413 J1 '72 140w

"Unlike the majority of . . . transcriptions . . . [this book] has survived the transition from tape-recording to print remarkably well. . . . Bernal found himself running out of time towards the end of term. The result is that, having been guided up to 1800 in a relatively leisurely 250 pages, the reader suddenly finds the accelerating scientific revolution of the 19th century whizzing by in a mere 50 or so pages. It's a bit unnerving, to say the least. . . . It would be nice to think that The Extension of Man would somehow find its way into every school library in the country." John Naughton
New Statesman 83:246 F 25 '72 650w

"[This book is] written in such simple language that readers are far more likely to be offended at the reiteration of the obvious than deterred by any obscurity of style. The avowed aim was to explain 'what experimental physics is and how it has come to be like that'. Neither ambition is often in evidence, much less is either achieved. Aimlessness is there from the outset. . . . [The book has a] freshness only of the kind usually associated with hastily prepared student essays; and there is no humour in criticizing a work so inaccurate, so purposeless, and so historically uninformed. There will be much shaking of heads on the New Left and Old Left alike, if this book is given much currency."

TLS p400 Ap 7 '72 550w

BERNARD, JESSIE. The future of marriage. 367p $9.95 World pub.

301.42 Marriage
ISBN 0-529-04521-4 LC 77-183085

The author offers the view that marriage is not a trap for the man and a prize for the woman. On the contrary, she says, marriage is often good for men but hazardous to women. She predicts that marriages of the future may not mean a life contract, sexual fidelity or even sharing the same household. If marriage is to survive, it will recognize the autonomy of women and their greater economic independence. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by I. C. Schick and Tom Schick
America 127:214 S 23 '72 270w

"Dr. Jessie Bernard, the charming veteran sociologist of marriage and the family, has written what may prove to be her most popular and provocative work. Her thesis is that traditional marriage will have to be modified into a more mutually shared form to meet modern conditions. . . . To document her reasoning, the author has called upon many studies in sociology and psychology. . . . This is an excellent work supported by an extensive bibliography. At times the author neglects alternate explanations such as the function of coquetry. . . . Also, what she says may apply more readily to middle-class marriages since the researchers, except Komarovsky, generally neglect the lower-class data. But this is the usual weakness of much sociological writing. Despite these limitations, I think this a well written sociological work." J. J. Conlin

Best Sell 32:131 Je 15 '72 300w

"A stimulating and often provocative book. . . . Roles, status, interrelationships, and conjugal needs as defined by the two sexes are explored within the alternating theme of his and hers. The author opines that marriage is the best and worst of human relationships, which is why it will endure. Fine for upper division or graduate level courses in marriage or behavioral science—excellent for outside reading."

Choice 9:1047 O '72 170w

Reviewed by Doris Grumbach
Commonweal 97:305 Ja 5 '73 700w

Reviewed by E. G. Detlefsen
Library J 97:2420 Jl '72 140w

"Jessie Bernard, the author of five previous books, was, until her retirement, professor of sociology at Penn State. . . . [Her] research (much of it done in the 1950s, the 'togetherness' decade) leads her to conclude that there are, in any one marriage, two marriages—'his' and 'hers.' And 'her' marriage is so costly, so damaging, that it constitutes a public health hazard. . . . Bernard's arguments derive from statistics; but she does not write within the 'straightjacket of objectivity.' She cares passionately about the marriage of wives." Barbara Harrison

Nation 214:662 My 22 '72 650w

BERNARD, PAUL P. Jesuits and Jacobins; enlightenment and enlightened despotism in Austria. 198p $7.50 Univ. of Ill. press

914.36 Austria—History. Enlightenment. Austria—Intellectual life. Jesuits
SBN 252-00180-X LC 78-151997

The author "examines the writings of the most important of the 18th-century Austrian 'intelligentsia' and describes the social and political milieu in which they lived and worked. . . . The writers are grouped according to their membership in the Jesuit order or Freemason movement, support or rejection of Josephinism, and tendencies toward Jacobinism." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Although this brief work will not become the definitive study on the Austrian Enlightenment, it will serve as a useful introduction to it. . . . This is primarily a literary analysis and most of the literature is quite second rate. Except for a detailed description of changing censorship policies, the politics and reforms of Maria Theresa and Joseph II are mentioned only when the writers refer or react to them. . . . This is an interesting book, somewhat chatty in style. Bernard has read widely in the political works and belles lettres of the time and shows a sound grasp of the secondary literature, most of which is in German. Recommended for college and university libraries."

Choice 9:120 Mr '72 180w

Va Q R 48:xcvi summer '72 100w

BERNARDO, ROBERT M. The theory of moral incentives in Cuba; introd. by Irving Louis Horowitz. 159p $7.50 Univ. of Ala. press

335.43 Communism—Cuba. Labor and laboring classes—Cuba
ISBN 0-8173-4720-8 LC 76-148691

The author "discusses a system of work in Cuba based on nonmaterial incentives, where the profit motive is absent. From the beginning, he believes, Cuban revolutionaries had socialist goals in mind. . . . [Bernardo also deals with] the nature of the challenge that confronted the island's architects in their attempt to create a 'new Cuban man' motivated by moral incentives. This interpretation of mankind. . . . Bernardo attributes to Ernesto Guevara." (N Y Times Bk R) Index.

"[This is an] excellent synthesis of an important and complex problem. . . . The book might have been strengthened had Bernardo visited Cuba; he also neglects some sources. Despite the shortcomings, the book belongs in any library concerned with socialism, Communism, Latin America, or contemporary Cuba. It also could be used as a textbook in a course on contemporary Cuba."

Choice 9:129 Mr '72 140w

"Bernardo's monograph, a sociology of Cuban labor policies, places Castro within the most millenarian of Marxist traditions. . . . Whether due to moral incentives or some other cause, . . . [the author] believes that in Cuba a roughly egalitarian society is being created under the shadow of a foreign blockade, and that in 1970 'a radical socialist millenarianism continued to animate much of Cuban society and morale seems high.' This book will be rather difficult for those with no background in economic theory, but social scientists should find it interesting." Mark Falcoff

Library J 97:687 F 15 '72 120w

"Cuba and China alone, says the author, adhere to . . . [the] nonwage blueprint. Both labor and management seek the public good, independently of pecuniary considerations. Bernardo makes clear that the acceptance of a plan is no guarantee of its success. . . . Has the plan operated efficiently? The answer, Bernardo concedes, depends on the criteria employed by the investigator." R. E. Ruiz

N Y Times Bk R p7 S 12 '71 450w

BERNE, ERIC. What do you say after you say hello? the psychology of human destiny. 457p il $10 Grove

301.11 Human relations
ISBN 0-394-47995-5 LC 77-187888

The author is concerned with "the hidden scripts that control our . . . lives. . . . As a psychiatrist, Dr. Berne found that each person—under the powerful influences of his parents—writes in early childhood his own script that will determine the general course of his life. That script dictates what kind of person he will marry, how many children he will have, even what kind of bed he will die in, and who will be there when he does. . . . It [also] determines whether he will be a winner or a loser, a spendthrift or a skinflint, a tower of strength or a doomed alcoholic. . . . [Dr. Berne] demonstrates how each life script gets written, how it works, and how each of us can break free of it to help us attain real autonomy and true fulfillment." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Index.

"One strong point for the book and its approach is that the layman can plug into the analysis of his own script as well as those of others. Conversely, it may also be used to explain behavior according to the script with no attempt at intervention or changing the script on the part of the individual. This is a comprehensive text written for the professional as well as the general reader, explaining the approach to psychotherapy. Many will be intrigued by the title and the general popularity of the therapy." J. A. Szuhay

Best Sell 32:209 Ag 1 '72 700w

BERNE, ERIC—Continued

"[This] volume contains much of the wit and wisdom of the late Eric Berne. [His] Games people play [BRD 1966] . . . proved that a popularly written book about modern psychotherapy can be a best-seller. The present book is an attempt to repeat the formula."

Choice 9:885 S '72 170w

"The first three sections provide a clear, concise consideration of structural analysis, transactional analysis, and script theory. The author's ability to serve up rather complex material in a light, entertaining style contributes to his success. However, the section dealing with clinical practice is not as noteworthy. Despite much good material, particularly that relating to choice of therapist, the therapist as magician, and basic vocal signs, this part lacks a clear explanation of the use of the theoretical framework in treatment itself. As a result, even Berne's style becomes temporarily annoying." P. E. McDowell

Library J 97:1816 My 15 '72 170w

"[This book] is more interesting and ambitious than . . . [Berne's] best-selling 'Games People Play' and it reveals, as that book did not, both the modest value, and the profound limitations of Berne's creation, Transactional Analysis. . . . Few if any of the book's theoretical formulations will be considered remarkable by readers of the psychiatric literature. . . . The primary virtue of Berne's descriptions is not their originality but their comprehensibility and accessibility. He sketches recognizable personalities with a few deft strokes. His colloquial language is bouncy and fast-paced and his insights are plausible, even if they are sometimes based on little evidence." J. S. Gordon

N Y Times Bk R p44 O 1 '72 1350w

BERNSTEIN, BURTON. The sticks; a profile of Essex county, New York; drawings by Marcia Erickson. 175p $5.95 Dodd

917.47 Essex County, New York
ISBN 0-396-06528-7 LC 71-39651

An expanded New Yorker profile of the Adirondack area bordering on Lake Champlain. "In examining the history of the area and summarizing its early strategic importance and settlement, Bernstein highlights his account with human interest sketches and anecdotes; he treats the economic life of Essex County by discussing early agriculture, hunting, and trapping as well as later lumbering, mining, and tourism. These occupations are now insufficient to sustain the inhabitants." (Library J)

"A graphic, convincing presentation, but not a first-priority purchase." S. G. Heppell

Library J 97:2634 Ag '72 130w

"Bernstein goes on at length about the county's history and personalities—Maxim Gorky, Rockwell Kent—and spends time talking with some of its inhabitants, for flavor. But inevitably this kind of evocative overview is saturated with the sense of a drained vitality. . . . [The author] has given us a reflective well-written portrait of an area losing hold of itself. . . . The underlying subject—that the good life of the sticks, which so many city people now profess to want, is becoming impossible for the people who live it—is larger than this admittedly nice local report. . . . We never feel involved beyond the camera lens, and, ironically, the very fineness of the writing so distances us from its subject that we end up, like the Adirondacks tourists, just passing through." Joseph Kanon

Sat R 55:50 S 2 '72 480w

BERNSTEIN, KEN. The senator's ransom. 255p $5.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan
LC 79-172622

"Senator Fellows, widely thought to be a Presidential candidate, takes a fact-finding trip through South America with his wife, who is if anything even more ambitious than her husband. At the same time, in Rio, a guerrilla gang (consisting of respectable elements) . . . plot bank robberies and the kidnapping to embarrass the repressive military regime in power." (Library J)

"The bulk of the novel is devoted to the idealistic actions of [the abductors] . . . as opposed to the brutal tactics of the regime and to the Senator's increasing awareness of this situation and of the plight of the people.

The novel has no hero. The idealistic Senator's conflict and resolution are no more heroic than those of the individuals of the rebel group. . . . The author's major concern is to probe and dramatize a political situation rather than a character. . . . The result adds up to some suspense and to an interesting view of the political mind. . . . The author offers a sympathetic attitude toward an oppressed people and a caustic one toward America's involvement in foreign politics." F. L. Ryan

Best Sell 31:437 Ja 1 '72 420w

"[This] is a most exceptional suspense novel, an almost unbearably vivid and obviously deeply felt tale. . . . For verisimilitude of action, elegance of style, originality of ideas, and interest of characters, this novel is outstanding."

Library J 97:519 F 1 '72 120w

Reviewed by M. C. Blalock

Library J 97:1180 Mr 15 '72 90w [YA]

"[The author] used to be a correspondent for N.B.C., stationed in several capitals abroad for extended periods. . . . [He] reported from South America for about two years, being a good newsman, he has built his plot around a thriving minor industry: the kidnapping of foreign dignitaries. . . . Bernstein has written a fast-paced, engrossing book, the definite views on foreign relations and how they should be handled. Whether or not the ending is 'happy' depends on your own international viewpoint." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p26 Ja 23 '72 230w

BERNSTEIN, RICHARD J. Praxis and action; contemporary philosophies of human activity. 344p $12.50 Univ. of Pa. press

100 Philosophy, Modern

ISBN 0-8122-7640-X

LC 77-157048

"Without denying the obvious divergence of contemporary philosophical movements—Marxism, existentialism, pragmatism, and analytic philosophy—Bernstein claims that a common ground for comparison can be found in the notion of action, broadly conceived." (Library J) Bibliography. Index of names. Index of subjects.

"The book as a whole is well written, and expositions of Hegel and the other major figures are clear. This latter feature in particular makes the book a good tool for someone who has a grasp of one tradition to gain entry into the other."

Choice 9:656 JI/Ag '72 150w

"[In] an exposition of the pragmatists Peirce and Dewey the author easily keeps his focus on the subject of action, but with the analytic philosophers he has to stylize his account to retain the theme. A pragmatically based version of conceptual analysis (related to Feysabend's 'displacement hypothesis') is taken to be a higher Hegelian synthesis of formal reductionism (Carnap) on the one hand and conceptual analysis (Strawson, et al.) on the other—all of which is supposed to show that the book is not closed on our understanding of action. The weakness of the account is not so much the strain of this last chapter, but the obscurity that befalls the notion of action when it is used to cover so many fronts. Still, the treatment furthers a penetrating analysis here and there (especially with Marx) and provokes some thoughts about new lines of inquiry." J. H. Whittaker

Library J 97:1018 Mr 15 '72 160w

BERQUIST, EDNA SMITH. The High Maples farm cookbook; favorite recipes and reminiscences of farm life; il. by Bonny W. Smith. 436p $10 Macmillan (N Y)

641.5 Cookery, American. Farm life—New Hampshire
LC 79-135642

The book is divided into three sections: Life on the farm, food on the farm, and a section containing 275 recipes. These include breads, fish and seafood, meat and poultry, vegetables, doughnuts and cookies, cakes and pies, preserves, pickles and relishes, and candies, including maple sugar specialties. Index.

"Hearty food from life on a New England farm. Basically the recipes are for just good, filling food. . . . Interesting things to try are shrimpburgers, 'made' mustard, and pastry and pie crust mix. . . . I do not think that Part I is essential; personal family stories mean little to strangers. Still, a good purchase for libraries with faithful cookbook readers, though somewhat expensive since the work does not include illustrations." Barbara Marconi

Library J 96:2642 S 1 '71 100w

"[The book] manages to give, besides the recipes, family stories of New England farm-life without being cloying. On the contrary, the reading part of the book is delightful because it is so straightforward, and because it deals with people who live up to what one thinks a New Englander should be. The recipes, all well-worked out, are food for every day, and for special occasions. Recommended for any family kitchen." Nika Hazelton

N Y Times Bk ■ p32 D 12 '71 70w

BERRIGAN, DANIEL. Absurd convictions, modest hopes. See Lockwood, L. Daniel Berrigan: absurd convictions, modest hopes: conversations after prison with Lee Lockwood

BERRIGAN, DANIEL. America is hard to find. 191p $5.95 Doubleday

322.4 U.S.—Social conditions. Government, Resistance to
ISBN 0-385-00327-7 LC 72-76120

This collection of essays, poems and letters reflects the thoughts of the author: priest, war-resister and poet. It contains "his open letter to the Weathermen, counseling non-violent militance; his letter to the judge who sentenced him; . . . his remarks to the actors and to the audience at the opening of his play, The Trial of the Catonsville Nine [BRD 1970]; his . . . prose-poem review of a Dietrich Bonhoeffer biography for Saturday Review [and] his open letter to J. Edgar Hoover. In addition, previously unpublished materials [include] . . . letters to his mother, his brother Jerome and other members of his family; . . . an open letter to young Jesuits on the necessity of resistance, . . . and poems that formed parts of his letters." (Publisher's note)

"What this book does chiefly is to enable the reader to come to know Dan Berrigan—intimately, for it is an intimate book. . . . It will enable critics and admirers alike to understand why Dan Berrigan has said the things he has said and done the things he has done. . . . [However] the not-so-subtle sarcasm with which he treats the opposition is more than likely to be counter-productive. . . . A final disturbing note—in a perhaps less disturbing area—his poetry is getting prosy. When all this has been said, however, one fact remains: not only is Dan Berrigan not to be ignored, but this book in which he comes through so loud and clear is not to be ignored either." Quentin Lauer

America 127:240 S 30 '72 1000w

"Father Berrigan's major purpose is to defend his anti-government actions and those of his associates. . . . [He criticizes] the military mind, police power, the F.B.I., and the collapse of American morality under the weight of American technology. 'Who owns this land anyway?' Berrigan asks and though he answers that we, the people, do he implies that it is being taken from us by the powers just mentioned. Father Berrigan's anger and bitterness are great and of contemporary commentators on the American civilization few whites have spoken so harshly. . . . There is, however, no single picture of Father Berrigan to be taken from the book. In those sections which read like prose poems he appears as a sort of visionary, Whitman-like in his symbolic vision of American life. In his letters home he is the attentive son and brother, attached to his family with restraint, dignity, yet with passion. In the essays, . . . from the underground . . . he is both an expositor of the conditions of American life and an exhorter to overt action against the government, the military, and police mentality." F. L. Ryan
Best Sell 32:301 O 1 '72 700w

"Some of [this material] is familiar, expectable, predictable—suggesting that the author may soon have to worry about boring his marginal followers. But he does not have to worry about continuing to inspire the hatred of his haters, if this collection is representative. All in all, Berrigan remains the most compelling of the antiwar protesters."

Christian Century 89:962 S 27 '72 90w

"Father Daniel Berrigan, convicted of destroying draft files at Catonsville, Maryland, spent several months underground before serving part of his sentence at Danbury Prison. . . . This collection of notes he wrote while hiding and letters from prison will interest young people because of Berrigan's well-known resistance to the war rather than for its inherent appeal. However, despite personal allusions with little meaning to outsiders and some repetition, Berrigan's sincerity, dedication and conviction that only individual actions can effect positive change are evident throughout." Elizabeth Storey

Library J 97:4095 D 15 '72 110w [YA]

BERRIGAN, DANIEL. The geography of faith: conversations between Daniel Berrigan, when underground, and Robert Coles. 179p $7.50 Beacon press

248.4 Social change. Social conditions—U.S. Christian ethics
ISBN 0-8070-5038-X LC 70-159844

This book is concerned with "the search of two . . . men for the moral significance in their lives, in their society, and in the possible alternatives to that society. . . . [The authors comment] on the restructuring of the family, on personal and institutional violence, on political action, and on the difficulty of maintaining a moral point of view." (Library J)

"The shift from essay to dialogue allows a sometimes challenging, sometimes encouraging voice to shape both thought and expression. This meeting of priest and psychiatrist has another significance, too; both are thoroughly committed to their respective professions and yet deeply skeptical of inflated claims made for both the Christian religion and its secular counterpart, psychiatry. We learn as much in these conversations about the narrow view from the couch as we do about the false perspectives of the pulpit. Both Coles and Berrigan are engaging personalities. For many readers, I suspect, Coles will be easier to identify with. . . . A careful reading of this book will make it hard to take Dan Berrigan and his witness seriously, which is not to say that you will agree with everything he says." J. B. Breslin
America 125:294 O 16 '71 650w

Reviewed by J. B. Breslin
America 126:155 F 12 '72 100w

"I am of two minds with regard to 'The Geography of Faith.' I do not think that it should have been published. The chitchat (call it dialogue, if you will) of two men, no matter how learned, profound, or creative they may be, is not of such value that it deserves to be preserved in book form, especially at $7.50 for one hundred and seventy-nine pages. On the other hand, I did find the book somewhat interesting. It does present the search of two men of very different temperament for the answers to today's problems. . . . I recommend this book on two conditions: you have a free evening and are able to locate a free copy. It is neither profound nor permanent, but it will put you in touch with two interesting people who are probing interesting questions." W. F. Gavin

Best Sell 31:454 Ja 15 '72 200w

Choice 9:517 Je '72 160w

"Coles reveals an impressive instinct for basic religious questions-and-answers, and even anti-Berriganites will find themselves drawn deeply into Berrigan's moral world through these engrossing conversations which took place prior to his arrest."

Christian Century 88:1175 O 6 '71 40w

Reviewed by R. H. Stone
Commonweal 96:150 Ap 14 '72 500w

"Berrigan and Coles often disagree in these rambling, reflective conversations; and their basic commitments—Coles to the 'middle Americans' with whom he works and Berrigan to radical and sometimes illegal moral action—are clearly at odds. However, the book is not a debate . . . [and doesn't] solve too many problems. . . . Coles illustrates eloquently that one need not agree with Berrigan to be stimulated by him to solidify, or rather vivify, one's own standards of life. An extra attraction is the two remarkably revealing monologues by a policeman and a gas-station attendant in Coles's introduction. (Note: close to one-third of the text appeared in the March 11, March 25, and April 8 issues of the New York Review of Books.) Highly recommended." Jim Langlois

Library J 96:3337 O 15 '71 150w

BERRY, JAMES. Heroin was my best friend. 128p $4.95 Crowell-Collier press 362.2 Narcotics and youth. Narcotic habit
LC 70-153761

"Berry interviewed seven residents of New York's Samaritan Halfway House (SHS) and one addict's parent. [The interviews are presented here]. Each of the seven pointed to similar personal problems which led them to heroin. All indicated that they did not fully realize their susceptibility to becoming hooked and were not aware of the side effects of heroin and other drugs, especially the relationship to crime. After a period of heroin use, they recognized a need for help to kick the habit and eventually found their way to SHS where they are working to eliminate their hang-ups." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography.

Christian Science Monitor pB6 N 11 '71
200w

"[A. M.] Feagles' The Addicts [BRD 1971] handles the subject in a similar manner. Still, Berry's book is an interesting and relevant additional title where more personal narratives are needed in the area of drug addiction." W. M. Forman
Library J 97:2481 J1 '72 120w

BERRY, JEAN DE FRANCE, DUC DE. The Grandes heures of Jean, Duke of Berry. See The Grandes heures of Jean, Duke of Berry

BERRY, MARY FRANCES. Black resistance, white law; a history of constitutional racism in America. 268p $6.95; pa $3 Appleton 301.45 Negroes—Civil rights. Negroes—History
SBN 390-08841-2; 390-08840-4 (pa)
LC 78-151970

"It is the book's thesis that the ruling white majority, through selective application of state and Federal laws, contrived from the nation's earliest days to bar blacks from the mainstream of American legal, political, social, and economic life. . . . [The author contends] that slavery was much more than a moral aberration—it was an intrinsic part of [American] national development." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[This is an] ambitious and disappointing endeavor to describe constitutionally sanctioned violence against, and oppression of, black Americans. The tone of the work [is most disturbing.] So towering is [the author's] sense of moral outrage that the book is graced by neither detached analysis nor balanced judgment. The notes and brief bibliography, although reflecting only limited familiarity with secondary literature, indicates the author's use of Justice Department, War Department, and National Archives materials. Unlikely to attract the attention of sober students of American race relations." Choice 8:1242 N '71 200w

"Berry has examined a number of manuscript and other sources to produce this creditable study. But it is not the original research or any strikingly new idea which will impress the serious student of black history. What the scholar will immediately realize is that here is a writer who has successfully combined honest and effective scholarship with a consciousness of the need for democratic reform in American society. To achieve such a goal without aborting or seriously damaging the canons of 'the craft' is a delicate task. Berry has handled the operation with precision and finesse." J. L. Franklin
J Am Hist 58:1009 Mr '72 600w

"Berry demonstrates that the Constitution and the nation's laws have been used against blacks, to suppress them. . . . The volume is definitely one-sided, but it is well researched and documented and argues for stronger government action in the area of civil rights. For undergraduate and larger public libraries." W. M. Forman
Library J 96:3152 O 1 '71 190w

BERRYMAN, JOHN. Delusions, etc. 69p $6.95 Farrar, Straus

811
ISBN 0-374-13798-6 LC 76-186660

A posthumous book of poems. Some of the poems have appeared previously in such publications as Esquire, The Harvard Advocate and The New Yorker.

Reviewed by P. J. Kameen
Best Sell 32:210 Ag 1 '72 480w
Choice 9:1126 N '72 170w

Reviewed by Victor Howes
Christian Science Monitor p11 My 31 '72 470w

"All the qualities that make Berryman so original (and difficult) a poet are evident in this last book done in his lifetime. As the title suggests, there is a dreamlike quality to much of this work; also a kind of humor, straining religiosity, and a muted but insistent sexuality. Much is made of his craft, and rightly so. Yet his deftness amounts to a kind of plunder. This, too, is part of his power. This combination of vision and craft makes him nearly a giant. Strangely, suffering diminishes him. There is something moving but also demeaning about his self-examinations. They are strange acts, tentative yet compulsive, like someone tugging quietly at a scab." Sandy Dorbin
Library J 97:1441 Ap 15 '72 180w

"There was a power and richness of response in the second volume of Dream Songs, 'His Toy, His Dream, His Rest' [BRD 1968], which made it seem [Berryman] had never before found a subject adequate to what he had to give. It read as though all the previous tension and eccentricity were ways of evading that overpowering 'irreversible loss' he mentioned in the book's preface. . . . 'Love & Fame' [BRD 1971] was a letdown in comparison—noisy, ostentatious, uneasy in the awkward sense of being desperately insecure. . . . Mercifully, all the noise and posturing has disappeared from 'Delusions.' The handful of poems on fellow artists . . . are calmer, subtler. Only in the religious poems is there a reminder of his stringy, frantic style. Elsewhere the note is resigned and the theme, once again, is loss. But this time it is his own life, not that of his friends, which seems to be slipping away from him." A. Alvarez
N Y Times Bk R p1 Je 25 '72 1800w

"The modulation to his final style came in the concluding section of 'Love & Fame,' the extraordinary 'Eleven Addresses to the Lord' in whom Berryman was unable to believe. . . . That sober formality, that tone of reverence without expectation, pervades 'Delusions, Etc.' . . . The austere, level voice is so quiet it's sometimes hard to hear him, but right at the end of his life Berryman was writing some of his best poems." Walter Clemons
Newsweek 79:113 My 1 '72 700w

Reviewed by Peter Dale
Sat R 55:57 J1 8 '72 700w

"These are the last poems of a major American poet who killed himself in January by jumping from a bridge over the Mississippi. . . . Increasingly, Berryman's work has shown a desperate man. In Delusions he reached the terminal realization that for him nothing was going to work—not love or fame, children or friends, not God himself. The best poems are religious. Brought up in the Roman Catholic Church, Berryman left it early, only to return in his last years, partly because his third wife, Kate, was Catholic. . . . These poems are the more powerful because of their astonishing directness. Berryman had by this point mastered the technical problems in projecting his tense, lonely, anguished voice." Martha Duffy

Time 99:81 My 1 '72 600w
Va Q R 48:cxxi autumn '72 450w

BERRYMAN, JOHN. Love & fame. 96p $6.50 Farrar, Straus

811
SBN 374-1-9233-2 LC 74-137749

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Chad Walsh
Book World p9 F 20 '72 360w

Reviewed by Douglas Dunn
Encounter 38:73 My '72 800w

Reviewed by L. L. Martz
Yale R 61:410 Mr '72 1500w

BERTEAUT, SIMONE. Piaf; ■ biography. 488p il $10 Harper

B or 92 Piaf, Edith
SBN 06-010313-2 LC 75-138706

The author, who claims to be a half sister of the late French singer Edith Piaf, offers this biography, starting with "Edith ■ a blind child raised by her grandmother in a brothel, [and going on to] the involvements with pimps and gangsters, the career and its succession of men, the discoveries and love affairs—Montand, Aznavour, heavyweight champion Marcel Cerdan." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by J. J. Murray

Best Sell 32:162 J1 1 '72 400w

"Although one sometimes doubts [the book's] veracity, misgivings don't really matter. Even during her lifetime Piaf often seemed more mythic than real, and [this book] is like a sweeping romantic vision, an exuberant account of a most incredible life, moving the reader quickly from one dramatic scene to another. . . . One might wish that the translation didn't join phrases like 'turned out' to descriptions of Paris in the 1930's, and the talk about loving a man goes on so long that it gets to seem like pandering to popular suspicions about those sexy French; but Piaf is a success, not a definitive biography but marvelously vivid." J. A. Avant

Library J 97:2081 Je 1 '72 150w

Reviewed by Jean Stafford

N Y Rev of Books 19:22 Ag 10 '72 600w

"In reading memoirs by or about popular entertainers, I have never ceased to be amazed by the amount of remembered dialogue, by conversations about even trivial matters that are set forth with every evidence of fidelity. It is as if the authors had all employed the same ghost-writer who was certain that an abundance of quotation marks conferred authenticity on the words written between them. And I get this feeling very strongly about [this] book. . . . [Nevertheless,] 'Piaf' rates my palm (one hand clapping) for its straightforwardness and for the sense it conveys of what the real Piaf must have been like—a sparrow with the talons of an eagle." Alden Whitman

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ag 6 '72 300w

New Yorker 48:76 J1 8 '72 270w

"Simone Berteaut's loving memoir of her half-sister Edith's incredible life is marred by an inordinate number of clichés and banalities. . . . Part of the problem lies in the translation. Rendering French argot is almost as difficult as translating poetry; the flavor, the rhythm, the smell cannot be translated; they must be recreated. For some strange reason the title page of Piaf bears no translator's name; yet someone must have turned these 400-plus pages into English—unfortunately, whoever it was opted throughout for the literal. The results are generally accurate but rarely as lively as the original. What matters is that, in spite of the defects in the writing . . . Piaf once again overcomes—as she so often did against all odds." Richard Seaver

Sat R 55:52 Ag 12 '72 450w

"The 'new angle' that Simone Berteaut offers on this familiar story is the result of her first-hand experience as Piaf's 'half-sister' and 'life-long' companion. The inverted commas are necessary because both terms are debatable. . . . The most interesting and least tendentious part of [this book] is the one which evokes their camaraderie and their adventures together as untrained street performers. . . . But Mme. Berteaut proceeds to convey the impression that she was Piaf's constant companion, mentor, alter ego and comforter not only during this early period but right up until her death. . . . What credence are we to give to Mme. Berteaut's version when she describes the last ten years of Piaf's life as though they still were in contact with each other? Apart from a liberal sprinkling of four-letter words and much talk of filth and fleas, the book carries no real flavor of Paris's prewar underworld. And after the . . . early period in Piaf's life, [it] becomes no more than an endless rolloall of Piaf's lovers and a series of smutty anecdotes." TLS p1412 D 4 '70 950w

BERTHOFF, ROWLAND. An unsettled people: social order and disorder in American history. 528p maps $12.50 Harper

309.173 U.S.—Social conditions
LC 79-123915

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRID 1971.

Reviewed by H. F. May

Am Hist R 77:578 Ap '72 2500w

Reviewed by Robert Detweiler

Ann Am Acad 401:186 My '72 460w

Reviewed by Merle Curti

J Am Hist 59:111 Je '72 1050w

BERTHOLF, ROBERT J., jt. ed. Modern verse from Taiwan. See Palandri, A. C. Y. J.

BERTON, PIERRE. The impossible railway; the building of the Canadian Pacific. 574p il maps $12.50 Knopf

335 Canadian Pacific railway. Railroads and state. Canada.—History.—19th century
ISBN 0-394-46569-5 LC 72-2236

This account begins with the "promise by Canadian Prime Minister Sir John MacDonald of a great trans-Canadian railway all the way to the Pacific . . . and carries through the building of the railway, station-by-station, to its completion at Eagle Pass less than seven years later. Along the route Berton tells the . . . story of the exposure of Sir Hugh Allen and his secret American backers, who gave free stock to certain prominent Canadians. [He describes] the battle over the choice of routes and the building of the railway itself." (Publishers' Weekly) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"For those who relish delving into the facts and fables of early-day railroading, this book is the best reading that has presented itself in a good many years. In the main, Pierre Berton has given us an insight of just how a railroad line is born and the many hardships and money losses that are garnered along the way to achieving a profit-making business. . . . If your imagination works and you try real hard, it is reasonable to assume that you might hear the sounds of a steam whistle." Al Phillips

Best Sell 32:425 D 15 '72 400w

"Berton is Canada's most widely read non-fiction author, and this history demonstrates why. He is always readable, and at times his prose has real grandeur; he is lucid, making easy sense of political and financial complexities; and he has a splendid sense of humor, good timing, and an ear for interesting anecdotes. To all of this, he adds here a firm grasp of the history of the period. . . . Readers of this book will learn a great deal about the character of Canada and its people. . . . This is a work which deserves a large sale in the U.S., and one which should be in every library." M. S. Cross

Library J 97:2727 S 1 '72 190w

"Following 'Klondike [Fever, BRD 1958] his compulsive account of the gold rush, [Berton] has struck an even richer vein, a veritable bonanza, with 'The Impossible Railway'. . . . A marvelous story in its own right, something of a cliff-hanger, it anticipates, as Berton readily grasps without belaboring the point, the major problem that bedevils Canada even now: American domination. . . . It is [the author's] considerable triumph that, working from primary sources, unpublished diaries, and letters as well as public documents, he has rendered a horrendously complex story so readable, moving with ease from Parliament Hill . . . to the end of track, where the Irish navvies, the Swedes, the French-Canadian and Chinese coolies were being conned by camp following whiskey-peddlers and whores." Mordecai Richler

N Y Times Bk R p48 N 12 '72 700w

BESFORD, PAT, comp. Encyclopaedia of swimming. 235p pl $7.95 St Martins

797.2 Swimming—Dictionaries
LC 78-157521

Written by a correspondent for the London Daily Telegraph, this encyclopaedia "focuses on competitive swimming; its history, organizations, records, and . . . people. Winning times, contestants, and facts concerning the Olympics, English Channel swim, national and international meets, and world records are included, often starting in the late 19th century and continuing until 1970." (Choice) Index.

"While much of the information concerns Great Britain ([this] is an English book), American personnel and events are well represented. Statistics and charts are well organized, clear, and accurate. The short sketches of almost 200 swimmers are informative, interesting, and indicative of the author's experiences as an international swimming correspondent for two English publications. No other book contains the same information; this one is thorough and well done.

BESFORD, PAT—Continued

Choice 9:88 Mr '72 110w

"This sports reporter's labor of love is recommended." C. C. Curran

Library J 97:1001 Mr 15 '72 90w

BEST, GEOFFREY. Mid-Victorian Britain, 1851-1875. 316p il maps $10.50 Schocken

914.2 Great Britain—Social conditions. Great Britain—Social life and customs
ISBN 0-8052-34357 LC 77-171591

This book attempts to describe "what the mid-Victorians themselves said life was like and establishes the conditions on which that life had to be led. Its survey of the social scene moves through four phases: first, the material environment of town and country, house and home . . . second, the terms on which those who had to earn a living did so, and on which those who couldn't or wouldn't earn a living were helped to stay alive; third, the ways the Victorians spent their non-earning hours . . . and finally, their attitudes towards each other up and down the scale as members of a . . . class-conscious society." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 9:267 Ap '72 140w

"What we like about this book is the way Best moves past official history to impart a sense of what life was like for the average man and woman a hundred years ago in England."

Christian Century 89:290 Mr 8 '72 20w

"[This book is] the best value for money . . . in an ambitious new series, entitled 'The History of British Society.' . . . [It] includes 26 excellent illustrations. . . . More important, [Professor Best] has more ideas—and more doubts—than his colleagues. Much in his volume is genuinely original, and when he does not know what was happening he says so. His ebullience can be somewhat wearing at times, but he illuminates many dark corners of mid-Victorian England. . . . [He] gets off to a good pace with his first chapter on the mid-Victorian environment. . . . One of his later chapters on the uses of 'leisure,' . . . is particularly interesting, and the most interesting part of it deals with religion."

Economist 239:58 Ap 10 '71 100w

"[This work] unveils a complex amalgam of continuity and change. [It utilizes] a variety of printed materials, including literary and statistical evidence. . . . The author's penchant for parenthetical comments lessens the work's readability, but this is a minor flaw in a generally excellent book." J. A. Casada

Library J 97:1319 Ap 1 '72 90w

Reviewed by Angus Calder

New Statesman 82:271 Ag 27 '71 370w

N Y Times Bk R p22 Ap 16 '72 60w

"Some readers have clearly been 'sent' by [this] book, but the reviewer is not one of them. One difficulty is that the book (perhaps unfairly) leaves an impression of having been written too fast. Indeed, there are passages which read uncomfortably like dictationese. . . . There are some pages on municipal reform, but in all of them surprisingly little hard information. . . . The selection has some welcome features: the discussion of women and children at work, of recreation and 'leisure.' It has also surprising lacunae; no suggestion of the British Imperial role, no discussion of Darwin or Darwinism, so little on Victorian science or on the major Victorian critics or rebels. . . . But let us say this of Professor Best's book: at least it should make people argue, and this will help the seminars to go."

TLS p1118 S 17 '71 450w

Yale R 62:xiv O '72 1250w

BETH, LOREN P. The development of the American Constitution, 1877-1917. 280p il $7.95 Harper

973.8 U.S.—Politics and government—1865-1898. U.S.—Politics and government—1898-1919
SBN 06-010314-0 LC 79-138707

"In this volume, the first in the New American Nation series [to be supplemented by four other volumes dealing] . . . with constitutional history, political scientist Loren Beth concludes that by 1917 the essential contours of the twentieth century constitution had been shaped: 'a whole new government' had been created in the form of regulatory agencies; centralization had occurred at every level of government; executive domination had superseded legislative control; and popular participation in government had declined significantly." (Ann Am Acad) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Beth's broad conception of the constitution is admirable. Eschewing a narrow legalistic approach, he concerns himself with the legal and political ideas, institutions, and written and unwritten rules by which Americans conducted their political affairs. Accordingly he devotes chapters to the national government, the federal system, state and local government, and the interrelated systems of representation, elections, and party machinery. The author's original research stands out most clearly in chapters dealing with the Supreme Court and business regulation, civil liberties, and state legal history. . . . A major weakness of the book is Beth's failure to deal adequately with the problem of government regulation of business." Herman Belz

Ann Am Acad 399:210 Ja '72 440w

"Any new volume in this series is an important event in historical circles and this one is certainly no exception to that rule. It does, however, have shortcomings. Beth (Massachusetts) is a political scientist rather than a historian. While this strengthens certain areas of the volume, it also weakens it at times. . . . And yet the book should be read. Beth presents a very good synopsis of the interrelationships between the branches of the Federal government and the Federal, state, and local governments. . . . Recommended with minor reservations for all libraries."

Choice 8:1080 O '71 230w

Reviewed by Alan Jones

J Am Hist 59:160 Je '72 650w

BETJEMAN, JOHN. Collected poems; comp. by the Earl of Birkenhead; introd. by Philip Larkin. enl ed 366p $7.50 Houghton

821

ISBN 0-395-12705-X LC 77-162003

This volume "contains Betjeman's poetry to date except the autobiographical Summoned by bells [BRD 1961]. It supersedes previous collections, including in this volume poems published separately in High and low [BRD 1967], and other verse written after 1954 but not previously published in book form. [The] introduction attempts to bridge the gap between Betjeman and those who find the highly English High Church and local quality of his work and his use of traditional Victorian verse forms to be a barrier." (Choice) The English edition contains an introduction by the Earl of Birkenhead.

"The poems themselves . . . speak to the reader, and because they are deft and warm and yet too ironic to be sentimental, [Betjeman's] pictures of an England both traditional and changing can be effective for non-English readers. Recommended for modern poetry collections."

Choice 9:366 My '72 130w

Library J 97:60 Ja '72 20w

"Mr. Betjeman really is unique among modern poets, and there can be no question about the popularity of his poems. . . . It is not caprice, nor merely the desire for euphony, that dictates the highly original conformation of many of his stanzas but an instinctive sense of tune, of the way in which the shape of a stanza can help in the expression of what the poet has to say. . . . The volume, like all . . . Betjeman volumes, is delightful to the eye."

TLS p556 My 21 '70 240w

BETJEMAN, JOHN. Ghastly good taste; or, A depressing story of the rise and fall of English architecture. 112p il $10 St Martins

720.942 Architecture, English
LC 73-166509

"The author has here reconsidered his earlier ideas about the rise and fall of English architecture. The text of the book stands as he wrote it in 1933, and his afterthoughts and revised opinions are added in the form of footnotes and a new introduction. Accompanying and illustrating the text is a folding drawing, all of five feet long and brought up to date for this edition, now containing Peter Fleetwood-Hesketh's . . . observations of the additions since 1933 to the Street of Taste, a panoramic view of the march of English architecture down the ages." (Publisher's note)

"A reprinting of Betjeman's tongue-in-cheek capsule account of English architecture from the Middle Ages to c1930 and the accompanying role of taste, with a few slight changes and a new and typically amusing introduction relating how he came to write the book. . . . The format has been enlarged, making it easier to read but altering the appearance of a 19th-century book simulated by the original. Not, of course, a scholarly study, this remains, however, a good example of the sophisticated and 'enlightened' approach in the 1930s to architectural taste."

Choice 9:958 O '72 120w

Reviewed by Stephen Mullin

New Statesman 80:844 D 18 '70 290w

"When the book was written, its author was only twenty-six; a less honest man might have re-written some of its nine chapters. If the preacher's voice now sounds somewhat muted, that is because most readers will long ago have been converted to his views, which in 1933 were held by very few. The book's aim was to open the eyes of 'the blind man in the street' to what was happening round him because it might affect his way of life, and to encourage him to take the same interest in architecture that he might do in art, music or literature. That was a serious matter. But architecture (says the author) 'can be extremely funny.' . . . It is largely thanks to Sir John Betjeman that new generations since 1933 have learnt that looking at buildings and the pursuit of architecture can be enormous fun."

TLS p216 F 19 '71 1000w

BETTS, DORIS. The river to Pickle Beach. 390p $7.95 Harper

SBN 06-120365-3 LC 77-138779

This novel is "set in May-June of 1968. Robert Kennedy's assassination [is] the backdrop. Fortyish Jack and Bebe Sellars take over the management of beach houses and trailers at Pickle Beach, North Carolina, her intense delight in the sea and his wariness about the job marred by Mickey McCane, gun collector and hunter who lusts for Bebe." (Choice)

Reviewed by W. B. Hill

Best Sell 32:143 Je 15 '72 260w

"A superior novel. . . . Tension builds surely until Mickey provides the shocking, violent climax. One explanation of what shapes assassins. Current issues—sex and violence, the generation gap, racial unease, family ties, the place of religion, viability of friendship—are treated freshly and vividly, intricately interwoven with each other and with the theme of the Sellars' forthright sensual love which is their backbone. Living persons in an environment that reveals much about the South and about America itself."

Choice 9:809 S '72 120w

"Clever manipulation of perspective and detailed delineation of character slowly build the plot to its taut and unexpected climax. A lengthy, popular psychological novel." Jean Spang

Library J 97:2115 Je 1 '72 100w

"[Doris Betts] is a tough, wise and compassionate writer; her last book, The Astronomer and Other Stories [BRD 1966] is among the best collections of short fiction of the 1960's, but outside her native North Carolina her audience has been small. [This novel] may change that. It has the ingredients of good popular fiction, and it is also a serious, provocative novel. The author's ambitious attempt to depict McCane's violence as a microcosm of national violence is rather strained, and the novel is too long. But the portraits of Bebe and Jack are first-rate. . . . Mrs. Betts is a writer with a firm hold on what we in the South call 'home truths.' She has a splendid prose style, and she deserves to be read." Jonathan Yardley

N Y Times Bk ■ p12 My 21 '72 $50w

BHAERMAN, STEVE. No particular place to go: the making of a free high school, by Steve Bhaerman and Joel Denker. 222p $6.95 Simon & Schuster

373.2 Free schools. Collective settlements—U.S. Education—Experimental methods. Education, Secondary
SBN 671-21146-3 LC 77-179581

The authors, former public school teachers, dissatisfied with conventional schools "set up a 'free school' in Washington, D.C. In this book, they tell about it, the good and the bad as perceived by themselves. . . . Steve and Joel wrote separate chapters. In the first two, they trace their lives up to the point of establishing the 'free school.' Then, the first two years of the school are described. Finally, each author draws his own conclusions about the experiment." (Best Sell)

"The school folded within ■ short time. This reviewer is unable to regret that. It seems clear from the book that neither the founders of the school nor those they attracted to it had any clear ideas on where they wanted to go or how to get there. Both the students and the teachers (a distinction the school denied in name but honored in fact) appear to have been alienated, rebellious, negative, confused souls who constantly reinforced one another's confusions. . . . The authors don't specify their intended readership. . . . Perhaps it is intended for future pedagogical revolutionaries. . . . There is [a] generous sprinkling of obscene language." R. B. Nordberg

Best Sell 32:7 Ap 1 '72 440w

"Much of [this account] contains adolescent ramblings interwoven with a 'poor me' attitude. . . . The book (unintentionally?), in looking at the school's problems, reminds the reader of clashes in values: drug taking is a casual thing, one girl's abortion is a minor inconvenience, 'true knowledge' is provided by quoting Mao Tse-tung, etc. . . . The sporadic documentation, lack of references or an index, and general meandering put the book in the same perspective as the title—it goes no place in particular."

Choice 9:1177 N '72 170w

"A remarkably good book that details both the hassles and the rewards involved in developing a free high school. The authors started one . . . and together with a large number of their students set up communal living arrangements as an integral part of the school. This record of their experiences is also one of the best descriptions of life in an urban commune that I have read. And it gives an interesting picture of the life styles of white, suburban teenagers. The reader encounters these young people directly—their music, their drugs, their opinions, their hopes and fears. The authors [are] both in their 20's. . . . This is a book of intense personal commitment. It suggests the real possibilities of free schools in our society." Herbert Leibman

Library J 97:483 F 1 '72 160w

Reviewed by Wayne O'Neil

New Repub 166:28 Je 24 '72 160w

Reviewed by E. Z. Friedenberg

N Y Rev of Books 18:21 My 4 '72 1450w

"Any reader concerned with young people today, or with teaching, cannot afford to ignore this book, not because it reveals any new solutions or approaches, but because it provides us with an in-depth, honest, subjective record of two young teachers. . . . Some parts may 'turn us off': the four letter words and their cousins, the drug scene, the hostility to the authority, whether it be parental or pedagogic, the confusion of 'means and ends.' The candor of the authors invites ours. Their integrity compels our applause. . . . Their honesty transcends any considerations of danger to themselves. . . . Their work should be judged on that basis. However, the reader should certainly eschew the temptation to generalize about free schools or to take any revelation out of context." E. G. Stull

Teach Col Rec 74:282 D '72 1300w

BHAGAT, G. Americans in India, 1784-1860. 195p il $10 N.Y. univ. press

382 U.S.—Foreign relations—India. India—Foreign relations—U.S. U.S.—Commerce—History
ISBN 0-8147-0691-3 LC 76-133012

The author "traces the American trade with India from its rise and relative success in the immediate post-Revolutionary War era, through its decline in the post-1812 period, to its virtual extinction on the eve of the Civil

BEYLE, MARIE HENRI. See Stendahl

BHAGAT, G.—Continued

War." (Am Hist R) "Bibliography. Index." (J Am Hist)

"Professor Bhagat has exhaustively probed a wide variety of archival sources to tell the heretofore untold story of American trade with India in the period 1784-1860. The heart of the book actually concerns the period 1783-1812. . . . [The author] presents useful discussions of the American consular relations with India and of the techniques and inventory of trade. He has managed to identify most of the entrepreneurs and the vessels engaged in the India trade. The tale has a certain romantic appeal, and it is a shame that Professor Bhagat did not feel free to write with more verve and with a freer hand. . . . There is no doubt that [he] has filled a lacuna in our knowledge of early American contacts with Asia. If his treatment lacks something in analysis, it at least supplies most of the factual data." R. A. Huttenback

Am Hist R 77:567 Ap '72 350w

"[The] impressive research, based on hitherto unused archival materials, commendably fills an important gap in the field of American-Indian relations. . . . Bhagat's research has been prodigious in American and British manuscript materials and in secondary works. One only misses reference to a few pertinent articles in Indian journals. The organization disrupts the continuity; the chapter on consular relations has been placed in between the chapters on trade. It would fit in well after these chapters. Nevertheless, the book is a gracefully written piece of painstaking research, likely to be a landmark in the growing scholarship on America's interest in India." R. C. Jauhari

J Am Hist 59:124 Je '72 350w

Reviewed by Mark Naidis

Pacific Affairs 45:305 summer '72 270w

BHARIER, JULIAN. Economic development in Iran, 1900-1970. 314p $12 Oxford

330.955 Iran—Economic conditions

SBN 19-215342-0 LC 73-875594

This is a study of the "changes which have taken place in Iran during the 20th century [and] the macro effects of these changes on the economic development of Iran. . . . [It is also a] study of the growth of human resources as well as other natural resources and their effect upon the GNP, accompanied by the changing role of the state and of foreign trade." (Choice)

"Bharier's book contains a number of important contributions, including some original population estimates." A. W. Heston

Ann Am Acad 402:143 Jl '72 70w

"Individual sectors, mainly agriculture and mining, are given full consideration with problems of economic development being emphasized. For students of economic development."

Choice 8:1619 F '72 90w

"What [the author] has done is to assemble with great care, and all the accuracy that the data permit, a mass (ninety-eight tables) of statistics, assessed for reliability, classified into fields—human resources, growth, industry, etc.—and accompanied by a running commentary, each chapter documenting one of these fields, from 1900 to 1970. There is also an illuminating final chapter, in many ways the best in the book, critically assessing the present situation and the prospects for the next decade, with the sober conclusion that Iran will not be able to keep up the pace and will have to slow down and consolidate. The whole book has incontrovertible value as a work of reference and should serve as a basis for much future work."

TLS p164 F 11 '72 900w

BHATIA, KRISHAN. The ordeal of nationhood: a social study of India since Independence, 1947-1970. 390p $10 Atheneum pubs.

320.954 India—Politics and government—1947- . India—Economic conditions. India—Foreign relations

LC 71-1399300

The author evaluates "the role played by Nehru in launching the new state on a democratic path. . . . [He also includes a] treatment of Hindu-Moslem violence, a chapter on Indian values and attitudes, and [an] account of the Sino-Indian conflict of 1962." (Choice) Index.

"Necessarily sketchy in form because of its vast subject, [this book] treats the main issues of the period in sufficient depth to constitute a well written survey for the general reader. . . . Bhatia's analysis is unfortunate in having been written before the March 1971 General Election. Like many other observers, he failed to anticipate Mrs. Gandhi's landslide victory, forecasting instead that the Congress would probably 'lose ground steadily.' Excellent index; a bibliography would have been helpful. . . . Highly recommended for all libraries."

Choice 8:1074 O '71 190w

"[The author] writes with a firsthand knowledge of many of the persons and events that shaped Indian history during the last quarter-century. . . . [The book] covers a broad, often too broad, spectrum—developments affecting practically every aspect of Indian life since 1947. The author writes well and his style is fluent, expressive, and enthusiastic. . . . [but] oversimplifications tend to vitiate what otherwise could be sound analysis. The historical part also contains errors which could have been easily avoided with a more meticulous attention to details. The coverage tends to be journalistic. . . . Yet for the general reader it provides a fairly good introduction to developing India." B. G. Gokhale

Library J 96:2310 Jl '71 200w

"Many Indian journalists have written general commentaries on India's experience since independence; one of the best is [this book]. . . . In spite of its sub-title, this is more a political than a social study. It is a constructively critical appraisal of independent India's strengths and weaknesses." Norman Palmer

Pacific Affairs 44:626 winter '71-'72 220w

"[This account will] be useful to readers unfamiliar with the subject and, at the same time, knowledgeable enough to provide students of India with some new insights. . . . As a journalist [the author] has had to deal for some 25 years with seemingly contradictory facts and conditions in close juxtaposition; this plus the perspective gained by his years outside India has enabled Mr Bhatia to strike a fair balance between India's achievements since Independence and the difficulties which are still to be overcome. . . . [This] readable and concise book should help build an understanding of India among the American people at this time, an understanding urgently needed and greatly to be welcomed." Chester Bowles

Pol Sci Q 86:704 D '71 1000w

Reviewed by A. T. Embree

Social Studies 63:294 N '72 500w

BIANCHI BANDINELLI, RANUCCIO. Rome: the late empire; Roman art. A.D. 200-400; tr. by Peter Green. 463p il col il col maps $30 Braziller

709.37 Art. Roman. Rome—Antiquities

ISBN 0-8076-0593-X LC 71-136167

The author "studies the art of Rome, Constantinople, and the provinces during a time of . . . crisis and general upheaval in the ancient world." (Library J) Bibliography.

"This volume is a magnificent sequel to the same author's 'Rome: the Center of Power' [BRD 1971]. It is in some ways a more complex book, as it should be, because the spread of influence in art was quite complex during the period covered, 200-400 of our era. . . . There are splendid analyses by Bandinelli to accompany his illustrations, photographs which are beautifully lighted to show sculpture in toto and precise detail, full-page, full-color presentations of mosaics and paintings—practically everything anybody needs to make a general study of the art of the era. A chronological table, a glossary-index, notes on the illustrations, some floor plans and reconstructions, and an extensive bibliography round out the volume."

Best Sell 31:102 Je 1 '71 340w

"[This book] is based on much previously overlooked work and newly excavated material. Bianchi Bandinelli is the preeminent, though undogmatic, Marxian historian of Roman art. . . . Well translated. . . . Recommended for all libraries."

Choice 8:666 Jl '71 130w

"[This volume and Rome: the Center of Power] together provide a breathtaking pictorial summary nowhere else available; the text is responsive to the works. A necessary item for any library concerned with the classical and Early Christian as well as Roman worlds."

J Aesthetics 30:139 fall '71 170w

"[The author's] thesis is that art is not autonomous and cannot be isolated and treated as if it were. The brilliant, informative text is 'solely designed to accompany a number of illustrations, and to draw the reader's attention to them as evidence.' And what a richly varied series of illustrations! They are cogent proof that art does have its own continuity and that the evolutionary changes in the art of the Late Empire were part of a period of transition. Highly recommended."

F. D. Lazenby

Library J 96:1964 Je 1 '71 130w

BIANCO, LUCIEN. Origins of the Chinese revolution, 1915-1949; tr. from the French by Muriel Bell. 223p $8.50 Stanford univ. press 951.04 China—Politics and government—Republic, 1912-1949

ISBN 0-8047-0746-4 LC 75-150321

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Ronald Steel

Book World p1 Ap 9 '72 160w

Choice 8:1628 F '72 180w

Reviewed by George Moseley

Pacific Affairs 45:152 spring '72 160w

TLS p1187 O 6 '72 550w

BIANCOLLI, LOUIS, jr. ed. The Beethoven companion. See Scherman, T. K.

BIBBY, CYRIL. Scientist extraordinary; the life and scientific works of Thomas Henry Huxley. 1825-1895. 208p il $8.95 St Martins

B or 92 Huxley, Thomas Henry

ISBN 0-08016514-1 LC 72-77611

This is an account of Huxley's "contributions to comparative anatomy, taxonomy, anthropology, and ethnology." (Library J) Bibliography. Index. The book is also available from Pergamon Press.

"Dr Bibby has already written an excellent life of Huxley [T. H. Huxley BRD 1960], and this book is its counterpart: an account for the ordinary reader of his scientific and public work, with biographical detail cut to the minimum. It is well worth reading."

Economist 244:58 Jl 22 '72 160w

"Biographical notes of Huxley's contemporaries, as well as a selected list of his publications, are appended to this well-balanced and readable study." George Basalla

Library J 97:2719 S 1 '72 90w

Reviewed by John Naughton

New Statesman 84:60 Jl 14 '72 300w

"Dr Bibby opens his book . . . on a wildly extravagant note, describing his subject, for instance, as 'perhaps the most brilliant and certainly the most influential scientist of the century', and suggesting that in him England lost 'the most powerful scientist she has ever known'. This is uncharacteristic of the biography as a whole, which is presented with an absolute minimum of value-judgment, and which does not cease to be entertaining as long as Huxley is there standing in the background, and more especially as long as Huxley is allowed to speak for himself. . . . [This biography] with its eighteen portraits of Huxley provides us with a veritable flick-over picture of a man's life."

TLS p1302 N 3 '72 750w

BIBLE. The new American Bible; tr. from the original languages, with critical use of all the ancient sources by members of the Catholic Biblical assn. of America. maps $9.95; pa $1.95; deluxe ed $17.95 Kenedy: $11.50 St Anthony Guild

220.5

LC 78-20066

This Bible "becomes, for all practical purposes, the official Version of the American

Roman Catholic Church, supplanting the . . . Douay-Rheims version of 1609. . . . [It] is not a translation of the Latin Vulgate but a direct rendering into English from the Hebrew of the Old Testament and the Greek of the Deuterocanonical books (the Protestant 'Apostrophe') and the New Testament." (N Y Times Bk R) "Also available in various formats from Benziger Brothers, Catholic Book Publishing Co., and World Publishing Co." (Commonweal)

"The word 'American' is quite significant in this title. If one looks through the list of scholars who worked on this edition he notices that they are Americans, whereas many of our texts have been distinctively English in origin and the quite recent and very popular Jerusalem Bible (BRD 1966) is the work of French scholars. [This translation] does not have the decidedly dignified tone that most of the Protestant versions of Scripture have had, since they always, apparently, were influenced by the stately prose of the King James Version. . . . Still, here is a practical, authentic text on which readers can rely. The notes are very useful so are the maps at the end of the appendix."

Best Sell 30:425 Ja 1 '71 350w

Commonweal 93:382 Ja 15 '71 120w

"The work is scholarly and accurate and is based on discriminating use of all recently discovered textual evidences, with rather conservative use of conjectural emendation. The textual notes, introductions to the books, and concluding essays add to the usefulness of the edition for the layman." R. V. Ritter

Library J 96:1277 Ap 1 '71 300w

"It was a stroke of genius to give a new name to the awkwardly designated 'Confraternity Version of the Bible' and call it, in its final definitive edition, 'The New American Bible.' . . . The English of the new version is simple and natural and exhibits none of the painful Latinity of the Douay version. While they were putting the Bible into standard modern English, the translators were also able to take advantage of the remarkable achievements of recent Catholic, Protestant and Jewish scholarship. . . . Every book and section of the Bible is provided with a brief scholarly introduction and there are concise notes on the most important difficulties in the text. . . . [These] have been done with care and, on the whole, would be as helpful to Protestants as to Catholics. . . . The pictures are of geographical scenes or archeological objects, and are intended to illuminate the text rather than evoke religious emotion. [This] is not only a dependable translation into sturdy modern English but a fine study Bible." R. C. Denton

N Y Times Bk p10 D 6 '70 800w (Review of St. Anthony Guild edition)

BIBLE. Latin. Harburg Bible. See Bucher, F. The Pamplona Bibles, 2v

BIBLE. Latin. King Sancho's Bible. See Bucher, F. The Pamplona Bibles, 2v

BIBLE. NEW TESTAMENT. JOHN. The Gospel according to John (xiii-xxi) introd, tr. and notes by Raymond E. Brown. (The Anchor Bible) 542-1208p $8 Doubleday
226 Bible. N.T. John—Commentaries
LC (66-12209)

"The original plan of the Anchor Bible series was to complete the work on the Johannine Gospel and Epistles within two volumes. However, . . . the editors have . . . approved a third volume for the Johannine writings. Volumes 29 and 29A (the present volume) treat the Fourth Gospel; volume 30 will be devoted to the Epistles. . . . The indexes in the present volume cover both Gospel volumes. . . . An appendix (VI) has been included . . . giving the English translation of chapters i-xii, as it was printed section by section in volume 29." (Pref) Bibliographies. Index of authors. Index of subjects. For the first volume, volume 29, see BRD 1967.

"[This] second volume is characterized by the same wide coverage of sources . . . the same faithfulness to evidence, the same fair-minded inclusion of all points of view, the same clear prose, the same balanced conclusions [as the first volume. There are valuable discussions of problems long associated with the Fourth Gospel. The reader will find a discussion of (1) the historical extent of Jewish involvement in Jesus' death; (2) the issue of who correctly dates the Last Supper; . . . (3) the problem of interpreting Jesus' resurrection as it is reported in John. All of this—together with valuable commentary on individual verses and an ongoing discussion of the development of the Fourth Gospel's train of thought—clearly indicates that henceforth no serious student of the New Testament will be able to dispense with Fr. Brown's commentary." P. J. Achtemeier

BIBLE. NEW TESTAMENT. JOHN.—Continued
Christian Century 87:1268 O 21 '70
 270w

"Raymond Brown published the first volume of his commentary in the United States in 1966 and the second in 1970. They have been republished in [England] with moderate and uneven revision. They are the only volumes of the 'Anchor Bible Commentaries' to be distinguished by such republication, a distinction they well deserve. . . . Professor Brown's . . . long introduction which may also be read as a general introduction to Johannine study . . . suffers from one major limitation. . . . Professor Brown [is] writing for readers who may have little or no Greek, and this explains why his introduction fails to make full use of linguistic evidence. His exposition, passage by passage, consists of three parts: the translation, the discussion of details, and the general comment. The last provides a mass of interpretation which is sturdy, and well-informed and inspires confidence."

TLS p1586 D 17 '71 400w

BIDDISS, MICHAEL D. Disease and history.
 See Cartwright, F. F.

BIGGERSTAFF, KNIGHT, jt. comp. An annotated bibliography of selected Chinese reference works [3d ed]. See Teng, S.-Y.

BIHALJI-MERIN, OTO. Masters of naive art; a history and worldwide survey; tr. by Russell M. Stockman. 304p il col il $25 McGraw 759 Primitivism in art
 SBN 07-005257-3 LC 70-155880

This book describes primitive painters, folk art, and the work of naive artists such as Henri Rousseau, the Painters of the Sacred Heart, Edward Hicks, Grandma Moses, Shalom of Safed, Suma Maruki and others. It includes a discussion of landscape and urban painting, portraits, religion and the fantastic, and mutual influences between naive art and modern art in the twentieth century. Bibliography. Index.

Choice 9:200 Ap '72 270w

"This volume will be essential to those interested in naive art, but they should be prepared for a book that is badly organized, shoddily bound, and poorly written or translated, perhaps both. By turns its language is either impenetrably turgid or bewilderingly compressed. . . . However, there are compelling saving graces. The coverage is as broad as the subtitle indicates. The book contains over 150 superb color plates, many of important works by lesser known and contemporary artists not illustrated in color in any other book. . . . Also, of the 207 brief biographies of primitives in this present volume, 111 are not in the standard biographical reference work on naive artists, Anatole Jakovsky's Peintres Naifs, which makes [this] a valuable supplement to that work."

A. D. Ross

Library J 97:1003 Mr 15 '72 160w

Reviewed by Rackstraw Downes

N Y Times Bk R p76 D 5 '71 100w

BILL, E. G. W. Christ Church and reform, 1850-1867, by E. G. W. Bill & J. F. A. Mason. 269 $9 Oxford

378.425 Oxford. University. Christ Church

—History

SBN 19-920025-4 LC [79-517083]

"This is the first of a series of monographs by means of which Christ Church plans to make available in print some part . . . of the . . . unpublished material about the history of the college contained in its archives and its library. . . . The authors [are] respectively Archivist and Librarian of the House. . . . Mr. Bill describes 'The Old Christ Church' of the days before reform and deals with those consequences of the Oxford Act of 1854 that produced the Christ Church Ordinance of 1858, while Dr. Mason deals with those consequences of the Ordinance that led to the Christ Church Act of 1867 and describes 'The New Christ Church' that was created and governed by that Act." (TLS)

"[This is a] book-length essay with some seventy pages of appended documents. . . . The story is told with . . . skill." Sheldon Rothblatt

Am Hist R 76:780 Je '71 600w

"The constitutional history of a small, self-contained society is not easy to write: it will not hold the reader's interest unless events are traced in almost day-to-day detail; but an abundance of such detail, unless it is skillfully handled, will stifle the interest its introduction is intended to create—the historian is faced by the old problem of the wood and the trees. Mr. Bill and Dr. Mason surmount this difficulty triumphantly. . . . The story will of course be read with special interest by Christ Churchmen, but it forms a not unimportant chapter in the academic history of Oxford."

TLS p1471 D 11 '70 600w

BILLINGS, ROBERT W., jt. auth. Stop-action.
 See Butkus, D.

BILLINGTON, RACHEL. Lilacs out of the dead land. 239p $5.95 Saturday review press
 ISBN 0-8415-0146-7 LC 73-182470

This novel concerns a young schoolteacher "from the provinces who is trying to be the beguiling mistress of a middle-aged London roué. She goes with him on holiday to Sicily where she meets some of his worldly friends, who might have wandered off the set of a Fellini film, and is eventually seduced by her lover's former mistress." (Library J)

"Rachel Billington writes well. She puts words together in thoroughly literate fashion; she thinks intelligently; and she totally holds reader interest." Jane Oppenheim

Best Sell 32:1 Ap 1 '72 380w

"April, the narrator and heroine of Billington's novel, is a dedicated masochist whose emotional equipment finally shorts circuits from the strains of a double life and the tragic death of her sister. Billington's characterization of April is sometimes poetic, sometimes banal, but well suited to a young girl. . . . A series of flashbacks to April's other, completely conventional, life in England heightens the impact of her idyll turned nightmare. The florid style may put off some readers who will find April's sufferings too cruel." Barbara Nelson

Library J 97:1344 Ap 1 '72 140w

"Despite interspersions of April's irrelevant, italic musings, [the author] fails to arouse our sympathy for her heroine's narrow vision of colour supplement bliss. Don't be deluded into applauding April as she kicks Lawrence down a cactus-covered cliff. He has simply got to survive for that tight-lipped renunciation in the hotel dining-room over the boiled eggs."

Jonathan Keats

New Statesman 81:711 My 21 '71 110w

TLS p815 J1 9 '71 310w

BING, RUDOLF. 5000 nights at the opera. 360p pl $10 Doubleday

B or 92 New York (City). Metropolitan Opera

ISBN 0-385-09259-8 LC 72-76124

Memoirs of the recently retired general manager of the Metropolitan Opera. "Sir Rudolf begins with his early years in Austria, where he first got a taste of the 'business' of music which led . . . to his association with . . . the Glyndebourne Festival, and ultimately to the Edinburgh Music Festival. . . . He then moves on to his years as boss of the Metropolitan Opera in New York. [He] describes what he found when he first visited the Met. . . . He writes of his clashes with members of the Met's board of directors, with sopranos, tenors, conductors, stage directors, labor leaders.

and the press. He tells of the growing need for a new house and of the move to Lincoln Center." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by Jerold Knappes
America 128:26 Ja 13 '73 270w

"It is not improbable that the first half of the book—which deals with [the author's] life, pre-Met—were written at leisure, over an extended period. There is a very pleasing objectivity and mellowness in [that part of] the account. . . . The regret is that '5000 Nights at the Opera' is, at least through its second half, a rather intemperate book. While it is the privilege of the writer . . . to tell his side of 22 years of Metropolitan Opera history, it is unfortunate that Sir Rudolf could not have waited to look back on it with at least some perspective. For as time will undoubtedly tell, there is another side." Louis Snyder

Christian Science Monitor p18 D 6 '72 650w

"[Bing] comes through very strikingly, as we have come to know him in the past 22 years. His wit, style, and love for battle (whether with a strong-willed diva or a powerful union) are all here. Of special interest is his report of his European career. . . . The story of his Met years, while familiar in outline makes fascinating reading—especially his juicy bits about singers and conductors. . . . This report is bound to be popular." G. L. Mayer

Library J 97:2735 S 1 '72 170w

New Statesman 84:769 N 24 '72 400w

"As a strongly personal account of what an opera manager faces in his daily work, Sir Rudolf's book is as valuable as it is readable. It is also a trifle mythic at times, as apologies usually are. What one carries away is a sense of continual battle, with Sir Rudolf cast as Leonidas, surrounded and outnumbered but hacking away at his foes with swordlike tongue. If this title suggests a Marx Brothers movie, it is apt: An instant attraction of these memoirs, though eventually a weakening element is the author's compulsion to retell all his best jokes, as if he were a professional comedian, the Met's own Groucho. . . . [He includes] in his biography much witty evidence of his own arrogance and lack of tact." Donal Henahan

N Y Times Bk R p1 O 22 '72 2250w

"Those who don't know [Rudolf Bing] must wonder why they have heard so many unpleasant stories about him. Many of the answers are contained in this outspoken and nearly candid recollection. Needless to say, he doesn't tell all—who does?—but he tells enough to make the reading as absorbing, and sometimes as incredible, as the man himself. . . . Martin Mayer's participation as Bing's collaborator is difficult to pinpoint, but the professional hand is evident in the readably irritating text. Many pictures, no index." Irving Kolodin

Sat R 55:80 N 4 '72 1450w

TLS p1283 O 27 '72 950w

BINGHAM, CHARLOTTE. Coronet among the grass. 155p $5.95 Little

B or 92
LC 72-76289

This autobiographical sequel to the author's earlier book Coronet Among the Weeds (BRD 1963) concerns "her courtship and marriage, and other aspects of her life as mother-to-be, author, party goer, and actor's wife. She describes the feelings of the plain, scatterbrained, inferiority-laden wife of a bright, handsome, elegant man sought after by half the women he meets." (Library J)

"Much of [Bingham's] writing is somewhat reminiscent of the 'sparklingly witty' style of the 30's and 40's. Though thoroughly unimportant, the book is clever and quite funny, provided you can get past some unfamiliar British vernacular." Clara Mayer

Library J 97:3306 O 15 '72 120w

"Now what would you think of a novel in which the male protagonist is named Clever Drawers? Never mind. In spite of its Winnie the Pooh-ish inclination, this book about being young, married and hopeful in London has its pleasant, even charming moments. Charlotte Bingham (who is a playwright as well as a novelist, and wife of the actor/dramatist Terrence Brady) has a nice turn of phrase, which she puts to best use in personal, casual humor. When she takes on stock situations like the hunting-shooting set, or travel abroad, things tend to sag a bit." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p21 J1 23 '72 110w

TLS p450 Ap 21 '72 350w

BINGHAM, MADELEINE. Sheridan: the track of a comet. 383p il $12.50 St Martins

B or 92 Sheridan, Richard Brinsley Butler
LC [72-183392]

This account of the life and career of Richard Sheridan the "son of ■ Dublin actor/theater manager [traces] his . . . courtship of Elizabeth Linley through [his] theatrical and political achievement to [his] . . . bankruptcy." (Library J) Bibliography.

"[This] well-researched work is more than a spirited biography of the mercurial Sheridan, it is a vivid picture of the political intrigue and social superficiality that were hallmarks of eighteenth-century England." Sister Gregory Duffy

Best Sell 32:425 D 15 '72 400w

"[The author] conveys Sheridan's charm and brilliance of mind, and sets his career against ■ carefully depicted family background. The world of rank and fashion and high politics into which Sheridan moved with such alacrity is also well sketched in. The book does not pretend to be more than 'a rounded, colourful portrait.' Other chatty studies of Sheridan exist, and this is an improvement on its predecessors."

Economist 242:67 Mr 11 '72 350w

"With research obfuscated by the omission of notes, the book is less useful to the scholar than to a general audience. This is unfortunate since the author often takes exception to earlier biographers (who are unnamed except in a sketchy bibliography). More complimentary than critical, the study posits a naive and fragmentary approach to Sheridan's dramas and a dramatic approach to his life. Yet no strong pattern emerges save the fragile premise that Sheridan's hereditary drive for gentility and wealth led him cynically to trade comedy writing for political oratory and that dangerous liaisons plus pragmatic asides boding failure interrupted his marital life and public career." Joan Owen

Library J 97:3590 N 1 '72 170w

"To tell a good story seems to be Madeleine Bingham's main aim. . . . [She] gives her narrative cohesion by suggesting that Sheridan was at heart an actor, with a fine feeling for situation and an ability to play many roles. There is some justice in the description, but it does not go far enough: her desire to be down-right for the sake of readability leads her to oversimplify the interpretation. . . . [Her] wish to be positive brings with it some inexactness on other subjects. We read: 'The fact is that The Rehearsal . . . was never seen on the stage again from the time The Critic was first produced.' The fact is that The Rehearsal was performed after 1779 only very occasionally. . . . Mrs Bingham is muddled, too about The Rivals."

TLS p520 My ■ '72 470w

BINGHAM, SALLIE. The way it is now; stories. 182p $6.50 Viking

SBN 670-75195-2 LC 70-176407

Fifteen short stories concerned with unhappy women—"girlhood, love, sexual initiation, motherhood, and middle age are played out in . . . dramas against a variety of background settings. . . . Central experiences, too complex for easy handling, have their place in all these stories. Often the past rises up and dims the hopes bestowed by adulthood." (Publisher's note)

"Short stories, all centered on women, all concerned with subtle family tensions. The social and psychological observation is acute and conveyed with an austere minimum of action. Everything of importance happens off-stage or inside somebody's head." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:108 Mr '72 40w

"Miss Bingham's [women] are simply examples of standard female predicaments (unhappy young mother, recent divorcee) considering their respective situations with truly awesome solipsism. . . . The stories are competent, . . . and one may find a kind of furtive pleasure in . . . some—perhaps in empathiz-

BINGHAM, SALLIE—Continued

ing with the terror of the young mother in 'Fear,' who has 'plunged' the baby too hard to stop him crying and then sees that there seems to be something wrong with his legs. Miss Bingham is very good at capturing the beleaguered hysteria of the mothers of small children, the ironic detachment of men. I especially liked 'Conversations,' a fine story in which a tepid older man takes to lunch a young mother whose youth and family situation charm him, decides she is a little too intense, decides to drop her, and is implored by her husband to take her out a few more times, for the sake of her mental health. These stories are not recommended for men." Diane Johnson

Book World p12 Mr 5 '72 380w

Reviewed by Jean Spang

Library J 97:213 Ja 15 '72 100w

"Despite the variety of names, ages and marital situations of Miss Bingham's heroines they are curiously alike—all irritable and unfulfilled, all poor little rich girls. . . . [Her] best stories mercilessly photograph these women as they go to weddings, have lunch with their men or care for their children while totally immersed in themselves. . . . Miss Bingham writes beautifully, constructing her stories with precision and finesse. But her remarkable virtuosity only heightens the fact that nearly all her heroines are look-alikes and feel-alikes who are hopelessly constricted, hopelessly narrow, hopelessly unable to escape the dead center of themselves. 'The Way It Is Now' is really a statement of how it is for one kind of woman, and a pretty dull kind at that." Josephine Hendin

N Y Times Bk R p6 Ap 2 '72 370w

BINZEN, PETER, jr. auth. The wreck of the Penn Central. See Daughen, J. R.

BIOGRAPHICAL dictionary of republican China; Howard L. Boorman, ed; Richard C. Howard, associate editor. v3-4 471:418p v3 $25; v4 $35 Columbia univ. press

951 China—Biography

ISBN 231-08957-0 (v3); 231-08958-9 (v4)

LC (67-12006)

Of these two concluding volumes, volume three covers from MAO to WU. Volume four finishes the alphabetically arranged biographies covering from Yang to Yün. Also included in volume four is a bibliography by Joseph K. H. Cheng listing the published writings, if any, of the subject of each article in the four volumes and the sources, both personal and written, used in preparing each article. For volume one see BRD 1967, 1968. For volume two see BRD 1968, 1969.

"Even though the completed work contains only 600 entries, they cover almost every facet of society. . . . [Moreover, these] entries represent a veritable mine of information about thousands of other men, organizations, and publications. It is as if 600 test holes were being sunk into the surface of Chinese society permitting us to extract and pull together a vast quantity of information concerning modern China through the lives of these men and their relations with others. . . . [In volume four however,] there are no indexes, no tables, nothing to help tap the great store of information contained in [the work's] separate biographical entries. . . . Without such aids the value of the work is reduced by perhaps 70 percent. . . . The Bibliography . . . is a mess. There seems to be no reason at all behind the selection of works included. . . . [Further] it appears that the bibliographer simply went to the card catalogue and took as the date of publication that of whatever edition happened to be on hand. Thus the first work listed for Wang Kuo-wei, who died in 1927 and whose biography lists publications going back to 1909, is 1930? . . . I think it can be said that the biographies while uneven in quality are useful. . . . Volume 4, however, is a disgrace." W. A. Rickett

Ann Am Acad 399:183 Ja '72 480w

"[The fourth volume] completes one of the most scholarly and important reference works published in recent years. . . . Indispensable for college, university, and reference libraries."

Choice 9:195 Ap '72 50w

"The dictionary is an impressive achievement; it is, for example, more concerned with social and economic background than its predecessor [William Hummel's Eminent Chinese of the Ching Period, 1644-1912, issued by The Library of Congress]. One of the dictionary's major faults is that it pulls its punches on the Kuomintang leaders. For instance in the entries on Chiang Kai-shek and his wife's family, the Soongs, there are no references to the notorious corruption of nationalist governments of the 1940s, let alone the Soongs' central roles in it. The writers merely state that the communists 'excoriated' T. V. Soong, for using 'official position for personal gain.' . . . Another flaw is that the dictionary tends to regard the period after 1949 as at best a sad twilight for scholars and intellectuals who stayed in China." Martin Bernal

N Y Rev of Books 18:31 Mr 23 '72 450w

"Boorman, who has been the helmsman of this great enterprise, had [D. W.] Klein and [Anne B.] Clark as members of his crew, and there has been a sensible collaboration over [their recent book, Biographic Dictionary of Chinese Communism (BRD 1971) and the present work]. . . . That is to say there is such overlapping between them as there ought to be, but a careful choice has been made between the republican period and communist activity with many of the lesser characters. In such cases duplication has been avoided and each biography appears in the most appropriate place, on the assumption that students will constantly be using both dictionaries. Of course Professor Boorman's dictionary gives a broader view of Chinese life and offers the better quarry for the casual reader."

TLS p90 Ja 28 '72 460w

BIRCH, A. H. Representation. 149p $5 Praeger
321.8 Representative government and representation
LC 78-100911

The author "covers such matters as the usages of the term 'representative,' political representation, medieval concepts and practices regarding representation, theories on representation of such writers as Hobbes, Locke, Rousseau, Burke, Bentham, Madison, and Calhoun. There is a chapter on the representation of interests and another on the representation of opinions. [The volume concludes] with a discussion on representation and responsiveness." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Although brief in its treatment of the concept of representation, the book is notable for its clarity, original analyses, and enlightening quality. . . . This excellent little volume is recommended for junior and senior college libraries."

Choice 9:714 Jl/Ag '72 100w

"Heartily recommended to students. . . . [The author is] well known in the academic world. It would be nice if the work of the designer attracted some of the general editor's reading public outside the universities which has the time, the curiosity and the inclination to pause and reflect on some of those words which are so often taken for granted."

TLS p151 F 11 '72 360w

BIRD, CAROLINE. The crowding syndrome; learning to live with too much and too many. 337p $7.95 McKay

301.32 Population. Human ecology. Social change
LC 75-188260

"The theme of this book is that only innovative approaches will enable us to cope with the threat of overload and the breakdown of our society due to explosive population growth. Bird rejects the conventional position that only rigid population curbs can save an overcrowded world from collapse. If the sheer bulk of numbers is breaking down our social and economic systems, then these systems and our attitudes toward them must change, she maintains. We should therefore view the situation realistically, and start developing bold new ways to feed, house, and support the growing population." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by J. J. Conlin

Best Sell 32:131 Je 15 '72 350w

"In contrast to many contemporary gloom and doom thinkers, Bird views the future with what can best be characterized as a tempered optimism. Simply stated, her position is that we must accept the fact of overpopulation and use our ingenuity and daring to meet the challenges it offers. . . . Many a reader may feel that Bird's vision of the future is a . . . likely one."

Choice 9:1165 N '72 200w

"The author's thesis is thought provoking, but her analysis and the factual support she marshals are not entirely persuasive. Essentially she bases her case on taking an optimistic attitude toward the future. We will survive, she says, 'with a little bit of luck, and by the skin of our teeth, the way the human race has been doing now for the past million years.' This book is written in a lively manner and, although a popularization, will introduce readers to a wide range of current research and thinking on problems of population growth and ecology." Harry Frummerman

Library J 97:2626 Ag '72 230w

BIRD, HARRISON. War for the West, 1790-1813. 278p pl maps $7.50 Oxford

970.5 Northwest, Old—History. Indians of North America—Wars. U.S.—History—War of 1812

ISBN 0-19-501422-7 LC 73-161884

The book "deals with that period of American history leading up to the War of 1812 and that part of the war itself that took place on the Canadian-American border—Ohio, Indiana, Michigan. Tecumseh, Harrison, St. Clair, Perry are some of the individuals who appear in the narrative. Bird has concentrated on areas of the war that have not been brought out as much as the naval part, e.g. Jackson's actions in the war, the burning of Washington, etc." (Choice) Index.

"The book has good maps . . . and several useful additions such as 'Chronology of actions and events,' 'Place names and modern locations,' 'Postscript on careers.' There are, regrettably, not enough illustrations. Bird covers his material thoroughly without being dull or pedantic. Appropriate for undergraduate students or anyone interested in American history of this early period, especially the military aspects."

Choice 9:126 Mr '72 120w

"This is mainly a military . . . account of the U.S. Government's attempts to keep the Indians under control for the benefit of white settlers. . . . Mr Bird is an old hand at this kind of history—largely narrative, little of it original, weak on interpretation; in a word, pleasant but dispensable."

N Y Times Bk R p48 N 7 '71 80w

BIRDSALL, VIRGINIA OGDEN. Wild civility; the English comic spirit on the restoration stage. 279p $10.50 Ind. univ. press

822 English drama—History and criticism
ISBN 0-253-19037-1 LC 70-126206

This is a "study of the eleven plays written by the three major comic dramatists of the Restoration period in England—Etherege, Wycherley, and Congreve. The author's purpose is to establish the playwrights as serious artists and to analyze the plays in the light of their . . . central function as 'play' that presents a challenge to the establishment: youth versus age, pleasure versus morality, life versus rules."

[In each play she traces] the artistic development and the individual comic focus of each playwright and . . . [analyzes] the ways in which the various heroes and heroines emerge as archetypal comic figures." (Publisher's note) Index.

"This is an important reevaluation of Restoration comedy that rejects the commonplace critical views of it as a servile copy either of Molière or of its own shallow society." H. B. Hahn

Library J 95:3780 N 1 '70 120w

"[Mrs. Birdsall's] thesis is the importance of laughter for its own sake. . . . She admits the existence . . . of the verbal, the surface, indecency. But she properly insists that it is merely an ornamentation. Beneath it lies a vigor that brings order into a loosely organized society—a vigor that laughingly affirms the right to an individual means of expression."

[To her study] Mrs. Birdsall brings a lightness of touch and inventiveness of her own. She writes with grace and sometimes with a dash—almost a playfulness—that well suits her subject matter. However, the detailed description of play after play . . . becomes at times a trifle wearisome. . . . But her point of view is alert and her investigation thorough."

C. B. Hogan

Yale R 61:134 O '71 600w

BIRENBAUM, WILLIAM M. Something for everybody is not enough; an educator's search for his education. 293p $7.95 Random house

B or 92 Colleges and universities
ISBN 0-394-46037-5 LC 74-117652

This is a "personal account of what it's like to be a college president and what it takes to remain one. . . . Faced with the . . . problems of university administration, [and the] issues of our time—Vietnam, racism, the impact of technology [and] the role of the individual— . . . [the author] argues that the universities, . . . in expanding their campuses, designing their curricula, and choosing their students, . . . have exercised substantial political, economic, and cultural power in behalf of their own values." (Publisher's note)

"If you've ever criticized a college president during the turmoils of recent years, you owe it to yourself (and him) to read this book. . . . An educational maverick of sorts, Birenbaum makes a strong case against the unrealities of graduate education and even shows the positive side of student strikes!" M. J. Sheeran

America 126:542 My 20 '72 100w

"Birenbaum's book could never have happened if he were the average college president—which is to say dead: morally, intellectually, and emotionally. But this doughty president of a New York City community college is the fiercest imaginer of what American higher learning may yet be, and a committed champion of the best impulses currently prevalent among students and faculty. . . . [His] book reminds me strongly of black student Donald Reeves's Notes of a Processed Brother [BRD 1972]. . . . Both books are about the self-education, in politics and in life, of strong spirits struggling with their public and private conditions." Ronald Gross

Book World p10 Mr 26 '72 1100w

"[The author's] views on the recent past, the present, and the likely future of American higher education, already documented somewhat in his earlier volume, Overlive: power, poverty, and the university [BRD 1969], are further expressed herein, along with some zesty reminiscences of his lively career to date. Hardly a work for the ages, but well worth adding to most academic library shelves for its current interest."

Choice 9:412 My '72 140w

"Birenbaum's delightful and amazing book about his own education is . . . not only useful, it is entertaining and vastly alive. . . . [This] is a more or less leisurely account of Birenbaum's life. It is filled with anecdotes about his upbringing in Waterloo [Iowa], his army experience, his student career, and mostly, his peculiar trip on the wild academic seas. Occasionally, Birenbaum does lapse into a presidential lecture (addressing Posterity), but never for more than a paragraph. Mainly, he is concerned to convey what it feels like to be among the unloved—that is, a college bureaucrat. . . . [It is the] emphasis on the human dimension of administration that gives the book its usefulness." Neil Postman

N Y Times Bk R p4 Mr 5 '72 850w

BIRKENHEAD, EARL OF, comp. Collected poems. See Betjeman, J.

BIRKET-SMITH, KAJ. Eskimos. 277p il col 11 pl $17.95 Crown

919.8 Eskimos
LC 78-147326

"Birket-Smith first wrote [this] work in Danish in 1927. It was translated into English [BRD 1936]. . . . In 1961 the new enlarged and illustrated Danish edition appeared and now it has been translated into English. . . . The work opens with a short history of the Europeans' discovery of the Eskimo. It then passes on to a discussion of their physical characteristics, customs, psychology, language, hunting and trapping methods, clothing, housing, social organization, and religion, and closes with comments on their origin and archaeology. The book also contains a chapter, new to this edition, by . . . Diamond Jenness. This chapter, taken from Jenness' . . . work Eskimo Administration, deals with the Eskimos' place in the world today." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

BIRKET-SMITH, KAY—Continued

Choice 9:440 My '72 160w

"[The author] who has lived and traveled with and studied the Eskimos for several decades, has written a well-balanced account, giving a complete picture of an interesting and complex people whose traditional ways of life are fast disappearing. . . . Free from technical jargon, [the book] is a comprehensive volume and one of great scholarship. It is . . . well illustrated with black-and-white and color photographs. The bibliography contains over 500 items . . . and there is a detailed index." N. T. Corley
Library J 97:1456 Ap 15 '72 160w

BIRLEY, ANTHONY. Septimius Severus: the African emperor. 398p pl maps $8.95 Double-day

B or 92 Severus, Lucius Septimius, Emperor of Rome
LC 70-116189

"Septimius Severus was the first African ever to be a Roman Emperor. . . . This book describes . . . [his] progress from his Carthaginian-descended family of Lepcis Magna to the pinnacle of power." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"On his death-bed Septimius Severus instructed his heirs to look after the troops and to show contempt for everybody else. Birley follows his advice in this [account]. . . . He offers a masterly analysis of the composition of the imperial administration or command structure, a detailed description of military campaigns conducted between 180 and 211 A.D., and . . . very little else. The attempt to assess the African contribution to the empire's development (except in terms of personnel) is pathetically elementary; there is only desultory comment on social, economic, legal, religious, and cultural changes and any effects they had on the emperor; and a 12-page conclusion alone discusses Septimius' policies as policies. . . . Strictly for specialists."

Choice 9:558 Je '72 180w

Reviewed by Ramsey MacMullen
Class World 66:181 N '72 400w

"Birley has a plum of a biography in Septimius Severus—if an occasionally sour fruit, for he does not deny some of the emperor's more grisly traits. But he can stage Apuleius' trial for sorcery at Sabratha among 'Scenes from provincial life', there is Julia Domna and Commodus' last months. . . . And there are the places with which the African emperor . . . was associated—the huge monuments of Lepcis in the blazing Libyan sun and Dr Birley's own Carpow, appropriately illustrated in thick Scottish mist. Dr Birley's biography is scholarly and credible." Anthony Bryer

Encounter 37:74 O '71 120w

Reviewed by D. A. N. Jones
New Statesman 83:21 Ja 7 '72 400w

"[The] renowned contemporary British historian . . . who has gone to great lengths to familiarize himself with the troubled age that Septimius violently dominated, has culled all the available primary sources and patiently sifted an immense amount of archeological and other evidence—from coins and inscriptions to aerial photographs that reveal the sites of Roman marching-camps. . . . He writes with immense authority. Furthermore, he succeeds in bringing Septimius—a spidery little man with a snub nose and delicately curled beard—to life." Robert Payne
Sat R 55:76 Mr 18 '72 700w

"Dr Birley had a choice. He could have concentrated on Septimius, writing a far shorter book, in which he might have attacked problems in greater depth—in particular the question whether by capitulating to the soldiery Septimius gave a sinister twist to the whole imperial system and bears responsibility for the chaos of the century which followed his death. Instead he has written a narrative history of Rome from the accession of Marcus Aurelius to the death of Severus Alexander. . . . Dr Birley writes with good sense and with learning. It is not his fault but the fault of his sources if at the end of his book Septimius remains as inscrutable as he always has been."

TLS p1341 O 22 '71 500w

BIRMINGHAM, STEPHEN. The late John Marquand; a biography. 322p pl $10 Lippincott

B or 92 Marquand, John Phillips
ISBN 0-397-00886-4 LC 76-39182

Birmingham describes the experiences of the American novelist whose study "of a Boston family in 'The Late George Apley' [BRD 1937] . . . was not only phenomenally successful in sales, but was turned into a play and then into a movie. . . . The biography traces Marquand's two unhappy marriages [and] his close friendship with Carl Brandt and Brandt's wife Carol." (Best Sell)

"[This] biography is the work of a partisan who tends to exaggerate, who is unfamiliar with Marquand's Boston and Harvard, and who evaluates John's books as much by what they earned as by what they hold. His thesis is one which Marquand himself made public: that he was deprived by his improvident father of the advantages he might have enjoyed . . . and that his lonely adolescence . . . accounts for his bitterness and for the emphasis on class distinctions which recur throughout his serious work. . . . Birmingham's judgment of John's novels is not mine; I pick Wickford Point [BRD 1939] and Point of No Return [1949] as the two best. . . . But I agree that the secret of Marquand's appeal was the 'absolute rightness' of the dialogue, as Clifton Fadiman puts it; 'his special way of mixing merriment and melancholy,' which Birmingham praises." Edward Weeks

Atlantic 230:94 J1 '72 600w

Reviewed by R. F. Grady
Best Sell 32:131 Je 15 '72 500w

Choice 9:1126 N '72 200w

"Birmingham is the ideal chronicler of Marquand's life-in-fiction. He can whisk us in a trice from Boston's sedate Athenaeum, where for three cents, members could enjoy a cup of bouillon and three crackers, to garish Hollywood, where Marquand realized at once that his East Coast clothes were all wrong, to a fishing cabin in Oregon, so primitive it could only be reached by a paddle up stream, and where all the drinking water came from an outdoor spigot. Read Birmingham for the same pleasures you find in Marquand, for a Marquandian tale the master raconteur left unwritten, or wrote only in the sense that every novelist writes but one novel, the story of his life." Victor Howes

Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 21 '72 600w

Reviewed by J. A. Avant
Library J 97:2381 J1 '72 100w

"[Birmingham] set out to write an easy, entertaining, secondhand book, and—except for some clumsy writing . . . he has succeeded. But it is difficult not to feel disappointed that this first biography of Marquand should do so little for him or us."

New Repub 166:26 Je 17 '72 2050w

N Y Times Bk R p20 Ag 20 '72 230w

Reviewed by Walter Clemons
Newsweek 79:94 Je 19 '72 700w

"Birmingham's admiration for his subject is evident everywhere, but so too is his determination to be as truthful as possible, however unflattering his revelations may be to Marquand's memory. This is undoubtedly the reason why his book is not an authorized biography but was written without the cooperation or approval of the Marquand family and without access to letters and personal papers. . . . Although Mr. Birmingham is at all times fair, the image of Marquand that takes form here—the facts, after all, being what they are—is unattractive enough to make it understandable that the family might have wished to prevent the publication of the book." J. W. Aldridge

Sat R 55:63 Je 17 '72 3600w

BIRNBAUM, MILTON. Aldous Huxley's quest for values. 230p $6.95 Univ. of Tenn. press

823 Huxley, Aldous Leonard
ISBN 0-87049-127-X LC 71-142146

"Beginning with discourses on his subject's heritage and environment and on his mystical concept of 'reality,' Birnbaum proceeds to treat of the character types in Huxley's novels and to disclose, chapter by chapter, what his numerous writings in various genres indicate concerning the arts, education, government, love and marriage, nature, science, and religion." (Choice) Bibliography, Index.

"A commendably methodical though nimbly written book, based on a dissertation submitted in 1955. . . . Everything gets neatly summarized in a chapter of conclusions. Birnbaum's overall assessment is shown as he presents, at last, four general observations unfavorable to Huxley and six that are favorable. The quest for values was, we are assured, 'a journey well taken.' . . . [The book] provides an intelligent survey and is recommended. Good notes, bibliography, and index."

Choice 9:366 My '72 130w

"Huxley's ability 'to articulate the intellectual and moral conflicts being fought in the collective soul of the twentieth century' is the main interest in this earnestly titled study. . . . Sorely missing is a detailed, truly analytic exposition of Huxleyan mysticism; and this omission is symptomatic of the oversimplification that prevails throughout. Birnbaum . . . has worked many years on this book; its subject lies very close to his own mind and heart. Nevertheless, the end result adds little to our understanding of Huxley, and Charles M. Holmes's Aldous Huxley and the Way to Reality [BRD 1971] treats the same material more effectively." Keith Cushman

Library J 96:4012 D 1 '71 160w

BIRNBAUM, NORMAN. Toward a critical sociology. 451p $10.95 Oxford

301 Sociology

ISBN 0-19-501502-9 LC 73-159644

The author of these essays written between 1954 and 1970 offers his "re-evaluation of the state of contemporary sociology. . . . Rejecting the concept of sociology as a science remote from the political and social conflicts of the day, he envisages social change as the primary object of sociological inquiry and views sociology as an important element in political power struggles. The essays fall into four broad categories: social theory, religion, sociology itself, and politics." (Publisher's note) Name index. Subject index. Some of the material has appeared in such periodicals as Partisan Review and The Sociological Review.

"Not recommended for undergraduate libraries, although it may be considered worthwhile for graduate collections in the area of social thought. One has the distinct impression, however, that Gouldner in The coming crisis of Western sociology [BRD 1970] has said it all in a clearer, less pedantic fashion. Adequate subject and name indices."

Choice 9:723 JI/Ag '72 80w

Reviewed by Robert Nisbet

Encounter 38:53 Mr '72 1350w

"Birnbaum is one of those few sociologists who, in the period covered by this collection of his previously published essays (1954-1970), managed to occupy a sane middle-ground in the discipline—fending off the apologetic and uncritical trivia of academic sociology on the one hand, and the antiintellectual, antiscientific inanities of some of the so-called radical critics on the other. In these writings he examines, from a nondogmatic Marxian standpoint, a broad range of questions of considerable significance for the future health and vitality of sociology. . . . He also provides an interesting and sympathetic critique of the work of David Riesman, and a rather unsympathetic one of Theodore Rozak's The Making of a Counterculture [BRD 1968, 1969] as well as a number of informative reports on developments in sociology in the East European socialist bloc." L. S. Kaplan

Library J 97:1453 Ap 15 '72 360w

Reviewed by Michael Kennedy

Nation 215:213 S 18 '72 480w

Reviewed by Steven Lukes

New Statesman 83:568 Ap 28 '72 750w

"[Birnbaum undertakes] an analysis of the changes in industrial societies, and a critical appraisal of the attempts to comprehend them. His general outlook is well conveyed in the essay on 'late capitalism in the United States.' . . . In one of the best of these essays he subjects Marxism to a critical analysis in which its principal inadequacies are clearly set out. . . . In what way, then, do these essays disclose a movement 'toward a critical sociology'? Certainly they offer a broad and often penetrating criticism of many current interpretations of the changes that are going on in the industrial countries. . . . They help to reveal the full extent of the disagreements and uncertainties among radical thinkers. But they do not attempt to formulate an alternative 'critical theory.'" Tom Bottomore

N Y Rev of Books 18:31 Ap 6 '72 1300w

"If the title is taken literally, the emphasis should be on the toward, for clearly one does not have the sense of a destination arrived at. . . . The long opening essay on ideology in social theory is less than convincing. . . . It starts with a review of Marxist analyses of ideology, and one feels at once that Dr Birnbaum is thoroughly at home with his material. . . . [But there is] a lack of clarity in the definition of the concept of ideology and in the notion of its relation to social structure, which suggests a greater interest in the world of Marxist intellectualism than a sociological analysis of a central problem."

TLS p149 F 11 '72 950w

BIRSTEIN, ANN. Summer situations. 191p $5.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

LC 70-175276

"In each of these three . . . [stories] the heroine/narrator struggles with a human conflict during a summer away from the college town of Gorham. Proximity and summer magic set the mood for an extramarital affair; the beauties of Cape Cod fail to dissipate the tensions arising from the annual summer visit of a stepson; the attractions of Paris and a boyfriend are disturbed when a former instructor arrives on the scene." (Library J)

Reviewed by E. C. Howley

Best Sell 32:2 Ap 1 '72 600w

"[This collection deals] with female emotional life, but everyone, men included, will like [it]. . . . It is partly that Birstein's women are people, intelligent and individual. . . . [These stories] should generally strengthen the argument for considering women as real people after all. . . . [Birstein] writes with brisk humor, seeing in a clear-eyed way to the core of the emotional 'central' situations of the women whom she writes about—and respects. . . . If anything, Miss Birstein, in leaning over backward to avoid the risk of being damp, may end by being a bit too cheerful and dry, but given the facts of female life and male reviewing, that is probably a sound choice." Diane Johnson

Book World p12 Mr 5 '72 380w

Reviewed by N. E. Gwinn

Library J 97:898 Mr 1 '72 100w

New Repub 166:31 Ap 1 '72 360w

"Choosing a difficult area to explore—the thin line where aspirations teeter over into pretensions—[Birstein] creates a world of social and sexual disappointments, where almost all her characters are wryly aware of reality's stubborn refusal to live up to their fantasies and expectations. A less accomplished satirist might have been content just to expose the follies of her characters: the self-deluding romanticism of the women, the pomposity of the men, the bitchy petty bourgeois world of small-college society. But Ann Birstein goes a little further; and the characters are subtler. . . . Self-delusion, and a degree of sour self-knowledge. They are not easy qualities to balance, but Ann Birstein manages it with asperity and aplomb." Sally Beauman

N Y Times Bk R p7 Mr 5 '72 1000w

"The first [story], 'Love in the dunes,' is the simplest. . . . It's mostly good-natured, full of clever insights, with only a hint of desolation. The second—harsher, longer, fuller—lingers more over its cast of characters. . . . [Stepson] Jason spends a ten-day vacation eternity shaking up the [current] wife's world. (Nice title: 'How I Spent My Summer Vacation.') This wife, Janet, who is the most fully imagined and understood woman in the trilogy . . . is enough of a stereotype—of fictional and real-life characters—to provide some devastatingly comic scenes, which Miss Birstein handles with a light hand and wry sympathy. But the third story, 'When the Wind Blew,' is the best; although strong and bitter, it contains more tenderness than either of the others." A. Z. Silver

Sat R 55:86 Mr 4 '72 700w

BISHOP, ELIZABETH, ed. An anthology of twentieth-century Brazilian poetry; ed. with introd. by Elizabeth Bishop and Emanuel Brasil; sponsored by the Academy of Am. poets. 181p $11; pa $3.45 Wesleyan univ. press

869 Brazilian poetry—Collections
ISBN 0-8195-4044-7; 0-8195-6023-5 (pa)
LC 75-184359

In this collection "are 14 poets from both the modern and post-war generations. . . . (Included are) Manuel Bandeira . . . Oswald de Andrade . . . Cecilia Meireles . . . Drummond de Andrade, Vinicius de Moraes . . . and João de Melo Neto." (Choice) Some of these translations have appeared in the New Yorker, The Hudson Review, and Shenandoah.

"Editors Bishop and Brasil and their team of 16 translators have worked poetic wonders in this bilingual collection which virtually has the field to itself. . . . The translations en face are excellent, mostly in free verse though occasionally rhyme is retained in English. Included as well are a brief introduction, short biographies of both poets . . . and translators, and a listing of the poets' principal works. An essential volume for libraries stressing modern verse."

Choice 9:1136 N '72 160w

"The practice of employing prominent American poets who are not bilingual to 'translate' by working from a literal prose version of the original has its hazards, but in this instance has been remarkably successful. The collocation of the talents of some of the great names in American letters (Bishop, Richard Eberhart, W. S. Merwin, and Richard Wilbur, among others) with the fresh, lyrical, astonishingly vivid verse of contemporary Brazil is a happy one. . . . To many readers, the sophistication of this poetry, strongly influenced by French and Italian models, but retaining its own vitality, will come as a surprise, as will the absence of parochialism and the sureness of poetic technique." Rosemary Nelswender

Library J 97:2404 J1 '72 250w

"By representing only 14 poets among all those first published between 1917 and 1949, the editors have made sure we see only Brazil's best. . . . [de Andrade's] poems alone make the book worth having. . . . But there are other poets here who, if they were not first seen in his dazzling company, would assume immediate eminence in international contemporary poetry." Helen Vendler

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ja 7 '73 1800w

BISHOP, JIM. The days of Martin Luther King, Jr. 516p $8.95 Putnam

B or 92 King, Martin Luther
LC 70-161607

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Choice 8:1636 F '72 200w

Reviewed by D. W. Shriver
Christian Century 89:256 Mr 1 '72 370w

Reviewed by Harry Malm
Library J 97:1181 Mr 15 '72 100w

BISHOP, JONATHAN. Something else. 284p $7.95; pa $2.45 Braziller

814
ISBN 0-8076-0619-7; 0-8076-0608-1 (pa)
LC 77-161570

In this collection of essays the author "comments on literary criticism, thinking, art, nature, religious matters, and [other subjects]." (Library J)

"[Bishop's writings] are grouped into five themes: the end of thought, the beginning of life, imagination, encounter, and creation. This is a volume for the intelligent and cultivated reader. . . . It is sprinkled with references to Thoreau, Henry James, Emerson, Whitman, etc. . . . The reader with a bent towards technical philosophy . . . will feel that the book absorbing as it is, is forever promising and almost delivering. The writing skill is high, the examples are richly varied and provocative. . . . Basically, the whole is an entertaining exercise in applied Platonism." R. B. Nordberg

Best Sell 31:455 Ja 15 '72 300w

"Mainly [the author] explores 'the place of imaginative literature in the world.' Literature does no less than to 'proclaim the world'; criticism proclaims this literature. Literature is essentially about 'metamorphosis of persons,' best met in its image of transforming 'encounter.' . . . Bishop's analysis of John's gospel account of Jesus and the blind man (early 'encounter therapy') is brilliant. He is even better on Coleridge's 'Primary Imagination,' and makes a fine contribution to our understanding of mimesis. . . . Still, the 'Secondary Imagination' is left rather vague, and by placing criticism as a form of 'tertiary imagination' Bishop reveals an incomplete grasp of the implications of his own book: I closed it with an understanding that the clear distinctions between criticisms and art are probably arbitrary in most cases." Barry Westburg

J Aesthetics 31:133 fall '72 220w

"This unusual book is about . . . 'making contact with the world.' . . . The subjects [discussed] are common enough; but what makes Bishop's book 'something else' is the essentially literary way he handles these topics, forsaking the usual discursive delineation of 'problems' for a loosely assembled collage of personal anecdotes, quotations, and pithy summations. The effectiveness of the approach in illuminating some of the ways we attend to the world around us depends largely on how the examples strike the individual reader. It will probably appeal to those who are tired of the traditional division of disciplines in the humanities." J. H. Whittaker

Library J 97:503 F 1 '72 120w

BLACK, CAMPBELL. Death's head; a novel. 288p $5.95 Lippincott

ISBN 0-397-00752-3 LC 79-38297

This novel has two main characters. "Schwarzenbach, the doctor, has returned to Berlin in 1945 under a false name to avoid American reprisals. He is recognised by a Jew, Grünwald, who has escaped the holocaust by helping with the doctor's 'experiments'. Schwarzenbach pursues the guilt-ridden Jew through occupied Germany, and shoots him down, ratlike, in a Munich cellar, to silence possible betrayal." (New Statesman)

Reviewed by D. F. Lawler

Best Sell 32:245 S 1 '72 420w

Reviewed by H. C. Veit

Library J 97:3184 O 1 '72 80w

"The nature of the Nazi evil, the barrenness of the dogma, was so staggering that I cannot recall anyone . . . who has been able to confront it and portray it without incoherent bombast or drear repetitiousness. Regrettably, [Black's novel] veers towards the second category. . . . The nature of evil and guilt, the possibility of redemption through love and contact with courageous, innocent survivors of the holocaust are touched upon but never grasped; while the narrative of the chase, the joyless couplings with decrepit whores, the encounters with unpleasing US interrogators fill out what seemed like a very long haul through a bog of creative writing." Mary Borg

New Statesman 84:27 J1 7 '72 230w

"Basically, [this novel] is a study of the Nazi mentality, with all its arrogance, its self-righteous whining, the utter insensitivity of the members of the Master Race. At the end there is an ironic reversal, when the Nazi faces the mental torture the Jew once had to undergo. This is a superb job. It will clutch the attention of any reader." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p40 S 10 '72 100w

"Black makes exciting reading out of some of the worst human misery the world has known. It is certainly refreshing to come across a serious writer prepared to use thriller techniques; but questions of taste do enter in. It is alarming to find oneself turning the pages to discover the precise nature of Schwarzenbach's ghastly deeds in Poland. . . . There are some good things in this novel, though. A 'Scrapbook for 1945' tone is never far away. . . . Black does manage to capture the postwar mood of tired uncertainty, with the Nazis scarcely aware that they have lost and the Allies scarcely aware that they have won. . . . But the dialogue, finally, brings everything down."

TLS p851 J1 21 '72 280w

BLACK, CYRIL E., ed. The future of the international legal order, v2. See The future of the international legal order

BLACK, STUART, Jr. auth. Checking it out.
See Cole, M.

BLACKSTONE, TESSA. Students in conflict. See Students in conflict

BLACKIE, JOHN. Inside the primary school; with a foreword by Lady Plowden. 148p il $4.95; pa $2.25 Schocken

372.24 Education, Elementary—Great Britain

ISBN 0-8052-3427-6 LC 71-163327

This book "sketches in the origins of the open-education movement, describes how it works in Britain, and shows how the British experience is based on modern knowledge of how children grow and learn. . . . It goes into detail about various aspects of the curriculum. . . . The organization of the open classroom and school and the role of teachers and the headmaster are [described]." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

Reviewed by J. C. Grannis

Commonweal 95:399 Ja 28 '72 700w

"To a field already containing a great many studies, this book is a welcome addition, largely because of the author's extensive firsthand experience. Blackie, who was chief inspector for primary education in England and one of the assessors of the Plowden Council, writes with authority on the open classroom as it applies to children from three to 11 years of age. The heart of the book deals with the relationship between the child's level of development and curricular activities in reading, writing, speaking, mathematics, science, history, geography, foreign languages, physical education, music, and arts and crafts. Writing with verve and zeal, the author presents a number of original explanations and teaching suggestions." S. R. Cohen

Library J 97:181 Ja 15 '72 150w

"[The author's] opening chapters are as helpful to Americans trying to understand this movement for change in England as they were for the lay English reader. . . . Although admitting that certain things can be salvaged from the 'old method,' he takes an unequivocal stand on the inadequacy of traditional teaching. He leaves no loopholes a parent or teacher could use—'some of us work one way, some another and they're both good'—as a comforting nook. . . . Blackie has written a tough polemic on the new ideas in education, bound to alienate many unreconstructed teachers, and thrill the converts. . . . [His book] should be read by American teachers interested in changing their classrooms. Lacking both her Majesty's Inspectors and the constant intimate workshops and conferences available in England to help teachers develop materials and ideas, we need such books." Beatrice Gross

Teach Col Rec 73:607 My '72 650w

BLACKS in America; bibliographical essays, by James M. McPherson [and others]. 430p $8.95 Doubleday

016.30145 Negroes—History—Bibliography
LC 70-164723

"Five Princeton professors have put together 100 bibliographic essays on various facets of the Afro-American experience from 1500 to the present." (Choice) Index.

"The sheer magnitude of the endeavor has made omissions inevitable. . . . On the whole, however, a remarkably thorough collection of sources which also points out gaps in recent literature. Belongs in every reference library in the U.S."

Choice 9:492 Je '72 200w

"[This book offers] the best listing of writings on race in America from slavery to the present to appear in the literature. . . . One finds not only citations for books and essays, but page and chapter notations helping the reader to special themes within these writings, and notations about abbreviated editions and changed titles. The book is organized both thematically and chronologically, it has asterisks to denote paperback and hardbound editions, dates of original as well as reprint publication. It is a work of exactitude that will surely find its way quickly to the desks of serious researchers and college students hunting for term papers in black history and literature: the central subjects of this volume." Gilbert Osofsky

J Am Hist 59:117 Je '72 450w

Reviewed by E. K. Welsch

Library J 96:3591 N 1 '71 150w

BLADES, WILLIAM. The biography and typography of William Caxton, England's first printer; with an introd. by James Moran. 383p il $13.50 Rowman & Littlefield

686.209 Printing—History. Caxton, William
ISBN 0-87471-036-7 LC 77-29487

This monograph is "reprinted from the revised but much abridged second edition of 1877. [It] attempts primarily to resurrect Caxton's life from documents—many of which, in Public Record Office or Somerset House, Blades was first to discover—and to reconstruct his techniques from analogies with his own practical experience as a nineteenth-century master-printer." (TLS)

"[There is] a 10-page cautionary introduction by James Moran. While this book is an important landmark of Victorian bibliographical scholarship, it is often quite misleading. It could be recommended only to libraries with very extensive holdings in bibliography."

Choice 9:48 Mr '72 90w

"[The] three-dimensional approach, in which biography, typography, and bibliography illuminate one another, justifies the reputation of Blades's Caxton as an innovative classic. Yet it is also a dangerous book, full of seductive error, vitiated not only by the inevitable obsolescence of a century but, it must be said, by fatal gaps in the competence and judgment of its author. . . . [Blades] had no acquaintance with early printing outside England, and hence no idea of which features of Caxton might be normal (and so capable of being illuminated by extrapolation), and which unique. . . . It would be wise to read [this book] as a landmark in the history of bibliography, but unwise to believe a word of it."

TLS p1588 D 17 '71 600w

BLAIR, JOHN M. Economic concentration; structure, behavior and public policy. 742p il $16.95 Harcourt

338.8 Business. Prices. Industry and state—U.S. Trusts, Industrial
ISBN 0-15-127425-8 LC 79-187702

Dr. Blair traces the history of economic concentration finding it inevitable in the rise of nineteenth-century technology. He discusses "the various forces now working against a growth of concentration . . . such as specialized technology, the . . . inefficiency of large organizations, and their relative lack of creativity. He analyzes the . . . forces that push toward more and more concentration . . . mergers and acquisitions, . . . television advertising, monopolistic practices against smaller rivals, and, of growing importance, reliance on governmental help through loans, supports, tariffs. . . . The last part of the book is devoted to . . . [an] examination of the three courses open to public policy—the competitive approach, the regulatory approach, and the government-ownership approach." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The material reflects the anti-bigness viewpoint of Blair, who served as the distinguished chief economist of the Senate Subcommittee on Antitrust and Monopoly, and does not adequately set forth opposing professional views. Too often the book reads like a Nader exposé rather than a balanced, scholarly work, and even the chapter titles and subtitles reflect the author's bias (e.g. 'The creative backwardness of bigness'). Blair's study is useful to the specialist because he summarizes a great deal of work in the area. . . . An interesting aspect is Blair's discussion of the forces for centralization and, especially, decentralization in industry today."

Choice 9:1172 N '72 160w

"If Blair's material can be criticized for 'selectivity' and one-sidedness, it is nevertheless substantive documentation for the viewpoint presented, and thus it places upon potential critics the burden of a comparable analysis—or the alternative of keeping quiet. Discussion of domestic economic policy frequently degenerates into an exchange of anecdote, assertion and opinion on the ground that 'nothing is known about —,' where the blank is filled in with the topic of the day. Blair's comprehensive compendium of data demonstrates that there is almost no aspect of contemporary American industrial structure about which nothing is known. On the contrary, he has drawn a vast collection of evidence and opinion into one place." L. E. Preston

BLAIR, J. M.—Continued

Nation 214:826 Je 26 '72 1350w

"[This is] a masterful synthesis of the theory and practice of concentration. . . . [Blair's] work must now stand as the single most important on the extent and consequences of a concentrated economy." B. D. Nossiter

New Repub 167:24 D 9 '72 3800w

"Really much more than a book, Blair's 700-plus pages of densely worded text and tables are an indictment of big business and its big government overseers culled from 44 volumes of Senate Anti-Trust Subcommittee hearings. No other current work on the subject can claim the breadth of Blair's detailed account of the theory and practice of noncompetition, or the Government policies that so erratically influence America's marketplace." S. P. Lee and Peter Passell

N Y Times Bk R p31 S 10 '72 2300w

BLAKE, ROBERT, jt. auth. Wives. See Thorp, R.

BLAKE, WILLIAM. The book of Thel; a facsimile and a critical text; ed. by Nancy Bogen. 82p il col pl $10 Brown univ. press; N.Y. public lib

821

ISBN 0-87057-127-3 LC 74-155857

This edition of one of Blake's prophetic works is "based on a collation of the seventeen extant copies of Thel engraved and printed by Blake himself. Facing this text, the hand-colored plates of the New York Public Library copy are reproduced. . . . The three states of the poem, and Blake's punctuation, are discussed in the light of hitherto overlooked textual variants. The development of Blake's 'long line' also is traced. Finally, previous interpretations of Thel are evaluated, and a . . . new interpretation is proposed." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This excellent edition . . . provides new bibliographical information, an improved text, and an interesting suggestion for a new interpretation. The facsimile, in fine-screen offset lithography, is remarkably good. Highly recommended."

Choice 9:210 Ap '72 80w

TLS p1145 S 29 '72 600w

"With illustrations by the Meriden Gravure Company and a careful account of all known and conjectural copies of 'The Book of Thel,' this a 'must' for Blake fans anywhere in the world. A collation of the seventeen known extant copies of this prophetic work, beautifully set forth, is most welcome. Nancy Bogen's interpretation of the poem is made after detailed consideration of previous attempts to clarify this difficult text."

Va Q R 48:lvii spring '72 80w

BLAKEMORE, KENNETH. The book of gold. 224p il col pl $17.50 Stein & Day

669.2 Gold. Goldsmithing

ISBN 8128-1413-4 LC 73-160347

"The introductory chapters comprise a history of the discovery and search for gold. . . . The following chapters [deal with] the goldsmiths of ancient civilizations, through the Renaissance and the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries into modern times. . . . [Part Two] describes the Golden Regalia of Europe, its monarchs and royalty, the minting of gold coins, methods of refining gold and the hallmarks of the minters." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Glossary. Index.

"Although the major interest of the author of this book is the work of goldsmiths throughout the ages, this volume could well be accepted as a companion volume to Timothy Green's 'The World of Gold' [BRD 1968]. . . . Libraries would be well advised to add this to their collections."

Best Sell 31:481 F 1 '72 190w

"This is a sumptuous survey. . . . The text contains a wealth of information of the type that will appeal to hobbyists, but should also be useful in general reference work. The book's greatest appeal, however, is in its numerous fascinating illustrations, including many beautiful color photographs. There is also a useful illustrated section on systems and standards of gold hall-marking." Jill Fischman

Library J 97:64 Ja 1 '72 110w

BLAMIRE, DAVID. David Jones: artist and writer. 220p il Can$10 Univ. of Toronto press

828 Jones, David Michael

ISBN 0-8020-1877-7 LC 77-190341

"The author explains particular aspects of David Jones' work, such as his ideas on the nature of art, his use of Arthurian elements, his use of 'mosaic' techniques in In Parenthesis [BRD 1962], and the need for an 'anthropological' rather than a 'theological' approach to The Anathemata [BRD 1962]. . . . [Blamires also discusses] Jones' dual literary role: both as a literary innovator . . . and as a cultural conservationist with an . . . attachment to the many layers of the national past. There is an illustrated section on David Jones as artist and book illustrator." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[It is] Blamires's belief that David Jones's preoccupation with religious themes and symbols and his continuous affirmation of wholeness and unity in the universe suggest he is a writer ahead of his time. Be that as it may, this sympathetic study could have been more useful to the reader unfamiliar with Jones's work had its explications been more incisive and had it included more direct quotes. It is nonetheless a welcome introduction to an original writer who should be better known." Nona Balakian

N Y Times Bk R p30 S 17 '72 250w

"This is an excellent book, for what it does and also for what it does not do. David Jones is a writer of fine exactitude who at times confronts his reader with problems of understanding and interpretation. His private (or universal) vision, his motifs and themes and modes of expression, the frequently recondite nature of his literary allusion, and his religious beliefs—his entire 'system,' so to speak—are standing temptations to any who believe that you make your author more important by making him more formidable, and yourself more impressive by showing more pedantry. But Dr Blamires is consistently clear and helpful, concerned with the welfare of his subject and reader alike. He has written a disciplined and civilized study."

TLS p986 Ag 20 '71 1150w

BLAMIRE, HARRY. Milton's creation; a guide through Paradise lost. 308p $7.25; pa $3.25 Barnes & Noble

821 Milton, John—Paradise lost

ISBN 416-65880-6; 416-65890-3 (pa)

LC [76-859470]

"The 12 chapters of this [study] paraphrase the 12 books of Milton's epic. . . . [Blamires] elaborates the connotations of numerous words, calls attention to various classical and Biblical allusions, and occasionally perceives imagistic and thematic parallels between Paradise lost and the works of certain modern writers, particularly Eliot and Joyce." (Choice) Index.

"Blamires is writing for the general reader who wants a running commentary that exactly follows the order of Paradise lost. The book does not develop a perspective or an approach to Paradise lost, nor does it mention the major critical controversies that have arisen from conflicting interpretations of the epic. Blamires' style is lucid and graceful. . . . Recommended for undergraduates."

Choice 9:56 Mr '72 130w

"Blamires promises us 'a bird's-eye view of the poem as a whole', the operative word in his title is 'through'. . . . The blow-by-blow account is not really a presentation of the poem as a happening; but it does make the book easy to dip into and so enhances its appeal to the intelligent [reader] whose intelligence is chiefly applied to the cutting of corners. One way of voyaging through Milton's poem is to read it. Mr Blamires reduces the temptation to do this by providing what he calls 'an elucidation which follows the original writer's sentences closely enough to disentangle and clarify them at a glance'. Some explication and commentary are bound up in this disentangled poem, but an annotated edition would serve the purpose better and keep the mind trained on the main event more firmly."

TLS p1120 S 17 '71 450w

BLAND, JOHN H. Forests of Lilliput; the realm of mosses and lichens; line drawings by Stanley Wyatt. 210p $7.95 Prentice-Hall 588 Lichens. Mosses. Plant lore
ISBN 0-13-326863-3 LC 70-143811

In this work on "natural history of mosses and lichens . . . [in addition to] morphology, anatomy, and taxonomy, there is much relating to human activities, e.g. food, commercial, medicinal, and ornamental uses." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Some inaccurate statements appear but they are relatively few compared with many popular natural histories. The author sometimes uses technical terms when not needed and the two-and-a-half page glossary is not complete enough to help with all of them. The illustrations are very fine and helpful; however, it would have been useful to have a leafy liverwort illustrated. For those inclined to field study, identification of common lichens by growth and structure, and identification of common mosses by habitat comprise two chapters."

Choice 8:1603 F '72 160w

"The work of ordering organisms is done by a group of scientists—taxonomists—who usually don't write popular books. That pleasant chore falls to enthusiasts like Bland who are more interested in sharing their delight than in adhering to dry rules. In this work, he offers advice to young scientists and amateurs, but in a gentle way. For example, he suggests identifying specimens via habitat rather than via complex keys. For those who wish to dig further there is a solid list of monographs and articles. Lore is mixed with fact throughout." C. R. Long

Library J 97:510 F 1 '72 120w

BLANTON, SMILEY. Diary of my analysis with Sigmund Freud; with biographical notes and comments by Margaret Gray Blanton; introd. by Iago Galdston. 141p $7.95 Hawthorn bks.

150.19 Freud, Sigmund. Psychoanalysis
LC 75-158015

This is a report on sessions from September, 1929 to June, 1930, with shorter meetings occurring in 1935, 1937, and 1938.

"[This] is an adequate, even good introductory study for the beginning psychology student or the general reader interested in Freud, father-practitioner of psychoanalysis. It is better still for those curious about what happened in the analytic hour between Freud and Smiley Blanton, M.D., a psychiatrist-patient-disciple of Freud. The book falls short of excellence as a historical document because [it] . . . cannot be judged with scientific objectivity. What the reader receives is a diary of unusual and interesting notes in an incomplete form. . . . Or perhaps the title of the book should be changed to something like 'Notes of a Session with Sigmund Freud with Some Comments,' so as not to mislead the reader." D. R. Majkut

Best Sell 31:550 Mr 15 '72 370w

"A gentle, adoring, and fragmented recollection of a great man by a devoted follower. Specialized libraries in psychology will be interested in this one."

Choice 9:284 Ap '72 150w

"Blanton was in his late forties when he undertook his training analysis; Freud was in his seventies. . . . Although it deals more with analytic concepts than with personal experiences, the diary does provide an intimate glimpse into the lives of the persons involved. Blanton held Freud in deep reverence, portraying him as a most gentle person—a view that differs from others' perceptions. Mrs. Blanton's notes describing the effect of the analysis on their marriage adds a fascinating dimension and sent me back through the diary trying to trace the process. This short book is rewarding reading." Harold Wilensky

Library J 96:2327 J1 '71 90w

BLASSINGAME, JOHN W. The slave community: plantation life in the antebellum South. 262p il $7.95 Oxford

917.5 Slavery in the U.S. Plantation life. Negroes
ISBN 0-19-501579-7 LC 72-77495

"Using a variety of sources, including the memoirs of former slaves, the author examines the ways that blacks became enslaved, their process of acculturation in the American South, and their . . . ties to their African heritage. He shows how the slave was able to control parts of his own life while often wearing the mask of submissiveness required by the harsh realities of the plantation regime." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"You'll be particularly interested in the discussion of religion in this slaves'-point-of-view book on slavery."

Christian Century 89:990 O 4 '72 50w

"Hitherto many historians have given us the planters' eye view of slavery and left us to extrapolate from the masters' accounts a picture of slave existence. Blassingame turns to the evidence in slave narratives and autobiographies and adds this material to the more familiar stuff of the foreign observers and Southern chroniclers to create a balanced historical study. He often crosses from history into psychology and sociology, and his book will reopen some of the debates begun by Stanley M. Elkins and his critics. The book is critical and provocative—most libraries will want it." E. G. Detlefsen

Library J 97:3583 N 1 '72 110w

BLAUSTEIN, ALBERT P., ed. Constitutions of the countries of the world; a series of updated texts, constitutional chronologies and annotated bibliographies; ed. by Albert P. Blaustein and Gisbert H. Flanz. v 1 $69 Oceana 342 Constitutions

This "volume includes 12 . . . constitutions: The Congo (Brazzaville), Congo (Kinshasa), Ecuador, Fiji, Gambia, Korea, Malawi, Paraguay, Turkey, Uruguay, Western Samoa, and Yugoslavia . . . [as well as] al historical and constitutional chronology [and] a . . . translation of the complete constitution presently in force, with footnotes and cross references to changes and amendments." (Library J) Annotated bibliographies.

"All materials appear to be photocopies. In only one or two instances is this any disadvantage because of the small type-face, but those texts, fortunately, are very short. The format of the commentaries and bibliographies is uniformly easy to read . . . The multilingual, annotated bibliographies range in length from two to six pages. They include primary as well as secondary sources, official and unofficial sources, and general or background literature. The annotations are concise and knowledgeable commentaries on the particular relevance of each item."

Booklist 69:249 N 15 '72 1400w

"[This is] the first volume in a projected 10-volume series which will contain the constitutions of all countries . . . which are not easily obtainable in English. . . . These brief essays are of minimal assistance to those with any familiarity with the constitutions involved although they could be helpful to the beginning student. The constitutions are collected in loose-leaf form to facilitate future additions. . . . No index."

Choice 8:1437 Ja '72 130w

"A most useful reference tool." A. F. Peterson
Library J 97:861 Mr 1 '72 210w

BLAUSTEIN, ARTHUR I. The star-spangled hustle [by] Arthur I. Blaustein and Geoffrey Faux; foreword by Ronald V. Dellums. 289p $7.95 Doubleday

330.973 Negroes—Economic conditions. Negro businessmen. U.S.—Politics and government
ISBN 0-385-06260-5 LC 72-79376

The authors seek to prove "that the Nixon program leading toward black capitalism has accomplished exceedingly little." (Library J)

"In the authors' own terms 'this is a political book.' It is also a highly partisan book, and one which builds the case very thoroughly for the existence of a gap between opportunity and promise in the policy of the Nixon Administration. Essentially the authors detail the link between social conditions and institutional structure, and see social problems as the symptoms of economic judgments made by government and corporate powers. They subject governmental agencies, the corporate world, and public figures to thoroughgoing scrutiny. And they argue for the necessity of social change through a more coherent and meaningful economic development policy than has yet been evident. . . . The book's substantive elements should lead to public discussion and should attract popular interest."

Paul Wasserman
Library J 97:2580 Ag '72 180w

BLAUSTEIN, A. I.—Continued

"Of particular value is the way the authors demonstrate that the program not only failed to achieve its objectives but undermined community political unity and isolated the problems of minority businessmen from those of other disadvantaged peoples. The best summing-up that the program has had or is likely to receive. Blaustein is a Nation contributor." Carey McWilliams

Nation 216:58 Ja 8 '73 60w

"[This] exposé could have been somewhat more damning had its characters been less typecast and its language a bit less polemical. But [it] bulges with solid economic and historical grist. It reminds us that blacks own pathetically little of their own communities, and that throughout America blacks own less . . . per family in all financial and capital assets [than] . . . the average white family."

New Repub 167:41 O 21 '72 450w

BLEWETT, NEAL. The peers, the parties and the people; the British general elections of 1910. 548p maps $17.50 Univ. of Toronto press

324.42 Elections—Great Britain. Great Britain—Politics and government—20th century ISBN 0-8020-1838-6 LC 73-185701

"Blewett analyzes the two British elections of 1910 which were fought over the right of peers to reject legislation—specifically Lloyd George's people's budget—and which brought about a constitutional revolution and began the political emasculation of the House of Lords." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Superficially, Mr Blewett's book is a piece of straightforward quantitative psephology. In reality, it is a contribution towards the argument that the 'progressive' forces of society—Liberalism and Labour—established convincingly in 1910, as contrasted with the confused state of affairs in 1906, electoral prerogatives and historical credentials for making the decision against the imperialist thesis."

Economist 244:51 JI 15 '72 260w

"Utilizing methods developed at Nuffield College which heretofore have been applied only to contemporary elections, [the author] juxtaposes statistical tables illustrative of various electoral trends and a comprehensive narrative which embraces not only immediate issues, but the whole trend of political developments from the 1886 Unionist split in the Liberal party onwards. . . . Broad, imaginative research and a wealth of detail and profundity make this work the final word on the subject. Highly recommended for graduate libraries and specialized collections in British history and politics." J. A. Casada

Library J 97:3583 N 1 '72 190w

BLIT, LUCJAN. The origins of Polish socialism; the history and ideas of the first Polish socialist party, 1878-1886; pub. for the Centre for int. studies, London school of economic and political science. 160p $10 Cambridge

329.9 Socialist party (Poland). Socialism—Poland ISBN 0-521-08192-0 LC 70-152642

"Being the first part of the author's projected history of Polish socialism, [this book] . . . deals with the situation in Poland after the January uprising in 1863, the beginnings of the socialist movement in Poland, and the first Polish socialist party—the International Social Revolutionary Party 'Proletariat' until its liquidation in 1886." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] is the first study in English on socialism in Poland. . . . Written in a lucid style, well documented and objective, the book is recommended to those interested in East European studies and socialism."

Choice 8:1500 Ja '72 130w

"This study offers scholarly thoroughness and objectivity and makes for generally good reading." Karen Harvey

Library J 96:3754 N 15 '71 120w

"Blit's careful reconstruction of the history of Proletariat is marred somewhat by repetitiveness and by careless proofreading. However, when he tries to relate the traditions of this first Polish socialist group to the Polish communism of today, his remarks are very judicious."

TLS p210 F 25 '72 500w

BLIVEN, BRUCE. Under the guns; New York: 1775-1776. 397p $10 Harper

973.3 New York (City)—History. U.S.—History—Revolution ISBN 0-06-010379-5 LC 69-15299

"From June 1775 to July 1776, New York was caught between peace and war, literally 'under the guns' of British warships in the harbor, but nominally under the control of the patriot provincial congress. Bliven gives [an] account of this eventful year in an already cosmopolitan city. The moderates who ruled New York tried to placate both patriot and Tory. Thus, while fortifying the city against British ships, they continued to supply British soldiers with food and water. The volume ends with news of the Declaration of Independence, while New York awaits the imminent British invasion." (Library J)

"Bliven has reconstructed events in great detail, believing that the very slowness of New York's operations makes it possible to examine minutely a set of problems which in fact beset all the new colonial governments. He is quite right. The story may be undramatic, but it is immensely interesting." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 230:92 Ag '72 170w

Choice 9:1196 N '72 160w

"Well written, but poorly documented, this work contains a good bibliography of both primary and secondary sources. Recommended." E. D. Johnson

Library J 97:2087 Je 1 '72 110w

"[The author] never forgets to locate the scenes of action by references to present-day buildings and landmarks. The trouble with his book, though, is the period it covers. The pushings and haulings in New York City at this time were neither important nor quaint. From the arrival from Boston of news of Bunker Hill to the word from Philadelphia that the Declaration of Independence had been adopted, what was really interesting about the Revolution was occurring elsewhere. The volume is embellished with a large-sized reproduction of a contemporary map of New York City."

N Y Times Bk R p44 S 17 '72 280w

"Bliven has a fine sense of style and drama, but his book is most conspicuously marked by a refinement of scholarship, a research so thorough that he seems to be not so much recounting from the record as remembering an experience. The result is a work of history—neither 'popular' nor 'academic' history but solid, full-bodied history that one can read with confidence and pleasure."

New Yorker 48:79 Ag 26 '72 240w

Reviewed by Walter Clemons

Newsweek 80:82 JI 24 '72 200w

BLOCH, ERNST. Atheism in Christianity; the religion of the Exodus and the kingdom; tr. by J. T. Swann. 273p $9.50 Herder & Herder

211 Christianity. Atheism ISBN 0-665-00012-X LC 72-165497

The author "reinterprets the Judeo-Christian tradition as a liberating, revolutionary force. . . . [He] argues that there are two Bibles: one, the most familiar, is a theocratic Bible, which through . . . textual corruptions has been made a weapon of the ruling classes in mystifying and legitimizing their oppression and exploitation; the other is a people's Bible, an underground Bible, which more truthfully represents the eschatological and utopian themes of Judaism and Christianity." (Library J)

"Is it possible to present a convincing case for an atheistic but hopeful humanism that is not a rejection but in some genuine sense a realization of religion and specifically of Christianity? The reader will have to judge that matter for himself after reflecting on this latest work by the famous Marxist scholar; in any event, however, he will definitely be challenged, provoked, and infuriated by this strange and complex book. . . . Bloch is here issuing a forceful call for the 'activation of religion's non-opiate, non-oppressive elements.' That is, a summons for human decision, hope, utopia, and the kingdom of freedom. . . . His notion of an 'underground' Bible is intriguing and persuasive. The style is highly demanding but well worth the effort needed. Unfortunately, no index or bibliography."

Choice 9:982 O '72 200w

"In this fascinating reinterpretation of Cain, Job, Christ, and Paul, Bloch seeks the liberating kernel of Christianity in its alienating shell." Mark Poster

Library J 96:3622 N 1 '71 150w

BLOCH, ERNST. On Karl Marx [tr. by John Maxwell]. (An Azimuth bk) 173p $5.95
Herder & Herder
193 Marx, Karl
LC 73-87750

In this study "attention is given to the political maturation of the young Karl Marx and to his studies and intellectual relationship to important thinkers of his time. Bloch concludes with a . . . summons to the West to consider Marx anew as a thinker still vitally relevant to contemporary social issues, and not merely as the father of a sovietized political system." (Publisher's note)

"Bloch's intellectual portrait of Marx is colored by his characteristic futurist and utopian bent. The extended commentary on Marx's 'Theses on Feuerbach,' the most systematic section of the book, reveals Marxism as a philosophy which clarifies 'the horizon of the future,' thereby giving 'reality its dimension of reality.' Increasingly I find Bloch's Marx to be something of an existentialist who defines human reality as temporal, more particularly as oriented toward the future, with the resonances of Heidegger and Sartre. . . . The book is flawed by the failure to provide publication information about each essay it contains." Mark Poster

Library J 96:2513 Ag '71 130w

"[Bloch] recognizes that for the young today it is the early Marx, still vibrating with the excitement brought about by his reading, first of Hegel, then of Feuerbach, that most charms them; but he hopes to convince them that 'the mature Marx, that great worker, is the truth of the young Marx, for he put his plan into action and turned his knowledge into operating instructions.'" J. M. Cameron

N Y Rev of Books 18:31 Je 29 '72 1050w

BLOCH, ROBERT. Night-world. 160p $4.95
Simon & Schuster
SBN 671-21282-6 LC 70-189750

"A madman has been committed to an expensive asylum by his wife, and just before he is due to be released, escapes together with a number of other madmen, leaving behind a noticeable number of corpses." (Library J)

"Bloch wrote Psycho [BRD 1959], and no matter how one may feel about thrillers involving homicidal maniacs, Night-World is certain to be a great success; it positively screams to be made into a movie. . . . The efforts to track [the madman] down speed along at a terrifying fast pace, and the plot is decorated with murders too numerous to count. A properly nail-gnawing thriller, and one doesn't have to believe a word of it." Henry Veit

Library J 97:2654 Ag '72 100w

Reviewed by Dale Thompson

Library J 97:3473 O 15 '72 90w [YA]

"[This] is a very conventional account of a psychotic mass murderer. . . . Bloch is a professional enough writer to keep things moving, but everything in [this novel] is so predictable that the book is something of a bore." Newgate Calendar

N Y Times Bk ■ p24 Ag 6 '72 60w

"The writing is taut, never deviating from the classic concept that the shortest distance between two points is a straight plot line. . . . [The author] demonstrates a commanding display of sensitivity to the variety of language and life-styles and the social heterogeneity that typify the Los Angeles scene." O. L. Bailey
Sat ■ 55:62 Ag 26 '72 130w

BLOCH, HERBERT. Herblock's state of the Union. 224p il $6.95 Simon & Schuster 741.5 Cartoons and caricatures. U.S.—Politics and government 1961—Cartoons and caricatures
SBN 671-21204-4 LC 70-189745

A report on the Nixon Administration, with text and illustrations by the cartoonist whose work appears in The Washington Post and other publications.

"It is Mr. Bloch's fanciful notion that the U.S. government should be operated intelligently by honest men, a position that enables him to lambaste, with shrewd cartoons and testy prose, virtually every aspect of national affairs." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 230:135 O '72 50w

Economist 245:[book survey p15] N 11 '72 100w

Reviewed by Jack Forman

Library J 97:3717 N 15 '72 130w

"Herblock reports that the news from Washington is very bad. In a dozen lively chapters, he recounts major themes in the history of this Administration, including its devotion to a big arms budget, its subversion of traditional liberties ('The Secret Snooper-state'), its peculiar version of 'law and order,' and its management of foreign affairs. His essay on the Vietnam war is a model of restrained and passionate eloquence. Two of his most effective essays are 'Prolitics' or how Mr. Nixon has substituted public-relations techniques for the substance of Government, and 'Hail to the Office.' . . . [Herblock has] produced the most entertaining political book of the season and the truest. A hundred years from now he will be read and his cartoons admired by everyone trying to understand these strange times." W. V. Shannon

N Y Times Bk R p44 O 29 '72 1000w

BLOCK, JACK. Lives through time; in collaboration with Norma Haan. 313p $12.50 Bancroft bks.

155.2 Personality

ISBN 0-9600332-0-3 LC 70-156597

The authors report on a scientific study devoted to personality development. The material of the study comes from the 'longitudinal archives of the Institute of Human Development, University of California, Berkeley. The individuals studied were 171 men and women and the information . . . dates back to the 1920's. The data include family context variables, behavioral observations, autonomic reactivity, alcohol consumption, body build, inventory responses, occupational histories, maternal qualities, and . . . more. The research design applied . . . [is] explained. A typological approach [is used to] . . . bring order to the . . . findings. A final interpretive chapter seeks the larger implications of the study." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"Of the original 460 persons in two different studies, 171 records were combined for this analysis. . . . An interesting section of the study was not elaborated on: when approached as adults, how did members of the sample perceive their present and future goals? . . . The reader must be sympathetic to the problems of a longitudinal study with missing or incomplete files and 'lost' persons. However, it is hoped that other writers will glean a more useful book out of the Berkeley data. In its present form, probably not too useful to libraries." Choice 9:284 Ap '72 180w

"[This book attempts] to trace connections between the adolescents' characteristics and their adult life styles. . . . Files describing 171 persons as seen by some first-rate psychologist, over 7 years in adolescence and over about 3 days in their late 30's [were studied]. . . . Block used his version of William Stephenson's Q technique. . . . [He] worked painstakingly to get reasonably consistent ratings for each file. . . . He carried out a factor analysis to define five male and six female types. For each type this book offers eight dense pages of descriptive findings, mostly in the form of Q statements on which the type differed from other subjects of the same sex. . . . [Despite some weaknesses in this book] Block, and all the others who contributed to his research deserve our thanks." L. J. Cronbach

Science 176:785 My 19 '72 1900w

BLOM, GERTRUDE DUBY, phot. Heirs of the ancient Maya. See Price, C.

BLOOM, HAROLD. The ringers in the tower; studies in romantic tradition. 352p $12 Univ. of Chicago press

809.1 Romanticism

ISBN 0-226-06048-9 LC 73-149595

This "is a collection of essays written by Bloom during the last decade or so. Most have appeared previously . . . in magazines and journals, in anthologies, [or] as paperback introductions. . . . [The assortment adds up to a] series of 'studies in Romantic tradition' [from]

BLOOM, HAROLD—Continued

Blake . . . down to such contemporaries as Allen Ginsberg and A. R. Ammons." (Library J)

"[The essays are] long on subjective 'interpretations' and comparisons (the pages seethe with proper names), short on style and literary analysis. Though the essays center on a loosely categorized 'Romantic tradition,' they are poorly integrated, repetitive, widely varied in audience orientation. Bloom . . . likes calling poems 'marvelous' and quoting without much clue to his sources; he praises poems that 'console' him and help him to live his life, and quotes from them abundantly. Useful for graduate students as target practice; though the long essay 'Bacchus and Merlin' is valuable, Bloom generally leaves his ringers dead."

Choice 8:1172 N '71 120w

"One reads Bloom for his insights into poetry, not society, and the book's emphasis is squarely on poetry. Many of Bloom's viewpoints won't meet with universal approval: some aspects of his reading of Shelley are almost as controversial as his thoughts on American politics and sensibility in the late 1960's. After all is said and done, however, the author remains one of our most brilliant interpreters of the Romantic tradition. Students of that literature will certainly wish to look into this work." Keith Cushman

Library J 96:2319 J1 '71 210w

"The paradoxical brilliance of Bloom's studies of romanticism may in part be a matter of emphasis—on Blakean and Coleridgean motifs of metaphysical idealism and on a psychoanalytically conditioned sensitivity to 'violence'—yet the total impression of this author's work is one of clarity and astonishing insight." Martin Lebowitz

Nation 213:278 S 27 '71 1150w

"The volume can be read either as individual essays all dealing more or less with Romantic consciousness, or as more closely related variations on a small group of themes. The latter is the author's own preference. . . . [These essays are] reflections of an intensely energetic and deeply cultivated mind. The author seems to write in two distinct personae. In one he is the epigone of Blake and Shelley, the impassioned annunciator, and at the same time the exemplar, of truths of Romantic imagination and Romantic quest. In the other, he is a detached and urbane observer, a kind of Sainte-Beuve. . . . Common to both styles is an unusual gift of writing the single pregnant sentence that embodies judgment or an insight in aphoristic form." Thomas McFarland

Yale 61:279 D '71 1200w

BLOOM, LOIS. Language development: form and function in emerging grammars. (MIT Res. monograph, no59) 270p $3.95 MIT press 410 Language and languages. Child study
ISBN 0-262-02056-4 LC 77-107987

In this monograph, the author "reports her findings on how three children, ages 19 to 27 months, learned to talk. In analyzing and interpreting the mass of data, she infers the semantic significance of the children's utterances from the context in which they occurred. Bloom offers . . . evidence to show how the 'one-word sentence' and early word combinations remain ambiguous when considered apart from the behavioral and situational contexts. In the development of linguistic expression, even at the ages under consideration, Bloom detects the child's awareness of cognitive-syntactical relationships." (Library J) Bibliography. Glossary. Index.

"This study . . . arrives at some solid conclusions. . . . [The author's] descriptions provide evidence for the linguist that child language is not incoherent. Especially interesting are seven appendices which catalogue the subjects' earliest two-word utterances, negative sentences, and syntactic and single word lexicons. The insights into relative development of syntactic expression and underlying cognitive function should be of some importance to the psychologist. The evidence presented and the resulting inferences may also have significance for the speech pathologist concerned primarily with language disorders in children."

Choice 8:669 J1 '71 240w

"[This is a] carefully prepared study which will be of value to linguists, psychologists, and workers in communications disorders." J. H. Di Leo

Library J 95:3777 N 1 '70 160w

BLOOM, MURRAY TEIGH. Rogues to riches; the trouble with Wall Street. 332p $6.95 Putnam

332.6 Stock exchange. Wall Street. Swindlers and swindling
LC 79-175257

A collection of anecdotes about people who have tried to find ways of making a fortune in the stock market. Portions of this book appeared in the New York Times magazine.

"Bloom writes largely from personal knowledge of his subjects and has apparently interviewed many of them. He includes many direct quotations and much trivia. Two gentlemen, Jerry Allen and Phil Stoller, who might be described as Bloom's chief mentors, reappear throughout the book with anecdotes about their exploits and methods. One learns on first meeting Allen that he is under indictment on conspiracy charges for alleged stock rigging. The book is mildly entertaining, slightly sensational, and basically inconsequential." M. R. Brown

Library J 97:192 Ja 15 '72 100w

"More tales of Wall Street. Bloom, the author of 'The Trouble With Lawyers' [BRD 1969] . . . writes gutsily and sometimes scarily about how a number of Wall Street high rollers paper their fortunes. The view is jaundiced, but the book is not reformist. You can make money, Bloom says, but you have to think hard, and inside info helps."

N Y Times Bk R p24 F 20 '72 60w

BLOOMBERG, MARTY. Introduction to technical services for library technicians [by] Marty Bloomberg and G. Edward Evans. 175p il $7.50 Libs. unlimited

025 Processing (Libraries)
ISBN 0-87287-029-4 LC 79-166966

"This text provides a general introduction to the duties and activities performed in library departments. . . . The book includes chapters covering acquisitions work, bibliographic verification and sources, procedures for ordering, bookkeeping and accounting systems and devices, gifts and exchanges, plus seven chapters on the cataloging of book materials. Several of the chapters contain a section of specialized terminology." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"[The authors] have obviously worked in technical services and one of them, Evans, has been a serials librarian and a cataloger. In addition to a solid knowledge of library procedures they also show a good grasp of publishing activities. . . . The binding and physical makeup are good and the book appears sturdy. . . . [It] is full of 'tips' to library workers. The authors frequently give background information in addition to explaining the bare bones of a particular procedure. . . . There are several tables at appropriate places in the book setting forth detailed listings of staff activities and responsibilities. This should prove helpful to supervisors writing job descriptions or organizing or reorganizing a library." A. J. Fristoe

Col & Res Lib 33:241 My '72 600w

"The 16 chapters seem well organized and complete within the authors' stated purposes. . . . The illustrations are clear and numerous. The use of actual LC cards for illustrative purposes is helpful, [as is] the inclusion of sample entries and pages from bibliographic searching tools. . . . Although brief, the bibliography should prove useful to the beginning nonprofessional in helping him to obtain further details and additional resources. . . . I would recommend its purchase by all libraries having nonprofessionals on their technical services staff. I certainly recommend its evaluation and consideration by all librarians involved in teaching library technology courses." R. R. Carter

Library J 96:3581 N 1 '71 300w

BLOOME, ENID. The air we breathe! 45p il $4.95; lib bdg $5.70 Doubleday 628 Air—Pollution—Juvenile literature
LC 74-139455

"This book tells how you as an individual can contribute to the fight for cleaner air." (Publisher's note) "Kindergarten to grade three." (Library J)

"Bloome seeks unsuccessfully to involve the kindergarten set in the environmental crisis. Black-and-white photographs on nearly every page illustrate the causes and effects of air pollution. The alarmist approach used to begin [this book] . . . overshadows Bloome's weak suggestions for remedial action, and youngsters could become confused and feel helpless when presented with such one-sided, oversimplified information." Muriel Kolb

Library J 97:2475 J1 '72 80w

"It's all very nice to tell middle-class tots that engineers are working to stop pollution, very nice to encourage children to help their parents 'make sure the family car is in good running condition,' but shouldn't we also start them thinking whether we need automobiles in the first place?" Paul Shepard

N Y Times Bk R p8 Ja 2 '72 40w

BLOOME, ENID. The water we drink! 43p il $4.95; lib bdg $5.70 Doubleday

614.7 Water—Pollution—Juvenile literature
LC 78-139456

Black and white photographs illustrate the causes and effects of water pollution. The text describes conditions prevalent today and offers suggestions for fighting pollution. "Kindergarten to grade three." (Library J)

"[Bloome urges children] to 'Ask what lawmakers are doing to protect our waters. . . . In reality . . . [children's] influence is limited and most of these 'things to do' would be unavailing." Muriel Kolb

Library J 97:2475 J1 '72 80w

"Lacklustre government agency photographs [are provided]. . . . I suggest a sequel in this series—'The Paper We Waste!'"

N Y Times Bk R p8 Ja 2 '72 40w

BLOOMENTHAL, HOWARD. Promoting your cause. 248p il $7.95 Funk

659.1 Public relations. Publicity. Advertising
LC 78-130580

The author presents directions on 'how to be effective with mass media, write press releases, create publicity, use radio and television, make displays and exhibits. [His advice is intended for those] . . . running a political campaign, raising money for a charitable cause, or selling a service.' (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"A bible for hucksters-to-be. 'How-to' advice on selling one's self, one's cause, one's campaign."

Christian Century 88:1397 N 24 '71 20w

"Aimed at the layman, this readable, comprehensive book on advertising and public relations will also be of interest to the student and even to the practitioner. The latter may find some areas for disagreement: for example, the use of release dates on news releases to avoid publication in Saturday papers (many feel this kind of manipulation can backfire)." Ed Murphy

Library J 97:678 F 15 '72 80w

BLOOMFIELD, LEONARD. A Leonard Bloomfield anthology; ed. by Charles F. Hockett. (Ind. Univ. Studies in the hist. and theory of linguistics) 553p $22.50 Ind. univ. press

410 Language and languages
SBN 253-33327-X LC 78-98981

"Hockett has assembled some sixty-three articles, reviews, and excerpts . . . [which give] a sampling of Bloomfield as critic and theorist as well as author of important studies in Germanic, Algonquian, and Tagalog. He includes as well some reviews of Bloomfield and other material." (Am Anthropol)

"It is relevant to note that a full quarter of the book . . . is not even by Bloomfield, but about him: the some six hundred pages include around sixty of obituaries and reviews, forty of introduction and bibliography, thirty-five of anecdotes and comment, and fifteen of notes by the editor. . . . Many of the anecdotes and notes tell us more about Hockett than Bloomfield, and . . . it is difficult to justify inclusion of some excerpts we are offered from Bloomfield's letters . . . though most of these are very interesting. . . . The book is full of significant definitions and quotable quotes. . . . From the photographic portrait serving ■ a frontispiece to the bibliography and anecdotes and above all, the abundance of Bloomfield's own words, Hockett has given ■ a rich anthology significantly aiding our task of interpretation and understanding. All those interested in language and linguistics must be grateful to him." K. V. Teeter

Am Anthropol 73:1383 D '71 1100w

"This first collection of Bloomfield's writings presents an opportunity for linguists to evaluate the real Bloomfield, one of the most important American linguists. It shows the incredibly wide range of his interests and competence in languages. . . . It also clearly shows how his initial views reflected the times and how he developed and changed as a scholar and a linguistic theoretician. The selection of papers is excellent, though I would quarrel with most of the fragmentary (and often incomplete) excerpts and some trivia." W. L. Ballard

Library J 95:2802 S 1 '70 80w

"This Anthology has been long overdue. For though the papers included here have all been published previously, they have not been easily accessible. . . . They are, moreover, of continuing topical interest. . . . Some of Bloomfield's arguments are widely accepted; and others, though contested, are not refuted. Moreover, Bloomfield's writings stand the test of time simply by affording us the rare experience of meeting a great mind. . . . The articles are printed in chronological order. This gives them an interesting historical and biographical perspective, which is further underlined by insertion of contemporary reviews of Bloomfield's work."

TLS p261 Mr 10 '72 2700w

BLOOMFIELD, MORTON, W., ed. The interpretation of narrative. See The interpretation of narrative

BLOWER, JAMES. Gold rush; foreword by Grant MacEwan. 199p il $9.95 Am. heritage

917.123 Edmonton, Alberta—Description—Views. Klondike gold fields
ISBN 0-07-092930-0 LC 70-156975

"Although this is mainly ■ picture book, the accompanying text and the photo captions have . . . been taken from primary sources within the research materials of the Provincial Museum and Archives of Alberta. . . . It is my sincere hope that this collection of photographs will help show to what extent the gold era helped shape the Edmonton region. The book deals both with the Edmonton gold mining efforts, and with the role Edmonton played in the Yukon gold rush of 1898." (Intro)

"An interesting visual presentation of a minor aspect of the gold mining frontier of North America. . . . Although the main thrust is on pictures, the text is useful, although sometimes marked by factual errors. . . . recommended only for libraries with focus on the gold rushes or the Canadian west."

Choice 9:1034 O '72 110w

"Some of the pictures are posed; one depicts capped and moccasined miners looking intrepid as they stand before painted mountains. But the best are of miners struggling along the trail or at work with their pans and sluice boxes. All in all, a valuable pictorial history of both the gold rush and the Edmonton area." Peter Gellatly

Library J 97:68 Ja 1 '72 170w

BLUESTEIN, GENE. The voice of the folk: folklore and American literary theory. 170p $9 Univ. of Mass. press

393 Folklore—U.S. Folk songs—U.S. American literature—History and criticism
LC 70-16443

"The author traces from German philosopher and historian Johann von Herder, whose folk ideology became a germinal force in American thought, through Emerson and Whitman to Constance Rourke and the Lomaxes, the notion that folklore is an embodiment of significant cultural values—sometimes, in fact, the very highest cultural values of a nation or ethnic group. Bluestein . . . applies his thesis to American culture with particular reference to Miss Rourke's treatment of the folklore Yankee and backwoodsman, the influence of the 'Arkansas Traveler' pattern of frontier story telling, and the influence of Negro blues and the poetry of 'rock.'" (Publisher's note) Index.

"Wide-ranging series of essays dealing with the effect of 'low culture' folk literature on 'high culture' literary development. On one end of the scale Bluestein deals with writers such as Emerson, Whitman, Faulkner, and Ellison. On the other he deals with the anonymous creators of the American folk tradition, as well as with such figures as Dan Emmett, Woody Guthrie, and Leadbelly. He also gives considerable attention to earlier scholars in the field. . . . An ambitious book, interesting to read, and moderately successful, it deserves a place on the college shelf."

BLUESTEIN, GENE—Continued

Choice 9:1126 N '72 100w

"Bluestein is more convincing on Whitman than on Emerson, but his best chapters are devoted to the work of Constance Rourke and John and Alan Lomax and to folk-based musical forms including rock. This is an admirably written book, rich in ideas and insights; its highly specialized subject matter, however, will probably restrict its audience. Recommended for academic collections." Robert Regan

Library J 97:2399 J1 '72 140w

BLUMENBERG, WERNER. Portrait of Marx: an illustrated biography; tr. by Douglas Scott [Eng title: Karl Marx]. 196p il $6.95; pa $2.95 Herder & Herder

B or 92 Marx, Karl
LC 74-178874

This account of the life and career of Karl Marx portrays his 'relationship with family and friends. Special attention is given to Marx's lifelong association with Friedrich Engels. . . . Consideration is also given to Marx's early writings and attempts at romantic poetry, and to the . . . hardships of his life in London. The author [attempts to explain] . . . the significance of each stage of Marx's intellectual output and political activity." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Chronology. Index.

"Published originally in German in 1962 . . . [this book] presents little in the way of new material or interpretation. . . . The book suffers from pedantic translation. Numerous quotations are seldom footnoted or adequately dated. Although the book claims to contain 'virtually every known photograph' of Marx, the illustrations are poorly reproduced. . . . Although the general reader may acquire some of the 'facts' of Marx's life, it would be wise for the librarian to consider this an item of relatively low priority."

Choice 9:1187 N '72 120w

"[This biography is] a work of painstaking scholarship but nevertheless consciously aimed at a wide readership. . . . [Blumenberg] was not himself a marxist. His detachment is in agreeable contrast to the hagiographical approach to the founder of 'scientific socialism' practised not only by communist governments but by many western socialists as well. This warts-and-all approach to Marx seems to annoy the author of the preface to this translation, who would clearly have preferred a more 'ideological' portrait, affirming Marx's validity and relevance to our own age and its problems."

Economist 243:75 Ap 22 '72 140w

"[This work] hovers rather uncertainly between biography and interpretative essay. It's well worth reading, but only faute de mieux. . . . To the degree that history is made by leaders, the salient fact about communism is that Marx and his greatest disciple, Lenin, were men whose intellectual power, clarity and integrity had an obverse side in a propensity to quarrel with all those who didn't toe their line. Blumenberg ascribes this trait in Marx chiefly to his poverty, persistent ill-health and personal difficulties, which are treated in sympathetic terms. Unhappily, the narrative itself makes clear that Marx was cross-tempered, intolerant and dictatorial long before these causes could be adduced." Mervyn Jones

New Statesman 83:806 My 5 '72 500w

"The principal source for a just estimate of Marx's character and personality is the four-volume correspondence with Engels, a severely truncated edition of which appeared in 1913. The complete text was published in 1929-31 by David Riazanov, the founder and director of the Marx-Engels Institute in Moscow. Blumenberg has made full use of it, as well as of the material preserved by the Amsterdam Institute of Social History, and his brief study can be described as authoritative."

TLS p578 My 19 '72 300w

BLUMENSON, MARTIN. The Patton papers, 1885-1940; il. with phot. and with maps by Samuel H. Bryant. 996p $15 Houghton

B or 92 Patton, George Smith
ISBN 0-395-12706-8 LC 76-156490

The author provides a "narrative woven around extracts from the diaries, journals, letters and speeches included in the . . . papers left by General George S. Patton." (America) Glossary. Chronology. Index.

Reviewed by F. X. J. Homer
America 126:552 My 20 '72 110w

Reviewed by Josiah Bunting
Atlantic 229:107 Ap '72 2150w

Reviewed by Elbridge Colby
Best Sell 32:25 Ap 15 '72 650w

Reviewed by S. L. A. Marshall
Book World p4 Mr 26 '72 950w
Choice 9:711 J1/Ag '72 150w

Reviewed by John Reed
Christian Science Monitor p9 Mr 30 '72 700w

Reviewed by D. C. James
J Am Hist 59:671 D '72 350w

"The renowned military historian Blumen-son, author of Kasserine Pass [BRD 1967], The Duel for France, 1944 [BRD 1963], and other books, has done a superb job in selecting, arranging, and commenting upon the revelatory material. The resultant portrait of 'Old Blood and Guts' is totally fascinating: a military superman who often doubted his own moral and physical courage, a swaggering foulmouth with a sentimental tenderness, an antiintellectual whose grasp of mobile combat principles was extremely erudite and years ahead of its time." L. E. Spellman

Library J 97:191 Ja 15 '72 170w

Reviewed by Aram Bakshian
Nat R 24:407 Ap 14 '72 1100w

"[Blumenson] appears to have been a bit overwhelmed by the 50 filing cases . . . that were opened to him. He has been reluctant to leave anything out. . . . Part of the unnecessary length of this volume is due also to the author's habit, whenever Patton has written two or three descriptions of the same event, of including them all, even when there are no significant differences between them. Even so, with the skill that has marked his previous works in military history, Mr. Blumenson has provided an admirable account of Patton's professional growth, and one moreover, that should dispel any lingering notion that his subject was only a showman whose main stock in trade was a certain raw courage and a lot of luck." G. A. Craig

N Y Times Bk R p2 Ap 9 '72 1650w

"Here is Patton in his own right (and lamentable spelling). . . . Blumenson has done a magnificent job selecting the papers and stitching them together with a crisp, lucid narrative that brings into sharp focus not only Patton but the times in which he lived it up. The Patton who emerges here is hardly the posturing vulgarian portrayed by war correspondents. Behind the fierce warrior mask lurked an insecure, complex, self-deprecating sensibility that was painfully anguished by feelings of worthlessness." Arthur Cooper

Newsweek 79:104 Mr 27 '72 1000w

"There have long been rumors of the richness of General Patton's papers, but none of the previous biographers had access to them."

[Patton's] prose flows through [this book's] pages, infusing them with humor, warmth, and spontaneity. When they are not on professional matters, his letters and reports center largely on his own activities, with the result that Patton's ambitions, opinions, and emotions are almost excessively detailed. Not all of the material cited in the Papers is of equal interest: some of it deals with trivial matters, some is repetitive; and the record of the early years, before World War I, could have been profitably shortened. But Blumenson himself never gets in the way of the narrative. . . . He lets Patton parade his hopes, disappointments, and despairs in his own manner and in his own words." Louis Morton

Sat R 55:65 F 19 '72 2250w

BLUMGARTEN, JAMES. Up against the Wall (Street). 208p $6.95 Hawthorn bks.

332.6 Stock market. Speculation
LC 74-179106

In the foreword to his book about investing in the stock market, the author states: "'mainly you will find out what happens to people—there are 30 million of them at this writing—who play Wall Street, who they are and what they become, how much of their psyches they lay bare in the process of trying to make money. The opening chapter . . . appeared first . . . in Barron's financial weekly." (Christian Science Monitor)

"[This anecdotal book offers] good reading for the investor who likes his learning to come lightly."

Best Sell 32:219 Ag 1 '72 50w

"Mr. Blumgarten would not be everybody's choice of a guide to the stock market. With 50 television plays behind him, he tends to turn this particular book into a kind of crudely jocose monologue, an exercise in style that rather secondarily transmits information. Right from the start, it is clear that the book is not to be studied but relished." F. H. Guidry

Christian Science Monitor p11 My 31 '72 250w

BLUNT, ANTHONY. Supplements to the catalogues of Italian and French drawings, with a history of the Royal Collection of Drawings. See Schilling, E. The German drawings in the collection of Her Majesty the Queen at Windsor Castle

BLY, ROBERT; ed. Neruda and Vallejo: selected poems, ed. by Robert Bly; translations by Robert Bly, John Knoepfle, and James Wright. 269p $9.95 Beacon press

861 Spanish poetry—Collections
ISBN 0-8070-6420-3 LC 76-121825

Selections with English translations from the works of two South American poets.

"Most timely in its appearance in 1971, the year the better known of the two poets, Pablo Neruda, became the second Chilean to win the Nobel Prize for literature. Robert Bly's versions opposite Neruda's original poems show great skill in translating difficult material. The poems are well chosen and very representative of different periods of Neruda's poetic life. An American who wishes to understand Latin American attitudes toward the U.S. should read 'The United Fruit Company' and 'I wish the woodcutter would wake up'. . . . Bly uses his generous selection of Neruda poems to introduce us to those of the Peruvian César Vallejo."

Choice 9:220 Ap '72 170w

"While Neruda entered into the realm of heroic civic poetry, Vallejo did that and much more; the deathly 'Human Poems' (some of which are included in the Bly volume) marked the final uncovering of a new poetic language, with multiple ramifications for the future of poetry in Spanish. Nowadays Neruda has few 'followers,' few poets who look to him as he himself in his youth looked to Whitman. In Spanish America, Vallejo is the standard for authenticity and intensity. Neruda's influence upon others is paralyzing, a psychic stasis, because his verbal luxuriance and startling degree of conformity to the easy rhetoric of Spanish offer no way out to a younger poet. Neruda could never have been . . . a galvanizer. This is what Vallejo is, as transmitted through Bly." Alexander Coleman

N Y Times Bk R p40 My 7 '72 350w

"Bly's is a commendable introduction to Pablo Neruda, in spite of certain extravagant claims and partisan politics surrounding the presentation. Many of the translations are wonderful. Their virtue is often that they don't read like translations at all. They could easily be mistaken for original poems in English, except that, unfortunately, no one is writing quite this way these days. Many of them are surrealistic. . . . [Vallejo] is reputed to be grave and difficult. I found him gloomy and obscure. . . . But there are some forceful and compassionate poems mixed up in all the whining. . . . This is a beautiful book both in form and in content." Philip Murray

Poetry 120:310 Ag '72 1450w

BLYTH, CHAY. The impossible voyage. 244p pl col pl $6.95 Putnam

910.4 Voyages around the world. Sailing.
British Steel (Sailboat)
LC 72-188727

An account of the author's ten month solo non-stop westward voyage around the world in British Steel, a 59 foot ketch.

"The book which emerges from [Blyth's] 30,000 miles of uphill sailing from October, 1970, til July, 1971 is a fascinating day by day account of an ultra-hazardous trip round the Horn and across our planet's loneliest seas. Of equal interest is the glimpse afforded of a sturdy, healthily balanced personality. . . . [It is] handsomely illustrated with color photos and maps." W. H. Archer

Best Sell 32:111 Je 1 '72 400w

"[Blyth] circumnavigated the globe from east to west, against the prevailing winds, tides, and currents. In addition, he deliberately chose a route which kept him in the high latitude near the southern tip of the globe, increasing the difficulty of the voyage. The author deliberately underplays the technical aspects of the voyage and avoids overdramatizing some of the more harrowing moments by frequently using understated log entries. [He] concentrates on the human aspects by describing the moments of despair and boredom as well as the moments of unbounded exhilaration. . . . A first-class adventure book." Mark Neyman

Library J 97:1434 Ap 15 '72 160w

Reviewed by Arthur Marshall

New Statesman 82:751 N 26 '71 210w

TLS p1559 D 10 '71 600w

BOAHEN, A. ADU. The Horizon History of Africa. See The Horizon History of Africa

BOALT, GUNNAR. Universities and research; observation on the United States and Sweden, by Gunnar Boalt [and] Herman Lantz. 157p $6.95 Interscience

378.73 Education, Higher. Sociology—Research
LC 72-114718

In the first four chapters a "set of hypotheses describing the steps toward vulnerability taken by growing and upwardly striving universities is presented: they must produce research in order to attain prestige. This causes them to reward and delegate power to those bureaus and professors which can produce research and obtain grants. The grant generators become increasingly independent as they gain prominence and mobility. . . . The rest of the book is devoted to Boalt's methodological contributions which provide means for testing . . . the application of 'summation' theory to professors' role conflicts." (Contemp Sociol) Bibliography.

"In an earlier book, Sociology of Research [BRD 1970], Boalt described in more detail the procedures which are necessary for the use of 'summation' theory, which, as used in this work, is a tool for analyzing role conflicts by means of correlation performances criteria with clusters of variables. . . . [However] this chain of reasoning may no longer be applicable to universities in the 1970's as it was in the 1960's because grant gathering is more difficult and mobility less frequent and less attractive. . . . An index would be helpful." P. D. Lynch

Contemp Sociol 1:52 Ja '72 650w

"This volume is a curious and intriguing work. The coauthors are professors of sociology, one at the University of Stockholm and one at Southern Illinois University. The volume is curious because, at first glance, it appears to be a collection of unrelated essays on the drives and peculiarities of academic man, university growth, values, and the ideologies of administrators, teachers, researchers, and departments. One is impressed with the authors' insights into the aspirations and values of academic man. . . . The work is intriguing as a discourse on sociological methodology and . . . is also of more than passing interest to all concerned with higher education and the difficulties with which institutions are now widely confronted." P. L. Dressel

J Higher Ed 42:83 Ja '71 350w

BOARDMAN, JOHN, jr. auth. Greek burial customs. See Kurtz, D. C.

BOARDMAN, JOHN. Greek gems and finger rings; early Bronze Age to late Classical; phot. by Robert L. Wilkins. 458p $55 Abrams
736 Gems. Rings
LC 72-569570]

The material in this book "is divided chronologically into six sections, dealing with the Bronze Age, Geometric and Early Archaic, Archaic, Classical, Greco-Persian, and Hellenistic and Roman. An introduction is followed in each section by a catalogue of selected gems, all of which are illustrated, usually by photographs of plaster impressions, enlarged three or four times, in blocks of plates at the end of each section. The final chapter deals with the materials from which the seals were made, and the way in which they were made. A note at the end explains how to make impressions from gems and how to photograph gems and impressions." (TLS)

"The present work supplements Richter's Engraved gems of the Greeks and the Etruscans [BRD 1969] by chronological expansion to include Minoan and Mycenaean gems and in its more thorough treatment of the geometric period. The section on Crete is particularly strong and offers a clear chronological sequence based on up-to-date excavation material. . . . In addition, typological sources for archaic gems, generally in Cyprus and the East, are explored. Variations and development of subject matter are treated concisely. . . . The photographs are spectacularly good." (Choice 9:417 My '72 170w)

"Although diminutive in size, engraved gems were never regarded in antiquity as a minor art, for they were the concern of some of the most renowned artists of their day. . . . [This] magnificent work [is] scholarly, readable, and beautifully produced. . . . The gem, as a jewel, is best illustrated in colour, and in a . . . three-dimensional way, as is done in this book wherever necessary. Robert L. Wilkins took the photographs with a mastery seldom achieved in this difficult field." (TLS p287 Mr 12 '71 380w)

BOBRI, VLADIMIR. The Segovia technique. 94p il $12.95 Macmillan (N Y)

787 Guitar. Segovia, Andrés. Music—Study and teaching
LC 77-152285

The "editor of Guitar Review, and the maestro's longtime friend, has here [attempted to describe] . . . Segovia's guitar technique. Along the way he also offers an abbreviated history of the guitar and some earlier great guitarists." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"This handsomely designed book discusses its title on less than half of its 93 pages. The remainder of the publication is devoted to a history of the instrument (and not the definitive one) with biographical material and tributes to Segovia. . . . The amount of information included is not large. . . . It thus appears to be almost a souvenir publication. Nonetheless, the author is a authority on the guitar, and the volume was prepared with Segovia's full cooperation. There is little doubt [that it] will be of interest to patrons of the larger libraries." (Choice 9:977 O '72 180w)

"The bulk of this work attempts to isolate and analyze the fundamentals of Segovia's guitar playing through a logically arranged sequence of text, drawings, and photographs. It is well thought out, carefully avoiding the ambiguities and imprecisions which often mar other, less authoritative classic guitar books; and the numerous illustrations (consisting mainly of close-ups of Segovia's hand positions, the important points of which are explicated fully in the adjoining text) are well chosen for their didactic value and can easily be followed with lasting benefit by any aspiring guitarist. . . . A valuable book for any music shelf; an essential book for guitarists." William Slate
Library J 97:2844 S 15 '72 330w

BOCHENSKI, JOSEPH M., ed. Guide to Marxist philosophy; an introductory bibliography; ed. by Joseph M. Bochenski and [others]. 81p $5; pa $2 Swallow press 016.3354 Communism—Bibliography
ISBN 0-8040-0560-5; 0-8040-0561-3 (pa)
LC 76-188168

A "selective annotated bibliography of currently available books and periodical articles in English, a collective effort by Bochenski, director of the Institute of East European Studies at the University of Fribourg, Switzerland, and nine other American and European scholars." (Library J) Index.

"A very introductory bibliography with few listings. Perhaps of use to a beginner with no knowledge at all of the subject. Bochenski is the director of an institute which studies Soviet philosophy. The comments on the few books which are listed are fairly extensive and the book would provide a place to start, but would be of no use for any scholarly work." (Choice 9:623 J1/Ag '72 60w)

"This highly selective [bibliography] . . . can only be judged a qualified success. Although recognized authorities on Marxist thought, Bochenski and his coeditors belie their expertise when addressing their presumed uninitiated, monolingual audience. [There is] a sententious introduction. . . . Simplistic, ethically slanted advice is reflected in the 150-odd annotations, which are arranged by category, (i.e., German classical Marxism, Soviet Marxism-Leninism, neo-Marxism, Chinese Marxism, the New Left). In the last-named section, the anarchists Bakunin and Kropotkin are grouped somewhat anachronistically with Herbert Marcuse, Régis Debray, the Cohn-Bendits, and Frantz Fanon. Despite the academic credentials of the compilers, this slim volume is of marginal worth as a reference tool." Rosemary Neiswender
Library J 97:2375 J1 '72 270w

BODARD, LUCIEN. Green hell: massacre of the Brazilian Indians; tr. by Jennifer Monaghan [Eng title: Massacre on the Amazon]. 291p il map $8.95 Outerbridge & Dienstfrey; for sale by Dutton

980.4 Indians of South America—Brazil
ISBN 0-87690-030-9 LC 72-178895

"Bodard's work provides a history of the gradual decimation of Brazil's Indian population and an account of the current state of affairs. . . . [The author] visited many of the areas where 'extermination' has occurred and talked with persons who were witnesses, as well as with persons who are trying to save the few survivors. [His] conclusion is that there is today a deliberate policy of exploitation, starvation, and murder, which many SPI [Service for the Protection of the Indians] officials in the outlying areas seem to be carrying out." (Library J) Glossary. Originally published in French in 1969 under the title Le Massacre des Indiens.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 229:110 F '72 80w

Reviewed by (Rev.) Stephen McKenna
Best Sell 31:499 F '15 '72 450w

Reviewed by Stephen Klaidman
Book World p10 Ja 23 '72 700w
Choice 9:871 S '72 180w

"[The author] details the processes by which whole tribes were broken up or exterminated. . . . And he examines the rare examples of white men who have made themselves the Indians' protectors. . . . [He includes] long conversations with the Vilas Boas brothers, Orlando and Claudio, who hold sway over a private reservation along the upper Xingu River—heroic figures whose attitudes spring straight from the enlightenment and Comtian positivism. . . . This is not just another dossier about white atrocities in the Amazonian provinces. M. Bodard writes of criminal perversion and calculated slaughter; but he also turns a fatalistic eye on the human cost of the advance of modern civilisation. . . . What makes [his] book compulsive reading is that it captures so much of Brazil that is foreign but spell-binding to outsiders." (Economist 241:53 O 2 '71 650w)

"News has been coming out of Brazil recently about genocide practiced against the Indians, with rumors that the Service for the Protection of the Indians (SPI) is responsible for much of it. . . . This book should be read by all who are concerned with the preservation of human life." Mary Gormly
Library J 96:4081 D 15 '71 180w

"The most sensational part of this book . . . is the repeated allegation that American concerns in Brazil have tacitly supported or even fostered exploitation and extermination. . . . This is a shocking book which should stimulate immediate congressional investigation into [these] charges." (N Y Rev of Books 18:38 Ja 27 '72 260w)

Reviewed by Roa Lynn
N Y Times Bk R p34 Mr 12 '72 1250w

Reviewed by B. J. Meggers
Sat R 55:70 F 19 '72 1000w

Reviewed by R. Z. Sheppard
Time 99:69 Ja 31 '72 800w

"Much of M. Bodard's book is taken up with his impressions of the [Vilas Boas] brothers, of their work and of their 'secret'. As a human-interest story it is well done but leads one to wonder about M. Bodard's reliability. He recreates lengthy conversations with them, placing their words, often monologues that go on for several pages, between quotation marks. This sort of journalistic licence becomes even more questionable when one knows (though M Bodard does not tell the reader) that his contact with the brothers was exceedingly brief. This is characteristic of the entire book. M Bodard has similarly inflated his brief acquaintance with Brazil into a wide-ranging and indiscriminate hodgepodge of fact, impression, hearsay, speculation and downright misinformation."

TLS p1477 N 26 '71 400w

BOECKMAN, CHARLES. And the beat goes on; a survey of pop music in America. 224p il $5.95 Luce, R. B.

784 Music, Popular (Songs, etc.)—History and criticism. Music, American—History and criticism
LC 77-178880

Boeckman's account covers such types of songs as rock, jazz, blues, gospel, folk, and country and western.

Choice 9:824 S '72 180w

"A pleasant though not too well integrated account. Good for starters."

Christian Century 89:488 Ap 26 '72 20w

"In an overcrowded field, Boeckman's execrably-written survey . . . easily emerges as the worst book on the subject yet published. Boeckman, identified as a 'jazz clarinetist and freelance writer,' begins by explaining that popular music is not symphonic or 'serious' and moves along with such banal information as, 'Negro blues . . . are now very popular in music polls.' . . . This compendium of clichés is not worth anybody's consideration." Collin Clark

Library J 97:2495 Jl '72 100w

BOESEL, DAVID, ed. Cities under siege; an anatomy of the ghetto riots, 1964-1968; ed. by David Boesel & Peter H. Rossi. 436p $12.50 Basic bks.

301.18 Riots. U.S.—Race relations
ISBN 0-465-01135-7 LC 77-147019

"In the first section case studies of the riots in Newark, Los Angeles, and a few other cities are detailed, while section two deals with the public reaction, including the courts and the commissions, to the riots. The last section . . . [seeks to relate the] ghetto riots of the 1960's . . . [to the] history of violence in American cities." (Choice)

"This expert analysis of our most recent urban race riots is the result of some good team research; since most of it was conducted by the sociology department of The Johns Hopkins University, of which Rossi is head, the resultant book has some unity and continuity. Rossi's own paper is the most mature and prognostic; he admits in his survey (from 1965 on) that predicting the future is chasing the will of the wisp, but he foresees for the seventies different types of protest. . . . As Rossi headed one team, Boesel, a journalistic-sociologist, headed another, made up principally of sociologists A. Silver of Columbia, D. Goldberg of McGill, R. Blauner of the University of California, and others. They were able to analyze the Kerner Report and come to some conclusions as to why it was an abysmal failure." Brother Benedict Wengler

Best Sell 31:338 N 1 '71 500w

"[The authors] have put together the best collection of articles on the ghetto riots of the 1960's yet to appear. Compared to other readers . . . the scope is much more comprehensive. . . . More so than in other texts on American violence . . . the last two sections of this important reader stress unconventional perspectives on the ghetto riots. In addition, most of the articles are free of jargon; indeed, the style would appeal to the general reading public. Strongly recommended for all libraries, public, personal, or college. Footnotes for most of the articles; good index."

Choice 8:1616 F '72 220w

"[This] is a convenient collection of pieces, most, again, previously published. Some are worth seeing again, like Nathan Caplan's study of the New Ghetto Man; others were best left unexhumed. . . . [The book's basic coherence] flows from its excellent introductory essay by the editors and two earlier pieces, one by each editor, here republished." Michael Wallace

Commonweal 97:66 O 20 '72 800w

BOGART, LEO. Silent politics: polls and the awareness of public opinion. 250p $9.95 Wiley-Interscience

301.15 Public opinion. Public opinion polls
ISBN 0-471-08520-0 LC 75-37430

An examination of the characteristics of public opinion polls and an analysis of their defects. The author concludes that, "in spite of their limitations, polls serve democracy. They provide a silent counterweight to the actions of militant minorities and force the public to face up to the consequences of its own inconsistent views." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by M. J. Sheenan
America 126:514 My 20 '72 70w
Choice 9:714 Jl/Ag '72 250w

"This well-researched book is concerned with a dynamic analysis of what constitutes 'public opinion' and how such opinion is changed over time. The author explains the persistence of minority opinions, the problems of inconsistent opinions, and the evolution of opinion in a revolutionary situation. The book differs from many earlier examinations of the subject in that it views opinion as a changing commodity and not merely as a static given." Hindy Schacter

Library J 97:1022 Mr 15 '72 80w

"[The author] takes a long skeptical look at the polls, their uses and misuses. The basic fault of polls in elections, he says, lies in misinterpretation and an eagerness to make oracles of the pollsters. Similarly, polls are subject to manipulation by politicians. . . . The battle of the polls is warming up for the election; and Mr. Bogart, although he is mainly on the side of the pollsters, offers caveats for emporers and voters."

N Y Times Bk R p16 Mr 19 '72 110w

BOGEN, NANCY, ed. The book of Thel. See Blake, W.

BOGER, LOUISE ADE. The dictionary of world pottery and porcelain. 533p il col pl $22.50 Scribner

738 Pottery—Dictionaries. Porcelain—Dictionaries
ISBN 0-684-10031-2 LC 72-123829

This book "treats the ceramics of all countries and periods. Spanning almost 7000 years, the entries cover manufactories, companies and individual potters, modelers, painters and engravers; periods and styles; decorative motifs and symbols; colors; processes of firing, glazing and decoration; terms and makers' marks." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"The dictionary [seems to be] aimed more at the collector than at the practitioner. [This] probability . . . is borne out by the number of personal names and names of ceramic manufacturers included. However, the dictionary cannot compete with such compendiums as [G.A.] Godden's Encyclopedia of British Pottery and Porcelain Marks [BRD 1965] which contains no material other than makers' marks and identities. . . . [However, it] is a model for this type of handbook from the standpoint of meticulous cross-referencing, well-captioned and well-chosen illustrations, and general format. Although one might, in some cases, wish for a longer account of the subject matter, the definitions are clear and, in the main, adequate. [The volume] is unique for its worldwide treatment of the subject. It is recommended for almost any reference collection."

Booklist 68:777 My 15 '72 1300w

"Line drawings, chiefly of identifying marks of makers, appear in the margins, while numbers in the definitions refer to either the 100 pages of black-and-white illustrations in the back of the book or to the 20 pages of color plates in the text. The definitions are succinct and carefully cross-referenced; the bibliography is extensive and lists 1970 publications. Boger, who with her late husband prepared The Dictionary of Antiques and the Decorative Arts [BRD 1958], has again produced a subject dictionary which because of its inclusiveness will be most useful." P. von Khrum

BOGER, L. A.—Continued

Library J 97:58 Ja 1 '72 110w

Reviewed by Rita Reif
N Y Times Bk ■ p70 D ■ '71 50w

BOGGS, JEAN SUTHERLAND. The National gallery of Canada. 136p il col il $27.50 Oxford
708 Ottawa. National Gallery of Canada
ISBN 0-19-540189-1 LC [78-884623]

The author "describes the gallery's evolution from a virtually premature 'royal' birth during 1880 in a provincial atmosphere unready for such an undertaking. . . . [The work contains] 32 [tipped-in] color plates accompanied by essays . . . and an additional 188 black-and-white [illustrations]." (Choice) Index of artists.

"[This is a] delightfully written and authoritative [account]. . . . [It is] admirably documented and indexed, [and] summarizes the wealth of painting, sculpture, and graphics now in Ottawa. Canadian art achievement is only one aspect in a collection of works from the Renaissance to the present. Great masters such as Rembrandt, Piero di Cosimo, Chardin, Delgas, Leger, and Pollock are represented [and there] are a host of significant but lesser names. While particularly significant for Canadians as descriptive of the national collection, [this volume] is of equal interest to all art lovers and scholars in the wide international community."

Choice 9:200 Ap '72 170w

"Boggs has put together a unique, scholarly work. . . . The index refers only to artists whose works are reproduced, not to the text; and it is puzzling that Boggs, an excellent historian, did not document the sources she quotes or append a proper bibliography. However, the book is worth the high price in spite of its minor faults." Anne Woodsworth

Library J 97:1799 My 15 '72 140w

"The life and hard times of the gallery are described with great tact by its present director and make fascinating reading. . . . The Canadian gallery's story is one of heroic battle against entrenched philistinism and mean-mindedness fought by a few enlightened trustees and with the amazing patience of Eric Brown, its first and most distinguished director. . . . Anyone who examines the . . . plates in this book . . . cannot fail to be impressed by what can be done with determination and resource, even where finance is limited and the political atmosphere is unsympathetic."

TLS p42 Ja 14 '72 360w

BOHM, PETER, ed. The economics of environment; papers from four nations; ed. by Peter Bohm and Allen V. Kneese. 163p $9.95 St Martins

333.9 Environmental policy. Pollution—Economic aspects
SBN 333-13276-9 LC 73-178244

"The book includes 10 articles reprinted from the Swedish Journal of economics (v 73, no. 1, Mar. 1971). Authors include Kneese, D'Arge, Baumol, Mishan, Malinvaud, and others. The articles are classified in four sections. Sections on theory of policy on the environment, and measuring costs of environmental degradation include four articles each. Sections on scientific and technological aspects, and models for investigating industrial response to residuals management actions consist of one article each." (Choice)

"Strongly recommended for graduate students and researchers concerned with environmental economics. . . . The essay on scientific and technological aspects is comprehensive and in most parts not rigorous. The others are narrower in scope and more rigorous. Most include mathematical treatments. Apart from two-page introduction and the division into sections, this book is an exact reprint of the journal. Comparable work is found in several journals, e.g. the Journal of law and economics, American economic review, and Economica."

Choice 9:684 Jl/Ag '72 150w

"This is not a book for laymen, being studded with economists' jargon and papers of partial differential equations, but for the determined reader it does offer some insight into the economists' approach to problems of pollution. . . . [For example,] Dr Bohm offers a most interesting paper on the problem of estimating demand for public goods. How can one persuade a consumer to reveal his true preferences for such public goods as cleaner air or more roads? . . . As a logical exercise it is a fascinating problem, and his exposition is clear and convincing. . . . While some of the book's arguments can only be described as constipated, Ralph d'Arge's arguments about economic incentives to reduce pollution, and E. J. Mishan's interview with Dr Pangloss, on which he hangs a lucid explanation of economic optimality, are well worth reading."

TLS p327 Mr 24 '72 430w

BÖHMER, GUNTER. The wonderful world of puppets; tr. by Gerald Morice; based on the puppet coll. of the city of Munich [Eng title: Puppets]. 156p pl $8.95 Plays, Inc.

791.5 Puppets and puppet plays
ISBN 0-8238-0084-9 LC 76-107968

The author, manager of the "Puppet Collection of the City of Munich, presents puppets and related figures from this collection as the basis of his discussion of the history and nature of puppetry. [Included are] chapters on hand puppets and the European tradition . . . the romantic marionette theatres of Count Pocci and 'Papa' Schmidt . . . European shadow puppetry . . . [and] puppets in motion pictures. . . . There are also examples of paper or toy theatres and their cut-out sheets of characters from plays and stories. . . . The final sections describe Asiatic puppetry and eastern shadow puppetry." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Böhmer presents a collector's historical treasury of beautiful pictures, each documented by name, place and date used, material, size, and special features of each puppet. . . . All puppet fanciers will enjoy its richly illustrated pages."

Choice 9:383 My '72 140w

"Primarily of interest to adults, a thorough and beautifully illustrated presentation for anyone interested in the history of puppetry."

Horn Bk 48:163 Ap '72 60w

"Consisting primarily of illustrations, the book does include brief but informative introductory notes . . . which cover all types of puppetry and most geographic areas. (Unfortunately, the Western Hemisphere is virtually unrepresented.) On the whole, the selection of photos is refreshing; included are pictures of puppets not represented in other books on the subject. All the photographs are annotated."

Avi Wortis

Library J 97:189 Ja 15 '72 120w

BOLAND, EAVAN, jt. auth. W. B. Yeats and his world. See Mac Liammóir, M.

BOLES, JOHN B. The great revival, 1787-1805; the origins of the Southern evangelical mind. 236p pl $10 Univ. press of Ky.

269 Revivals. Southern States—Church history
ISBN 0-8131-1260-5 LC 77-183349

Together with the "analysis of the origin and growth of the Great Revival, this study will attempt to reconstruct the multifaceted religious mind of the southern evangelicals. Aspects of the theology not necessarily related to the genesis of the revival will be discussed. . . . The study will emphasize white Baptists, Methodists, and Presbyterians in the six states of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Kentucky, and Tennessee." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 9:982 O '72 170w

"This monograph is scholarly, heavily annotated, and exhaustive. Boles . . . attempts to do for the South what earlier historians have done for the upsurge of religion and evangelical revivalism in New England and upstate New York. He succeeds by virtue of his thorough research in the manuscripts, denominational documents, and memoirs, journals, and biographies of the Presbyterians, Methodists, and Baptists who were caught up in the unparalleled religious fervor following the American Revolution. The research is clearly reported, and the many sources identified in a lengthy bibliography. This is a reasonably objective account of both the theological and the sociohistorical impact of an important movement in the early national period." E. G. Dettelsen

Library J 97:1449 Ap 15 '72 120w

"[Boles] will no doubt be criticized for many positions he takes, especially his optimistic view of interdenominational relations, with its stress on the individual dissociated from the ecclesiastical organization, his dismissal of forms of piety he either does not understand or discounts, his attempts to explain mass phenomena without reference to modern studies in group psychology, or to the psychology of conversation. Nonetheless his book is a penetrating study of the development of the Southern religious mind, with a fresh interpretation of the importance of the revival movement of 1800-05 in setting its form, all placed within the thinking habits of a generous, ecumenically-minded modern Southern religious thinker." N. H. Sonne
N Y Times Bk R p6 Ag 6 '72 1100w

"In discussing the origins, growth, and theological disputes that led to the Great Revival, Mr. Boles performs a valuable service. A revivalism that was formerly associated with Kentucky and the upper Midwest is here shown to have spread throughout the settled South as well. However, the author does an injustice both to his evidence and to his reader in his concluding efforts to make Southern fundamentalism a legacy of the Great Revival. The fact that revivalism swept across the entire country while fundamentalism did not is enough to suggest more complex forces at work on the Southern mind."

Va Q R 48:xciii summer '72 170w

BOLT, CHRISTINE. Victorian attitudes to race. (Toronto. Univ. Studies in social hist.) 254p Can$10.50 Univ. of Toronto press 301.15 Race problems. Public opinion. Great Britain—Race relations
ISBN 0-8020-1751-7 LC 74-21728

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by W. J. Baker
Am Hist R 77:149 F '72 500w

Reviewed by Hugh Tinker
Encounter 38:48 Ap '72 850w

Reviewed by Brian Harrison
Engl Hist R 87:643 Jl '72 500w

BOLT, TOMMY. The hole truth; inside big-time, big-money golf [by] Tommy Bolt with Jimmy Mann. 187p $5.95 Lippincott 796.352 Golf
LC 72-166494

The author "deals mainly with the interpersonal aspects of golf (e.g., 'How tough is it to make your living gambling at golf?' 'Is golf a good profession for a youngster to follow?'; etc.). . . . [He includes] anecdotes about his own and other players' weaknesses." (Library J)

"'Terrible Tommy,' the reputed Peck's bad boy of golf, gives us some entertaining fare [in this book]. . . . For the average alfalfa hacker looking to become a 70's shooter, The Hole Truth has a limited number of suggestions to offer." W. R. Knievel
Library J 96:4027 D 1 '71 130w

"[This book], supposedly a 'candid' commentary, boils down to a dull question-and-answer session." J. B. Segal
N Y Times Bk R p46 D 5 '71 10w

BOLTIN, LEE, II. Color under ground. See White, J. S.

BONADIO, FELICE A. North of reconstruction: Ohio politics, 1865-1870. 204p $8.95 N.Y. univ. press
977.1 Ohio—Politics and government—1865-1898. Reconstruction
SBN 8147-0052-7 LC 72-92520

This study "examines the relationship between the local politics of one northern state and the national issues which dominated post-

Civil War politics in America. It is an account of the statewide battles and local skirmishes between the two major parties for the political control of Ohio. The emphasis, however, is on the divisions between rival groups of politicians within the same political party." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This monograph] seems to be based on extensive research. . . . [Unfortunately it] has a large number of errors. . . . [They] may be trivial individually. In cumulative effect their number, character, and variety are such as to destroy the confidence one needs to feel in the validity of information and insights that are based on relatively inaccessible materials such as manuscripts and rare newspapers." H. R. Stevens
Am Hist R 76:1607 D '71 430w

"This well constructed monograph is a valuable addition to the growing body of historical literature that deals with Reconstruction as a national, rather than as an exclusively southern, problem. . . . On the whole persuasive, Bonadio's monograph has some serious limitations. First, it . . . concentrates far too exclusively on the Republican party and fails to tell the full story of the Democracy. Second, it is essentially old-fashioned political history, concerned with leaders and factions and patronage. No attempt has been made to employ any of the newer quantitative techniques in the analysis of Ohio elections. . . . Third, the evidence adduced to prove that only expediency moved Ohio Republicans to advocate Negro suffrage is unconvincing. . . . Despite these reservations [this] is a tough-minded, realistic approach to a significant subject." David Donald
J Am Hist 58:472 S '71 550w

BONARJEE, N. B. Under two masters; with a foreword by Philip Mason. 332p $4 Oxford
B or 92 India—Politics and government
SBN 19-560005-3 LC 78-135205

The autobiography of a member of the Indian Civil Service from 1925 to 1950, who served under both the British and the government of independent India.

"The first section of the book is a rather dry description of Bonarjee's unusual background. The son of wealthy, Christian Indians, he was sent to England for his entire school experience, and his personal identification is with the British ruling elite. Before extolling the virtues of British leadership, he carefully examines rural India, Hindi and Muslim relations, and the rebellion against the British in 1942. His evaluation of India's current leaders and their administrative ethic is severe and uncompromising. This commentary provides an interesting balance to most Indian reports of this period, and it is recommended for extensive collections on Indian affairs." S. A. Epstein
Library J 95:3786 N 1 '70 110w

"Mr. Bonarjee's commendation of the Raj as, on the whole, a liberal and efficient administration may be welcomed as balancing the overdenunciatory or apologetic views of the British period in India now in vogue. But the special importance of his book lies in what he has to say about contemporary India. . . . Under Two Masters is, then, a comparative analysis of two opposed approaches to governance which illuminates much about the past and even more about the present of India. It is more than that too, a gracefully written, rather Edwardian memoir and the account of the education of a man, well-placed at a hinge period of history, in both his own nature and his society's." Neville Maxwell
N Y Rev of Books 18:8 Mr 23 '72 700w

BOND, JULIAN. A time to speak, a time to act; the movement in politics. 163p $5.95; pa $1.95 Simon & Schuster

329 Politics, Practical. Negroes—Political activity. Negroes—Civil rights
SBN 671-21344-X; 671-21345-8 (pa)
LC 72-80687

The young black Georgia politician outlines a "political strategy for minority empowerment in the 1970's. . . . His program is one of black political solidarity coupled with white issue-oriented groups." (America)

"Bond's larger concern is to bring people together, and so he scores as divisive separa-

BOND, JULIAN—Continued

tists those who build up their own ego by calling blue-collar workers, racists. Similarly he is just as hard on 'pseudo-militants,' 'boutique radicals,' 'limousine liberals' and 'openhearted people-lovers' as he is on 'the Establishment' and the Federal Bureau of Intimidation.' The book encompasses a wide range of topics from revolution on the campuses, the Kent State 'Massacre,' the Black Panthers, Angela Davis and George Jackson, to Bond's constituency in Atlanta; but the theme is the same—a call and a brief blueprint for the election of black people through black solidarity and a vision for black-white coalitions in the '70's. . . . [This] is an all too brief, pragmatic, sometimes radical articulation of a new black politics for all those interested in any 'new' politics." G. L. Chamberlain

America 127:100 Ag 19 '72 500w

Reviewed by P. T. Majkut

Best Sell 32:453 Ja 1 '73 800w

"Bond, with the aid of an Atlanta newspaperman, Hal Gulliver, has collected various speeches and statements made over the past several years and pruned them of passages relating to specific locations and situations. There is a great deal of repetition and much material of similar emphasis. The common theme is the necessity for blacks to form pragmatic, workable coalitions with various non-black dissenting groups in the U.S. to effect meaningful social change. . . . To some extent this book is designed as a handbook for blacks desiring maximum participation in the 1972 Presidential election." Norman Lederer
Library J 97:2169 Je 15 '72 120w
Va Q R 48:cliii autumn '72 70w

BOND, RICHMOND P. The Tatler; the making of a literary journal. 272p il $8 Harvard Univ. press

824 The Tatler (periodical). Steele, Sir Richard, Bart. Addison, Joseph
ISBN 0-674-86830-7 LC 77-154500

This "examination of the process by which The Tatler came into being and then developed into 'England's first great literary periodical' is as well an introduction to the business of periodical publication in the early 18th century. In addition, the book offers . . . discussions of the sources Steele drew upon, the topics he treated and the forms he employed. [Included also is an] analysis of the literary style, interests, and background of Steele's eidolon, Isaac Bickerstaff." (Choice) Bibliography.

"This first comprehensive study of The Tatler is . . . thorough [and] readable. . . . [The analysis of Bickerstaff] provides a critical perspective that leads both to an understanding of The Tatler's variety, flexibility, energy, and structure and to a carefully balanced estimate of its literary significance. With useful notes, appendices, bibliography, and index, this book will serve graduate and undergraduate alike and will be a valuable addition to all libraries."

Choice 9:366 My '72 160w

"Few works better record the character of early 18th-Century London than does Richard Steele's urbane Tatler; and in assessing the ethical, social, and literary bases of Steele's lambent wit, Bond allows the Tatler a higher place than comparisons with its successor, the Spectator, usually do. . . . This is an important book, perceptive and readable, that should be a happy companion for a rereading of Steele's masterpiece." H. G. Hahn
Library J 96:3326 O 15 '71 100w

BONE, QUENTIN. Henrietta Maria: Queen of the Cavaliers. 287p $10 Univ. of Ill. press

B or 92 Henrietta Maria, consort of Charles I, King of England. Great Britain—History—Stuarts, 1603-1714
ISBN 0-252-00198-2 LC 70-172250

In this "study of the political role of Henrietta (1609-69), Bone shows that she was not the overpowering influence on the king that people have thought. A Catholic queen in a Protestant country, she did prejudice a large sector of public opinion against Charles, but that in itself would not have brought his ruin. [The author] reviews Henrietta Maria's intrigues and . . . evaluates her influence on the king. . . . Even without Henrietta's admonitions, Bone holds, Charles would have ended his days with his head on the block. . . . Bone's account [also] deals with the intellectual, political, and religious character of the age in which she lived." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Bone, in producing a critical study of the political role of Henrietta, has provided a useful supplement to the excellent biography by Carola Oman [Henrietta Maria, BRD 1936]. Originally a dissertation, Bone's work reflects both the strengths and weaknesses of its origin. Based largely upon source material and copiously documented, it retains too much of the heaviness of dissertation scholarship to appeal to the general reader. . . . While it is readable, scholarship and art are not joined in Bone as they are in Oman. . . . But the graduate student and scholar must consider Bone's interpretation."

Choice 9:1028 O '72 180w

"This critical study . . . [is] recommended for larger collections." W. W. MacDonald
Library J 97:2572 Ag '72 120w

BONEWITS, PHILIP EMMONS ISAAC. Real magic; an introductory treatise on the basic principles of yellow magic. 236p il $6.95 Coward-McCann & Geoghegan

133 Occult sciences
LC 70-146087

This is a "discussion of the basic laws of magic, the forms of parapsychology, and the fundamental patterns of ritual. Eastern Tantra is discussed . . . because of its similarities to Western occultism." (Library J) Bibliography. Glossary.

"Bonewits' style is brash, so as to make the useful information in the book difficult to seise out from the unnecessary neologisms and would-be humor. The major strength is its wide range of subjects and the interrelationships among them which the author describes. However, the wide range is also a weakness in that there is too little information on too many subjects. . . . Descriptions of magical rituals are included and their use explained. . . . Would be interesting to the reader unacquainted with any of the literature on occultism or mysticism, but of little interest to the more sophisticated student."

Choice 8:1649 F '72 130w

"This is an introduction to and an apology for magic; it is about as good—or bad—as one might expect of a book by a 22 year old Berkeley B.A. who majored in magic."

Christian Century 88:1142 S 29 '71 60w

"Pointing out that most of our present scientific disciplines were once considered occult, Bonewits argues that magic also can be profitably subjected to scientific methods. He further believes that the traditional distinctions between black (evil) and white (good) magic are untrue and misleading. . . . The materials listed in the bibliography are devilishly hard to locate. However, the interdisciplinary approach, drawing on the fields of anthropology, mythology, religion, language and psychology, and the balanced, amusing style will appeal to skeptics and believers alike." Marcia Keller
Library J 96:4207 D 15 '71 150w [YA]

BONHOEFFER, DIETRICH. Letters and papers from prison; ed. by Eberhard Bethge. enl ed 437p $7.95; pa $2.95 Macmillan (N Y)

B or 92
LC 78-184531

This new "edition, while omitting nothing found in the earlier editions, shifts the emphasis to the private sphere of Bonhoeffer's life. . . . References to his fiancée and to their plans for marriage, omitted in earlier editions, are now included, as is her recent article containing excerpts from his personal letters. . . . The book also contains hitherto inaccessible letters and legal papers referring to Bonhoeffer's trial, a reminiscence by Karl-Friedrich Bonhoeffer of the time spent in prison by members of his family, and a new introduction by Dietrich Bonhoeffer's close friend Eberhard Bethge." (Publisher's note) Index of biblical references. Index of names.

"As influential as any book in or near the theological field in the past third of this century, this collection . . . inspires rereading of the provocative probes in which the imprisoned theologian engaged."

Christian Century 89:346 Mr 22 '72 60w

"We become aware as we read the new material in the expanded edition of Letters and Papers from Prison that [Bonhoeffer] was in some respects not at all a modern man. This is shown by the biographical data supplied by the extensive excerpts from letters to Bonhoeffer as well as from the more personal of his own prison writings. His views on marriage, to take one example, reek with cozy, upper-class, Prussian and Lutheran patriarchalism. The uncritical use of Scripture to enjoin wifely submission indicates that even his theological sensibilities in this area were less contemporary than those of many Christians who preceded him in time." G. A. Lindbeck

Commonweal 96:527 S 29 '72 340w

"Those of Bonhoeffer's letters that were originally abbreviated are now presented in full. . . . [Some of his] occasional writings produced in prison are also included [and] there are explanations of the circumstances of the correspondence and its cryptic references, and notes on the interrogations which were hitherto inaccessible. . . . [He] was taken seriously only as a martyr. What this new edition makes clear . . . is Bonhoeffer's profound faith in revelation. . . . Does Letters and Papers . . . deepen our appreciation of the martyr? On the contrary, the expansion of Bonhoeffer's letters and the supplementing of these by letters to him from Professor Bethge enable us to take a fresh look at Bonhoeffer's thought."

TLS p103 Ja 28 '72 270w

BONJEAN, CHARLES M., ed. Community politics; a behavioral approach; ed by Charles M. Bonjean, Terry N. Clark [and] Robert L. Lineberry. 403p $6.95; pa $4.45 Free press 320 Community life. Power (Social sciences)
LC 72-136273

Approximately half of the contents of this anthology "are reprinted from the 'Community Politics' topical issue of an interdisciplinary journal, the Social Science Quarterly. Additional articles were added to this core group because: (1) they introduced ideas and/or data about community politics which predated the Quarterly contributions; (2) they further developed the basic themes suggested by clusters of core articles; or (3) they were concerned with a basic community politics theme not included among the core articles. The final selection of articles grouped themselves . . . about five community politics problem areas: the multiplicity of local governments, mass participation in community politics, elites and power structures, attitudes and values of local political leaders, and urban public policy." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"[This book] stakes out a broader field than the traditional community power structure analysis. The aim is to provide a general point of departure to community politics. . . . It is emphasized that the area of community politics has rapidly undergone a transition from an exploratory to an analytical level. . . . What the reader will want to know is the extent to which the book fulfills its purpose. . . . The total product emerges as a mature definition of community politics. Students of community power will find their outlook broadened and challenged by new goals. . . . [This work] fits its contributing articles to the five-subject-area framework to which it is addressed. There is a logical progression and, what is most important, the student or scholar can discover the trend of community politics as it is cutting its way along the new research frontier."

D. C. Miller
Am J Soc 77:792 Ja '72 600w

"[In this collection] there is the usual problem of finding a continuous or common thread or theme. It is not the usual type of reader on community politics political scientists have been accustomed to seeing. . . . The carefully selected articles are all worthy of inclusion. Each section is prefaced with an introduction. If there is a shortcoming, it is the lack of a chapter positing conclusions. Outstanding bibliographies; carefully indexed."

Choice 8:908 S '71 120w

"A strong point [of this anthology] is comprehensiveness: both overall reach and diversity within sections. The articles also run most of the methodological gamut: case studies, analyses of secondary data, and statistical techniques ranging from cross tabulation to path analysis on variables preselected with the aid of factor analysis for example. The reader will, moreover, be exposed to a fairly wide variety of conceptual approaches. . . . The editors also manage, surprisingly, to arrange this diversity into a reasonably coherent product, largely by juxtaposition and other implicit means. The overt unifying elements—preface, overview articles, and section introductions—are suggestive, but leave most of the work to the reader. . . . This [work] will be useful as a reference, and as a reader for the advanced student." T. R. Harris

Contemp Sociol 1:538 N '72 1200w

BONSAL, PHILIP W. Cuba, Castro, and the United States. 318p il $9.95 Univ. of Pittsburgh press

327.7291 Cuba—Foreign relations—U.S. U.S.—Foreign relations—Cuba
ISBN 0-8229-3225-3 LC 72-151505

"This is the personal testimony of our last . . . ambassador to Cuba. It is essentially the story of repeated attempts by the author to reach an understanding between the two countries during the first two years of the revolutionary regime—attempts which were sabotaged, he contends, by Castro's native . . . anti-Americanism, and then by the . . . over-reactions of the Eisenhower and Kennedy administrations, culminating in the Bay of Pigs disaster. Bonsor concentrates on [an] exploration of the policy issues involved. . . . Bibliography. Index." (Library J)

"[Bonsor] not only reveals a wealth of information about his own outlook procedures and experiences, but he also supplies clues to future developments. . . . Today, [his] hopes are pitched to a change in revolutionary leadership. Like many Cuban patriots who fled the dictatorship, the author favors the 'Revolution without Fidel.' It is his belief that geography, a tradition of friendship and the complementary nature of national economies can produce an era of trust and partnership in social progress and peace. He fails to propose, much less answer, two questions: Who will supplant Fidel? What role will the Kremlin play in the new arrangement?" J. F. Thorning

America 126:127 F '72 460w

Choice 9:414 My '72 160w

"[The author] deals authoritatively and fairly with most aspects of America's relations with Cuba, and there are extensive 'Notes on the Cuban Background' to complete the picture. (The essay on sugar is basic to the general argument and could, to advantage, be read first). Many of his opinions are not flattering to the Cubans; but nor, for that matter, do they display the Americans in a rosy light."

Economist 242:58 F 26 '72 240w

"[This] is an intelligent, learned, and provocative lawyer's brief. While this reviewer personally disagrees with many of the conclusions, nowhere has he read a more eloquent and reasoned case for U.S. policy and U.S. interests in Cuba—a case only strengthened by Bonsor's often devastating criticisms. . . . This is a splendid contribution to the literature on Latin American affairs and, indeed, on international relations, and it belongs in any library that can afford to acquire it." Mark Falcoff

Library J 96:2495 Ag '71 280w

BONTEMPS, ARNA, ed. The Harlem Renaissance remembered; essays edited with a memoir by Arna Bontemps. 310p pl $6.95 Dodd

810.9 Negro authors. Harlem, New York (City). Negro literature—History and criticism
ISBN 0-396-06517-1 LC 72-723

"Bontemps was among the . . . black writers who gravitated to New York and constituted what became known as the Harlem Renaissance. . . . Following Mr. Bontemps' description of this world . . . are discussions of such subjects as Patterns of the Harlem Renaissance, Jean Toomer: As Modern Man, Jessie Fauset and Nella Larsen, Langston Hughes and the Harlem Renaissance, Major Themes in the Poetry of Countee Cullen, Claude McKay and the Cult of Primitivism, Portrait of Wallace Thurman, Theophilus Lewis and the Theatre of the Harlem Renaissance, Zora Neale Hurston and the Eatonville Anthropology, Charles S. Johnson, and Frank Horne and the Second

BONTEMPS, ARNA—Continued

Echelon Poets of the Harlem Renaissance." (Publisher's note) Bibliographies. Index.

"The book is a comprehensive work, valuable to any collection and a necessity for growing libraries." L. D. Mitchell

Best Sell 32:251 S 1 '72 420w

"This collection of 13 essays parallels Harlem Renaissance by N. Huggins [BRD 1972], but does not duplicate his effort. Huggins explores the social and philosophical background of the era, while this study concerns itself entirely with Harlem's nascent literary activity. All the major black authors of the Renaissance receive long explicative essays. . . . Of particular interest are Bontemps' introductory memoir . . . and an analysis of 'second echelon' poets such as Frank Horne and Gwendolyn B. Bennett by Ronald Primeau. Harlem Renaissance writers are often criticized for merely replacing the 'primal slave' stereotype with an equally deadening 'exotic Negro' stereotype. It is easy to overlook the foundation they left for later writers. This book helps correct the error." Donald Gilzinger

Library J 97:2399 J1 '72 130w

"[Bontemps'] introductory 'memoir' gives, unfortunately, only a hazy impression of the men and ideas behind [this] Renaissance, but the other essays manage to fill the gaps. Mae Henderson's portrait of the brilliant, eccentric Wallace Thurman is superb and Nicholas Canaday skilfully demonstrates Countee Cullen's ability to universalize his sensitive verse by avoiding racial propaganda. But Larry Thompson's examination of Jean Toomer is sophomoric and the piece on Langston Hughes tells much about the man's life and little about his poetry. Bontemps' selections provide a good, if limited, memoir of the Harlem Renaissance." D. P. Condit

Nat R 24:1019 S 15 '72 150w

Reviewed by Jodi Braxton

New Repub 167:27 N 4 '72 1800w

BONTEMPS, ARNA, jt. ed. The poetry of the Negro, 1746-1970. See Hughes, L.

BOOKCHIN, MURRAY. Post-scarcity anarchism. 288p $6.95; pa $2.95 Ramparts press

335 Anarchism and anarchists. Radicals and radicalism. Social change
SBN 0-87867-005-X LC 75-158914

These essays are concerned with the union of ecological and utopian ideas with a libertarian theory of social change. Many first appeared in Anarchos magazine.

"[This book sets] forth the anarchist view of the modern world. It holds to some of the original ideas of Bakunin, but breaks new ground in its discussion of freedom in a society of technological abundance. . . . Bookchin makes a trenchant analysis of modern society, and offers a pointed, provocative discussion of the ecological crisis. However, one has some questions and misgivings. Bookchin poses the climactic issue of anarchism or annihilation. Thus Armageddon appears as the reverse side of Utopia. . . . Just when one is ready to assign anarchism to the 'dustbin of history,' the great upheaval in France of May 1968 demonstrates its continuing vitality. So, too, do these essays." George Charney

Library J 96:2779 S 15 '71 430w

"[This] book is in many places exciting and might even be seminal. It is the closest thing I've seen to a vision both practical and transcendent. Anyone who wants to make revolution in this country should read it and reckon with it. We have so little theory, from any tradition, that speaks directly to the contemporary situation; Bookchin has occupied a vacuum, and rather deserves his singularity, which stands out vividly against the background of traditional anarchism. . . . [His] essays are essentially updatings of the traditional anarchist stance. There is some history in them, not nearly enough, but perhaps that omission is outweighed by Bookchin's contemporaneity." Todd Gitlin

Nation 214:309 Mr ■ '72 3000w

BOOTH, EDWIN. Between actor and critic: selected letters of Edwin Booth and William Winter; ed. with an introd. and commentary by Daniel J. Watermeier. 329p pl $10 Princeton univ. press

B or 92 Winter, William. Theater—U.S.
ISBN 0-691-06193-9 LC 72-113012

"This correspondence spans the period from 1869 to 1890, and details productions of that time, describes the economic woes besetting an actor-manager, considers the aesthetic problems between actor and critic, and provides a . . . background to the social activities of the period. The letters provide . . . biographical insights into the Booth family and William Winter, dean of the theater critics of the period." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by C. D. Peavy

Am Lit 43:660 Ja '72 550w

"[This collection] forms the most accurate and complete record of the last 15 years of Booth's acting-managing career ever assembled. The letters, virtually none of which has been published, . . . reveal Booth as a generous, impulsive, dedicated, long-suffering man, whose loyalty to his friends and duty to his profession knew no limits. His financial and domestic troubles, along with his artistic convictions and triumphs, are shared . . . with the man who . . . wrote what remains the standard biography of the actor [The life and art of Edwin Booth]. Watermeier has added an informative and helpful connecting narrative and extensive, if occasionally inaccurate, annotation. [The book contains] a number of photographs and facsimiles."

Choice 8:1195 N '71 190w

"Winter is represented by only a few entries, while there is a profusion of Booth's letters written from his home in New York and while on tour throughout the United States and England. Watermeier's footnotes, biographical notes, and index are most helpful. The book, essential for performing arts collections, will also make an important addition to general humanities collections." Paul Myers

Library J 96:2667 S 1 '71 120w

Va Q R 47:clxxiii autumn '71 110w

BORCHARDT, KURT. Structure and performance of the U.S. communications industry: government regulation and company planning. 180p $6 Harvard univ. Division of res.

334 Telecommunication. Industry and state—U.S.
SBN 87584-082-5 LC 73-104322

"Structure refers to the corporate organizations supplying communications in the U.S.; performance refers to the procedures used by these organizations and the government regulators of the communications industry. . . . Borchardt describes the 125-year history of communications development and the resulting structure and performance. His political analysis covers the machinery for solving magnitude, and the interdependence of these problems and their solutions." (Choice)

"Beyond predicting increasing high-level executive branch involvement in setting communication objectives and more attention by firms to long-run market planning, the author leaves their nature largely undefined. Two chapters on switched and broadband communications trace the evolution of technology, firm behavior and government regulation in the United States. Yet despite its title, the book does not provide an analytic assessment of performance of the particular structure of this industry. . . . Largely ignored is the role competitive markets might play in channeling resources into new services (microwave links, cable television) and technologies (satellites, data transmission). . . . [What] is missing from this book is an examination of a structure which increasingly allows resolution of conflict in the marketplace, not the hearing room." B. M. Mitchell

Ann Am Acad 400:217 Mr '72 440w

"[This volume] describes in Laswellian terms 'who does what and how,' 'who gets what and how,' and 'on what grounds does the government (as regulator) answer the first two questions.' . . . The author was legal counsel for the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee for the U.S. House of Representatives. . . . An index would have been useful."

Choice 7:1411 D '70 190w

"This book is an original, thought-provoking contribution to the political economy of regulation. . . . Addressed mainly to the participating business entities (though also to the government administrators), the book makes explicit much of the regulatory process to which they are all parties. . . . Regulation is conceived in the broadest executive, legislative, judicial, and administrative terms, and interindustry negotiation may even remove certain bones of contention from the regulatory arena entirely. . . . The author makes explicit from the outset his conviction that optimal cost/benefit solutions cannot be readily identified let alone imposed from above. Yet Borchardt's failure to distinguish his concepts more fully from those of conventional industry studies may limit the deserved attention his book receives among professional economists." H. J. Levin

Pol Sci Q 86:729 D '71 600w

BORDAZ, JACQUES. Tools of the old and new stone age; phot. by Lee Boltin; pub. for the Am. mus. of natural history. 145p $5.95; pa $2.45 Natural hist. press

913.03 Stone implements. Stone age
LC 76-103733

The author "describes some of the main categories of prehistoric stone tools of Paleolithic, Mesolithic, and Neolithic age, with special reference to the technology of their manufacture, the raw materials of which they were made, and, where possible, the ways in which they were used. This main theme is developed against the background of the archeological sequence of those periods, which is described . . . in terms of changing subsistence patterns as well as changing prehistoric cultures." (Science) Bibliography.

"This volume incorporates two previous articles on stone working technology published in the January and February 1959 issues of Natural History Magazine. . . . The text is short and easy to read. . . . The author characterizes the subdivisions of time by major tool types and flaking techniques in his introduction. . . . This book is an important contribution to lithic technology. . . . Unfortunately, the drawings do not depict the methods of applying force but, rather, the arrows indicate the orientation of the flake scar to the artifact." D. E. Crabtree

Am Anthropol 73:1390 D '71 1000w

"[This] is a good short introductory book, with plenty of accurate information on the technological side, and it is pleasing to note that much of the incidental discussion of important, more general aspects of the Paleolithic sequence is in reasonably up-to-date terms. . . . There is a long list of works for further reading, which students should find very useful in spite of a number of curious omissions. Among the illustrations, most of the line drawings are at least adequate; photographing flints satisfactorily presents many problems, and one feels that the equality of reproduction here may not always have done justice to Lee Boltin's original plates." D. A. Roe

Science 170:1391 D 25 '70 430w
TLS p371 Mr 31 '72 360w

BOREN, JAMES H. When in doubt, mumble; a bureaucrat's handbook; introd. by Laurence J. Peter. 172p il $5.95 Van Nostrand-Reinhold 301.18 Bureaucracy—Anecdotes, facetiae, satire, etc.
LC 72-4877

The author, a former State Department official, offers bureaucrats some rules of operation: When in charge, ponder; when in trouble, delegate; and when in doubt, mumble.

"The irony of James H. Boren's [book] will almost certainly go over [the bureaucrats'] heads. . . . So despite its inviting subtitle, the book is not for the bureaucrats at all, but for the converted. And the converted will find Mr. Boren less perceptive and less funny than the man who first invented the anti-bureaucracy movement—the much imitated Professor [C. Northcote] Parkinson himself [in Parkinson's Law, BRD 1957]." P. M.
Christian Science Monitor p9 Ag 30 '72 230w

"Another go at bureaucracies. . . . [The author] delivers a few sledge-hammer blows (as satire the book is not particularly subtle) at the absurd practices and inverted priorities of most organizations. . . . In the current avalanche of books of this sort (most of which gun for laughs), the thing that gives [this volume] a rather unique flavor is the unerring accuracy of the descriptions of what it takes to succeed; which, curiously, is when Boren really is being serious. Peter's introduction, though self-indulgent, is interesting." A. J. Anderson

Library J 97:3172 O 1 '72 170w

BORGES, JORGE LUIS. Doctor Brodie's report; tr. by Norman Thomas di Giovanni, in collaboration with the author. 128p $5.95 Dutton

ISBN 0-525-09382-6 LC 72-158581

"Three of the 11 stories in this collection are available in The Aleph and Other Stories, 1933-1969, [BRD 1971], and the rest have appeared in the New Yorker and other periodicals. . . . [Included are] 'Guayaquil,' [in which] two scholars meet to discuss ■ journey one will take in order to transcribe a recently discovered letter of Simon Bolivar in which the Liberator describes his meetings with José de San Martín in 1822. . . . [and] 'The Meeting' and 'Juan Murana.' . . . [which] deal with violence. . . . [Other] stories are 'The Gospel According to Mark,' in which ■ medical student reads the Bible to a peasant family and is crucified by them, and 'The End of the Duel'—a . . . story about two prisoners forced to run a foot race after having their throats cut." (Library J)

Reviewed by Thomas Kretz
America 126:159 F 12 '72 340w

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 229:107 F '72 500w

Reviewed by V. J. Colimore
Best Sell 31:513 F 15 '72 190w
Choice 9:513 Je '72 100w

"[Borges] makes a great point of claiming 'straight-forwardness' as the narrative mode of his current period, alludes to 'realism' ■ ■ ■ desideratum, though these qualities may in fact be alien to his 'literary habits' (as I believe them to be). Yet the conventions of 'realism' and 'straightforwardness,' unless they are defined very oddly, impose severe exigencies —which . . . Borges gracefully declines." D. L. Parker

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ja 13 '72 700w

Reviewed by R. R. Harris
Library J 97:33 Ja 1 '72 360w

Reviewed by Ronald Christ
Nation 214:251 F 21 '72 1450w

Reviewed by D. K. Mano
Nat R 24:227 Mr 3 '72 230w

Reviewed by Michael Wood
N Y Rev of Books 18:32 Je 1 '72 1550w

Reviewed by E. R. Monégat
N Y Times Bk R p4 My 7 '72 650w

"These are the first stories [Borges] has written since 1953. . . . There is none, or little, of [his] famous concern with metaphysics, with planes of time and existence, nothing of the cities and libraries and labyrinths that men build in an attempt to control an infinite plenitude of possible realities. . . . Borges brings us back to certain fundamentals. These are . . . stories that are meant to sound as if they had been told by naïve but masterly tellers of tales. An ancient oral tradition is invoked here . . . [which explains] why Borges suggests that his recent work, in which he has found his 'own voice,' can be compared to the Anglo-Saxon 'Battle of Maldon.' . . . It is ■ fine collection and it has . . . been translated with distinction." P. S. Prescott
Newsweek 79:55 Ja 3 '72 550w

Reviewed by Fernando Alegria
Sat R 55:59 F 26 '72 1200w

"Borges' best previous stories were strange, dream-like fables that cast an oblique, ironic light on the doings of this world. In this latest group, the world is all too much with the author. These are mostly plain, unadorned tales—some harsh, some tender—of love, hate and the inevitability of death. . . . The characters of these stories are the sort of people Borges grew up with in Argentina, the heroes and villains of the legends he was taught as ■ child. . . . [He] is a master at describing people who have come to the end of their world and their dreams. . . . The pick of the collection is the title story, which is a partial return to the dream kingdoms of the earlier works." E. G. Warner

Time 99:63 Ja 21 '72 600w

BORGES, JORGE LUIS. Selected poems, 1923-1967; ed., with an introd. and notes, by Norman Thomas Di Giovanni. (A Seymour Lawrence bk) bilingual ed 328p $12.50 Delacorte press

861

LC 70-164850

This volume of the work of the Argentinian poet contains two groups of poems; the first, "comprising all the poems taken from Fervor of Buenos Aires, Moon Across the Way, and San Martin Copybook—was written forty or more years ago. . . . [The second part of the book] consists of more recent poems [which have been translated by British and American poets including di Giovanni], . . . Ben Belitt, Alan Dugan, William Ferguson, . . . W. S. Merwin, Alastair Reid, Mark Strand, John Updike, and Richard Wilbur." (Sat R)

Reviewed by Thomas Kretz

America 126:640 Je 17 '72 300w

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:110 Mr '72 30w

Choice 9:1136 N '72 230w

"One is impelled to doubt [Borges'] wisdom in allowing his originals to be made over by his editor-translator. Di Giovanni's attempt 'to anticipate the translator's problems and his possible questions, and so solve them for him in advance' has taken the art out of the majority of the translations in this volume and left the commonplace. It is regrettable that the other translators allowed themselves to be manipulated; it is pitiful that a noted author should permit such totalitarian control to be exercised. The book's only asset seems to be the inclusion of the Spanish poems; but, even here, hands have tampered with many original versions." Robert Lima

Library J 97:1018 Mr 15 '72 170w

Reviewed by Ronald Christ

Nation 215:344 O 16 '72 1350w

"The translations here are excellent on the whole—those by Alastair Reid and W. S. Merwin often actually improve on the originals; those by di Giovanni are adequate, although too frequently they become interpretations of the Spanish texts rather than English versions. There are elegant pieces by Richard Howard and César Rennert—a touch too elegant perhaps—and smooth and limpid translations by Mark Strand and Alan Dugan. Ben Belitt's versions of several of the more famous poems read well in English but often have nothing to do with the Spanish, and sometimes invert its meanings." Michael Wood

N Y Rev of Books 18:33 Je 1 '72 1200w

"[This volume] encompasses practically the whole of Borges's creative life, from his origins as an 'ultraist' poet, a member of a sect that believed (like the Imagist poets) that metaphor was everything, to the old wise man of today who believes in very little except in finding a small voice to say what everybody else is saying. . . . His poems now are like the conversation of the poet with himself, that other one Borges discusses in a brilliant page of 'Dreamtigers' reprinted in one of the appendices of this new edition. It is a private voice though not a confessional one. Even when the poet speaks of the things he loves, of his shortcomings, of his near blindness, he speaks as if about someone else; Borges, the mask, the persona he has finally resigned himself to be." E. R. Monegal

N Y Times Bk R p4 My 7 '72 650w

"Referring to the process of translating Borges, in collaboration with Borges, di Giovanni has written: 'We agree . . . that the text should not be approached as sacred object but as a tool, allowing us, whenever we feel the need, to add or subtract from it, to depart from it, or even, on rare occasions, to improve it . . . recognizing, of course, that the reader for whom Borges writes and the reader for whom we translate are entirely different persons.' . . . If there ever was an example of a serious, painstaking, conscientious labor of love, this refashioning of Borges's poetry is undoubtedly it. The interested reader of Selected Poems will also find definitive versions, together with their important variants, and an appendix containing extremely useful notes." Fernando Alegria

Sat R 55:59 F 26 '72 1200w

BOSCH. The complete paintings of Bosch: introd. by Gregory Martin; notes and catalogue by Mia Cinotti. 118p il $5.95 Abrams 759.9492 Bosch, Hieronymus (Hieronymus van Aeken)
LC 69-16896

"In this book Cinotti tried to compile all that is known about the artist and his works, whether these are documented or merely attributed, extant or lost, and all previous interpretations of the artist and his paintings. Every painting listed is illustrated in black and white; the most important paintings and many of their details are in color." (Choice) Bibliography.

"The compilation and interpretation of the data are useful but lack authority, the black-and-white reproductions, although numerous, are often small and washed-out in spite of sharpness of detail. . . . The general reader may be stimulated and the art historian tempted to use the book for a quick review of a point under discussion, but both will have to check the literature excerpted. However, since there is no other book on Bosch that furnishes all these data, and because of its low price, it is a welcome addition to general art libraries. If specialized libraries own the original Italian edition (1966), they do not need this translation, the only difference being the three-page general introduction."

Choice 8:1323 D '71 230w

"The value of this volume is in the catalogue of works and [in the] 60 or so colour plates. . . . The large format gives full play to detail, particularly intriguing in works by Bosch."

Economist 240:52 Ag 7 '71 30w

BOSCH, HIERONYMUS (HIERONYMUS VAN AEKEN). See Bosch

BOSHER, J. F. French finances, 1770-1795; from business to bureaucracy. 369p $18.50 Cambridge

336.44 Finance—France

SBN 521-07764-8 LC 73-111124

"Who collected, held and spent government funds in the reign of Louis XVI? How was the central administration of finance arranged and how did it function? What was the Royal Treasury? These are some of the questions [the author has] tried to answer. . . . [This study also attempts] to interpret the financial history of the ancien régime in terms of the administration rather than the budget and the taxes." (Pref) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"One need only compare the standard histories of the finances of the Old Regime and the French Revolution by Charles Gomel, Marcel Marion, and René Stourm with Professor J. F. Boshers' monograph to realize the originality and importance of its scholarly narrative. . . . [The author has used] evidence from archives, pamphlets, memoirs, newspapers, and speeches. His style of presentation, at once objective and warm, is perfectly adapted to the subject. The book is solid and offers conclusions that should endure." H. T. Parker

Am Hist R 77:155 F '72 400w

"Boshers deserves our gratitude and admiration for the highly competent manner in which he explains the working of this complex branch of early modern government. His interpretations are quite another matter. Daring in scope as well as its theses, this work attempts to squeeze the essence of the complex fiscal changes at the end of the Old Régime and during the French Revolution into a simple formula: that the fiscal system was 'a capitalism,' that fiscal officials' relations with the crown were 'contractual and not bureaucratic,' and that this element of private enterprise in government explains both the king's inability to cope with financial problems and the significance of revolutionary reforms. . . . Much of the very interesting evidence Boshers presents contradicts his own conclusions; and he is as 'guilty of anachronisms' as those upholders of more traditional views whom he attacks."

Choice 8:586 Je '71 170w

BOSTON. Museum of fine arts. Zen painting & calligraphy. See Fontein, J.

BOTSFORD, KEITH. Dominguin. 260p il $8.95 Quadrangle bks.

R or 92 Dominguin, Luis Miguel, Bullfights

ISBN 0-8129-0236-X LC 71-182503

This account of the Spanish bullfighter "is composed of the words of Dominguin as recorded, transcribed, and edited by Botsford." (Library J)

"Dominguín is the greatest bullfighter Spain has known in the twentieth century. For him, Botsford . . . puts together in these pages an interesting style of biography. . . . The subject of the biography speaks in the simple print; the biographer and others hold their dialogue in italicized type. There are some fascinating photographs . . . [and] intriguing views of the Spanish Church and its priests. . . . This is a solid piece of work and it is recommended for anyone who would learn about the inner workings of the bullfighting business." E. J. Linehan

Best Sell 32:162 J1 1 '72 450w

"This book seems to have exposed the personality of Luis Miguel Dominguín to the reader as completely as he has exposed his body to the fighting bulls it has been his life's work to kill. No other matador has made this open an attempt to reveal himself to the public. . . . Perhaps more important was Botsford's ability to become a catalyst in this revelation of Dominguín the man. There are harsh and cruel words for the bullfight public, the press, Hemingway, Ordóñez, and others. Dominguín also speaks with intelligence, pride, passion, lust, and fear as he discusses the most intimate aspects of his life. No man can completely reveal himself, but this is a fascinating attempt, and one that will be debated in bullfighting circles for some time." C. M. Weisenberg

Library J 97:1031 Mr 15 '72 200w

Reviewed by Larry Collins

N Y Times Bk R p44 S 10 '72 1000w

BOTTOME, EDGAR M. The missile gap: ■ study of the formulation of military and political policy. 265p $10 Fairleigh Dickinson univ. press

355.03 U.S.—Military policy. Russia—Military policy. Intercontinental ballistic missiles

ISBN 0-8386-7734-7 LC 77-129964

This "study traces and analyzes the . . . forces which led to a . . . belief in the United States that the Soviet Union possessed a commanding superiority over the United States in ballistic missiles during the period 1953-1961. . . . [The book gives] background information on United States policy from the end of World War II to 1956. The involvement of the postwar policy of containment and of the concept of strategic nuclear deterrence is discussed, as well as the basic strategies and weapons systems advocated to implement this policy. The author then traces the unfolding and eventual destruction of the missile gap myth . . . [and examines] the question of Soviet missile capability versus military intent." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Published 10 years too late, the title might better have been 'the missile gap myth.' . . . Bottome attempts to make a contribution through analysis of the missile gap as a 'study of the formulation of military and political policy,' which it really was not. He relies far too heavily upon news media and secondary sources which can hardly be considered authoritative and hence add little to the discussion."

Choice 8:1508 Ja '72 140w

"At a time when Senator Jackson suggests that another 'missile gap' is just around the corner, this [book] . . . is especially important. However, since 'the unfolding and eventual destruction of the missile gap myth' is an important part of Bottome's Balance of Terror: a Guide to the Arms Race [BRD 1971], the question of duplication is important. Style and approach are similar, the major difference being the narrower focus and greater depth in the newer work. Most libraries will find adequate coverage of the subject in the earlier work. I would recommend purchase of The Missile Gap only for the larger research collection or as an alternate selection where there is demand for Balance of Terror." W. G. Robinson

Library J 96:2518 Ag '71 150w

BOUGLÉ, CÉLESTIN. Essays on the caste system; tr. with an introd. by D. F. Pocock. 228p $17.50 Cambridge

301.44 Caste. India—Social conditions
ISBN 0-521-08093-2 LC 79-154506

"Bouglé's specialism was political sociology, and his Essays on the Caste System, originally published in 1908 in Travaux de l'année sociologique, edited by Durkheim, are his only excursions into the field of indology. . . . In these Essays Bouglé proposes criteria for the identification of a caste system. These three principles, hierarchy, specialization and repulsion (separation) are still regarded as basic to an understanding of caste. . . . Bouglé sets out to demonstrate in Part One that any attempt to discover the 'roots' of the system must fail if it does not take into account these principles. In Part Two he considers the system in operation, and in Part Three he speculates on its supposed racial origins and examines its effects upon law, economics and literature." (Publisher's note)

"We can now appreciate how Bouglé's understanding of caste differs so radically from that of other commentators. Bouglé does not attempt to isolate a single determinant, nor does he strive to make castes direct descendants of fossilized occupational or descent groups, nor even less derive them from the ancient varna system. Most importantly, Bouglé insists on the systematic character of caste and focuses on those features that account for relations among castes. For him a caste defined in isolation from other castes is unthinkable. So too, Bouglé's purpose in seeking underlying elements of caste is not to demonstrate that the ancient Indians contrived a unique system from totally unique components, but rather that they had fashioned a unique system from components common among many primitive peoples. Bouglé's analysis is thus an inversion of the myth of caste perpetrated by his European predecessors." S. A. Tyler

Am Anthropol 74:1330 D '72 1200w

"[This is] one of the most profound studies of the caste system. . . . In the course of his essays . . . [the author] raised many important questions that still lack adequate answers. Bouglé's work is still among the standard treatments of caste and deserves ■ place in any good library."

Choice 9:440 My '72 180w

"Why study India? The better, it seems, to know ourselves. D. F. Pocock, in an elegant and sparing introduction to his translation of Bouglé's important essays . . . gives a quotation from an obituary tribute which appeared in the Année Sociologique: 'He was preoccupied above all by problems of structure and social justice and devoted his thesis, which he defended in 1899, to egalitarian ideas (idées égalitaires), and was thus led, by the contrast, to a study of the caste system. . . .'"

TLS p1119 S 22 '72 300w

BOULDING, KENNETH E. A primer on social dynamics; history as dialectics and development. 153p $5.95; pa $2.45 Free press

301.2 Social change

LC 70-123192

"The thesis of this book is that there ■ two major types of processes at work in human history and in the dynamics of society. On the one hand there are dialectical processes. These involve conflict and the victory of one group or system over another, and hence a succession of victors. On the other hand there are non-dialectical (or developmental) processes in which conflict, even where it exists, is incidental, and in which the central pattern of the process is cumulative, evolutionary, and continuous. My main proposition is that the dialectical processes . . . are not the major processes of history but only waves and turbulences on the great historical tides of evolution and development, which themselves are fundamentally nondialectical." (Pref) Index.

Reviewed by T. H. Von Laue

Am Hist R 77:1400 D '72 320w

"Most of the 'Primer' is taken up with exposition of a scheme for analyzing human history and society. . . . The breadth of the questions Boulding confronts leaves him little time for concrete and serious historical discussion. Here and there he tosses off such summary judgments as that the French Revolution set France back rather than made her leap ahead. But he is not, like some philosophers, grandly indifferent to historians who toil with detail. The end of his 'Primer' is an appeal for professional historians to write the history of mankind in a broad ecumenical spirit without making it bland and dull." F. X. Sutton

Am J Soc 77:771 Ja '72 330w

BOULDING, K. E.—Continued

"'Primer' is perhaps not the exact word for a book as subtle in its argument, as allusive, and as complex in the issues it raises as this one. . . . [Boulding] never succumbs to the simplistic or facile, but the subjects he deals with are made surprisingly lucid. . . . The author's learning and commitment to substance are everywhere evident. . . . It is the sustained, sometimes brilliant, often wise, always knowledgeable analysis of the whole dialectical consciousness, born of religion and its enmeshment of the world as one of conflict between Good and Evil, that gives the book its extraordinary value." Robert Nisbet
Am Pol Sci R 66:597 Je '72 2000w

"Boulding may be criticized for defining as dialectical all ideologies that 'tend to put a high intrinsic value on conflict, struggle, war and revolution. . . . It is the reverse of knowledge, that is, ignorance that makes for the dialectical pattern, and once knowledge is achieved the dialectical pattern immediately disappears.' These words are excessive, denying as they appear to do the viable traditions of dialectical thought in China, Greece, India, and Japan, not to mention Western Europe from medieval to modern times. . . . The book's arguments are, on many counts, cogent and instructive." Llewellyn Gross
Ann Am Acad 398:197 N '71 700w

"The book is 'frankly a polemical work of reflection rather than scholarship' and has the serious defect of caricaturing out of all recognition the opposing (Marxian) point of view, as well as unduly taking the models of economic theory as a framework for understanding social and intellectual change. It will, nevertheless, serve as a stimulating introduction to some of the critical social-philosophical controversies of the present day. Indeed, Boulding is very sharp on the point that needs to be emphasized above all: how interest-motivated adoption of particular social philosophies (images of the social world) leads to consequential action in conformity with them. . . . The book is exceptionally clear and well written. Recommended for college, university, and public libraries." L. S. Kaplan
Library J 96:1625 My 1 '71 290w

BOULTON, JAMES T., ed. Johnson: the critical heritage. 457p $17.50 Barnes & Noble

828 Johnson, Samuel
ISBN 0-389-04180-7

This volume, which contains a selection of contemporaneous criticism of Johnson's work, "enables the reader to trace the development of . . . [his] reputation from his first appearance in print through his years of fame. [It] ends with Carlyle's pronouncement that Johnson's name would live on, irrespective of his own writings, because of Boswell's immortalising memoirs." (Economist)

"A single volume on so protean a figure as Johnson . . . cannot hope to be comprehensive. Nevertheless, we have here another gathering of materials which could be separately found only in a handful of great research libraries. Institutions with lesser resources would therefore be well advised to scrutinize the offerings in this series and, if unable to acquire the whole set, to select collections on authors who, like Johnson, represent their ages."

Choice 9:219 Ap '72 90w

"[For anyone concerned with Johnson's worth as a critic, poet, biographer and scholar] Mr. Boulton's book is the one to turn to."

Economist 241:xiif N 6 '71 160w

"In several ways [this book] makes a real contribution to the study of Johnson. . . . [Irwin's] theory is persuasive and carefully argued. What is of great interest is a corollary of this theory—that Johnson's writing was in the main an heroic effort at self-analysis. That Johnson wrote autobiographically has often been recognized. . . . But it is the extent of this autobiographical analysis that Mr Irwin's work implicitly brings to light."

TLS p1241 O 20 '72 470w

BOURDEAUX, MICHAEL. Faith on trial in Russia. 192p $5.95 Harper

286 Baptists, Russia—Church history.
Church and state in Russia
SBN 06-060985-0 LC 70-160642

This book is concerned with "the struggle of the Russian Baptists to achieve religious freedom." (America)

"The author documents the existence in the Soviet Union of an intimidated not persecuted Christian Church that has finally found the courage to take its fight into its own hands. Thanks to this book, and other documentation now becoming available, Christians in the West can no longer plead ignorance of the religious situation in the Soviet Union." V. S. Kearney

America 125:428 N 20 '71 100w

"An undistinguished book; of probable value only to very large university collections."

Choice 9:70 Mr '72 160w

"In this work Bourdeaux introduces us to some brave men and women, including some notably young women, who have risked much for their faith. One man, G. P. Vins, is particularly articulate, even poetic, under the pressure of a trial. It seems clear that the atheistic state neither understands nor can eradicate the religious spirit." W. B. Blakemore
Christian Century 88:1396 N 24 '71 300w

BOURDON, DAVID. Christo. See Christo

BOURNE, RANDOLPH S. The Gary schools; epilogue by Abraham Flexner and Frank P. Bachman; introduced and annot. by Adeline and Murray Levine. 323p il $12.50 MIT press

371.3 Education, Elementary
ISBN 0-262-02066-1 LC 70-118344

A reprint of the work describing "the concepts of a relevant education, a learning community, an educational park, a community school, and team teaching" in Gary, Indiana early in this century [originally reviewed in BRD 1916]. This volume contains a new introduction, which provides a biographical sketch of Bourne, attempts to put 'the Gary system into the context of that day,' and describes the attempt to introduce the Gary plan into New York schools. Also included are an epilogue (a reprint of The Gary Schools: a General Account by Abraham Flexner and F. P. Bachman [BRD 1919])." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"While in some instances additional documentation would have been helpful, new biographical data on Bourne, Wirt, Flexner, and Bachman, based on manuscripts and other primary sources, are cited in footnotes and references. These should be helpful to other researchers. This book will be a worthwhile addition to those libraries which have the original publications. For those libraries that do not, acquisition of the new edition is strongly recommended. It should prove useful as a reference or source book in graduate and undergraduate courses in education administration, history and sociology, and in courses dealing with curriculum and teaching methods."

Choice 8:448 My '71 160w

Reviewed by M. J. Bane

Harvard Ed R 42:273 My '72 550w
(Review essay)

Reviewed by R. R. Harris

Library J 96:1697 My 15 '71 100w

BOUSSET, WILHELM. Kyrios Christos; a history of the belief in Christ from the beginnings of Christianity to Irenaeus; tr. by John E. Steely. 496p $11 Abingdon

232 Jesus Christ, Christianity
ISBN 0-687-20983-8 LC 73-109684

"First published in German in 1913, Kyrios Christos traces the development of the Christian belief about Jesus in the first and second centuries of the Christian era, with particular reference to the title 'Lord.'" (Publisher's note) Index of biblical passages. Index of persons and subjects.

"[This book still influences] current discussion because . . . [it] helped to define contemporary problems and areas of study. Bousset [is] the most important representative of the history of religions school of New Testament scholarship . . . [which] casts off static categories in order to set biblical religion in the context of the surrounding religions and cultures. The beginnings of Christianity are investigated from the standpoint of the contemporary religious milieu." R. J. Clifford
America 125:464 N 27 '71 60w

"For more than 50 years every sound history of the assessment of Jesus within the early Christian communities has made a profound bow toward this volume. . . . Here one sees in its rich unfolding process virtually every problem that presently bugs the fraternity of early Christian researchers. . . . [The book] is not for everyone; it is long, tough, demanding. But if one has a mind that likes to understand how a huge problem got to be a huge problem—complex, rooted in fact, inescapable and perhaps even insoluble—he will find Bousset's an exemplary historical account." Joseph Sittler

Christian Century 88:888 J1 21 '71 180w

BOVA, BEN. The fourth state of matter; plasma dynamics and tomorrow's technology. 181p il $5.95 St Martins

530.4 Plasma (Ionized gases)
LC 75-145445

This book describes "several aspects of a relatively new field of physical study—the behavior of plasmas, which are neither solids, liquids, or gases. Tomorrow's technology, in which plasmas will play as prominent a role as gases now play in technology, is described, with . . . emphasis on applications of plasma physics to power generation and space propulsion. The role of plasma physics in the origin of the solar systems, the current environment in space, and the larger questions of cosmology are also discussed." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Outstanding! Popular treatments of science are difficult to do well and here is a thorough, readable, and reasonably accurate survey of plasmas! Bova uses ample pictures (which are a necessity) and discussions of the history of science and scientists. His treatment of experiments from the glow discharge tubes of the 19th century up to the Russian T-3 fusion device is most satisfying. Many teenage (and older) science enthusiasts will welcome this book."

Choice 8:1466 Ja '72 70w [YA]

"This book essentially records the work of the Avco Research Laboratory in Everett, Massachusetts on plasmas . . . and researchers' efforts to generate electricity from plasmas by controlling their flow. When control of nuclear fusion reactions through the use of plasma devices is achieved, more efficient conversion of atomic energy to electric power than has yet been accomplished in nuclear fission reactors will become possible. . . . [However, there are] minor technical errors and sensationalized predictions relating to world ecology and the universal availability of cheap electric power. . . . [But the book] includes plasma research done after 1968 . . . and is therefore worth having." O. V. Fortier

Library J 96:3906 N 15 '71 140w [YA]

BOVIS, H. EUGENE. The Jerusalem question, 1917-1968. (Stanford Univ. Hoover inst. on war, revolution and peace. Stud. 29. Pol.1) 175p maps $4.95 Hoover inst. press

320.9 Jerusalem—Politics and government
SBN 8179-3291-7 LC 73-149796

"Bovis' study and analysis of [Jerusalem's] religious and political problems] . . . begins with the World War I era and traces them through the 1967 Arab-Israeli War. Major emphasis is on the period since partition of Palestine in 1948, with a detailed survey of the numerous discussions in the U.N. and the spate of resulting proposals." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"This is an excellent summary with valuable appendices including maps, population of the city from 1800-1967, and an outline of some 26 proposals discussed in the text. Although a small volume, it is one of the best summaries available on the complex issues surrounding the divergent claims to Jerusalem. The 11-page bibliography is an added asset."

Choice 9:273 Ap '72 130w

"A brief, factual historical survey. . . . Although the work adds nothing new to the literature, it is more objective than most books on the subject." D. W. Littlefield

Library J 97:194 Ja 15 '72 110w

BOWDEN, HENRY WARNER. Church history in the age of science; historiographical patterns in the United States, 1876-1918. 269p $10 Univ. of N.C. press

270.03 Church history—Historiography
ISBN 0-8078-1176-9 LC 72-156134

These essays "analyze the ways in which church history has been written from 1876 to 1918 . . . [and deal with the] interplay between theological convictions and the scientific objectivity of the historian. . . . The principal figures in the development of the field of church history are set forth to show how the guiding assumption of the necessity of following out God's plan of salvation in church history gave way to a more empirical historiography. However, by the end of the period there still remained an uneasy union of 'careful, investigative procedures with insights derived from religious commitment.'" (New Eng Q) Bibliography.

"This book, incisively written and fair in its judgments, succeeds in making the history of church history interesting and relates it to the broadening sense of history as a science and an art. Appendix on the founding and development of the American Society of Church History; full, helpful bibliography."

Choice 9:660 J1/Ag '72 170w

"As Bowden traces meticulously the fortunes of church history through the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, numerous figures appear as major interpreters. . . . The book is thorough in detail, if not outrightly tedious, showing the author's commitment to the 'careful, investigative procedures.' It does not avoid the problem still with us, as to how the church historian can describe satisfactorily the conviction that God is doing a special work through the churches and yet be intellectually honest about the careers of these institutions."

C. A. Holbrook

New Eng Q 45:449 S '72 750w

BOWEN, DAVID. The struggle within; race relations in the United States. (W.V. Norton bk) rev ed 180p $4.95; lib bdg $4.99 Grosset

301.45 U.S.—Race relations—Juvenile literature. Negroes—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-448-21434-2; 0-448-26201-0 (lib bdg)
LC 72-182009

The author brings together "information on the history and future of race relations in this country. The coverage of politics includes much new material on the Negro vote and black office holders. The chapter 'Revolt' has been expanded and two additional ones, entitled 'Protest' and 'Black Power,' have been added, along with a list of standard titles for further reading." (Library J)

"This comparative study of race relations in the United States . . . [is] an excellent reference and research source in a compact book. [Bowen's] view with commendably little obvious bias reveals a basic difference in North-South treatment of the Negro. . . . In the book's summation, the hope is expressed that this country's 'useful tensions'—a result of civil rights action—may be the fertile field from which can rise the first truly interracial society in the world." Mrs. J. G. Gray

Best Sell 32:151 Je 15 '72 170w [YA]

"An enlarged generally improved revision of Bowen's widely acclaimed 1965 edition [BRD 1966]. . . . Even libraries that own the first edition will want this considerably updated title which includes for the first time such topics as civil disobedience, racism, and back-lash and black leaders like Stokely Carmichael, Floyd McKissick and Malcolm X." Karen Biddle

Library J 97:2958 S 15 '72 100w [YA]

BOWEN, JAMES. A history of western education. v 1; the ancient world; Orient and Mediterranean, 2000 B.C.—A.D. 1054. 395p il maps $15 St Martins

370.9 Education—History
LC 79-185251

In this first of a projected three volumes, the author "traces the development of education in the ancient world from the first scribal cultures of Mesopotamia and Egypt to learning in the early Christian church. . . . [An] account is given of the achievements of Greece in literacy, learning, philosophy and training for public life—achievements which were further developed in the Hellenistic Orient and incorporated by the Romans into their own . . . educational system. This leads on to the emergence of a specifically Christian ideal of education, the decline of secular learning in the West, and the preservation of learning both in Byzantium and in Western monasticism." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

BOWEN, JAMES—Continued

"[This is] a superior achievement, the result of a first-rate scholarly effort. . . . [It is] intelligently written [and] broadly conceived. . . . Two excellent chapters are 'The first scribal cultures' and 'Early Christian thought on education.' . . . Probably too esoteric for the average student."

Choice 9:856 S '72 100w

"[The author] is particularly interesting about the beginnings of the theory and practice of Christian education and the scholarly mildness of his account is tinged up with sketches of the choleric Jerome, the angular Tertullian and that vigorously contemporary character Augustine. James Bowen is the Kenneth Clark of education, cultivated, gliding rather than penetrating, eclectic and kind. His book may be a trifle deficient in the expected Presbyterian rigour of classical scholarship but its more mellow virtues as well as its splendid appearance make for its acceptability."

Encounter 39:59 O '72 120w

"[The author] carefully . . . [documents] his study and [utilizes] many original sources. . . . He penetrates the setting and thought of the times with the skill of a master historian and lucid scholar. Well recommended for larger libraries and valuable for most others." J. W. Stein

Library J 97:2835 S 15 '72 90w

"[This volume displays] Bowen's considerable descriptive powers and his skillful capacity for compression and selectivity. Obviously, where so many matters are briefly dealt with, the author's judgment will not always meet with universal approval, but it is usually reasonable enough. However, a strong objection has to be lodged against Professor Bowen's style. How many of us are really prepared to endure the terms 'ideational', 'noetic', 'lenticular' . . . 'appetitive'? To put it at its mildest, would not the non-specialist reader, for whom the book is presumably intended, be better served by a less occult approach to the English language?"

TLS p657 Je 9 '72 700w

BOWERS, FREDSON, ed. The works of Stephen Crane [Univ. of Va. ed] v5. See Crane, S. Tales of adventure

BOWERS, FREDSON, ed. The works of Stephen Crane [Univ. of Va. ed] v6. See Crane, S. Tales of war

BOWES, PRATIMA. Consciousness and freedom: three views. 230p $8.75 Barnes & Noble 126 Free will and determinism. Consciousness
SBN 416-08720-5 LC [70-595751]

"The central contention of this book is that man is a multi-dimensional being and that the question of man's consciousness and freedom can be approached from different points of view. . . . The theories discussed here are behaviourist-materialist, phenomenological-existentialist and Sāmkhya-Vedānta. . . . [Dr. Bowes] weighs the attractions and difficulties of the various theories, and compares them one with another." (Publisher's note) Index.

"For the most part Bowes exhibits a sound understanding of the basic philosophical principles informing the 'three views' and an impressive knowledge of the details of and arguments for and against the various positions he considers. The work as a whole, though, is rather unbalanced. The first view is given 110 pages, the second 56, and the third 48. Also in many nonquantitative ways the last views are in fact presented as only supplementary to the materialist-behaviourist position, which the author takes as central to the whole discussion. The book, however, is more than just a presentation of these views. Bowes puts forward a position of his own and explicates critically each view from the standpoint of this position." Eliot Deutsch

J Philos 69:224 Ap 20 '72 950w

"The author defends a mind-body dualism and an indeterminism reminiscent of C. D. Broad and C. A. Campbell. But by drawing a radical distinction between consciousness and the various sorts of mental capacities and activities amenable to investigation by behavioristic means, Bowes tries to allow full scope to all the theories. In the introduction, each theory is described as expressing a value-judgment about what is important about man. But one feels that the author has done less than justice to materialism and determinism." P. W. Cummings

Library J 96:3762 N 15 '71 160w

BOWLE, JOHN. The English experience; a survey of English history from early to modern times. 523p $8.95 Putnam

942 Great Britain—History
SBN 399-11031-3 LC 72-81459

"In traversing this immense span of time, I have often felt overwhelmed by the richness of the material. . . . It is highly desirable that our understanding of the past should be deepened and widened by elaborate research, particularly in local and economic history; but a specialized fragmentation of the general picture could deprive the past of the reality needed to give perspective and balance to the judgment of current affairs, and impair that sense of the emerging character of England and Great Britain which I have attempted to evoke in these pages." (Pref) Index.

"[This book] retains the principal fault of most comprehensive histories: the political tail looms awkwardly larger than the remainder of the dog. . . . His political view forces Bowle to ignore the social nexus of British politics during the American Revolution as well as the socio-economic crisis of the seventeenth century when the birth pangs of modernization were most acute. As a result of such omissions we lose much of the flavor of the 'English experience.' Yet despite his political emphasis Bowle does provide an estimable insight. . . . At the end, one is left with a strong sense of the continuity of history and the vast expanse of time." A. J. Hamilton

America 127:372 N 4 '72 160w

"The publishers refer to [this book] as 'a rare single volume history of England that is as comprehensive as it is comprehensible.' . . . We agree that the author has done a good job in packing a great many pertinent and interesting facts into limited space. Indeed, this leads to one of the few harsh things which can be said of the book, namely, that the 19 pages devoted to the England since 1914 are so lamentably inadequate as to defy comment, being the same page allowance given to the Thirteenth Century. . . . [The author has given] us a volume which, while containing little new, is nonetheless pleasant to read. Since so regrettably few authors today come near doing this, that itself is doubtless sufficient justification for this latest in the endless series of English histories." J. G. Harrison
Christian Science Monitor p13 S 6 '72 320w

"Bowle proposes to rectify the outdated Whig-Liberal interpretation of English history . . . and to present a synoptic account from a modern Tory vantage point. . . . [He] reduces the emphasis on politics for relatively greater attention to the social, economic, and cultural aspects of his subject. His book is distinctly individualistic if not uniquely significant." R. R. Rea

Library J 97:3149 O 1 '72 160w

Reviewed by Paul Johnson

New Statesman 82:397 S 24 '71 1000w

"[In this account] one cannot help being conscious of a certain breathlessness of narrative and not infrequently of the lavish use of scissors and paste. . . . In general [Bowle's] narrative appears to be remarkably reliable. His reading of authorities must have been stupendous and his conclusions are up-to-date, even if occasionally he appears to introduce an Aunt Sally in order to knock it down. The English Experience can confidently be recommended as an excellent introduction to the history of England. No doubt, as Mr Bowle realizes, the narrative form is at the moment rather out of fashion, but one finds it hard to believe that it can ever be completely dispensed with."

TLS p1313 O 22 '71 550w

BOWLES, PAUL. The thicket of spring; poems, 1926-1969. 56p $15; pa $3 Black Sparrow press

811
SBN 87685-099; 87685-098-0(pa)
LC 71-32291

A collection of poems some of which have appeared previously in such publications as Poetry, Tambour and Virginia Spectator.

"This slender (albeit beautifully designed) volume brings together four decades of work in poetry by a distinguished American novelist, most of it retrieved from periodicals of the 1920's. The book contains, along with the fugitive pieces, most of Bowles' Scenes along with prose poem and two poems in French. The evolution of style over the years is interesting: the early work is almost hermetic—connotation at an exorbitant cost to denotation, while the later poems are straightforward and lucid. The book as a whole is valuable as a supplement to the fiction of a well known author, not as a major item in his canon, and consequently would be most suitable for a graduate collection or very large undergraduate library."

Choice 9:366 My '72 110w

"There's something unpleasant about Bowles' sensual exultation in damnation; but The Thicket of Spring allows one to follow an increasing mastery of craft through the years, and it's an exciting read." J. A. Avant

Library J 97:1442 Ap 15 '72 130w

BOWLES, PAUL. Without stopping; an autobiography. 379p $7.95 Putnam

B or 92
LC 72-175258

The author recounts the "entire spectrum of his life—from boyhood in New York to the present time . . . [and portrays such friends] as Aaron Copland, Virgil Thomson, Gertrude Stein, William Burroughs, Tennessee Williams, Gore Vidal, Truman Capote, and many others. . . . [The book also tells of his] marriage, in 1938, to . . . Jane Auer and . . . [of their] adventuring about the world. In 1931 Paul Bowles first came to Morocco; he fell in love with the country, and though he still travels extensively, it remains his home." (Publisher's note) Index.

"There is no passion, pulse, pathos, pity, probing, pruriency, pornography, plangency in this book. After a glorious first few chapters, about a fascinating kid and his equally fascinating family—including four grandparents—who earned the right to be interesting and impossible, it is all tedious, taut (Paul Bowles is a non-fatty writer), tacit, tactful, tattling, not-at-all, touristic, table-hopping (euphemism for name-dropping) . . . and, to change the dentals in this irritated review—dutiful, discreet, deadly. . . . The book is places, names, conversations, and nothing at all about selves—except, I repeat, his young self—that was great. I do not think that most of us have enough time to indulge in something like this." Edward Gannon

Best Sell 31:551 Mr 15 '72 370w

"[The] first half, [of the book] is admirable reading: amusing, concise, odd. Thereafter, a kind of engine-knock disturbs the progress of a lifetime. It is sometimes as though Paul Bowles were taking the facts of his maturity from old engagement books, suppressing the essential in favor of trivialities and dazed by constant movement. The vision blurs." Alan Pryce-Jones

Book World p12 Mr 26 '72 800w

Choice 9:809 S '72 130w

"I expected Without Stopping to be something special. The opening recollections of a Long Island boyhood are zestful and skillfully distanced and slightly perverse; but one gets put off when Bowles keeps insisting that his father was a monster but portrays him as being no more neurotic than anyone else. . . . One sticks with the book to get the facts about Bowles, but so much is hung in one's face so quickly that the facts aren't easily assimilated. Several hundred celebrities are mentioned as intimates, but Bowles says nothing intimate about them." J. A. Avant

Library J 97:865 Mr 1 '72 170w

Reviewed by Virgil Thomson

N Y Rev of Books 18:35 My 18 '72

500w

Reviewed by C. T. Samuels

N Y Times Bk R p32 Ap 9 '72 600w

New Yorker 48:131 Mr 25 '72 140w

"The disappointment of the book is that as the light, swift, entertaining chronicle of Bowles' movements proceeds—to Berlin in 1931, New York and Mexico in the '30s, Tangier after the war, to Ceylon and back in the '50s—Bowles himself imperceptibly withdraws from it. We're told far less about his work and about his feelings than we'd like to know." Walter Clemons

Newsweek 79:112D Mr 27 '72 700w

TLS p1227 O 13 '72 500w

BOWNESS, ALAN, ed. The sculpture of Barbara Hepworth, 1960-69. See Hepworth, B.

BOWRA, C. M. Homer. 191p pl $8.95 Scribner

883 Homer
SBN 684-12986-8 LC 72-890

The author covers "the special requirements of oral composition and the atmosphere of the Greek Heroic Age, and devotes a chapter each to the Iliad and Odyssey treated separately. He . . . [discusses] literary points, such as epic formulae, stiles and the 'poetry of action', and . . . the disputed issues of composition that make up the age-old Homeric Question. . . . [At the author's] death in July 1971 nine out of ten projected chapters were found, the first five complete and the remaining four in a corrected draft. . . . The surviving chapters are presented here more or less in the form in which the author left them." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Bowra gives a clear but somewhat simplified account of the Homeric question and its background. There is no room in so short a book for doubts and complexities: for example, the Ahhiyawa of the Hittite records are simply Achaeans, with no reservations or explanations. . . . [He is] best on the literary qualities of the poems. His brief chapter on the general structure of the Iliad is a masterpiece of understanding and concision. This book can be strongly recommended for both those who read Greek and those who do not."

Economist 244:68 Jl 8 '72 480w

Reviewed by Barry Baldwin

Library J 97:3159 O 1 '72 110w

"This present book appears to be carefully designed for those . . . who may be quite new to the subject. . . . It is a demanding, allusive and very clear study. . . . Bowra gets the best of all worlds: where Homer nods, he points this out, and yet he defines the logic of the poems in such a way that we are spared too much niggling and carping criticism. He is sensitive to the warmth of various passages, eloquent in fact about Homer's humanity yet not deceived by a formula. If there is one subject he rather skirts, and this would probably have been dealt with had the last chapter of the book been written, it is the question of authorship. He definitely talks of Homer as a person throughout." James Fenton

New Statesman 83:874 Je 23 '72 1650w

"In the introduction. . . . Bowra tells us what he thinks about the eternal problem of whether or not the Iliad and Odyssey were each composed by a single poet, and, if so, whether they were both composed by the same man. He provides a concise account of the three main types of 'analytical' theory proclaiming multiple authorship, points out the disadvantages of each of these views, and then goes on to record the main disadvantage of the 'unitarian' point of view as applied to each poem. . . . [His] writing, though very rarely dull, displays a sort of serious quietness."

TLS p720 Je 23 '72 1950w

BOWSKY, WILLIAM M. The finance of the Commune of Siena, 1287-1355. 379p il pl maps $16 Oxford

336.09 Finance—Siena
ISBN 0-19-821485-5 LC 74-23580

This is a "historical analysis of the financial institutions and fiscal policy of the commune of Siena." (Choice)

"[This book] should serve to stimulate further work in a neglected field, indeed, a field that historians who generalize about government, society, economy, and civic and religious ideology ignore at their peril. . . . Bowsky has brought together an impressive array of data . . . which he knows and uses well. His descriptions and conclusions will doubtless prove valuable guidelines for students of other Italian communes." D. L. Hicks

BOWSKY, W. M.—Continued

Am Hist R 76:1531 D '71 370w

"This study is based chiefly on primary archival sources and will undoubtedly be recognized as the most authoritative monograph on Siennese finance (1287-1355) for the next few decades. The text, which is documented by frequent footnotes and citations, is dotted with Latin and Italian terms and words which are meaningful only to those well versed in medieval and Renaissance economic phraseology. Approximately the last quarter of the book consists of elaborate appendices of charts, graphs, and index. Since this scholarly work is obviously geared for other specialists and experts in medieval and Renaissance economic history only major universities and research libraries need purchase."

Choice 8:374 S '71 160w

BOYAJIAN, DICKRAN H. Armenia: the case for a forgotten genocide. 498p il $15 Educational bk. crafters

956 Armenian massacres, 1915-1923

ISBN 0-912826-02-9 LC 73-188056

This work "documents the Turkish massacres of Armenians in 1915 and the postwar efforts to establish an Armenian mandate. The author . . . seeks to remind the leaders of the civilized world of a crime which they may already have forgotten." (Library J)

"Boyajian has done an admirable job in assembling much of the material—firsthand accounts, commission reports, etc.—which rightly ought to shock the conscience of the world. But he buries this condemning evidence in a polemical, uncritical text which falls far short of the standards of scholarship. The book is valuable for the material it gathers, demonstrating the terrors of those years and the culpability of the Turkish government; many of the photographs, even after Bangladesh and My Lai, are still shocking; the cause is just; but the extremely partisan nature of the text will leave most readers dissatisfied."

Choice 9:1187 N '72 180w

"[The author] hopes the world will force Turkey to make reparations (in the form of an Armenian republic) on Armenian lands now occupied by Turkey, just as Israel was created with world support. Of use only in collections not already having similar works, but it is hardly worth the price being asked." D. W. Littlefield

Library J 97:2584 Ag '72 100w

BOYD, ALEXANDER F. Aspects of the Russian novel. 134p $6.50 Rowman & Littlefield

891.7 Russian fiction—History and criticism

ISBN 0-87471-097-9 LC 72-184826

This is "a collection of short essays devoted to Eugene Onegin, A Hero of Our Time, Dead Souls, Fathers and Sons, Anna Karenina and Doctor Zhivago [BRD 1958]." (TLS)

"Boyd seems unfamiliar both with the Russian language and with scholarly and critical opinion on Russian literature outside of England. . . . The book purports to be a guide for British sixth-form and undergraduate students of Russian literature, but they would be better served by consulting standard histories of Russian literature by Muchnik, Slonim, and especially Mirsky. The book's six essays . . . contain no original insights or interpretations. . . . Not recommended."

Choice 9:975 O '72 150w

"[This] book is a succession of glimpses into the multifarious world of the Russian novel. The larger issues are intimated rather than scrutinized. . . . Mr Boyd's is a poetic sensibility which is clearly happiest when interpreting the novels of poets—Pushkin's, Lermontov's and Pasternak's. He brings to his interpretations a graceful, eloquent style, erudition that informs without obscuring, and the appreciative eye of a critic who can see at a glance the subdued lyricism which is ever present under the realistic surface of the Russian novel. Generally speaking, he offers little that is really new. . . . [But] for those who may seek an easily comprehensible guide to the Russian novel these essays are a beguiling introduction."

TLS p680 Je 16 '72 650w

BOYD, JAMES M. United Nations peace-keeping operations: a military and political appraisal; foreword by Leland M. Goodrich. 261p $15 Praeger

341.6 United Nations—Armed Forces. Arbitration, International
LC 72-143966

This is an "evolution of UN attempts to preserve international peace with . . . emphasis on the Congo, Cyprus, and Suez. . . . [Boyd] assays successes and failures and draws conclusions, both political and military, indicating ways this primary UN mission may be better accomplished in the future." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This book is] comprehensive [and has an] analytical framework along institutional and legal lines. . . . Boyd's professional military background colors the writing style and much of the discussion but produces some valuable insights into the details of organizing peace-keeping missions, in which he had direct experience." Leon Gordenker

Ann Am Acad 398:140 N '71 230w

"[This is a] dispassionate and professional [study]. . . . The author, a U.S.A.F. officer, a UN military staff member, and a political science scholar, is uniquely qualified to describe and criticize these multinational military operations from the standpoint of force composition, deployment, and control. . . . Recommended for academic, military, and public libraries and for all UN collections." L. E. Spellman

Library J 96:2519 Ag '71 100w

BOYD, LYLE GIFFORD, Jr. auth. Harvard College Observatory. See Jones, B. Z.

BOYD, MALCOLM. Human like me, Jesus: prayers with notes on the humanistic revolution. 222p $5.95 Simon & Schuster

248 Christian life. Prayers

ISBN 671-21023-8 LC 71-159125

This "work includes Prayers of Personal Identity; for Liberation; for Sexual Humanity; Prayers in the Seasons; Prayers in a Black Student Center; Prayers on Curious Occasions; Prayers in Struggle." (Publisher's note)

"The second book of prayers in a planned trilogy, . . . [this] is written in a style that will be familiar to the many who have read Are You Running with Me, Jesus? [BRD 1965]. The first half of the book contains a variety of usually well expressed, felt prayers. . . . The second half is the author's 'Notes on the Humanistic Revolution: A Restatement of Themes in the Prayers.' Although I could deeply appreciate many of the prayers, I found the 'Notes' disappointing. . . . [They] resound with cliché, romantic overtures to current countercultures, and a lot of business that has been hashed and rehashed for the past decade in countless books and publications. . . . Many of us will find we can appreciate the sensitive prayers in [this book] but for solid ethical and theological guidance we shall have to look elsewhere." James Bortell

Christian Century 88:1396 N 24 '71 210w

"In Part 2 [Boyd] restates the themes of the prayers in a series of autobiographical and impressionistic Notes. . . . His explicitness and openness are truly tradition-shattering. The theologically oriented will find his theology topsy-turvy; but all will be moved by his pungently expressed compassion." D. W. Dayton

Library J 96:3146 O 1 '71 100w

Reviewed by Virginia Borland

Library J 96:4207 D 15 '71 90w [YA]

BOYDE, PATRICK. Dante's style in his lyric poetry. 359p $18.50 Cambridge

851 Dante Alighieri—Technique

ISBN 0-521-07918-7 LC 74-130906

"In the main part of the book [Dr. Boyde] has three principal aims: first, to relate the style of the poems to medieval rhetorical teaching; secondly, to assess the degree of Dante's stylistic originality by comparison with the style of earlier medieval authors in the same and related genres . . . and thirdly [to describe] . . . the many developments in Dante's style over a period of twenty years. Close attention is paid throughout to the frequency and distribution of the features described, and [examples are quoted]." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Name and subject index. Index of poems cited.

"A top-drawer book, in content as well as in price, this latest study by a co-editor of Dante's lyric poetry [BRD 1968] is not for the general reader but seems intended rather to present multi-lingual (Latin, Italian, French, German) scholars with finer tools for better calculating the immense contribution made by Dante to contemporary rhetorical custom and aesthetic practice. While accomplishing this, it renders many informative and invaluable insights on (medieval) poetry in expression. . . . An indispensable title for any reference library concerned with literary studies."

Choice 9:513 Je '72 190w

"The poems selected for detailed analysis are divided into two categories: those in the Vita Nuova (eight groups), and the later poems (five groups): in all, 1,624 lines out of 2,720. . . . The main heads under which analysis is made include conversiones (use of abstract nouns), vocabulary (a detailed quantification of the use of all parts of speech), tropes, structure of sentences, syntax, subordination and word order. . . . The chapter on metre, a detailed examination of the hendecasyllable line with its 828 possibilities, is of exceptional value. . . . To those who wish to get a better idea of [the] character and cohesion [of Dante's lyric poems], this book can be recommended without reservation."

TLS p1292 O 15 '71 1350w

BOYLE, JOHN ANDREW, tr. The successors of Genghis Kahn. See Rashīd, al-Dīn

BOYLE, JOHN HUNTER. China and Japan at war, 1937-1945: the politics of collaboration. 430p pl $16.50 Stanford univ. press

952.03 Sino-Japanese Conflict, 1937-1945—Collaborationists. Communism—China
ISBN 0-8047-0800-2 LC 76-183886

"This book describes . . . the attempts at wartime collaboration between the two nations, the Japanese-backed regional puppet governments initially set up in various parts of China in the late 1930's and ultimately consolidated in a single national collaborationist regime in Nanking under Wang Ching-wei. To the Japanese these governments offered a wide range of military, political, and economic advantages. The problem was to make them sufficiently attractive to the Chinese people to win them away from their allegiance to Chung-king or Yen-an, or simply to overcome their hatred of the Japanese invader. Despite the support of able and well-intentioned Chinese—notably . . . Wang, a . . . patriot and . . . Kuomintang leader at the time of his decision to collaborate in 1940—the problem was never solved." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"The complexities of China's wartime politics are made explicable in this valuable study. . . . The Chinese Communists, for once, are not center-stage. It is perhaps for this reason that the book seems to lack a clear focus. . . . Well written . . . the study rests in particular on several massive histories of the World War II period recently published in Japan. . . . Not only a mine of information for the East Asian specialist but should also be of interest to students of comparative (collaborationist) politics."

Choice 9:1336 D '72 140w

"Mr Nixon's visits to Peking and Moscow, and Mr Tanaka's to Peking, give this book a topicality the author can hardly have foreseen when he planned it. We have here a perennial reminder that there is a third power hovering over China. . . . Boyle has interviewed several of the surviving politicians of the period, both Chinese and Japanese, and has built up an unusually dispassionate record of their motives and relationships."

Economist 245:66 O 21 '72 450w

"Wang Ching-wei, chief Chinese collaborator with the Japanese who occupied China during World War II, like Quisling and Laval in Europe, felt he was doing his patriotic duty. Boyle . . . claims that Wang was unable to understand emerging popular nationalism and was duped by his hopes of making peace with an overwhelming external enemy in order to defeat the enemy within (i.e., the Communists). This is a complex, well-documented, but straightforwardly composed study; and it should complement and correct more popularly written works." C. W. Hayford

Library J 97:2390 J1 '72 120w

BOYLE, KAY. The long walk at San Francisco State, and other essays. 150p il $5; pa $1.25 Grove 378.1 Students—U.S. Youth movement. Colleges and universities—U.S.

LC 70-126593

"This collection of essays . . . focuses . . . on the crisis at San Francisco State, Huey Newton's trial, and the illogicality of war." (Library J)

"Kay Boyle, a member of the English staff at San Francisco State, writes as an eyewitness of student demands. . . . It is apparent that she is in complete sympathy with the need for reform at San Francisco State." F. C. Brown

Best Sell 30:492 F 15 '71 600w

"The four sections of this collection of essays show Boyle's accomplished writing skills. . . . As an involved eyewitness, she is firmly against [Acting President] Hayakawa's control methods. Much of her strong rebuttal is documented, yet she too often presents unsubstantiated material, such as quoted statements from 'a professor,' 'a white law student,' or 'an Oakland book dealer.' The Newton sections highlight past and present black oppression. But the most poignant essays concerns the cylinder-enclosed, ice-covered bodies of American war dead. Boyle here clearly demonstrates the futility of war and other violence on campuses and in the streets."

Choice 8:434 My '71 200w

Reviewed by Nelson Algren

Critic 29:68 J1 '71 1350w

"[The author's] approach is highly interpretive; little attempt is made to provide ideological balance. But her facts seem sound, and she writes with a sense of urgency and compassion on behalf of the young and the racially downtrodden, everywhere. Though she states little that is new, she espouses the 'progressive' position with such concern and such sensitivity that inclusion of the book in any good-sized collection seems sufficiently justifiable."

M. R. Yerburgh

Library J 96:972 Mr 15 '71 110w

Reviewed by Carey McWilliams

Nation 212:540 Ap 26 '71 200w

BOYLE, ROBERT H. The water hustlers [by] Robert H. Boyle, John Graves [and] T. H. Watkins. 253p il $7.95 Sierra club

333.9 Water resources development
ISBN 0-87156-053-4 LC 75-176087

In this book on "regional water policies . . . John Graves describes the Texas Water Plan" which, he claims, would do away with the natural waterways in two-thirds of eastern Texas; T. H. Watkins describes the urge of the urban planners in California to lay hands on unspoiled water resources to the north; Robert H. Boyle . . . demonstrates that, despite Rockefeller pure-water legislation, conservation efforts have been poorly planned." (N Y Times Bk R)

"The age-old search for new supplies of water—water hustling—has come to be the second oldest profession in the world, according to the foreword. . . . Forceful, frightening, and well documented. Recommended."

Choice 9:76 Mr '72 260w

Christian Century 88:1298 N 3 '71 30w

"[The authors] talk of that strange breed of planner who, rather than correct existing ills, creates new ones. Showing concern for neither the pollution nor the waste of water in metropolitan and farming areas, he works to build dams and aqueducts to haul in more pure water so it too can be wasted or polluted. With facts and figures, the authors launch their attack on the irresponsibility of public officials, planners, and the gullible public. Another excellent book from the Sierra Club." J. A. Boissé

Library J 96:3311 O 15 '71 100w

"[This is] an indictment of regional water policies. . . . The underlying message is that many currently concerned parties seem more interested in exploiting than preserving."

BOYLE, R. H.—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p18 D 19 '71 70w

"Knowing of the Sierra Club's long experience in swaying political systems and the rascals ensconced therein, one might expect some bias in The Water Hustlers. The authors make no secret of their personal preferences and they sound like witnesses for the defense . . . but their articles indicate painstaking research and honest reporting and handling of scientific data (give or take an occasional hyperbole or wayward statistic). They write colorfully and include the historical background of each problem area, chiefly for non-scientific readers." H. E. Thomas

Science 175:400 Ja 28 '72 430w

BOZEMAN, ADDA B. The future of law in a multicultural world. 229p $6.50; pa $2.45 Princeton univ. press

340 International law. Cultural relations. Law

ISBN 0-691-0564309; 0-691-01060-9 (pa)
LC 78-131127

Asserting that "the Islamic Middle East, sub-Saharan Africa, Indianized Asia, and China [do not attribute to law] . . . the paramount value that it has in the West . . . [the author seeks to show] that our trust in law-related schemes of conducting international relations is unredeemable, and that the United Nations in its present form is neither an effective collective security organization nor a morally compelling mechanism." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"In support of her essentially pessimistic perception of the possibility of transnational norm setting, [the author] digs into the record of the study of various world cultures and presents an impressive body of written evidence gathered and reflected upon by various authorities on the subjects. Her footnoting is a testimony to her thorough scholarship. The book is worthy of serious attention by those . . . who are concerned about the possibility of restoring a measure of order and controlling the situation of conflict in the arena of international behavior and diplomacy. Yet, I am not sure whether Bozeman tells the whole story. . . . Her view of law seems essentially static; the dynamic and dialectic quality of change, as a result of the intercultural contact and interaction, is not accounted for. Despite these qualifications her book . . . is a welcome addition to the literature of the field." Y. W. Kihl

Ann Am Acad 399:175 Ja '72 700w

"[The author] sketches a broad historical picture of the cultural differences between the world's larger ethnic groups. The largest part of the book . . . covers various basic aspects of government and law . . . [in cultures where they] are not concerned with reason and intellect nor with literacy and individuals, but with religion, myth, taboos, and small social groups. Emphasizing the post-World War II era, Bozeman stresses that in cultures outside of the West there has been a certain return to traditional feelings, a gradual rejection of Western ideas, and thus, in foreign affairs, a 'prevalence of war rather than of peace.' Though some may doubt the extent of this denial of rationality, this remains an interesting book for informed readers." H. H. Bernt

Library J 96:2339 Jl '71 170w

"This thoughtful and provocative book is a necessary prelude to any effort to . . . envisage legal solutions of . . . world problems. . . . The Indian-Chinese experience as told by the author is a classic manipulation of one set of values, not to promote understanding, but to subvert and manipulate institutions. . . . The fault, according to the author is largely 'in our politically crucial academic disciplines' . . . which have used the experience of the West as 'the projected norm.' . . . One recurring example is 'the idealized shape' of China in occidental consciousness. . . . We know much about the classical Confucian maxims on peace and harmony, but we do not know of their classics on military and psychological warfare and the use made of them since at least 400 B.C. . . . [The book] admirably states the barriers and impediments that make cooperative world regimes difficult." W. O. Douglas

Pol Sci Q 87:90 Mr '72 1000w

BRACHER, KARL D. The German dictatorship: the origins, structure and effects of national socialism; tr. from the German by Jean Steinberg; with an introd. by Peter Gay. 553p $13.95 Praeger

329.943 National socialism—History. Germany—Politics and government—1933-1945. Anti-Nazi movement
LC 70-95662

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by R. E. Nell

Am Hist R 77:172 F '72 500w

Reviewed by L. S. Dawidowicz

Commentary 52:91 Ag '71 1450w

Reviewed by John Ratte

Commonweal 95:355 Ja 14 '72 2000w

Reviewed by Geoffrey Barraclough

N Y Rev of Books 19:37 O 19 '72 1300w

BRADBURN, NORMAN M. Side by side: integrated neighborhoods in America, by Norman M. Bradburn, Seymour Sudman, and Galen L. Gockel; with the assistance of Joseph R. Noel. 209p $7.95 Quadrangle bks.

391.451 Negroes—Housing. Negroes—Integration

SBN 8129-0186-X LC 75-143570

"This work is based on a national study and report (a National Opinion Research Center report) of integrated neighborhoods conducted in 1967. The findings support the notion that blacks move into previously all-white neighborhoods for reasons other than socialization with whites—reasons such as attractive rates, quality housing, and good community services. The report describes the range of panic responses among whites and the . . . efforts of blacks to integrate neighborhoods." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The report is concise and crisp. The author's approach is that integration is a process; mere statistics of blacks and whites living side by side are not revealing. To the authors, a truly integrated neighborhood is one into which both blacks and whites continue to move. . . . It is cheering that the authors are ready to use their mature judgment when the print-out fails them." C. S. Ascher

Ann Am Acad 402:196 Jl '72 180w

"The work is clearly written and contains 25 concise tables. Essential for library acquisition because it is an excellent source book with relevant information and data for different disciplines (sociology, economics, social psychology, urban studies), as well as for policy formation and program development."

Choice 9:400 My '72 170w

"Realistic appraisals of the effects of housing integration, based on sociological surveys undertaken by a Chicago team."

Christian Century 88:1422 D 1 '71 20w

"This thoroughly researched book . . . should be required reading for all who deny imperfections in the nation. To their credit the authors comprehend and articulate well the sometimes nebulous distinctions between integrated neighborhoods and changing neighborhoods. . . . The sample survey technique employed in this study makes for interesting contrast with the case method approach utilized in Arthur Simon's Stuyvesant Town [BRD 1971]. The results are essentially the same and offer little for which we can be proud. Highly recommended to all libraries." Edward Mapp

Library J 96:2289 Jl '71 150w

BRADBURY, MALCOLM, ed. The Penguin companion to American literature. See The Penguin companion to American literature

BRADBURY, MALCOLM. The social context of modern English literature. 277p $10 Schocken

820 English literature—History and criticism. Literature and society
SBN 0-8052-3406-3 LC 72-150524

The central argument of this book "is that, so far as English literature is concerned, the period we refer to as 'modern' begins in the 1870s. [Bradbury's] attempt to relate modernization (a sociological concept) to modernism (a literary concept) is the starting-point of the book. The chapters that follow deal with a . . . variety of topics, including the uncertain place of the artist in Western democratic society; the class background, earning power, and social prestige of writers; and studies of the 'institutions of literary culture' (literary periodicals, publishers, books, libraries). The final chapter . . . attempts to differentiate between some of the ways that the word 'culture' is used by critics and scholars." (TLS) Annotated bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Gabriel Gersh

Canadian Forum 52:34 S '72 700w

"[This book] is intelligently written and based on an admirable breadth of research, but it keeps verging toward writers' shop talk and [shows] a preoccupation with the history of periodical literature. . . . Also, Bradbury omits modern American writers and literature at his peril since they often swept along British developments in their wake. This is a book of considerable ambition that bogs down but still deserves a place in academic and sizeable critical collections."

Choice 9:502 Je '72 180w

"[This book is welcome] for the intelligence of its discussion of this difficult subject, and also for the opportunity it provides to consider the methodological problems raised by attempts to link literary criticism with other disciplines. . . . Its value lies not in the freshness of material or even interpretation offered (much of which is all too familiar) but in Professor Bradbury's intelligent openness of approach which illuminates each topic. The success of the book at this general level needs to be emphasized, because there are serious criticisms to be made of the methodology employed, and equally serious doubts about what exactly it contributes to the important task of bridging disciplines."

TLS p1205 O 8 '71 2450w

BRADFIELD, INAI. The accessible city. See Owen, W.

BRADFORD, ERNLE. Cleopatra. 279p il col pl $13.75 Harcourt

B or 92 Cleopatra, Queen of Egypt. Egypt—History. Rome—History—Republic, 510-30 B.C.
ISBN 0-15-118140-3 LC 73-153683

A biography of the Egyptian queen and her efforts to keep Egypt free of Roman rule. Bibliography. Index.

"Complementing the [S.] Perowne [Rome, BRD 1972] volume is a study . . . [of] the famous Cleopatra VII, daughter of Ptolemy XII, the heroine of Shakespeare's and Shaw's plays, mistress of Julius Caesar and of Marc Antony. The volume is illustrated with 128 plates of which 36 are in excellent color, and 3 maps." R. F. Grady

Best Sell 32:21 Ap 1 '72 50w

"A free-lance writer with an interest in the ancient world, . . . Bradford has produced a popular biography of Cleopatra VII of Egypt. . . . Although fluent and readable, it is only another retelling of the familiar story of the great queen and her Roman paramours. There is particularly regrettable emphasis on the corruption of the Hellenistic Greeks because of their Orientalization. . . . The index is adequate, but the bibliography is too limited to be useful. Not recommended."

Choice 9:558 Je '72 140w

"A remarkably lucid and lively account of the life and times of the fabulous Queen of Egypt who, except for a series of singular events, might have become Empress of the Roman Empire. . . . Cleopatra has often been maligned by legend and rumor—mostly of Roman origin—but she is staunchly defended by her biographer, who has created an artistically impressive work." M. S. Cosgrave

Horn Bk 48:613 D '72 200w

BRADFORD, ERNLE. Gibraltar; the history of a fortress. 212p pl maps $6.50 Harcourt

946 Gibraltar—History
ISBN 0-15-135550-9 LC 72-78459

This book recounts how Gibraltar, an immense mass of limestone known to the ancients as [one of] the Pillars of Hercules, separating Europe from Africa, "long guarded the western end of the Mediterranean. It describes how the Phoenicians, Romans, Vandals, and Moslems all 'had a piece of the Rock' before the Spanish lost ownership to the British in 1704." (Library J) Index.

"An easily read popular history. . . . Unfortunately, the coverage provided by this book is uneven: seven chapters relate to the great siege (by the Spanish) of 1779-83, while only one chapter covers post-World War II problems. The book can boast no new treatment or data. Nevertheless, it is recommended for those school libraries or public libraries where a survey of this real estate is deemed necessary." M. J. Smith

Library J 97:2727 S 1 '72 110w

"Of all the dozen or so sieges which Gibraltar has experienced, only one is really of sufficient historical importance to bear relating in detail, and certainly Mr Bradford makes the most of all the drama, with which this one was packed. This was the great siege of 1779-83. . . . Fortunately, this particular siege is extremely well documented on both sides and provides Mr Bradford with all the day-to-day detail of a notable and dramatic occasion. His judicious choice of the available records provides a shrewd balance in the story of Spanish and French attack and British defence."

TLS p1092 S 10 '71 550w

BRADING, D. A. Miners and merchants in Bourbon Mexico, 1763-1810. 382p il maps $16.50 Cambridge

330.972 Mexico—Economic conditions. Mexico—Social conditions. Mexico—History
ISBN 0-521-07874-1 LC 74-123666

The author "first examines the Mexican tendency, the means by which José de Galvez desired to transform the colonial administration; he then examines the structure of commerce and silver production. A study of Guanajuato, Mexico's principal mining town, concludes the work." (Choice) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"[The author's] conclusions are sound and convincing. . . . The Guanajuato study is unquestionably an outstanding contribution. . . . [However] the emphasis upon central Mexico and the neglect of outlying zones—the Consulados of Guadalajara and Vera Cruz, for example—ignored a comparative element in what was also Bourbon Mexico." Mario Rodríguez

Am Hist 77:848 Je '72 400w

"We have here a landmark of dissertation research and organization. Writing performance and grasp of economic and statistical details combine with neat biographical strokes to bring out New Spain's great days and millionaire magnates in mining and commercial activity. By careful selection where necessary, and confident assumptions at times, the excellent research moves easily into a good narrative." Harry Bernstein

Ann Am Acad 400:197 Mr '72 550w

"Brading fulfills his aim very well, i.e. to define that distinctive blend of enlightened despotism and entrepreneurial talent which created Bourbon Mexico. No other source covers the material. Previously Alexander von Humboldt's work was the best source on silver mining during this period. . . . Most of the unanswered questions of von Humboldt are answered by Brading. . . . The role of the Indian in the colonial society and the role of the Negro and other mine workers are not the standard ones given by most writers. . . . Recommended for all levels, but knowledge of the history of New Spain would be helpful."

Choice 8:1078 O '71 160w

TLS p782 J1 7 '72 360w

BRADLEY, HELEN. And Miss Carter wore pink; scenes from an Edwardian childhood. 31p il $6.95 Holt

759.06
ISBN 0-03-091336-5 LC 72-181489

Helen Bradley "began to paint—to show her small granddaughter what life was like when she herself was a child. . . . [Her pictures reflect the Edwardian] period—market day, an outing to Blackpool, fairgrounds and funerals, bread-baking, a day at the races, carol-singing in the snow. The same . . . characters make their appearance; three maiden aunts with their sweeping muslin skirts, their friend Miss Carter (who wore pink), Mr. Taylor the Bank Manager, and the dogs Gyp and Barney." (Publisher's note)

BRADLEY, HELEN—Continued

"[Bradley] has made real, . . . sprightly paintings that remind one of Grandma Moses. . . . But whereas Grandma Moses' world was a rural one, these pictures are of middle-class life in town, of brick structures, parks, parades, and streets aswamp with people and feisty little dogs. One can look by the hour at these enchantingly atmospheric paintings, each signed with a tiny housefly." S. C. Gross

Library J 97:1700 My 1 '72 100w

"[These] twenty-eight excellent reproductions . . . are intensely evocative. They avoid whimsy with rather more success than the captions accompanying them and tell most of the story, which occasionally falls into the faux naïf."

TLS p89 Ja 28 '72 300w

BRADLEY, J. Mach's philosophy of science. 226p $13 Oxford

501 Science—Philosophy. Mach, Ernst
LC 177-310061

A study of the thought of the Austrian physicist and philosopher whose findings have influenced aeronautical design. Mach died in 1916.

"This 'little' scholarly treatise is for physicists who are philosophers and for philosophers who are physicists. It bears explicitly upon Mach's philosophy of physical science—the foundations of dynamics and thermodynamics, metrical concepts and sense-perceptions, geometry and physics, and time. The gedanken experiments ('thought' experiments) are beautiful. . . . It is remotely beyond a beginner but it would show him what a scholar must embrace to be a scholar. The last chapter, entitled 'The intellectual element in science,' would serve as material for a Ph.D. seminar for a year or more . . . meeting daily."

Choice 8:1699 F '72 90w

"Bradley's exposition ought to be easily intelligible to advanced undergraduates. He has simplified here, extended there, and not hesitated to criticize . . . what he finds faulty in Mach's philosophical position. One regrets that his vigilance did not extend to the historical order. Mach studied the history of science in order to prove a point; he not unnaturally exaggerated and distorted, as recent historiography amply demonstrates. Bradley ignores this literature, follows and sometimes embroilers Mach, and occasionally slips from criticism into mythology." J. L. Heilbron

Science 176:271 Ap 21 '72 280w

"Bradley's work on Mach's philosophy of science is particularly useful in drawing attention to a philosopher-scientist to whom separating the philosophy of science from the rest of philosophy . . . appeared wholly unnatural. The book is a competent exposition of the way in which Mach conceived the relation between sense-experience and theory. It explains, among other things, Mach's account of the genesis of metrical concepts and clears away some misunderstandings about the misnamed Mach principle. Mr Bradley rightly emphasizes that according to Mach the main problem of the philosophy of science is the transmutation of experience into theory."

TLS p1269 O 15 '71 250w

BRADSHAW, GEORGE. Soufflés, quiches, mousses & the random egg. 138p $5 Harper

641.8 Cookery. Cookery—Eggs. Soufflés
SBN 06-010451-1 LC 78-156508

The soufflé section of this book is the longest of the four categories covered. A last chapter provides recipes to be used as accompaniments for some of the preceding dishes. Index.

"Much given to imagery—collaring the soufflé dish 'is a pretentious nuisance, about on a par with binding the feet of Chinese girl babies' [Bradshaw] is nevertheless both an elegant and inventive cook and I enjoyed his book. Breakfast soufflés come in blueberry, buckwheat, and cornmeal, chocolate soufflé in ten well-differentiated variations, and chocolate mousse in more than four. For horseradish addicts there are a sherbert, a soufflé (to depose the Yorkshire pudding with the roast), and a tantalizing aspic." Nora Magid

Book World p5 F 13 '72 130w

"Elegant and easy cooking. Mr. Bradshaw is one of the few people who make the kitchen sound like fun. He also proves that good food does not have to be a 'production,' or expensive." Nika Hazelton

N Y Times Bk R p30 D 12 '71 40w

BRADSHAW, KENNETH. Parliament & Congress [by] Kenneth Bradshaw and David Pring. 426p $10 Univ. of Tex. press

328.42 Great Britain. Parliament. U.S. Congress
ISBN 0-292-76401-4 LC 78-37857

The authors "deal first with the leadership and membership of the two legislatures. They go on to compare the House of Commons with the House of Representatives, and also the House of Lords with the Senate. . . . [They point to] the contrast between the British and American committee system, with an explanation of their different origins, powers and methods of organisation. The contrasting features of the legislative process are examined next and the widely differing control exerted by Parliament and Congress over expenditure, public accounts and taxation. In conclusion the authors examine the extent to which the executive is scrutinised and controlled under each system in domestic and foreign affairs. . . . Bradshaw and Pring have been Clerks of the House of Commons for more than twenty years." (Publisher's note) Index.

"A painstaking, careful, thoughtful—and, unfortunately, rather trivial—book. . . . A quaint illustration of the English tradition of amateur scholarship and, incidentally, innocent of awareness of either American or English academic sources of the topic."

Choice 9:878 S '72 190w

Economist 242:56 F 26 '72 400w

Reviewed by R. R. James

Encounter 39:74 D '72 360w

"In this well-researched, detailed, and up-to-date work, the authors synthesize material on the inner working of Parliament and Congress. Bradshaw and Pring are keenest in their discussions of the committee systems of the two legislatures, the effect each system has on the executive leadership, and the function of the ombudsman in Great Britain and the comptroller general in this country in relation to the executive. Although this book thoroughly examines both the contemporary practices and the historical background of the two legislatures, the inclusion of a bibliography would have made it more helpful. Nevertheless, it is highly recommended." J. H. Thompson

Library J 97:2406 J1 '72 150w

"Messrs Bradshaw and Pring have been observing the British political system, of which they themselves are an indispensable part, for close on a generation. They write with insight and authority. . . . The book's investigation of the American system, though inevitably not first-hand, is no less profound and it will undoubtedly become a standard work of the more readable kind; the authors' style of writing, which has enhanced so much of the literature ostensibly produced by their employers, is always lucid and stimulating. The role that they and their colleagues play is understandably treated with reticence." William Camp

New Statesman 83:318 Mr 10 '72 850w

"The authors made excellent use of a grant from the Ford Foundation. Their purpose in comparing the faults and strengths of the parliamentary systems in the United States and the United Kingdom is carried out with skill and discretion. . . . [The book] is a serious institutional study, uncluttered by the tedious gossip and faulty recollection of the run of political observers. With realism bordering on the cynical the first chapter deals not as is customary with the high office of the Speaker, but with the leadership—a relatively neglected attribute in the standard descriptions of Parliament. . . . The perpetual comparisons throughout the book give it an undoubted liveliness."

TLS p392 Ap 7 '72 650w

BRADY, IRENE. A mouse named Mus; written and ill. by Irene Brady. 93p $4.95; lib bdg $4.23 Houghton

599 Mice—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-395-13151-0; 0-395-13723-3 (lib bdg)
LC 74-161651

This book describes "the life of a mouse who was born in a cage, inadvertently found herself in the wall passages of the house, and then made her way outdoors where she spent a year in the forest. . . . Grades three to five." (Library J)

"By placing the information within the context of a boy-pet relationship, the author has attempted to create a situation with which young pet lovers can identify. Unfortunately, the human characters seem predictable and wooden. . . . However, . . . the author's knowledge of her material and her appreciation of the balance of nature help to offset the weak transitions between the narrative segments. A book with appeal for a special audience, perhaps; but one which is—in the main forthright and enlightening." M. M. B.

Horn BK 48:384 Ag '72 130w

"This handsome natural history book informatively and interestingly treats the life cycle of the house mouse, or Mus musculus. . . . Much factual material, including descriptions of many of the other forest animals, are included in the clear, smoothly-written narrative. The illustrations—detailed black-and-white drawings—are attractively placed in wide margins and on many full pages. The format is outstanding, the subject appealing to many children." Margaret Bush

Library J 97:2481 J1 '72 100w

BRAEMAN, JOHN, ed. Twentieth-century American foreign policy; ed. by John Braeman, Robert H. Bremer [and] David Brody. 567p $10 Ohio state univ. press

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations
SBN 8142-0151-2 LC 78-141495

"The eleven essays comprising this volume explore aspects of, and issues in, American foreign policy in the . . . years since the beginning of this century. Two of the essays are historiographical. . . . [One discusses] American Career Diplomacy. . . . Three are concerned with the changing relationship between the United States and the rest of the world. . . . The remaining essays appraise United States relations with a specific foreign country." (Intro.) Index.

"This anthology, edited by three distinguished historians, is part of a series which focuses upon the problems of change and continuity in 20th-century U.S. history. Trask's historiographical contribution, 'Writings on American foreign relations: 1957 to the present,' is especially valuable because it reviews thoroughly the recent works written on 20th-century U.S. diplomacy. . . . All essays are perceptively written and might serve as supplemental readings in college diplomatic history courses."

Choice 8:1245 N '71 150w

"[The first six essays] are well done. . . . [However], two thirds of the way through the book, the volume begins to come apart. . . . [It] needs a longish chapter on American-Russian relations. Instead there are chapters on Canada, Mexico, Cuba, and Great Britain. . . . It does seem that the editors could have cut several chapters, perhaps replacing them with a general chapter on the Western Hemisphere. For that matter, the whole book should have been cut in half . . . for it is too long for adoption as collateral reading in diplomatic history courses, and too short for the authors to develop many novel points." R. H. Ferrell

J Am Hist 59:203 Je '72 450w

BRAGDON, CLIFFORD R. Noise pollution; the unquiet crisis. 280p il maps $15 Univ. of Pa. press

620.2 Noise pollution
ISBN 0-8122-7638-8 LC 70-157049

This book "gives facts and figures, . . . scientific measurements, and . . . data on what noise is, what it does, and how to combat it. The author pinpoints the noise levels . . . of automobiles, buses, subways, airplanes, household appliances, and children's toys in numerous charts and tables, and relates these data to the measurable social, physical, and psychological damage they do to human beings. He catalogues the 'noise-free' claims of manufacturers of these products in an Appendix. . . . Bragdon [also] evaluates existing noise abatement programs on local, state, and federal levels. . . . As steps toward the solution to the noise crisis, he proposes a system for rating environmental health, new approaches to community noise management, and a variety of architectural suggestions." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] book is based on . . . [Bragdon's] doctoral thesis. Early chapters . . . are clearly written, require little technical background, and are sufficiently broad in scope to provide a useful introduction to the subject. Later chapters examine in a more sophisticated manner social, as well as technical, aspects of noise production and noise impact. . . . This book has copious notes and an excellent categorized bibliography."

Choice 9:988 O '72 160w

"The book should be of interest to planning officials because of the excellent survey of attitudes on community noise in metropolitan Philadelphia, but the technical sections are inadequate in scope and marred by poor organization and imprecise language. Readers should be ware that these chapters furnish at best only a smattering of knowledge on acoustics and the physiological effects of noise." Marian Boner

Library J 97:1337 Ap 1 '72 90w

BRAGG, MELVYN. Josh Lawton; a novel. 192p $5.95 Knopf

ISBN 0-394-48031-7 LC 75-171151

"This is a novel of a young farm worker in the remote Cumberland area in contemporary England. Josh is an industrious, good-hearted, handsome fellow who is being trained to be a professional runner by his friend Cedric Tyson. Josh . . . [falls] in love with Maureen Telford, one of a wild, unprincipled family of quasi-gypsies. Josh and Maureen marry and eventually have a child. . . . Maureen finds the routine and responsibilities of married life too confining. She is soon carrying on an affair." (Best Sell)

"The story is simple and the book brief. The difficulty is that the plot is hackneyed and the author can give the material novelty only through a realistic stress on the settings and customs of the beautiful Cumberland area of northern England. This he does nicely for we are presented with a world of fundamental tranquility—a world that at times evokes echoes of Wordsworth's poems, and the close-to-nature atmosphere found in such novelists as Thomas Hardy and Sheila Kaye-Smith. . . . For this reason alone I think 'Josh Lawton' will please some readers; granted they must be somewhat patient with the plot." P. A. Doyle

Best Sell 32:201 Ag 1 '72 230w

Reviewed by Rowe Portis

Library J 97:2639 Ag '72 100w

"With this seventh novel, Melvyn Bragg has established his place in English letters, to the extent that his Cumbria is as potent a literary region as Hardy's Wessex, Lawrence's Midlands and Housman's Shropshire. This is a big claim and needs substantiating. I make it because Bragg has proved an ability to maintain a consistent yet dynamic vision of a region; what is more, he can show how the accidents of economic and physical geography shape the course of the families who live there. . . . His prose never riddles. He builds a solid, workable structure for his stories, with a tragic necessity linking beginning to middle, middle to end. His concern is with those aspects of goodness, which even if they come under the umbrella of moral custom, remain independent of it." Shirley Toulson

New Statesman 84:62 J1 14 '72 400w

"Bragg continues his series of novels about rural Cumberland, where life is no less difficult [than in the city] but the sufferers (and this has been his problem throughout) are generally unwilling to articulate their griefs. . . . This novel is a sort of modern pastoral. . . . Bragg clearly wants to make his characters—especially Josh's wife, Maureen—express themselves with eloquence and complexity. . . . His trick is to write: 'Maureen wanted to say. . . . Mr Bragg can be painfully clumsy . . . [but the] occasional failure of his attempts at elegance and balanced antitheses is less important than his continuing success in the struggle to write of working-class people with serious respect. . . . There are not so many novelists trying to write about the best subject in the best way."

BRAGG, MELVYN—Continued

TLS p793 J1 14 '72 700w

BRAGG, SIR WILLIAM LAWRENCE, ed. Physical sciences: being the Friday evening discourses in physical sciences held at the Royal Institution, 1851-1939; ed. by Sir William Lawrence Bragg and George Porter. (Royal inst. Lib. of science) 10v il $150 Am. Elsevier

500.2 Chemistry. Physics. Royal Institution
LC 70-95326

"Every Friday night from October to June, the Royal Institution invites an expert to give a talk on his specialty. . . . [These] volumes contain all of the papers delivered on the physical sciences (i.e., physics and chemistry) for the period 1851 to 1939." (Choice)

"The audience is not assumed to be scientifically sophisticated; these are therefore elegant popularizations. . . . The results are remarkable. From the First talk, delivered by Michael Faraday, to the last, delivered by J. D. Cockcroft, the discussions are marvelously engaging and display a continuity in the development of science that is striking. The contributors, of course, are mostly (though not exclusively) British. Some famous names and important papers are included, e.g. J. J. Thompson's announcement of the discovery of the electron in 1897. Although valuable to historians of science, the series could have wide use, particularly by versatile teachers. One simply does not often get the chance to hear great scientists talk so plainly. Should be in every college library."

Choice 7:1390 D '70 180w

"The eighty-nine years covered encompass a span of time which saw a change from classical physics to new physics and the emergence of the basic concepts of structural organic chemistry and valency. This series of Discourses therefore represents a cross section of the growth of physics and chemistry in the latter half of the nineteenth century and the first half of the twentieth century and represents a great turning point in the history of the physical sciences." The ten volumes are arranged in chronological order with a table of contents in each volume. The lack of a general index does prevent the scholar from locating a particular essay when he is not sure of the exact date." H. R. Malinowsky

Col & Res Lib 31:422 N '70 430w

BRAIN, ROBERT. Bangwa funeral sculpture, by Robert Brain and Adam Pollock. 148p il col pl $16.50 Univ. of Toronto press

732 Sculpture. African. Bangwa (African people). Funeral rites and ceremonies
ISBN 0-8020-1789-4 LC 77-163804

"Bangwa sculpture is an . . . example of the art of the Cameroon grassfields. . . . This book deals with the masks and figures owned by the secret societies which perform at the . . . funeral ceremonies of a member, and contains a first-hand description of a chief's funeral, or Cry." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"A short summary of Bangwa culture is followed by a careful, detailed study of the social position and technique of the Bangwa artist and the use, care, and sale of his works. The last half of the book is devoted to a meticulous description of a funeral and the various pieces of art which are used. . . . [The authors describe] the use of the masks, figures, etc. and, most importantly, the attitudes of the makers, users, and observers in Bangwa society. . . . Easy reading and would be valuable both for the undergraduate and the specialist. Reference notes and bibliography are unfortunately minimal."

Choice 9:50 Mr '72 180w

"[This book is] profusely illustrated with most informative and beautiful color and black-and-white photographs as well as line drawings. If there is a minor flaw in the arrangements it is that these various types of illustrations are differently numbered and since they are distributed throughout the book with little reference to the text, the conscientious reader is constantly distracted by having to hunt for visual evidence." E. H. Gombrich

N Y Rev of Books 18:35 My 4 '72 1150w

BRAISTED, WILLIAM REYNOLDS. The United States Navy in the Pacific, 1897-1922. 741p maps $15 Univ. of Tex. press

973.91 U.S.—History. Naval. U.S.—Foreign relations. Washington, D.C. Conference on the Limitation of Armaments
ISBN 0-292-70037-7 LC 75-131957

This sequel to the author's The United States Navy in the Pacific, 1897-1909 (BRD 1959) deals with such topics as: "U.S. fear of Japan; ship and base building programs; World War I; Siberian intervention; naval affairs at Paris peace conference of 1919; beginning of battleship versus airpower controversy. [It includes a] summary of [the] Washington conference of 1921-22." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Based on meticulous research in U.S. and foreign libraries, massive, full of details, not sparkling but clearly written, this book is definitive on the topic . . . [and] supersedes O. J. Clinard's Japan's influence on American naval power, 1897-1917 [BRD 1948]. . . . Good index, complete bibliography, footnotes, good map. Required for collections on naval and diplomatic history."

Choice 8:466 My '71 120w

"Braisted's sequel to his 1958 volume . . . presents American naval affairs on a far broader and more comprehensive scale than its predecessor. . . . The book is a tour de force of American materials, and few who refer to it will fail to find useful knowledge on American naval policies. . . . In coverage this is an all but definitive work." Thomas Buckley

J Am Hist 58:786 D '71 600w

"Chock full of facts and figures, [the book] illumines many obscure passages of naval-diplomatic history. . . . One is grateful to the publisher for allowing inclusion of a myriad of monographic details, but sterner editors might have pruned the text severely without overall damage to the study." A. D. Coox

Pacific Affairs 45:93 spring '72 350w

BRAITHWAITE, E. R. Reluctant neighbors. 184p $6.95 McGraw

B or 92

ISBN 0-07-007115-2 LC 72-3425

The events in this book "take place entirely on a train—the 8:05 from New Canaan to Grand Central. As the train makes its way, we are witnesses to a . . . confrontation between the author and a white advertising executive who . . . has taken the seat next to him. Their conversation leads to the subject of race and forces Mr. Braithwaite to think back over his life, back to the . . . struggle to survive, to make his way in the world." (Publisher's note)

"Braithwaite lets us in on a great deal of his inner life, and it turns out that he is almost irrationally angry at everybody who isn't black. Indeed, the whole book is an impassioned polemic, seemingly born of anti-white fanaticism. . . . For whom is he writing here, and to accomplish what? National people of whatever race or nationality will reject the book as emotional and biased. Some people with anti-white prejudices may find it valuable to reinforce these prejudices if they need reinforcing. . . . Braithwaite tells us with commendable candor that he considers himself quite a good writer. I suggest with matching candor that, in this book at least, he is a poor one. . . . Books like this can only harm the noble cause of civil rights." R. B. Nordberg

Best Sell 32:301 O 1 '72 600w

"[This is an] articulate and moving examination of how his blackness has affected [the author's] life. . . . Braithwaite's reminiscences are vivid and the book is a dramatic, thought-provoking picture of the gap in understanding between black and white. . . . A fine, thoughtful literary accomplishment." Karen Stevens

Library J 97:4095 D 15 '72 160w [YA]

"[This is] Braithwaite's fifth book and his least successful. It is really an autobiographical essay about an author-diplomat-educator who wants the world to know that his talent has not put him at a safe distance from the arrogance of white people. So what else is new?

He serves up his life to us through a feast of flashbacks. . . . The author has had a full life, and he wants us to peek at this life while observing his objectivity, his tempered wrath. . . . 'Reluctant Neighbors' disappoints me because I cannot feel the author feeling. He tells us nothing about the price he must continue to pay as long as he concerns himself with seeing his humanity through the mist of white assumptions." Orde Coombs

N Y Times Bk R p4 S 17 '72 950w

"The intention behind Reluctant Neighbours seems to be to impress us as an angry book. . . . But in comparison with, for instance, the autobiography of Malcolm X, or the novels of James Baldwin, the tone of [this book] is one of peevish conceit rather than of anger. One cannot help wondering whether, if Reluctant Neighbour had written a book about his encounter with E. R. Braithwaite, we might have had a novel, rather than a curriculum vitae."

TLS p1220 O 13 '72 500w

BRAMELD, THEODORE. Patterns of educational philosophy; divergence and convergence in culturological perspective. 615p $9.95 Holt

370.1 Education—Philosophy
SBN 03-085258-7 LC 73-135130

This "book is an attempt to approach formal education from philosophic, educational, and anthropological perspectives. . . . Mr. Brameld divides approaches to education into four categories: essentialist, perennialist, progressive, and reconstructive. He then views educational processes through six lenses: existentialism, neo-Freudianism, neo-Marxism, philosophic analysis, Zen Buddhism and 'Culturology.' Finally, he constructs ideal educational structures, contents, and methods based on a triad of 'culturology,' dialectics, and self-fulfilling images." (Am Anthropol) Annotated chapter bibliographies. General bibliography. Name index. Subject index. Parts of this book have appeared in Patterns of Educational Philosophy (BRD 1951); Philosophies of Education in Cultural Perspective (1955); and Toward a Reconstructed Philosophy of Education (BRD 1956).

"[The book] is clearly directed toward an audience specializing in education. . . . Any reader lacking a very broad background in philosophy, anthropology, and educational theory will be bewildered by the sheer numbers of names from all three fields, which are often mentioned once or twice, categorized, stereotyped, and forgotten. He will also be confused by the author's writing style, his almost inevitable qualification of every statement of opinion, and a grim determination to bring out the positive in points of view different from his own. . . . The conclusions reflect the tone of the whole book; a minister appealing in his sermon to 'men of good will' who are assumed to be everywhere and would succeed with just the correct push here and the proper pull there. The principal difference is that the minister requires only one hour of one's time to prove his impracticality while Mr. Brameld's book requires hour after hour of grinding boredom." H. M. Lindquist

Am Anthropol 74:166 F/Ap '72 340w

"The Preface is illuminating. Brameld tells how he moved from 'pure' philosophy to philosophy of education, how he developed his anthropological approach to philosophies of education, and how his field studies in Puerto Rico and Japan led him to the concept of culturology. . . . It must be admitted . . . that Patterns of Educational Philosophy is not in the mainstream where philosophy of education or educational reform is concerned. . . . I recommend this book. It may outrage some and bore others; but its utopianism and commitment will hearten many. There is much to be challenged; there is much to be learned. Theodore Brameld is a man of high aspiration. Attention should be paid." Maxine Greene

Teach Col Rec 73:140 S '71 1250w

BRANCH, TAYLOR, jr. ed. Blowing the whistle. See Peters, C.

BRAND, STEWART, ed. The last whole earth catalog. See The last whole earth catalog

BRANDEIS, LOUIS D. Letters of Louis D. Brandeis; ed. by Melvin I. Urofsky and David W. Levy; v 1, 1870-1907: Urban reformer. il $20 State univ. of N.Y. press

B or 92

ISBN 0-87395-078-X (v 1) LC 73-129640

This first volume in a projected series of five, covers the future Supreme Court justice's years at Harvard Law school, his entry into the field of corporate law, and his reform activities, including his campaign to force the gas monopoly to lower rates, and the investigation of insurance company malfeasance.

"[This volume] makes easily available, under one cover, the great portion of Brandeis' letters, including a considerable body of materials not hitherto known or accessible. And while no very revolutionary discoveries or interpretations appear as a consequence, the result nonetheless is to enrich substantially our understanding of Brandeis both as an individual and as a major figure of the Progressive era. . . . In this reviewer's judgment, necessarily subjective, the highly laudable judgments of Brandeis by earlier writers stand substantially sustained; yet the verdict with respect to certain personal traits is perhaps ever so slightly less favorable. . . . There is on occasion just . . . a little of the self-righteousness to which reformers often fall victim." A. H. Kelly

J Am Hist 58:781 D '71 300w

Reviewed by O. H. Stephens

New Eng Q 45:146 Mr '72 800w

"[The editors] have combed a massive correspondence. . . . For the most part they have selected with a sure sense of the significant and without adoration, including items that show Brandeis in moments of something less than saintliness or omniscience. Yet in a way the volume is disappointing. As a human being, Brandeis is intensely interesting. . . . Despite his ease of manner in savagely contested legal and political arenas, Brandeis was a doggedly private person. He destroyed many intimate letters, and the volume adds little to the prevailing picture of Brandeis the man. But the far-flung activities of Brandeis the public figure produced scores of passages that will intrigue those who savor the nuances of American history. . . . This volume of letters, as much as any documentation we have, makes plain that activities of the Brandeis type were neither easy nor trivial." E. F. Goldman

N Y Times Bk R p1 Ag 15 '71 650w

BRANDON, JAMES R., ed. Traditional Asian plays; ed. and with an introd. by James R. Brandon. (A Mermaid dramabook) 308p $7.50; pa $2.95 Hill & Wang

890 Oriental drama

ISBN 0-8090-9415-0; 0-8090-0749-5 (pa)

LC 70-163573

"The six plays . . . are accompanied by . . . introductions to the plays, to their countries, and to the particular form which they represent. . . . The scripts [contain] . . . production notes derived from productions in the U.S. Included: The toy cart (Indian Sanskrit drama) . . . Manohra (Thai-Lakon Jatri) . . . Ikkaku sennin (Japanese Noh) . . . The subscription list and The Zen substitute (Japanese Kabuki) [and] The price of wine (Chinese Opera)." (Choice)

"[This is] an exceptionally valuable addition to our understanding and appreciation of the theater of the East. Frequently in the past, English collections of Asiatic plays have been content to rest on the laurels of translations which, however accurate, too often avoided any attempt to give a feeling of a production. Brandon's book will hopefully mark a reverse trend."

Choice 9:383 My '72 170w

"This anthology definitely belongs not only in every theater collection, but in all collections on Asian literature." D. C. Johnson

Library J 96:4028 D 1 '71 110w

BRANDT, WILLY. In exile; essays, reflections and letters, 1933-1947; tr. from the German by R. W. Last; biographical introd. by Terence Prittle. 264p il $9.50 Univ. of Pa. press 940.53 Europe—Politics—1918-1945. World War, 1939-1945—Personal narratives ISBN 0-8122-7642-6 LC 70-167926

This collection of writings describes Brandt's growth away from "the old Social Democratic Party in Germany; his rise to leadership in the SAP (Sozialistische Arbeiter-Partei); . . . his clandestine resistance work with the underground 'home front' in Norway; his . . . opposition to Vansittart; his appreciation of Adenauer; . . . and his view of his own role in modern Germany as leader of 'broader and less inhibited initiatives' toward the Europeanization of Germany and of Europe." (Publisher's note) Bibliography, Index.

BRANDT, WILLY—Continued

Choice 9:564 Je '72 120w

"A perspicuous decency—postulating of course personal modesty and consideration for others—has marked Willy Brandt's character alike in obscurity and fame. For better or worse he is an unusually consistent politician. . . . [Writing while in exile in Oslo] he defined socialism as 'democracy extended.' That is what he is saying today. . . . In a foreword to the English translation of this collection of writings . . . Herr Brandt explains that he deliberately chose the title of 'Draussen' (outside) for the original German edition in order to make it plain he saw no cause for shame in his voluntary exile. . . . Most of the articles and letters reproduced in this volume were written from Copenhagen, Stockholm, Oslo, Paris, and republican Spain during the civil war."

Economist 229:viii Ap 3 '71 450w

"The current chancellor of West Germany . . . left Germany in 1933, took Norwegian citizenship, changed his name, was active in international socialism, and returned to Germany in 1945 in a Norwegian uniform. . . . These personal documents, commented upon by Brandt himself, first appeared in German in 1966. Though ■ kind of campaign autobiography, the book gives one substantial insight into this talented and influential man: firmly anti-Nazi but never anti-German, a pragmatic socialist wary of Communists, an outspoken advocate of freedom and democracy. An important book for all who wish to understand the recipient of the 1971 Nobel Peace Prize." G. R. Mork

Library J 97:1313 Ap 1 '72 130w

"This book does not deal with the fruits of the Scandinavian exile, but with the exile itself, relieved by sorties into Nazi Germany and a visit to Spain. . . . Nothing in the book is more moving than [Brandt's] pleas for peace, his recognition that the sufferings of a general European war outweighed the chance it provided of defeating Nazism. . . . He wrote powerfully against Vansittartism, and it is here that Brandt's stature becomes apparent. Never have I read ■ more lucid explanation of the distinction between Nazism as an ideology and Germany as a state. . . . What impresses this British reader is Brandt's lack of bitterness towards the country that had surrendered to his political opponents and taken his citizenship." Brian Walden

New Statesman 81:499 Ap ■ '71 1100w

"Persons interested in European affairs can see how this democratic socialist developed into a pragmatic, patient, and innovative national leader, a worthy successor to Konrad Adenauer. This record of his thoughts and actions from 'outside' is sufficiently intimate to hold the attention even of the general reader."

Va Q R 48:xc summer '72 270w

BRANLEY, FRANKLYN M. Weight and weightlessness; il. by Graham Booth. (Let's read and find out science bks) 33p il col il $3.75 Crowell

531 Gravitation—Juvenile literature. Weightlessness—Juvenile literature. ISBN 0-690-87328-X; 0-690-87329-8 (lib bdg) LC 70-132292

"An astronaut floats in his spaceship; cameras, tools, and food drift past him. We say that he is weightless, but what does this mean? And how does it happen that everything in a spaceship, no matter how heavy it is on earth, has no weight in space? Dr. Branley [explains] with examples drawn from everyday life as well as from the . . . world of space. To understand weightlessness, one must know how a spaceship is sent into orbit, and this too is [described]." (Publisher's note) "Grades one to three." (Library J)

"Explaining to people (by no means always school children) why the weightlessness experienced by astronauts has nothing to do with their distance from the earth, but only on whether or not they are using rocket power, is a common problem for teachers; and obviously Mr. Branley has had practice. He ties his text in very nicely with Booth's drawings in order to communicate the basic argument." H. C. Stubbs

Horn Bk 48:289 Je '72 120w

"There are few science books for children which can effectively simplify a difficult concept with a creative approach to the topic. This is one of the few. . . . [It combines] succinct text and appealing and clear pictures. There is no comparable book on the subject for this grade level and few science books with such universal appeal." S. A. Smith

Library J 97:2931 S 15 '72 100w

BRANT, IRVING. Impeachment: trials and errors. 202p $5.95 Knopf

347.73 U.S.—Politics and government ISBN 0-394-47326-4 LC 71-171134

In this account of federal impeachment, the author "explains the process and recounts its history, from the constitutional background to the last instance of its use in the 1930's. . . . He sets each case in the political context of its time and shows how the impeachment procedure was used as a weapon in the struggle for partisan manipulation of the Constitution." (Library J)

"[Brant] writes about . . . the brazen attempt to purge Justice Douglas by means of ■ hollow impeachment threat; but his book sheds revealing light on the Fortas case ■ well. . . . The constitutional problem here, as [he] shows, is that the distinction between official and unofficial behavior in a judge tends to become muddled when political passions slip the leash." E. M. Yoder

Book World p1 My 7 '72 600w

"Brant's thesis is that there is an inherent danger in the failure to define the 'high crimes and misdemeanors' which are the sole constitutional basis for impeachment. . . . Highly recommended." Marian Boner

Library J 97:1330 Ap 1 '72 120w

"[Brant] takes off from the Douglas case for a full-fledged examination of law and politics that will stand the test of time. . . . [His] comments on the Senate's attempt to impeach Andrew Johnson, in 1868, are . . . instructive. . . . [He] provides an impressive and pointed summary of the impeachment proceeding . . . and delves into several other cases. He concludes by saying that Congress ought to resolve not to impeach the President or other civil officers 'for conduct which would not cause a senator or representative to be expelled from his seat.' Congress will never pass that one, but at least the principle is well argued in this excellent book." Herbert Mitgang

Sat R 55:83 My 13 '72 600w

BRANYAN, ROBERT L., comp. The Eisenhower administration, 1953-1961; a documentary history [by] Robert L. Branyan [and] Lawrence H. Larsen. 2v 1414p $55 Random house

973.921 Eisenhower, Dwight David, President U.S. U.S.—Politics and government—1953-1961. U.S.—History—1953-1961—Sources ISBN 0-394-47241-1 LC 71-164935

This "collection of documents from the Eisenhower Library . . . concerns such significant events as the confrontation in South Asia, the Hungarian revolt of 1956, war and 'peace' in Korea, the successive Middle East flare-ups, Senator Joseph McCarthy's witch-hunting in the State Department, the St. Lawrence Seaway polemic, U-2 aerial forays over the Soviet Union, and, interwoven throughout, the immense problem of ballooning national defense costs vis-à-vis burgeoning inflation." (Library J) Bibliography, Index.

"[The authors'] most important contribution is the publication of many significant documents not already in print. Their chronological-topical organization imparts a good sense of the political structure of the 1950s. . . . [Some subjects] apparently because of the availability of manuscripts, receive treatment disproportionate to their importance. . . . Many of the sections of this book are informative and thoroughly satisfactory from any vantage point. The coverage of the organization of the executive branch, for example, is quite illuminating, and most of the diplomatic-military sections are very well done. Branyan and Larsen probably give Eisenhower the benefit of a doubt too often but their mild revisionism may serve as a corrective to the biases of liberal historians. Far more complete and valuable than most documentary collections, this book will become a standard reference source." A. L. Hamby

Am Hist R 77:1182 O '72 750w

"Intended as a compilation of source material illustrating the major aspects of the two Eisenhower Administrations. Most of the materials reprinted were uttered by, or sent out under the signature of, Eisenhower himself. . . . Many of the documents have been previously published—in the Public papers of the presidents, in official government publications, and in the newspapers; but the majority are from Eisenhower's own papers and files. . . . [There is an] appendix listing the top government officials during the Eisenhower years [and] an index. . . . It is difficult to see to what audience these volumes are directed. They are too selective for specialists, too extensive for the average undergraduate. Their major usefulness would appear to be for term and seminar papers by advanced undergraduates and beginning graduate students."

Choice 9:428 My '72 280w

"Disclaiming any intention of offering a thesis, the editors, by selection and in their introductions, suggest a generally positive evaluation of the Eisenhower administration. . . . The prefatory essay discussing Cuba neglects the American economic exploitation which preceded and helped to explain Castro's success and hostility to the United States. . . . The editors note that [Eisenhower] failed to endorse publicly the Brown decision, but disregard the administration's refusal in the Autherine Lucy case to enforce a federal court order to integrate the University of Alabama. Such omissions and the failure to discuss critical analysis of the Eisenhower years in the thin bibliographic essay, which mentions only fifteen books, make endeavors to evaluate the Eisenhower administration on the basis of these volumes extremely hazardous." Susan Hartmann

J Am Hist 59:479 S '72 800w

"Lamentably few of the books on Eisenhower cover his Presidency; and most of those lack in-depth research. Branyan and Larsen of the University of Missouri help amend that deficiency with [these volumes]. . . . Over 400 vital papers are here: classified reports, major Presidential proclamations, minutes of private meetings, personal letters, private fact sheets, memos, and cabinet meeting records. . . . The documents, many published here for the first time, were selected perceptively; the editors have a keen sense of their national and worldwide impact. Each chapter contains an incisively analytical introduction which, in combination with the editor's interspersed notations, provides a singularly balanced and vivid historical portrait of Eisenhower as President, his Administration, and obliquely but accurately, the people of the U.S. themselves. A balanced, well-constructed documentary of major importance." L. F. Spellman

Library J 97:1323 Ap 1 '72 250w

BRASIL, EMANUEL, Jr. ed. An anthology of twentieth-century Brazilian poetry. See Bishop. E.

BRAUDY, LEO. Jean Renoir; the world of his films. 286p il $8.95 Doubleday

791.43 Renoir, Jean. Moving picture plays—History and criticism. Moving pictures—Production and direction
LC 71-171280

This study "focuses on the central relationships in Renoir's films between theatricality and naturalism, the magical and the mechanical, improvisation and order, and social involvement and aesthetic detachment. . . . [Braudy] shows how Renoir's continuing involvement with the limits and potentialities of film itself affects the development of these basic themes. . . . This book covers the entire span of Renoir's . . . career from the silent era to the present." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Filmography. Index.

"[This] is a unique, scholarly combination of film history and aesthetics brilliantly written by a sensitive, appreciative, first-rate critic. . . . [The author has given] an exciting revelation of the world of Renoir's films. . . . Guided by such an expert as Leo Braudy who knows his celluloid terrain thoroughly, the fascinated reader discovers the genius and artistry of Renoir. Likewise, he sees linking themes and humanistic preoccupations as well as technical pioneering. He finds that each film retains its individual artistic identity while establishing its continuity with his other films." J. J. Quinn

America 126:466 Ap 29 '72 270w

"This is the way a study of an important film artist should be made. . . . It is probably the best study of one of the most important persons in the history of film-making." J. J. Quinn

Best Sell 32:60 My 1 '72 240w

"We must be grateful for labors of love like Leo Braudy's. His book is hardly incandescent but he has seen the relevant films and done some of the necessary homework. His seriousness of purpose is unimpeachable. . . . One rarely gets the impression that [he] has responded either to the extraordinary physical evocativeness of objects or to the enormous washes of gaiety and affection that bathe so many of Renoir's greatest works: if he has experienced this magic . . . then he lacks the language to convey it. The corollary to this is that Braudy, probably because his thesis is aimed at retrievals from past misapprehensions of Renoir's intentions, tends to flatten the oeuvre out, so that he fails to register just how bad even Renoir can be at times. Renoir is much harsher on himself. Braudy is not a stylist and this we may forgive him." John Coleman

Book World p11 Ap 9 '72 1250w

"Jean Renoir is one of the great film directors of our time. Unfortunately, one would not think so from reading this book. . . . [Braudy's] overintellectualized and ponderous approach to Renoir's work does the French director a great disservice; it stifles the very life of Renoir. Braudy examines in great detail the ways in which Renoir artistically deals with the themes of nature, the theater, society, and the hero. In attempting to analyze these themes in all the films credited to Renoir, the author covers too much ground in too little time, leaving the reader bewildered as to what Renoir is trying to say. A more controlled discussion, limited to perhaps five or six representative films, would have been more effective." Henry Halpern

Library J 97:897 Mr 1 '72 170w

Reviewed by Andrew Sarris
N Y Times Bk R p18 S 3 '72 1700w
Va Q R 48:clviii autumn '72 120w

BRAULT, GERARD J. Early blazon; heraldic terminology in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries; with special reference to Arthurian literature. 297p il pl $35.25 Oxford

929.6 Heraldry—Dictionaries
ISBN 0-19-822337-4 LC 72-183213

This work is "concerned with the evolution of heraldic terminology from the middle of the 12th century to about the year 1300. . . . It contains an index of the bearers of all coats of arms mentioned, and an illustrated section of heraldic charges and arrangements." (Choice)

"A pioneer work . . . [which is] unlikely to be superseded, since Brault is one of the great heraldic scholars of our time whose area of interest has for years been early heraldic terminology. . . . [It] will be of great value to all reference libraries having holdings in the areas of heraldry, genealogy, philology, and literature. Easy to use, well designed, and produced."

Choice 9:791 S '72 100w

"In the vernacular literature of the preceding century-and-a-half chivalry had been the overwhelmingly predominant theme. Consequently all the words that the emergent class of heralds required for mutual communication in their mystery were ready to hand in the chansons de geste and the prose romances, especially those of the Arthurian cycle. . . . With great patience and minute detail [Brault] traces the history of many of these terms, before expounding his central thesis that what engendered the language of blazon out of the vocabulary of literature was the grouping of these terms by the heralds into combinations capable of briefly and precisely expressing the character of the object and its position and relation to other objects in the shield."

TLS p966 Ag 18 '72 600w

BRAUN, ALAN G., jt. auth. The politics of electoral college reform. See Longley, L. E.

BRAUN, HUGH. English abbeys. 299p il pl $16.75 Transatlantic arts

726.7 Abbeys. Architecture, English—History. Architecture, Medieval
LC [74-594234]

In this book on abbeys the author gives "picture of the lives of their inhabitants; why abbeys influenced English society, and how the abbey church and its buildings developed." (TLS)

"This work ought to be entitled 'An amateurishly nostalgic oversimplification of the history of English abbey institutions.' (The absence of any geographical sequence (e.g. county by county) or a single map makes it impossible to know what is where save for Englishmen thoroughly familiar with their country. . . . Throughout the work the emphasis is on what has been destroyed (22 of the 32 plates illustrate destroyed monuments)."

Choice 9:50 Mr '72 130w

"The text is readable and the illustrations are well chosen. A short glossary is included for the benefit of the nonspecialist. In an appendix the author presents his hypothesis concerning the development of the apse; this is interesting, if not completely convincing. A generally useful book which may be of as much value for its information on the monastic life as for the architectural insights." Julia Sabine

Library J 96:3314 O 15 '71 130w

"Many plans and photographs are used to illustrate [the author's] points. . . . The abbeys, . . . as Mr Braun points out, were indirectly pioneers of future domestic architecture; especially in living on two floors and in communal buildings such as schools, hospitals, libraries and conference halls. . . . Their builders revived the heating and draining methods of the Romans. . . . [Braun] is not unduly sentimental over the takeover of the abbeys. He accepts that they had already become an anachronism in a country now better governed and with a rising merchant class."

TLS p1488 N 26 '71 850w

BRAUN, ROBERT J. Teachers and power: the story of the American federation of teachers. 287p $7.95 Simon & Schuster 371.1 American Federation of Teachers.

Public schools—U.S.
ISBN 671-21167-6 LC 73-189743

This "is an examination of the circumstances that produced the need for a militant, labor-oriented teacher organization, and [it seeks to show] . . . how the American Federation of Teachers evolved to answer that need. . . . [Braun describes the efforts of] men such as David Selden, James Mundy, and Albert Shanker, under whose direction the Federation has staged—and won—strikes against city administrations and school boards across the country." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Braun is sympathetic to the needs that gave rise to the AFT, but has little sympathy for the organization. The union, he strongly suggests, is dominated by people who neither know nor care a great deal about education and the needs of children. Their instincts and methods are the same ones one expects and sees in a union of bricklayers or bus drivers. . . . [The author] is a painstaking writer but not a terribly interesting one. His treatment presupposes a mature reader who can look at the presentation as a sociological exercise and does not need it translated into a moving drama." R. B. Nordberg

Best Sell 32:132 Je 15 '72 300w

"[The author] of this book, which is anti-union and pro community involvement in public school education, . . . apparently had available a vast number of sources, but he reveals none of them (except for the American Teacher, which on several occasions is mentioned by title but never with a specific reference, not even a year). Although there are many quotations, there is not a bibliographical reference in the book. An objective, documented history of teachers' unions and their relationship to teaching, learning, students, and parents is needed. The elements are here." J. N. Whitten

Library J 97:2371 J1 '72 200w

"The author hopes that this book will jolt those 'who believe that education is too important to be left to educators'. . . . [However] it would be a serious mistake to blame individual teachers, either for the general crisis in American education or for the behavior of professional organizations. That would be a simple answer to a complex problem. [Braun's story] is a courageous and hard-hitting report. He has given us much that was hidden from the public. He has dared to say the emperor wears no clothes. While there will undoubtedly be disagreement with Braun's assessments, it is difficult to criticize his attempt to deal openly with the intricate and controversial politics of the teacher-power movement in America." M. D. Fantini

N Y Times Bk R p3 My 28 '72 1900w

BRAUN, WERNHER VON. See Von Braun, W.

BRAUTIGAN, RICHARD. Revenge of the lawn; stories, 1962-1970. 174p $5.95; pa $1.95 Simon & Schuster

ISBN 671-20960-4; 671-20961-2 (pa)
LC 76-154094

A collection of short stories written over the last eight years.

"The stories, many of them only a paragraph or two long, are characterized by that Brautigan blend of simplicity, humor, surrealism, nostalgia, and bittersweetness that endeared Saroyan to an earlier generation of Americans. The simplicity is sometimes cloying and the nostalgia sometimes veers into the sentimental, but these are small faults if you enjoy Brautigan, as I do, enormously; if you don't, they'll madden you and make him seem dead-pan precocious and wildly self-indulgent. If you're a woman, you will also be maddened by the exaggerated Beat Generation attitudes toward women that linger here. . . . [This] is a serious reservation, but this review is meant to be an endorsement." Sara Blackburn

Book World p2 N 28 '71 360w

"Brautigan muses over memories of his childhood, weaves strange metaphors through fragments of reality, and searches with often amusing accuracy for the essence of a moment. . . . Beneath their surface artlessness is an awareness of the poetry of memory in which hard-edged images are awash with the vibrations of dreams. In other pieces Brautigan drops images and metaphors onto situations and watches them transform the objective into the personal, the ordinary into fantasy. However, it is the simple capturing of a moment that Brautigan does some of his best and his worst work. . . . Many have the refreshing clarity and rigorous simplicity that emerge from a poet's just watching something happen. These stories suggest new dimensions in the forms of short fiction and substantiate both Brautigan's widespread popularity and his growing critical reputation." Jim Langlois

Library J 96:3344 O 15 '71 180w

Reviewed by Janet Strohman

Library J 96:4207 D 15 '71 70w [YA]

New Repub 166:29 Ja 22 '72 160w

"'Revenge of the Lawn' is really one vision of people who have drowned their feelings and live underwater lives. For Brautigan's fishermen do not want to catch trout so much as they want to be like them. . . . Going underwater, underground, inside, Brautigan people live with no passionate attachment to anyone or any place and never permit themselves to feel a thing. But in Brautigan's scheme withdrawal can be a strategic maneuver. . . . [He] makes cutting out your heart the only way to endure, the most beautiful way to protest the fact that life can be an endless down. 'Revenge of the Lawn' is not Brautigan's best book. But it has the Brautigan magic—the verbal wildness, the emptiness, the passive force of people who have gone beyond winning or losing to an absolute poetry of survival." Josephine Hendin

N Y Times Bk R p7 Ja 16 '72 1850w

"Some stories are merely tableaux; others are elaborate, extended metaphors. The 'typical' Brautigan tale would have to be a mongrelization of all these modes. The style is far less flexible. Even when he indulges in playful surrealism, Brautigan lays out a characteristically spare, almost hollow line, jarred from regularity by the odd, clinking images with which he frequently punctuates a thought. . . . Occasionally Brautigan's writing breaks down: stylistic ease borders on laziness, disarming wit slips into grating gimmickry, and the childlike tone simply sounds silly. In general, however a strong instinctive craft secures the apparent effortlessness of his prose and a comic's keen sense of timing modulates the manneristic flights of imagination to an irresistible validity." Larry Duberstein

Sat R 54:43 D 4 '71 1000w

Reviewed by R. Z. Sheppard

Time 98:[114] N 1 '71 430w

BRAVMANN, RENÉ A. West African sculpture; pub. for the Henry art gallery (Index of art in the Pacific Northwest, no 1) 80p il maps $8.50; pa $3.95 Univ. of Wash. press 732 Sculpture, West African
LC 78-115415

"The catalog was prepared for an exhibition of West African sculptures, including some pottery, which was held from February 8 to March 8, 1970, at the Henry Art Gallery, University of Washington. . . . [The artworks are] discussed within the following framework: Western Sudan, including the Gur, Mande, and West Atlantic regions; Guinea Coast, covering the Mande, Kwa, Benue-Congo, and Cross River-Sanaga River areas. Several less familiar art-producing groups, such as the Tigong and Kaka of Cameroun, or the Lodagaba, Vagala, and Degha of Ghana, are illustrated." (Am Anthropol)

"The art-works discussed are all drawn from collections held by museums, galleries, collectors, and scholars in Oregon and Washington. This publication is part of a series to be called Index of Art in the Pacific Northwest. Succinct, and sometimes completely new data are provided for each of the 145 pieces that were on display (important new information is provided by Simon Ottenberg and Paul Gebauer for some of the Cross River-Sanaga area objects)." Daniel Blebyuck

Am Anthropol 73:1373 D '71 230w

"The photographs are good and the information provided for the visitor to the gallery is very much better than usual; the objects are exhibited as art but it is not forgotten that they are also ethnological specimens. The publication is not designed as a library book which will have special significance apart from the exhibition and it should not be recommended except for those collections which specialize in African art."

Choice 7:1500 Ja '71 100w

BRECHER, MICHAEL. The foreign policy system of Israel: setting, images, process. 693p il maps $17.50 Yale univ. press

327.5694 Israel—Foreign relations. Israel—Politics and government
ISBN 0-300-01549-6 LC 73-179469

In examining the methods used by the state in the conduct of its foreign relations, Brecher treats "the 'environmental' factors limiting Israel's policy-action options, such as international setting, military and economic capabilities, political structure, interest groups, and communications; the psychological aspects (i.e., the top decision makers' attitudes on Jewishness, the Diaspora, the Arabs, world politics, etc.); the process of decision making, including the roles and backgrounds of the foreign service and other bureaucratic elites, lines of consultation between the government institutions involved, and the means of policy implementation." (Library J) Index.

"A monumental 10-year study, based on books, newspapers, and interviews, of the factors influencing Israeli foreign policy. . . . Each topic is broken down for discussion, but the interaction of each factor with the others and the whole is clearly indicated. The final chapter is a critique of Israel's policy which concludes that Israel has not shown the imagination in this field that it has in military matters. This is an information-packed, well-documented handbook for further study of the subject, and a model for studies on other countries." D. W. Littlefield

Library J 97:1722 My 1 '72 150w

"[Professor Brecher's] decision to run a general statement on foreign policy-making and foreign policy analysis in harness with his discussion of the process as he has found it in Israel . . . has greatly complicated the structure of the book and made much of it tedious reading, obscuring the many good things it does contain. . . . The reader is left with a synoptic view of Israel's policy-making machine which is substantially less than accurate. . . . It is to be hoped that when [the author] gets to grips with issues [in a second volume] . . . the true balance between the respective roles of the politicians and of the several varieties of technocrats will be restored under the ineluctable pressure of the facts."

TLS p1028 S 1 '72 1250w

BRECKENRIDGE, ADAM CARLYLE. Congress against the Court. 160p $5.95 Univ. of Neb. press

345 Criminal law. U.S. Supreme Court

ISBN 0-8032-0751-4 LC 79-113168

"Since the middle of the 1960's, advocates of 'law and order' have been accusing the U.S. Supreme Court decisions in Mallory, Gideon, Escobedo, Miranda, and Wade of tipping the judicial balance in favor of criminals and against society. Breckenridge . . . deals in this monograph with the effort of Congress to use its legislative powers to overturn the Court's decisions." (Library J)

"The book, well researched from primary sources, is highly detailed though readable. It will be of use mainly to specialists and compares very favorably with other works in the field. Ironically, the substance of the controversy has substantially disappeared—Nixon's appointment of conservative judges will probably end the Court's innovation. But the book retains interest as a case study of the endemic struggle between the branches of the Federal Government."

Choice 8:1381 D '71 80w

"It is obvious that Breckenridge feels that Congress has overstepped its bounds and may well have violated the constitutional precept of separation of powers. This exceptionally well written scholarly book is an excellent addition to works dealing with the impact of the Warren Court on American society. Its only major shortcoming is the lack of an index and a bibliography (to a degree these shortcomings are lessened by adequate footnoting). A necessary acquisition for academic libraries; strongly recommended for all others." J. J. Fox

Library J 96:965 Mr 15 '71 190w

BRÉE, GERMAINE. Camus and Sartre; crisis and commitment. 287p $7.95 Delacorte press; pa $2.45 Delta bks.

848 Camus, Albert. Sartre, Jean Paul

LC 71-185418

In this study, Brée regards Camus "as postulating 'an ethic of commitment rooted in human emotions and solidarity,' as opposed to Sartre ('the last of the great system-builders') whose cerebral thrust to 'rethink the world in order to reform it' often blinded him to the realities of the human condition." (Library J) Index.

"Brée is as knowledgeable about [Camus] as any scholar-critic now writing, and can also be persuasively articulate about Sartre. This [is a] neatly balanced examination of two leading midcentury French political and literary figures. . . . The two men embody an explicit dichotomy between political action and cultural theorizing, between the 'field of the possible' and the constructs of Marxist ideology, even if Brée sharpens it in stressing Camus' more humane pragmatism. Her dialectical presentation is singularly appropriate and illuminating, and the result is an intense, rewarding study-in-depth by a major critic." Rosemary Neiswender

Library J 97:2602 Ag '72 130w

"Professor Brée's book avoids as much as is humanly possible a subjective interpretation. . . . She is meticulous in the account she gives of the friendship that joined the two men, of the controversies that separated them, and particularly of the very great differences in their temperament and outlook and philosophy. . . . What emerges most clearly in . . . [this] study in contrasts is the picture of Camus as the seeker after a modest truth but one that is authentically human. . . . To many of us, The Rebel [BRD 1954] seems a weak book. Mme. Brée valiantly tries to rehabilitate it. She is justified in attempting this because of the importance of the word la révolte in this existentialist vocabulary." Wallace Fowlie

Nation 215:374 O 23 '72 1400w

BRÉE, GERMAINE—Continued

"Mme. Brée does not hide the fact that she has chosen her hero. She has given her heart to the man from the Mediterranean, with his love of life and women. In addition, Camus was handsome and prepossessing. Sartre, on the other hand, is an abstract puritan, cold and aloof. (This, I insist, is unjust, but such is her vision of him.) In crushing Sartre in favor of Camus, [Brée] has, I think, given in to the very dangerous intellectual pleasure of creating a double portrait that puts all the light on one side and all the darkness on the other. For, in spite of everything, Sartre remains the greatest living French writer." Albert Memmi

N Y Times Bk R p6 Ag 13 '72 1550w
New Yorker 48:127 S 30 '72 160w

BREEDEN, KAY, jt. auth. Tropical Queensland. See Breeden, S.

BREEDEN, STANLEY. Tropical Queensland [by] Stanley & Kay Breeden. (A natural hist. of Australia: 1) 262p il col il $20 Taplinger

500.994 Natural history—Queensland
ISBN 0-8008-5470-5 LC 70-162962

"This is a general natural history of north-eastern Australia, which extends north to within one hundred miles of New Guinea. The area is noted for habitat diversity, many endemic mammals, and great seasonal variations in rainfall." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"The 266 photos (74 in color) are excellent and justify the price of this large book. The 45 line drawings are also excellent. Such books often overstress birds and mammals, but this one has many illustrations and accounts of insects, mollusks, 'herptiles,' and plants, as well as of habitats. . . . [It] should have a wide appeal. The professional zoologist will find it recreational, but the undergraduate should learn much. This book is a cut or two above most coffee-table items. The text is well-informed, semi-scholarly, and easily understood." Choice 9:234 Ap '72 160w

"The initial volume of a series which will cover the major bioclimatic areas of Australia. The subject matter is unique; some of the photos are first-time shots of rare and endemic species. . . . One lament: the cover appears too weak at the spine for the weight of the book. Recommended to university and large public library collections." C. R. Long

Library J 96:3149 O 1 '71 120w

BREEN, T. H. The character of the good ruler; a study of Puritan political ideas in New England, 1620-1730. (Yale historical publications. Miscellany, 92) 301p $10 Yale univ. press

320.974 Leadership. Puritans. New England—Politics and government—Colonial period
ISBN 0-300-01186-5 LC 76-118726

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by D. B. Rutman
Am Hist R 77:1175 O '72 480w

Reviewed by Michael Walzer
Am Pol Sci R 66:241 Mr '72 270w

Reviewed by P. R. Lucas
J Am Hist 58:994 Mr '72 800w

BRENT, RUTH H. The keep it short & simple cookbook. 180p $5.95 Holt

641.5 Cookery
ISBN 0-03-086703-7 LC 70-155506

A "cookbook with 205 recipes, each using a maximum of four ingredients. The beginning section has 12 complete menus with recipes for all the items." (Library J)

"Ruth Brent has collected her short and simple recipes over a period of 15 years and has accumulated ideas using packaged soups, sauces, and other shortcuts to lighten the word load and make cooking easy and fun." Maggie Stanton

Christian Science Monitor pB2 My 17 '72 30w

"Preparation is speedy; pot washing minimal. Of the several recipes I tried, most were good, but each had some peculiarity: e.g., the tasty tomato aspic had only 1½ cups of liquid for a quart mold. And the time spent shopping for the exact ingredients called for in some of the recipes tends to undermine the book's purpose. This is a sweet idea with, unfortunately, a slightly sour aftertaste. But despite its flaws, this would be a useful extra." I. B. Moon

Library J 97:500 F 1 '72 100w

BRESSON, HENRI CARTIER-. See Cartier-Bresson, H.

BRETT-JAMES, ANTONY, ed. & tr. Europe against Napoleon; the Leipzig campaign, 1813, from eye witness accounts. 320p il maps $10.95 St Martins

940.27 Leipzig, Battle of, 1813
ISBN 0-333-11273-3 LC 79-1253091

This is an account of the "Battle of Leipzig—or 'Battle of the Nations,' [which was] fought over three days in October 1813, [and] was the culmination of a long war period at the end of which a united Europe was able to destroy Napoleon's military power." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author has] resurrected the epic grandeur of the Leipzig campaign. Again he presents excerpts from a large number of eye-witness accounts, many of which have been translated by the author and appear for the first time in English. Linked together by informative introductions and provided with explanatory notes, these descriptions unfold a moving story of heroism and human frailty, of unspeakable horror and suffering. Brett-James' impeccable scholarship and remarkable skill deserve highest praise. There are 13 fairly good illustrations; but the three maps are hardly adequate. . . . From the extensive bibliography it appears that very little has been published on the subject since 1913—one more reason to recommend the book for general reading."

Choice 8:598 Je '71 230w

"The 'eye-witness' method of presenting history is analogous to the television news story; it gives us a good idea of what was going on, but for why it happened and how it related to anything else we are dependent on the brief interjections of the commentator. In [this account] Brett-James might perhaps have done more to illuminate the tactical developments of a confused and confusing battle, but in the main his economical commentary sets the scene well and leads deftly from one well-chosen extract to the next. . . . He uses [his witnesses] skillfully to produce an effect which comes as near as is possible in an armchair to evoking the grandeur and misery and occasional comedy of war, the sights, sounds and smells of a great battle."

TLS p1626 D 31 '71 300w

BREUER, HANS. Columbus was Chinese; discoveries and inventions of the Far East; tr. by Salvator Attanasio. 281p il maps $8.95 Herder & Herder

609 Technology—History. Science—History. China—Civilization
ISBN 665-00001-4 LC 75-167867

A discussion of "examples of Chinese technology such as the seismograph, the compass, fire arms, paper, and printing with some attention also given to the silk road, the great wall, and paper money. . . . Each topic also is discussed with reference to its existence outside of China. The final chapter, 'Columbus was Chinese,' argues the major thesis of the book that the Chinese were the first people to reach the shores of North, Central, and South America." (Choice) Bibliography.

"None of the evidence or the arguments in the book is new. Apparently all were drawn from the secondary works (which are already available in most libraries) listed in the bibliography. No sources appear to have been consulted. The illustrations complement an accurate and well written translation."

Choice 9:1025 O '72 140w

"A collection of essays discussing numerous Asian inventions and discoveries. The book is of particular interest because many of the items (gunpowder . . . sewing machine, seismograph, wheelbarrow, raincoat, and an host of others) are often popularly believed to have originated in the West. . . . Sinologists will find nothing new here because only secondary materials were used, but nonprofessional readers may be enlightened. Though the book is marred by the lack of an introduction and index, librarians may wish to include it in their collections." E. A. Engeldinger

Library J 97:2390 J1 '72 150w

BREUNIG, LEROY C., ed. Apollinaire on art: essays and reviews, 1902-1918. See Apollinaire G.

BREWER, GARRY D., jt. auth. Organized complexity. See Brunner, R. D.

BREWER'S Dictionary of phrase and fable; rev. by Ivor H. Evans. Centenary ed. 1175p $10 Harper

803 Literature—Dictionaries. Allusions
ISBN 0-06-010466-X LC 79-107024

This twelfth, centenary, revised edition "is based on that of 1963, but [the editor has] sought to return more closely to Dr. Brewer's original conception by discarding entries . . . which seemed to have little claim to be in a dictionary of 'Phrase and Fable.' Words which have no particular 'tale to tell' have also been deleted, as well as numerous . . . technical expressions. . . . [The text has been] re-written to take account of more recent scholarship . . . [and] new material has been added. Somewhat greater attention than in the past has been given to Irish and Welsh 'fable' and to American and Commonwealth expressions. . . . Included [also are] various 'oddities' in accordance with the 'Brewer' tradition." (Editor's pref)

Choice 9:489 Je '72 200w

"This is the reference book that will give the hoi polloi whatever gen tickles its fancy without being hoi-toi about it."

Christian Science Monitor p11 N 4 '71 60w

"Special treats [in this edition include] a couple of pages of famous last words, a who's who of famous dwarfs, [and] half a page of colour symbolism."

Economist 236:49 Ag 15 '70 80w

"Brewer's is concerned with precisely the entries . . . which provide a rewarding insight into the cultural matrix inhabited, both now and of yore, by English speakers: mythological and folkloric allusions; customs and superstitions; phrases in both current and older usage; heraldry; historical slogans, titles, and watchwords; editions of the English Bible; and myriad other entries, ranging from useful items to entertaining curios. . . . It is not a quickie term-finder for those who face deadlines. To know what is in it one must read it (or, at the very least, scan it at random, and from time to time). Alphabetically arranged though it is, it is strewn with gems that know no alphabet." B. H. Smeaton

Library J 97:1002 Mr 15 '72 420w

"The revision has been to make the book more characteristic of [its] tradition . . . the personal idiosyncrasy of Brewer—and is therefore to be welcomed. . . . [It] ranges widely beyond phrases and fables to include all sorts of words and names which appear in more conventional dictionaries and encyclopedias. . . . [The book] falls down badly on what might be called its encyclopedia entries, which are mostly too elementary to be much real use. It might have been better to concentrate on phrase and fable and leave all the other terms to works which cover them more fully and knowledgeably; the historical and political entries are particularly unreliable. But it retains the serendipitous charm which has kept the book going for a century and there is no reason to think that it will not last another one."

TLS p1203 O 16 '70 260w

BREWSTER, DAVID. The heart's grown brutal. 256p $6.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

SBN 698-10452-8 LC 72-76670

"Horace Blundell, Northern Ireland correspondent for a London paper, his wife, Anne, and Hugh Randall, crack Middle Eastern correspondent for the same paper, [are] the central characters of this novel. . . . Northern Ireland's troubles hold the center of the stage. The time is July-August 1971, just preceding and following the imposition of internment without trial. Blundell, although a marginal member of the Protestant-Unionist establishment, has been led by his analysis of the situation to volunteer as a supplier of intelligence to the Provisional I.R.A." (Library J)

"The book will please neither the 'Provos' of the I.R.A., nor the militant Orange lodges; neither the Reverend Ian Paisley, nor the Cardinal Archbishop of Armagh; neither Mr. Whitelaw, nor Mr. Lynch; but it does make sense and does suggest reasonable solutions. . . . Here is an admirable introduction to the 'whys' and 'wherefores' of the strife and hatred rampant in the Six Counties. . . . [Occasional over-writing] mars the fictional section of the book; but . . . Brewster has, on the whole, written a first-class novel. It is worth the attention of both the serious reader interested in world affairs and the casual reader who will find its fictional aspects more than palatable." Stephen Ryan

Best Sell 32:276 S 15 '72 550w

Economist 245[book survey p2] N 11 '72 250w

Reviewed by J. F. Moran

Library J 97:2639 Ag '72 160w

"In addition to being a very good novel, [this] is an excellent primer for those who've forgotten and for others who never knew how the present bloody struggle in Northern Ireland began. . . . [It] makes it clear that religious difference lay on the surface of much older hatreds. . . . The story resembles Graham Greene's 'The Quiet American' [BRD 1956]. . . . But Brewster's novel is more urgently political and less given to telling the personal story of its aging, whiskey-soaked foreign correspondent, Horace Blundell. . . . We are shown a strong but sensitive man sifting through dozens of explanations and analogies trying to make the war emotionally manageable. His personal failure, the novel seems to say, mirrors the difficulty of anyone finding a manageable solution to the struggle . . . whole." George Davis

N Y Times Bk R p48 S 17 '72 490w

"A smooth customer, this Randall, as glib (one suspects) with his portable Olivetti as with his tongue, if his capsule summaries of political issues are anything to go by. . . . There is so much slickness and superficiality in Mr Brewster's book, not only at the political level but also at that of personal relations, [that] . . . one might be forgiven for thinking that it had all been made up under the jacarandas of the Palmyra Hotel [where first we met reporter Randall]."

TLS p1185 O 6 '72 320w

BRIAN, DENIS. Murderers and other friendly people; the public and private worlds of interviewers. 326p il $7.95 McGraw

070.4 Reporters and reporting

ISBN 0-07-007690-1 LC 79-178922

This book portrays "the art of interviewing and the methods and personalities of interviewers. . . . [In the] first section, 'The Hemingway Hunters,' . . . [Brian] interviews ten individuals who have interviewed or known Hemingway or his friends intimately. . . . He pits one against another; asks the same questions of many and receives distinctive and sometimes contradictory responses; and . . . builds up a composite portrait of the subject. . . . Other sections deal with the friends and foes of Truman Capote, including Capote himself . . . the Kennedys . . . Alex Haley, black interviewer of Malcolm X and George Lincoln Rockwell, leader of the American Nazis; and . . . Studs Terkel." (Library J)

"While reading Brian's book . . . we wallow happily in gossipy accusation and counteraccusation among such tinsel figures ■ Rex Reed, Gore Vidal . . . and William Buckley Jr.; we hear sense from people like Lillian Ross, Harrison Salisbury, Malcolm Cowley, Alex Haley, and George Plimpton; some nonprofessionals ■■ delightful, especially Alice Roosevelt Longworth and John Hemingway. . . . The only one who remains a mist, oddly enough, is Denis Brian."

J. D. O'Hara

Book World p13 Ja 30 '72 360w

BRIAN, DENIS—Continued

"Within the sections and occasionally across them, the interviews blend and reinforce one another, creating a valuable composite." L. W. Griffin

Library J 96:4087 D 15 '71 290w

BRICK, S. K. PANTER-. See Panter-Brick, S. K.

BRIDENBAUGH, CARL. No peace beyond the line; the English in the Caribbean, 1624-1690 [by] Carl and Roberta Bridenbaugh. 440p il maps $12.50 Oxford

917.29 West Indies, British—History. British in the West Indies
ISBN 0-19-501489-8 LC 70-182421

This narrative "deals with the daily lives of all the people—white and black—who inhabited the British West Indies in the seventeenth century, . . . discussing the disappearance of the indigenous Indian population, and the establishment of the institution of slavery and [seeking to provide a] basis for comparison with the contemporaneous experiences of the second stream of British migration to North America." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Index.

"The fullest history of the English colonies in the Caribbean in the 17th century. [This study] is, moreover, a conceptual masterpiece, for the Bridenbaughs successfully weave together the complex economic, social, racial, and political strands of the story. . . . [The book] is very well written, designed for both the specialist and the amateur. . . . Recommended for any library."

Choice 9:859 S '72 130w

"Vexed and Troubled Englishmen [BRD 1968, 1969], the first volume in Carl Bridenbaugh's 'The Beginnings of the American People' series, was extremely well received. We expect a similar greeting for the second volume—coauthored by his wife, Roberta—which brings together the confusing strands of the story of English settlement in the Caribbean islands."

Christian Century 89:488 Ap 26 '72 50w

Economist 244:46 Ag 12 '72 650w

Reviewed by R. B. Sheridan

J Am Hist 59:676 D '72 750w

"The 'line' of this book's title delimited the area west of the Azores, and south of the Tropic of Cancer, which, in the 17th century, the European powers regarded tacitly as a legitimate zone of strife—despite whatever conditions of war, or of precarious peace, obtained momentarily in the European continent. . . . This made the systematic 'plantation' of colonies, hazardous enough in continental America, a sort of human and financial gamble in which islands were prizes, and human beings miserable pawns. . . . With praiseworthy diligence, the authors have assembled what evidence survives of the gruesome conditions among 17th-century colonists in the blasted paradise of the English Antilles." Colin MacInnes

N Y Times Bk R p6 My 21 '72 1350w

"By 1690, Caribbean society was formed but for the whites who had failed socially and for the blacks who were still enslaved, there was 'no peace.' Underlying this pervasive theme is a graceful narrative describing the growth of a sugar culture, the origins of black servitude, and the institution of white slavery. Detailed evidence and valuable interpretations mark this as an important book not only as a sequel to the first volume but also as a work of scholarship that will stand on its own."

Va Q R 48:civ summer '72 170w

BRIDENBAUGH, ROBERTA, Jr. auth. No peace beyond the line. See Bridenbaugh, C.

BRIERLEY, J. K. A natural history of man; a biologist's view of: birth and death; nature and nurture; man and society; health and disease; immigration and emigration; history and heredity; war and peace. 184p il maps $8 Fairleigh Dickinson univ. press

574.01 Ecology. Evolution. Man
ISBN 8336-7819-X LC 70-139994

This is a "survey of Man's struggle with his environment and within his own species. . . . The opening sections of the book define Man as an animal. They look at his genetic make-up, and [his] special characteristics . . . [including] his inventiveness. . . . The changing pattern of human disease, . . . immigration and its genetic effects . . . on population, . . . [and] human aggression [are also discussed.]" (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Brierley may be a good biologist, but he takes Carleton Coon's view of the evolution of man as a species and into races uncritically. He also confuses the evolution of man's capacity for culture with cultural change in values and morality. On the other hand, the book is an attempt to draw together ideas and material on man as a social and biological being. . . . It has interesting information and is written fairly well but it is not done critically. There are, however, few other works that try to organize this particular set of materials."

Choice 8:1344 D '71 130w

"As he did in his companion volume Biology and the Social Crisis [BRD 1971], Brierley has authored another well-written survey of man and what he went through to reach the 20th Century. The book is intended for the layman and is clearly written in a style which somehow makes even the reading of statistics interesting. Topics such as the brain drain [and] man's inherent use of feedback . . . are only a few of the many [discussed] in this highly recommended survey." R. E. Swinburne

Library J 96:1282 Ap 1 '71 80w

BRIGGS, ASA, ed. Essays in labour history, 1886-1923; ed. by Asa Briggs and John Saville. 360p $13 Archon bks.

331 Labor and laboring classes—Great Britain—History. Labor unions
ISBN 0-208-01239-7 LC 72-176328

These studies are concerned with "the fortunes of the labour, trade union and co-operative movements in the years from 1886 to 1923."

[Included are] essays on Keir Hardie and Ramsay MacDonald, on the foundation of the Co-operative Party and on the Social Democratic Federation; on the Triple Alliance, the Clyde Workers' Committee, the War Emergency Committee, . . . the famous Leeds strike of 1913, [and an] introductory essay [by Briggs]. (TLS) Index. For the previous volume, Essays in Labor History: in memory of G. D. H. Cole, see BRD 1960.

"A useful addition to a growing body of specialized studies in its field. . . . Carefully researched and documented from original materials, principally by university scholars, and addressed mainly to other specialists rather than to the general reader. . . . Scattered throughout [this work] is a rich leaven of hitherto unpublished evidence, not all of it of equal weight and value, but all adding depth and understanding to a many-sided, complicated, and highly pragmatic Labour movement as it developed its social and political character. Altogether, a very good book, well written and organized."

Choice 9:704 J1/Ag '72 350w

"All too often students of history ignore Festschriften, collections of essays, and works of a similar format. Hopefully such will not be the case with this admirable work. . . . These original essays cover a crucial period in British history. Many of the studies, particularly those by rising young scholars, show the results of significant recent research, and C. L. Mowat's examination of James Ramsay MacDonald's political attributes is truly a tour de force. Highly recommended." J. A. Casada

Library J 97:1429 Ap 15 '72 120w

TLS p1391 N 5 '71 550w

BRIGGS, KATHARINE M. A dictionary of British folk-tales in the English language; incorporating the F. J. Norton collection; pt. B: Folk legends. 2v 623;774p $37.50 Ind. univ. press

398.2 Folklore—England. Legends—Great Britain
ISBN 253-31717-7 (v 1); 253-31718-5 (v 2)
LC 70-97241

"The Dictionary is arranged in two parts, each of which is published in two volumes: the first part deals with Folk Narratives [BRD 1970], the second with Folk Legends. Folk Legends are much commoner in Britain than Folk Narratives and these two volumes contain a representative collection of them. They are arranged mainly under subjects treated: Black Dogs, Bogies, Devils, Dragons, Fairies, Ghosts [and] Giants [in volume 1. Volume 2 contains] Historical Legends, Local Legends, Origin Myths, Saints, The Supernatural, Witches, and a few unclassified Miscellaneous Legends at the end. Many of the tales are given in full, some are slightly shortened and many others are summarized. The sources of the tales are given in each case; some come from medieval sources, some from nineteenth-century collectors, some from current oral traditions." (Publisher's note) Bibliography in volume one. Tale-type index in volume one. Index to story-titles in volume one.

"[What this magnificent work] makes possible, more or less for the first time with English and Scottish material, is a process of reflection on the whole structure of consciousness which a major folk-tale corpus comes from, and therefore sustains. Much of [the wit in the folklore] is lost for ever, permanently extruded from the national consciousness by the operation of gent's prose from Andrew Lang, Joseph Jacobs, or others far worse than them. Perhaps the finest thing about the present collection is that in many cases, thanks to the tape-recorder, we now have the real thing. Now, we can see these tales have cracked with just the wit, sense of language, and feel for style that still show as clear as day when plain men talk together at their ease." John Holloway
Encounter 38:67 Ap '72 3000w

"Briggs, the well-known British authority on fairies in English literature and tradition, has added two more volumes to her important work on folk tales. . . . The legends differ from the narratives in that their supposed credibility is based on accounts of actual eyewitnesses to the events or of others who knew the eyewitnesses. In many cases the historical facts are accurate even though the story has passed into the realm of the supernatural. The work contains a list of sources that constitutes an authoritative bibliography of British folk tales, plus a complete index to the types of tales. . . . and short explanatory notes that further elucidate the tales, which are arranged alphabetically under subject categories. This work will be useful in university literature, folklore, history, and social history collections and in all libraries as a basic reference resource. The price seems high." Jerome Cushman
Library J 96:2480 Ag '71 200w

BRIGGS, PETER. 200,000,000 years beneath the sea. 228p Il $7.95 Holt

551.4 Deep Sea Drilling Project. Glomar Challenger (Ship). Oceanography—Research
ISBN 0-03-085983-2 LC 78-13885

"The story of the voyage of the Glomar Challenger, which sailed from Texas on August 11, 1968, to explore the geology of the ocean. Drilling for core samples several thousand feet beneath the ocean floor, the geologists went back millions of years in time and revealed . . . data to support the continental-drift theory." (N Y Times Bk R) Bibliography. Index.

Economist 244:45 S 2 '72 140w

"With support from the National Science Foundation, the United States Deep Sea Drilling Project was organized to collect core samples from the world's oceans. Utilizing the carefully designed drilling vessel, Glomar Challenger, core samples were taken from many areas and the feasibility of deepsea drilling was confirmed. In popular language, this volume explains the activities and importance of the cruises of the Glomar Challenger." P. D. Thomas
Library J 96:2526 Ag '71 100w

"Mr. Briggs, who was along on the voyage, knows his subject and has written about it very well."
N Y Times Bk ■ p40 F 6 '72 70w

BRIGHAM, BESMILR. Heaved from the earth. 75p $4.95 Knopf

811
ISBN 0-394-46848-1 LC 71-136341

This first collection of poetry has "two sections: 'Poems of Warmth' and 'Poems of Cold.' Its poems are mainly impressions of 'Nature', dream impressions, 'snapshot' renditions of trees and birds, snakes, flowers, fog, rain, ants." (Poetry) Some of these poems appeared in periodicals such as The Ninth Circle, Ann Arbor Review, and Foxfire.

"Brigham has lived and traveled extensively throughout the American Southwest and Northwest (including Alaska), and the poems in her first collection reveal her sharp eye and zesty, open feelings for this land and its creatures. In 'Poems of Warmth' we see anew the wolf, opossum, eagle, owl, mockingbird, lizard, black snake, spider, and monarch butterfly; we meet, perhaps for the first time in poetry, the coati. In 'Poems of Cold' we plunge into the back country of canyon, plateau, and mountain, meeting only scant wild life and a few Indians. Through these poems, Brigham makes herself a part of nature and alerts us that a new voice now sings of the American wilderness." Rozanne Knudson
Library J 96:2088 Je 15 '71 110w

"[This book] is of such slightness and dullness one almost wonders why it was published. . . . The descriptions are very very nice, very very pleasant. I guess what [the poet] is doing is catching the still points in the turning world, but it's all awfully prosy, even broken up into lines. . . . [Her poems] so determinedly refrain from significance that the reader twitches." Dick Allen
Poetry 120:235 Jl '72 400w

BRIGNANO, RUSSELL CARL. Richard Wright; an introduction to the man and his works. 201p $6.95; pa $2.95 Univ. of Pittsburgh press

813 Wright, Richard
SBN 8229-3187-7 LC 72-81667

In this study of Wright's short stories, novels, and essays, Brignano discusses the author's "views in four areas: 'race relations in America, Marxism, contemporary international affairs, and Wright's own changing philosophical props.'" (Am Lit)

"[This is an] excellent and comprehensive study . . . [which enables] the reader to follow through Wright's entire career his concern with such major issues as race and communism and to perceive very clearly how changes in these views are reflected in his works. . . . All of Wright's work is treated equally because it all has thematic importance. The discussions of individual works tend to be summaries rather than analyses because Mr. Brignano's interest is in pointing out similarities of subject matter and approach. . . . No future scholar who studies Wright's career will be able to avoid the approach outlined in this book. And what is of greater significance, no reader of Mr. Brignano's study will be able to regard Richard Wright simply as the angry young black author of Native Son [BRD 1940]. His concerns were as varied as his literary achievements; and Mr. Brignano's book does much to emphasize this fact." J. R. Bryer
Am Lit 43:672 Ja '72 550w

"[This work] makes a good companion piece for the Constance Webb biography Richard Wright [BRD 1968] and compares favorably with Edward Margolies' The Art of Richard Wright [BRD 1969]. [It] is carefully and authoritatively footnoted and altogether will be a valuable bibliographic source. As Brignano combines 'literary criticism, biography and historical matter,' his analysis will be useful for undergraduates and some advanced high school students." E. M. Guiney
Library J 95:1842 My 15 '70 90w

BRILL, ROBERT H., ed. Science and archaeology. See Science and archaeology

BRILLAT-SAVARIN, JEAN ANTHELME. The physiology of taste; or Meditations on transcendental gastronomy. M. F. K. Fisher's translation. 443p $10 Knopf

641 Food. Dinners and dining. Cookery
ISBN 0-394-47343-4 LC 74-163132

This book about food and man's taste first published—at the author's expense—in 1825. This translation was originally published in a deluxe, illustrated edition in 1949.

"It is difficult to decide whether the first credit should go to the amiable lawyer who wrote this fascinating [book] . . . which has been a classic of cuisine for over a century—or to the translator. . . . I found [her] Glosses fascinating and stimulating, as well ■ illuminative of the text. Mrs. Fisher brings to this work ■ lifetime of experience in cooking and eating. The result is every bit worth the price of the present volume. One will not only read, but re-read and return time and again for refreshment to [this book]." Friede Gruenrock

BRILLAT-SAVARIN, J. A.—Continued

Best Sell 31:456 Ja 15 '72 390w

Reviewed by Philippa Pullar

Book World p4 D 5 '71 950w

"For all its practical advice and general wisdom, 'The Physiology of Taste' is great fun... graced by the author's cheerily jaundiced view of his fellow human beings. M.F.K. Fisher's English version perfectly captures the wit and gaiety of the book. . . . In the notes, Mrs. Fisher does not explain Brillat-Savarin, she reacts to him. When he discourses on digestion, she replies with Charles Townsend Copeland's aphorism, 'To eat is human, to digest divine.'" R. S. Pirie and Richard Sennett

N Y Times Bk R p27 F 6 '72 900w

"This book is one of those few that inevitably become classics because they are the summation of their authors' entire lives. Though there is, to be sure, more in it about food and eating than about any other topic, the illustrative anecdotes, the reminiscences and descriptions, turn the work into an informative autobiography and social history. . . . Whatever his subject, Brillat-Savarin writes about it—in this translation, anyhow—with a bewitching mixture of earnestness and gaiety."

New Yorker 47:100 Ja 22 '72 170w

"[The author] left the world richer by ■ curious book. It has lasted for 136 years, justifying its confident author's boast that 'my precepts will live throughout the centuries.' Indeed, they may well endure until the last American's palate and digestive tract have been done in by the last sickly gulp of cola drink, the last aerated supermarket pre-sliced white bread. . . . [Brillat-Savarin] is not really ■ good writer—with her lovely, informative glosses his translator quietly writes rings about him—but he is a true writer. He gives us himself, as do other perennially attractive miscellanists such as brief Aubrey and melancholy Burton. . . . He is precious to us because he has left us a book mirroring that rarity: a man who enjoyed his life. In an era which has achieved a technological triumph in its power to can botulism, we owe Brillat-Savarin and his witty, beautifully mannered translator a special debt of gratitude."

Clifton Fadiman

Sat R 54:42 D 18 '71 900w

BRINEY, ROBERT E., ed. Master of villainy.

See Van Ash, C.

BRINK, C. O. Horace on poetry: the 'Ars poetica'. 3v; v2 563p $23.50 Cambridge

878 Horace (Quintus Horatius Flaccus)—

Ars poetica

SBN 521-07784-2 LC 79-116746

This is the "second of the planned three-volume commentary on Horace's literary epistles. The core of the book is a critical text of the Ars Poetica with a . . . commentary on the wording, structure and content of the poem. The text is preceded by an account of the complicated manuscript tradition and previous work on the text. The commentary is followed by a literary discussion which aims at an understanding of the Ars Poetica as a Horatian poem." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index of passages cited. Index of manuscripts and text. Lexical, grammatical, and metrical index. Index of literary theory. General index. For the first volume, Horace on Poetry: Prolegomena to the Literary Epistles, see BRD 1963.

"Brink's commentary . . . presents a most impressive and, in many respects, conclusive analysis. With great care he has written a comprehensive study of the historical development and the much-ramified tradition of the problems in ancient poetics and rhetoric relevant to Horace . . . [He] has directed his attention more to the tradition than to Horace's artistic achievement. . . . [and] differs from the view of others regarding the relationship of tradition and originality in Horace. He conceives of tradition very strictly, almost one-sidedly, in the sense of theoretical. Intellectual connection which was then taken over by Horace as material and transformed in his manner. . . . But Brink has not given sufficient attention to this very process of transformation."

Viktor Pöschl

Class World 65:185 D '71 850w

"One of the few criticisms which can be levelled against this second volume . . . a really monumental edition . . . is that like its subject, it eschews the historical approach altogether. In well over 500 pages of close-packed annotation . . . the present reviewer could find nothing on the much-debated identity of the Pisos—who were, after all, the poem's dedicatees—nor even on the date, surely a matter of vital importance, at which the Ars was composed or published. . . . This caveat once made, however, it is hard to find anything but praise for Professor Brink's scholarship, industry and judgment. . . . The statement on the jacket that 'this series of volumes constitutes the only really scholarly commentary on Horace's critical writings' is no more than the sober truth."

TLS p549 My 14 '71 2400w

BRINNIN, JOHN MALCOLM. Skin diving in the Virgins, and other poems. (A Seymour Lawrence bk) 74p $4.50 Delacorte press

811

LC 73-112357

As in the poet's "previous volumes, some of the poems are poetic letters to fellow poets living and dead; here, to Howard Nemerov and Tram Combs. Others deal with the shock of mortality to a poet in his 40's ('Saul, Afterwards, Riding East') and the shock of history ('Dachau'). [Some] translations from the poetry of Jorge Carrera Andrade [are included]." (Library J)

"Brinnin is one of the few poets who is perfectly predictable as to the high quality of each new volume. In a sense none of Brinnin's poems fail, for his style is distinguished, his mastery of his own poetic conventions is complete, and the limits he sets for himself are precise. One might observe that the subjects he chooses help to exhibit the suavity of his style, but actually the subjects range widely, and Brinnin's perspective is one of cultivated and sensitive observation rather than acute, tragic involvement. . . . [His translations of Andrade] are exceptionally skillful and devoted. This is an important volume by ■ significant American poet of the first rank, for all public, college, and university libraries." P. H. Marvin

Library J 95:2488 J1 '70 180w

"Brinnin earns our gratitude in his new book for every now and then betraying a strong, even savage sense of humor. Bird Talk is my candidate for the most trenchant comment in verse on America's role in Southeast Asia. . . . There are other bracing moments, in Pub Crawl and The End of My Sister's Guggenheim, in which the returning 'drum majorette of Rahway High/had donned the gray veil of scholarship'. . . . In his more serious moods Brinnin is not as satisfactory. Too many of the poems are infected with a kind of peevish, middle-aged world-weariness. . . . To me it seems that such poems, with their amassing of documentary details, seek to arouse a feeling of pathos in the reader without showing enough effort or risk on the part of the writer. I would not criticize Brinnin's verbal or rhythmic technique—these are manifestly expert; but his slackness of feeling does seem censurable since it compromises the overall effect of his book." R. B. Shaw

Poetry 119:344 Mr '72 430w

BRINNIN, JOHN MALCOLM. The sway of the grand saloon; a social history of the North Atlantic. (A Seymour Lawrence bk) 599p il $15 Delacorte press

387.2 Steamboats. Ocean travel

LC 74-164846

The author traces "the birth, reign, and decline of the Atlantic passenger steamer over the last hundred and fifty years." (New Yorker) Bibliography. Index.

"[This is] the work of a cultivated writer, not, as with an enterprising hack, all breeziness and bright paint. . . . What chiefly limits The Sway of the Grand Saloon is much more the ocean's fault than the author's: the pre-eminence of size and speed tends to give our 150 years a certain sameness, somewhat the effect of a long succession of track meets full of record-smashing broad jumps and hundred-yard dashes. . . . [This book] retains its nostalgic lure, and even its tasteless full-on ostentation seems less 'commercial' than the endless full-page advertisements of a more recent mode of travel." Louis Kronenberger

Atlantic 228:126 D '71 2400w

Reviewed by H. T. Anderson
Best Sell 31:410 D 15 '71 600w

Reviewed by Timothy Severin
Book World p9 N 23 '71 1000w

Reviewed by R. T. Dillon
Library J 97:194 Ja 15 '72 100w

"[This account] incorporates the good qualities of a history, a social survey and a nostalgic scrapbook without giving way to their usual defects. . . . [It is] a collection of ship-side gossip, literary narratives and accounts of shipwreck distilled from hundreds of sources. The only persistent theme is the running competition between the monied classes and the vulgar majority for the attention of ship-owners."

New Repub 165:31 N 13 '71 290w

Reviewed by Auberon Waugh

N Y Times Bk ■ p30 Ja 9 '72 950w

"While it may be a trifle difficult, at first, to think of the transatlantic steamship as an instrument of national policy (and national chauvinism) and an enforcer of class distinctions, [Brinnin] succeeds in persuading us that she was both. . . . He has written an engrossing and comprehensive (perhaps, indeed, overlong) history of national, corporate, and personal snobbery at sea. . . . The heart of [his] book is, in fact, the extended and delicious anecdote of American culture hunger sated by seagoing British pomp and circumstance. . . . With hundreds of anecdotes and scores of quotations from the great travellers of a hundred and fifty years. . . . Brinnin makes his high-seas social history less a sociological document than a charming ramble through a long sliver of history, greatly abetted by three sections of funny and awesome period photographs." L. E. Sissman

New Yorker 47:181 N 27 '71 900w

"The reader wonders, as he pages with almost giddy pleasure through this grand, swaying history of the great North Atlantic steamships: can the $15 hardback leviathan survive in an age that buys its books from newsstands, reads them in an hour, and discards them like banana peels? The Sway of the Grand Saloon is huge, solid, stately, absurdly lavish, its noble dust jacket encrusted with gilt. Its whorled endpapers are the work of Niebelungian trolls who never see the sun. Its paper, far from being recycled, might be made by the supplier of Cunard table linen. . . . One of the narrative's fascinations is that for anyone whose forebears arrived in the U.S. within the past 150 years, a bit of family history is fleshed out." John Skow

Time 99:68 Ja 3 '72 750w

TLS p920 Ag 4 '72 800w

BRISSENDEN, ROSEMARY. Joys and subtleties: South East Asian cooking [Eng title: South-East Asian food]. 261p $6.95 Pantheon bks.

641.5 Cookery, Southeast Asian

ISBN 0-394-40166-2 LC 74-120901

This book contains "two hundred forty-six recipes, mainly from Indonesia, Thailand, and Malaysia, although China and India are also represented. The book attempts to highlight each country's unique contribution to the art of cooking. . . . [It] is designed to enable Western cooks to reproduce South East Asian food as authentically as possible. . . . Information is given about herbs and spices and where to obtain them in the United States, about utensils, and about cooking conventions which are not immediately available to the outsider." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Index.

"An ingredients glossary is included, and the descriptions of the ingredients are clear. . . . The various influences, such as trade and topography, on each area's cuisine are discussed. The recipes are clear and easy to follow. Recipes for curries are abundant, as are others using hot ingredients. More and more Americans are becoming interested in this type of cooking, and this well-written cookbook with authentic recipes will be enjoyed by armchair cooks as well as practitioners. Recommended for general purchase." Sue Pearce

Library J 96:1711 My 15 '71 180w

"[This] is a book I've been cooking from for the last year. I think it's marvelous. The recipes are much more delicate than usual Indian food (from which many spring), but not so outlandish that conservative people won't like them." Nika Hazelton

N Y Times Bk ■ p31 D 12 '71 40w

BRISTON, R. J. The Stock exchange and investment analysis. 493p il $12 Verry

332.6 London. Stock Exchange. Investments. Securities
LC [70-562476]

"The first quarter of the book . . . [gives a] brief history of the [London Stock Exchange], . . . a description of its actual work, and a . . . judgment of its efficiency in providing a market for securities and allocating capital among companies. The rest of the chapters are devoted to the kinds of investment available and the effect on them of personal and corporate taxation." (Choice) Bibliography.

"There is less history but more analysis than in [E.] Morgan and [W.] Thomas, The London Stock Exchange [BRD 1971]. Extensive bibliography includes recent American publications as well as British; rather skimpy index."

Choice 8:874 S '71 130w

"There is subject matter enough for two . . . books, maybe three, but it is crammed into one. Mr. Briston is strong on institutional arrangements for dealing in securities, and the surrounding body of law. Not surprisingly, he can wring little interest out of the history of the stock exchange, with all those traditions as weird as any regiment's. But as a work of reference this whole section is a success. Had . . . [he] concentrated on what investment analysis is, and how people use it, he would have written a far more worthwhile book. Unfortunately, he has kept to the descriptive part without putting the discipline through its paces."

Economist 238:49 Ja 30 '71 480w

BRITAIN'S economic prospects reconsidered; ed. by Sir Alec Cairncross. 244p il $7.95 State Univ. of N.Y. press

330.942 Great Britain—Economic conditions.
Great Britain—Economic policy
ISBN 0-87395-174-3 LC 71-37996

This book reviews the findings of the Brookings Institution's report, Britain's economic prospects by R. E. Caves, BRD 1968. It consists of papers submitted to the 1970 weekend conference held at Ditchley Park and covers "the same ground as the Brookings Report—the role of demand management, trade and balance-of-payments problems, labour policies, and industrial policies. The conference also had before it a fifth paper, on fiscal policy and stabilization, which took issue with some of the views expressed in the Brookings Report. . . . [This volume is] an attempt to reassess British performance and policies in the light of experience since devaluation. Its central concern is the question of why economic growth in Britain since the war has been slower than in other countries." (Publisher's note) Index of subjects. Index of names.

"The papers are summarized by C. A. Blyth; R. E. Caves subsequently provides some second thoughts; and Alec Cairncross, formerly Chief Economic Advisor to the British Government, follows with some concluding reflections. The book is authoritative and clearly written, contains a comprehensive index and references, and is aimed at a professional audience."

Choice 9:1172 N '72 170w

Economist 240:64 Jl 10 '71 260w

"The publishers deserve praise for getting [this] book out quickly and well. . . . Professor Kaldor's 'consumption-led growth' is critically helpful. G. D. N. Worswick's paper on fiscal policy . . . aptly illustrates our governors' and their advisers' rituals since the war. . . . Professor E. H. Phelps Brown's paper on productivity, industrial relations and cost inflation is masterly, as is . . . Mr M. V. Posner's on industrial policies and growth. . . . [If] the 'Concluding Reflections' of the editor, Sir Alec Cairncross . . . are chasteningly, inconclusively cautionary . . . they are the more valuable, coming from one who bore the biggest burden as the chief economic adviser to governments before those of 1964-70."

TLS p1025 Ag 27 '71 450w

BRITAIN, JOAN T., jt. auth. The eternal crossroads. See Driskell, L. V.

BRITTAN, SAMUEL. Steering the economy: the British experiment. 504p il $12.95 Lib. press

354.42 Great Britain. Treasury. Great Britain—Economic policy
ISBN 0-912050-05-5 LC 71-152814

"[Brittan, economics editor of the Financial Times, [examines] . . . the economic management function of the British Treasury, and here writes about the wide range of its controls and other issues: inflation, unemployment, growth rates, taxes, quotas, exchange rates, currency devaluation, and so forth. He makes no attempt to delineate other treasury responsibilities. . . . [Brittan] also identifies false solutions in public-sector management bringing up the controls of scientific policies." (Library J) Chronology (Calendar of events 1947-1970). Index.

"[This] excellent historical analysis of the postwar British economy . . . deals with every twist and turn of the economy, through various sterling crises, devaluations, and the infamous 'stop-and-go' periods. There is an extensive discussion of the Treasury, and of the important role it plays in the British system. The book is a gold mine of information concerning the various fiscal and monetary measures employed by both Labour and Conservative governments in their so far futile attempt to combine reasonable price stability and low unemployment with respectable rates of economic growth and balance of payments equilibrium. Suitable for anyone interested in a detailed description of the British economy. Could be read with profit by contemporary policy-makers."

Choice 9:100 Mr '72 190w

"The most important part of the book is the 170-page first section dealing with administrative machinery. . . . This is the first American publication of the book which was previously issued [in England] as The Treasury Under the Tories, 1951-1964 (Penguin 1964, paper) and later as Steering the Economy: the Role of the Treasury. . . . Differences between the second and third versions are the elimination of both bibliography and analytical summary of treasury forecasting methods, plus a general updating. Some judgments made in the 1964 edition have been confirmed by events, but the author also admits his mistakes, especially in the institutional sphere. The clarity of writing is exceptional, and Brittan indicates those passages which are heavy reading. Recommended." Dean Tudor

Library J 96:4004 D 1 '71 170w

BROADUS, CATHERINE. Laughing and crying with Little League; a training manual for Little League parents [by] Catherine and Loren Broadus; il. by Bil Keane. 85p $3.95 Harper

796.357 Little League baseball
SBN 06-0611111 LC 75-183631

"When Little League season opens, so does open season on your son. The foe your son faces is not so much the opposing team as it is the twin specters of failure and shame in the eyes of his peers, parents, and community. How does ■ parent cope? [The authors take a look] at the trials and tribulations of living through the afflictions of Little League fever." (Publisher's note)

"Most striking about this book is its common sense. The things that are said here need to be said—and furthermore they need to be pointed out to ■ lot of people, in the hope that those pointed at will get the point. Unlike some observers who have taken a very jaundiced view of organized baseball for children, the authors—a minister and his wife, parents of three veteran little leaguers—believe in the game and set forth, subtly and indirectly, a credo for its conduct. Their values are marvelously sound. If you are going to be around a little league this summer, get this book, see yourself in it, see others in it, and then make sure that they see themselves."

Best Sell 32:8 Ap 1 '72 230w

"Those who are disposed, as are the authors, to look kindly on the superorganization for children will [enjoy this book] and profit from its tips on survival in that world. Those of us who have found our prejudices against its practices confirmed repeatedly will find here further support for keeping Little League at ■ distance. Read it and take sides."

Christian Century 89:290 Mr ■ '72 80w

Reviewed by Phil Elderkin
Christian Science Monitor p36 My 4 '72 70w

BROADUS, LOREN, jt. auth. Laughing and crying with Little League. See Broadus, C.

BROCK, PETER. Pacifism in Europe to 1914. 556p $17.50; pa $8.75 Princeton univ. press

261.8 Pacifism
ISBN 0-691-04608-5 LC 75-166362

In this first volume of the author's trilogy entitled "A History of Pacifism," Brock describes . . . the beliefs and activities of sects that have repudiated war: the Czech Brethren; the Anabaptists and the Mennonites; the Antitrinitarians; the Quakers; and the Tolstoyans and the radically pacifist wing of the peace movement in nineteenth-century Britain. . . . [The author also deals with] nonviolence, conscientious objection, [and] war taxes. . . . [He concludes] with a definition of normative pacifism, a topology of pacifism, and a discussion of the factors present in the genesis and decay of pacifist groups." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index. For "Pacifism in the United States", a companion volume, see BRD 1969.

"[The author has produced] a magisterial volume that will belong on the shelves of all peace-people."

Christian Century 89:758 Jl 5/12 '72 70w

"Obviously a lover of the . . . religious peace-people, Brock is not biased; never does he waver from highest standards of scholarship. . . . Talkers-about-peace who refer to pacifist history without reference to Brock's monumental and enduring work will seem like mere chatterers to those who have studied it." Martin Marty

Critic 31:94 S/O '72 600w

"It is right that Professor Brock should devote a whole volume to the development of European pacifism, because it is in Christian Europe that pacifism has its origins. . . . It is one of Professor Brock's great strengths that, although he was a conscientious objector himself, he is able to write about the whole range of pacifist beliefs with absolute objectivity. This is a scholarly history, not an attempt to justify the pacifist position. . . . Professor Brock's long, fluent narrative holds the reader without conscious effort. This is an authoritative work and one that will be welcomed by historians and social scientists alike."

TLS p1413 N 24 '72 950w

BRODER, DAVID S. The party's over; the failure of politics in America. 280p $7.95 Harper

320.973 U.S.—Politics and government—20th century
ISBN 0-06-010483-X LC 77-181608

This "is a book about the erosion of public confidence in . . . the two-party system. Among the factors considered as contributing to the decline of responsible party politics are the lack of true party leadership, shifting coalitions of powerful interest groups, party finance problems, too much consensus politics, and split-ticket voting. Broder argues for a realignment of the two parties in such a way that the people through viable participation insure responsible party action." (Library J)

Best Sell 32:8 Ap 1 '72 410w

"Broder does not argue that party loyalties have been eroded to the point that both parties are dead, but he comes close to predicting their demise unless there is a revival of real public support. . . . It is in [the] area of solution to the political problem that Broder raises doubt as to whether he really is convinced he has a plausible solution. . . . [His] book is live political reading; it is required reading for all those fascinated by the way the present presidential campaign is developing." Ted Lewis

Book World p12 Mr 12 '72 800w

"The author argues that the U.S. government is not working properly today . . . and that partisan politics can provide an instrument for national self-renewal. . . . [He notes that] the erosion of responsible party government began [in the Eisenhower years]. . . . What is [now] needed, Broder says, is an issue . . . to end the aimless drift of voters between parties. . . . His own hope is that political reform itself [rather than race,] will become the partisan issue, and he suggests several possible coalitions—at least one of which is quite surprising. Finding mechanisms for reviving party responsibility is a major concern of the author, and some of the means that he outlines seem feasible. [Perhaps Broder's] appeal will stir some of his readers to make a partisan commitment and to work toward the shaping and fulfillment of their party's goals." M. A. Marty Christian Century 89:486 Ap 2 '72

 400w

Reviewed by J. Q. Wilson
 Commentary 53:74 My '72 1050w

"[Broder has had] the experience of 16 years of political reporting during a time of great national change. . . . Although he effectively analyzes specific political problems, his pessimism makes for a vague ambivalence that weakens whatever case he makes for the merits of the two-party system." Hubert Humphreys

Library J 97:1022 Mr 15 '72 150w

Reviewed by Jeffrey Bell
 Nat R 24:647 Je 9 '72 1350w

"Broder, political writer for The Washington Post has written a thoughtful book, combining the existing literature on political parties with the experience and perceptions of an able and respected journalist. He makes a number of constructive suggestions for reforming the political system: direct election of the President; expansion of the role of party caucuses in the Congress, and letting them, not the seniority system, determine Congressional committee chairmen." Elizabeth Drew

N Y Times Bk R p3 Je 4 '72 650w

Reviewed by S. K. Bailey
 Va Q 48:580 autumn '72 550w

BRODEUR, PAUL. Downstream. 206p $6.95
 Atheneum pubs.

LC 70-175292

This is a collection of the following short stories: The spoiler; The turtle; Blue lawns; The secret; The siphon; The sick fox; Behind the moon; The toll; A war story; The proposal; Angel of Death; The snow in Petrograd; Hydrography.

"It's an uncommon pleasure to read an author who knows how to resolve pain without bitterness yet still has a jeweler's eye for life's tricky facets and buried fissures. Paul Brodeur whose ambitious novel, The Stunt Man [BRD 1970] earned lavish praise two years ago, is such an author. . . . These touchingly elegaic stories . . . have the mark of a man pushing through grief towards new hope. . . . [The author's] vision, born more of experience and understanding than courage, is what illuminates and resolves many of Brodeur's stories with a gentle, tender wisdom that deeply satisfies." S. K. Oberbeck
 Book World p15 Ap 23 '72 650w

Choice 9:965 O '72 190w

"All but two of these 13 stories were published previously in the New Yorker and other magazines. There is a variety here. The nostalgic charm of 'A War Story' and 'The Turtle,' two evocations of childhood, contrasts with the chromium cynicism of 'The Spoiler,' wherein a young father drives undesirables from his ski lodge. 'The Sick Fox,' an exploration of the absurdities of routine and duty, was expanded to novel length [BRD 1963]. A most satisfying collection, with special appeal to men." R. H. Donahugh

Library J 97:1344 Ap 1 '72 100w

"The plots of some [of the stories] are just too familiar, their resolutions too sentimental to be effective: children learning about nature from an elderly rustic, an ex-GI recalling an idyllic European romance, two alienated and hostile people deciding whether to marry. . . . Nevertheless, Brodeur's clear, crisp prose makes each story as readable as his two widely praised novels, The Sick Fox and The Stunt Man. . . . Thus although one of the two new stories, 'Angel of Death,' is among the best in the collection, readers already acquainted with Brodeur's work will come upon little fresh material. But those who are not will find much to admire in the sheer narrative skill exhibited in these stories." R. E. Lynch
 Sat 55:76 Ap 1 '72 460w

BRODWIN, LEONORA LEET. Elizabethan love tragedy. 1587-1625. 404p $12.50 N.Y. univ. press

822 English drama—History and criticism
 ISBN 0-8147-0955-9 LC 71-124519

In this study, the author defines "the genre, 'love tragedy,' and in so doing, clarifies critical problems heretofore seemingly intractable. [He covers] all the important Elizabethan dramatists from Marlowe to Middleton, [and provides] insights into historical context and close textual analyses where needed." (Choice) Index.

"No mere reworking of standard views and scholarship, this is a major revisionist thesis. . . . In this big book . . . Brodwin's authority and method are so firmly established by mid-point that her readings of Shakespeare, Webster, and Middleton in the second half of the book are utterly convincing. The analysis of Othello is a stunning performance. The book is essential for both student and scholar-critic."

Choice 9:73 Mr '72 110w

"[Brodwin's] readings are intelligent and industrious. . . . [Her] method is satisfactory for the minor dramatists, but works less well for Shakespeare, whose plays evade rigid definition. . . . The writing is a bit clotted; it is unlikely to be read in its entirety except by specialists. A shorter version would have considerably more appeal and impact." E. Pearlman

Library J 97:1015 Mr 15 '72 80w

BRODY, ALAN. The English mummers and their plays; traces of ancient mystery (Pa. Univ. Publications in folklore and folklife). 201p il $9.50 Univ. of Pa. press

822 Mumming. Folk drama
 ISBN 0-8122-7611-6 LC 77-92855

The author attempts to show that "the men's dramatic ceremonial, commonly known as the mummer's play, has roots which extend deep into a ritual past. . . . [He contends that] no matter how fragmented, modernized, expanded, or overlaid with literary accretions [the play is] there is invariably a figure who dies and is resurrected. . . . [His thesis is that] there are three distinct types of men's ceremonial: the Hero-Combat, the Sword Play, and the Wooing Ceremony . . . representing three different stages of development [and he gives an] account of the nature of these three types." (Pref) Bibliography. Index of characters and plays. Index of subjects.

"Brody is concerned mainly with action in form of ritual. He draws heavily on the work of the Cambridge School of anthropology for his analogies. The book has useful appendices, a substantial bibliography, and a series of striking photographs. Although this reinterpretation of the mummers' play does not supersede [E.] Chambers' old but solid study [The English Folk-Play, BRD 1934], it is complementary to the older work in its approach."

Choice 8:1338 D '71 170w

"The most familiar theme in English folk-plays is that of death and resurrection: one of the actors falls down, either slain in combat or executed by his companions, when in comes a doctor who, after some preliminary hocus-pocus, brings him to life again. . . . Brody is intimately acquainted with all the play texts . . . and with the scores of books and articles concerned with their origins, performance and influence. . . . His own objective is clearly to present a general survey as methodically as possible. . . . [He has selected] a few representative texts for analysis and elucidation. . . . [Unfortunately] many sections are stiffly and awkwardly written . . . and, despite the labour which must have gone into the making of the book, it shows signs of having been proofread rather carelessly."

TLS p1033 Ag 27 '71 800w

BROGGER, A. W. The Viking ships; their ancestry and evolution [by] A. W. Brøgger [and] Haakon Shetelig. 191p $20 Twayne

623.82 Ships
 LC 72-181704

This revised edition was "originally published in English in Norway in 1951 . . . [and] in the U.S. in 1953. . . . It is a history and description of Norse ships from prehistoric times to the Middle Ages. . . . Most of the descriptions are of ships either built in Norway or found in Norwegian archaeological sites. Brøgger and Shetelig discuss the origins of Viking ships, their types, their uses in trade and war, and the reasons for their decline. They also analyze the Tune, Gokstad, and Oseberg ship-grave finds." (Library J)

BRØGGER, A. W.—Continued

"[This is a] new and handsome edition of a highly regarded work. . . . Although there are no citations to sources, the authors support their meticulous discussion by frequent reference in their text to scholarly studies and especially to the primary materials upon which they have relied in speculating on the origins and various usages of early Scandinavian vessels. A standard work in maritime history, this book will have particular value for European historians by relating the specifics of Northern seafaring to the culture which depended so heavily upon it."

Choice 9:866 S '72 100w

"[In this new edition there are] minor changes in the text and . . . many new illustrations. . . . Although there have been some important discoveries made since the book was first published and therefore it isn't completely up-to-date, The Viking Ships is one of the most comprehensive and well-illustrated books in the field." J. F. Husband
Library J 97:2394 J1 '72 150w

BRONTË, EMILY. A peculiar music; poems for young readers; chosen, introduced and annot. by Naomi Lewis. 96p $3.95 Macmillan (N Y)

821
LC 75-178597

This "volume collects poems which were written by Emily Brontë in the early 19th Century. . . . Also included is a biographical introduction and Emily's diary letters. [Index of first lines.] Grade eight and up." (Library J)

"Such a selection of Emily Brontë's poems as Naomi Lewis has now given us has been wanted for years. . . . The general reader can rejoice in this attractive volume, whose handy size, elegant binding, quality paper and type and delightful reproductions of original MSS and drawings . . . make it the perfect companion for the initiate and the uninitiate alike. Primarily addressed to the younger reader, there is no reason why the appeal of the present volume should be anything less than universal: so true it is that Emily Brontë's poetry has but to be read for its unique quality to be apparent. . . . The balance between Emily's varying styles—the purely visionary, the dramatic, the lyrical, the philosophical—has been very finely adjusted. All the key pieces are there. . . . One is struck with the modernity of Emily Brontë, her appeal for a growing generation that seeks to discover its truths . . . unhampered by conventions." Winifred Gérin

Encounter 39:83 S '72 500w

"Young adults today may be able to empathize with the powerfully expressed mood of some of these poems which show Emily using her imagination to escape the Victorian restrictions of her home in the Vicarage and the genteel poverty that went with it. Other poems will seem too sentimental. . . . Lewis' annotations of individual poems allude tantalizingly to the imaginary world created and acted out during their childhood by the Brontë family; and the samplings provide background material which paves the way for an expanded understanding of Wuthering Heights. But this does not provide an in-depth picture of this ephemeral woman, and will appeal only to those who are into Romantic poets." Helen Kreigh

Library J 97:2242 Je 15' 72 210w [YA]

Reviewed by Douglas Dunn

New Statesman 82:704 N 19 '71 300w

BROOKE, CHRISTOPHER. Medieval church and society; collected essays. 256p il $3.95 N.Y. Univ. press

270.4 Church history—Middle Ages
ISBN 0-8147-0968-0 LC 72-166506

This "book contains 12 papers, several of them previously published. These essays are concerned with three major themes as they relate to medieval civilization: love, marriage, and celibacy; religious sentiment and heresy; and two great intellectual and religious figures of the 13th Century, Saint Francis and Saint Dominic." (Library J) "Index." (Choice)

"These essays illustrate a valid wholistic approach as they attempt to penetrate a past society by giving concrete expression to its nature, aspirations, and history. The interaction of the Christian church and medieval society is well described in each essay. Several illustrations and an adequate index enhance the volume. Religion and history departments will want this book purchased."

Choice 9:827 S '72 130w

"Specialists in medieval ecclesiastical history will welcome this edition of the collected essays of a distinguished scholar . . . which should be required reading for graduate students. . . . This reviewer is personally grateful for three papers here accessible in convenient form—'Gregorian Reform in Action,' which is now something of a classic; 'Thomas Becket'; and 'Approaches to Medieval Forgery.' These and other essays on church architecture and canon law testify to . . . Brooke's interests and learning. All the papers are written with great urbanity and, according to the author, with the general reader in mind." B. D. Hill

Library J 97:1710 My 1 '72 150w

"The present collection. . . . besides containing two or three items with which all medievalists should be familiar. . . . has several others which could interest any reader with historical tastes. . . . The breadth and depth of [Brooke's] acquaintance with English, French, German and Italian work, from Edmund Bishop to Erwin Panofsky, and from Gratian to Iris Origo, is exceptional among academic historians, and all is informed by a critical yet warmly human approach, which gives to the whole a personal touch."

TLS p214 F 25 '72 550w

BROOKE, SYLVIA, LADY, Raneë of Sarawak. Queen of the head hunters; the autobiography of H. H. the Hon. Sylvia Lady Brooke, Raneë of Sarawak. 194p il $6.95 Morrow

B or 92
LC 70-181030

The author describes her life and her experiences as the wife of Vyner Brooke, who was the third and last white Rajah of Sarawak.

"The final chapter of the book is by far the most interesting, dealing with the end of the rule of the Brooke family. An associate of the Raneë's for the last thirteen years of her life—she died in 1971—says that her last dreams were 'to make a farewell trip to Sarawak, to see her autobiography published and perhaps made into a film.' Her own written reason was ' . . . to tell the almost legendary story of the rule of the Brookes in Sarawak and let others see and feel what it was like to be sovereign rulers of one's own state. [The book] is superficial and a disappointment.'" E. C. Howley

Best Sell 32:113 Je 1 '72 450w

"[This is] a conceited memoir, full of clichés, name-dropping, and bigotry." Cynthia Harrison

Library J 97:2382 J1 '72 90w

Reviewed by Arthur Marshall

New Statesman 80:279 S 4 '70 300w

"[The autobiography] brings its author's inquisitive innocence to bear on two survivals of an earlier age: the highest society of Edwardian London and the Raj of Sarawak, a primitive kingdom administered solely, and justly, by an English raja. . . . Writing in her early eighties, Sylvia Lady Brooke has lost none of the ingenuous charm and vivacity that made her, as a young débutante, the particular friend of George Bernard Shaw, already a lion of the London stage, and James M. Barrie. . . . Sylvia and Vyner Brooke . . . took the white man's burden seriously. . . . [She] recalls the years of their reign with a sure, unsentimental fondness." L. B. Sissman
New Yorker 48:108 Je 1 '72 550w

"I do not like facts', remarks the ex-Raneë of Sarawak, 'and dates appal me'. . . . Laughter is the key to [the book], which has the improbable verisimilitude of Nancy Mitford. Vyner's father lost his eye galloping into a tree, hunting. In London some years later Vyner suggested that he should buy a glass one. . . . It happened to be one destined for a stuffed albatross and it gave him for ever afterwards the ferocious stare of ~~some~~ strange solitary bird.' About the extramarital excursions of her husband, the Ranees is delightfully complaisant. She preserves more discretion about her own flirtations. . . . [This] is a delightful book that one hopes will bring [her] enough money to support her in her immortality."

TL5 p964 S 4 '70 1050W

BROOKE-ROSE, CHRISTINE. A ZBC of Ezra Pound. 297p $7.95 Univ. of Calif. press

811 Pound, Ezra Loomis
ISBN 0-520-01848-6 LC 75-138284

This explication of the work of the poet begins with The Cantos. The author also discusses the earlier poems and Pound's own statements about poetry, to throw light upon the . . . development between A Lume Spento and the beginning of The Cantos [both, BRD 1966]. (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography. General index. Index of themes. Index of cantos.

"One of the many poor books about the works and ideas of Ezra Pound. Pound attracts people who are barely articulate. This book, full of 'oh, dear' and 'alas,' is random and unsystematic—not at all the kind of poem-by-poem guidance needed by even an advanced reader of Pound. Judgments—'a lousy poem' or 'idiotic'—are blunt, lively, often correct, but an imposition to a reader searching for illumination."

Choice 9:1126 N '72 140W

"As an expositor of 'The Cantos' Miss Christine Brooke-Rose is immensely erudite, and Pound's own well-known postcard style is often echoed in her 'ZBC.' The title again is allusive, calling to mind Pound's marvellous primer for students of literature, 'ABC of Reading.' It also indicates that her treatment of his poetry . . . is far from chronological. By starting in medias res she hopes to persuade newcomers to Pound (the book is expressly written for students) to pursue their way, in spite of almost impenetrable brambles and pitfalls, to an appreciation of his meaning and method. If her readers have the requisite stamina for the journey, Miss Brooke-Rose is a most efficient guide."

Economist 241:67 D 11 '71 100W

"Even though it is as idiomatic as classroom lectures, [this book] may not speak to the students to whom it is addressed. Brooke-Rose's style is too personal to be accessible without the full presence of the writer; her organization is too associational to be informative without a fuller account of her thought processes; and the nuances of her tones are difficult to certify without a clearer communication of her intellectual position. The book . . . is brilliant, however, in its discussion of Pound's use of language and literary technique and his treatment of sources and influences. Especially impressive is the author's approach to Pound's poetry on its own terms. Useful bibliography and indexes." Walter Waring

Library J 97:1810 My 15 '72 150W

"[The author] knows about ideograms (beautifully drawn in this edition by Hugh Gordon Porteus), is tireless in her pursuit of allusion, and communicates her own excitement in reading Pound. . . . But one reads the book with a growing conviction that the whole enterprise is founded upon a massive tautology. Its effect is merely to reduplicate the problems of the Cantos themselves." Jonathan Raban

New Statesman 82:928 D 31 '71 700W

TL5 p624 Je 2 '72 1250W

BROOKNER, ANITA. The genius of the future; studies in French art criticism: Diderot, Stendhal, Baudelaire, Zola, The brothers Goncourt, Huysmans. 172p pl $3.95 Phaidon; for sale by Praeger

701 Art criticism
ISBN 0-7148-1497-0 LC 75-156471

This study of six French writers on the arts "was originally planned as a course in French art criticism given at the Courtauld Institute in the University of London, but then escalated into six of the Slade Lectures which were delivered at Cambridge in 1967-8. . . . Each of the six essays considers the writer in the context of his time, and relates his criticism both to his personality and to the rest of his work." (Publisher's note) Index.

Choice 9:495 Je '72 190W

"[These essays] read well as a study of the evolution of criticism from the realm of the man of letters, such as Diderot, writing for a minute European cultural elite, to that of the mass media critic such as Zola. None of these men was a professional art critic in the sense we know today, and here lies much of their fascination. . . . By studying them in this sometimes novel role Dr Anita Brookner . . . has produced a highly original, lively work."

Economist 241:63 D 25 '71 120W

J Aesthetics 30:567 summer '72 100W

"Thirty black-and-white illustrations offer a good sample of the works of art discussed, although there is no attempt at thorough representation (e.g., no Degas) and the captions are not dated. Documentation includes references to original texts and other sources in the notes at the ends of the chapters. Students of French art and literature will find that Brookner's perceptive comments illuminate a significant career aspect of the literary figures discussed." Karen Horny

Library J 97:1326 Ap 1 '72 220W

"Dr Brookner is surely right in devoting the greatest space to Baudelaire. Indeed, posterity has served him well, for in his own lifetime he was one critic among many others in the Paris of the 1840s and 1850s, whereas now he is somehow the critic. . . . The fact that for all these critics the critical task was only a part of their lives' work means that they were all amateurs, but with that they gained an unashamed subjectivity and, in Dr Brookner's words on Diderot, which apply to them all, 'an exhilarating energy of approach'. Energy—the word must appear on almost every page—is an important quality for any sort of success in Dr Brookner's eyes, and this shines through in her own tonic chapters on Diderot and Stendhal. . . . The text is stimulating and agreeable to read. . . . The only fault is—not enough. These men deserve a book apiece." Philip Covisbee

New Statesman 83:83 Ja 21 '72 700W

"[This book is] written in limpid, persuasive prose, with a clarity of expression not always to be found in works of this kind. . . . Brookner points out with her customary perspicacity that, in the case of Stendhal at least, it is to his major literary works that one must turn for a key to his artistic temperament and an indication of what he expected of art. . . . This is significant for, with all of the writers whom Dr Brookner discusses, one gets the feeling that their criticism of painting and sculpture was an overflow from their feelings about their own medium."

TL5 p1468 N 26 '71 800W

BROOKS, CLEANTH. A shaping joy; studies in the writer's craft. 393p $7.95 Harcourt

820 English literature—History and criticism. American literature—History and criticism
ISBN 0-15-181775-8 LC 74-158406

A collection of articles, lectures and essays which the literary critic produced during the 1960's.

"For someone who attended graduate school and studied English after World War II and into the 1950's, this book of 22 essays of recent years will give pause. . . . A pang of nostalgia. Meaning, significance, form—what did they really amount to? Again, studies of Milton, of Eliot, of Yeats. . . . And still asking, 'Is James Joyce's Ulysses a novel?' It all seems so worn-out, so old-fashioned. But in a time of feeling the author of The well wrought urn [BRD 1947] still finds audiences for his lectures here and in England. The fact that most of the essays have been left in lecture form makes them more readable for the undergraduate, for whom, hopefully, it may all be new. Recommended."

Choice 9:639 JI/Ag '72 130W

Reviewed by David Bromwich

Commentary 54:79 N '72 1200W

"[This volume] is a showcase for the range of Cleanth Brooks' work. From analysis of two of Wordsworth's early poems to a discussion of Joyce's Ulysses, the master scalpel does not falter. . . . There are so many new-

BROOKS, CLEANTH—Continued

new critics hacking away at the giant. It is a sheer delight to see that [Brooks] still stands, that his principles are just, that they can and do 'expose once more the living fibers of the imagination so that men might once again see who they are and where they were.' Claire Hahn

Commonweal 97:89 O 27 '72 500w

Reviewed by Theodore Weiss

Encounter 38:67 D '71 400w

"I don't think this broad if slightly simple-minded book, named after a phrase in an essay by Yeats, was really entitled to be subnamed 'Studies in the Writer's Craft.' . . . It doesn't show much acquisition of such a craft . . . in its own writing. It is a bet that any banal phrase will turn up—crossing watersheds, the usual task of poetry, appropriate pigeonholes, Blake's dark satanic mills. . . . Professor Brooks says most of his essays were lectures, but I don't think that explains—or if it explains, would justify—the simpleness; and certainly it doesn't excuse the style: Still, if it is a vulgar style, it is loose and conceited: you can understand what this academic literary man is up to . . . even if it is never exhilarating and seldom—except in paraphrase or precis of what his subjects write—very interesting."

Geoffrey Grigson

New Statesman 81:847 Je 18 '71 750w

Reviewed by E. W. Said

N Y Times Bk R p4 D 10 '72 430w

"The shift of a decade . . . has left these essays high and dry. After years of Vietnam, so simplistic an analysis of American 'Innocence' in James, Fitzgerald and Faulkner cannot be salvaged by Yeats's 'murderous innocence of the sea'. The essay on Auden is a mere guided tour through 'Balaam and the Ass' etc, as if this critical oeuvre were some recent and personal trouvaille. The talking voice is always that of the able teacher. The whole book might make an excellent, if belated, introduction to the critical sensibility of post-Second World War America, deep in the shadow of T. S. Eliot. But for today the effect is too benign, too garrulous, too loath to drive speculation to an argued climax."

TLS p1002 Ag 20 '71 700w

BROOKS, GWENDOLYN. The world of Gwendolyn Brooks. 426p $8.50 Harper

818

SBN 06-010538-0

LC 74-160646

"This contains five previously published volumes of Miss Brooks's work. Four are poetry: A Street in Bronzeville [BRD 1945], Annie Allen [BRD 1949], The Bean Eaters [BRD 1960], and In the Mecca [BRD 1968], Maude Martha [BRD 1953] is fiction." (Library J)

"Miss Brooks, who won a Pulitzer Prize for Annie Allen in 1950, is one of America's most distinguished black poets. Her World . . . belongs in public and high school libraries where it will be willingly entered and studied." Regina Minudri

Library J 96:3916 N 15 '71 50w [YA]

"The form of 'The World of Gwendolyn Brooks' is not marred by the inclusion of the fictional work, 'Maud Martha,' for this novella . . . is a narrative poem disguised as fiction, one in which poetic and fictional technique combine. . . . [This volume] is not flawless; there are defects . . . that are endemic to a poet who harbors an almost child-like fascination for words. . . . In some of the poems . . . there is a tendency towards obscurity and abstraction. Such poems are few; the majority contain [a] muscular tone and energy. . . . [This collection] is a tremendous achievement, one which reaffirms Gwendolyn Brooks's works as classics in our times." Addison Gayle

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ja 2 '72 1700w

BROOKS, JEAN R. Thomas Hardy: the poetic structure. 336p $12.50 Cornell univ. press

823 Hardy, Thomas

ISBN 0-8014-0679-X

LC 78-164670

"After an introductory essay on the 'heart and inner meaning' of [Hardy's] readings of his poems and novels, emphasizing theme, structure, and linguistic patterns . . . four chapters [are] devoted to the poetry. [Brooks] then deals with the minor fiction, and devotes a chapter to each of the major novels: Far from the Madding Crowd, The Return of the Native, The Mayor of Casterbridge, The Woodlanders, Tess of the D'Urbervilles, and Jude the Obscure. A discussion of the epic drama The Dynasts follows, and a concluding chapter assesses Hardy's influence and establishes his place among the great modern novelists." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author's] view of tragedy shows the influence of existentialism . . . especially Camus, whom she quotes frequently. The author clearly and competently shows how poetic structure organically carries Hardy's vision of life. . . . This book is recommended for the general reader of Hardy."

Choice 9:504 Je '72 200w

"The role played by the 'poetic impulse' in Hardy is both crucial and difficult to come to terms with, and Brooks is finally unable to define 'modern poetic structure' with enough precision. Nevertheless, even though the volume doesn't quite deliver what it promises, it does contain a healthy percentage of thoughtful and insightful criticism of the poetry and six of the major novels. The treatment of The Dynasts is less convincing. The author knows Hardy's works intimately, but cares about them so much that one is often left with the uncomfortable impression that Hardy could do very little wrong. This overestimation of Hardy's gifts is most glaring in a final, highly excitable chapter in which the novelist emerges as something like the fountainhead of all modern fiction." Keith Cushman

Library J 97:198 Ja 15 '72 200w

"[This study wrestles] with the unevenness of Hardy's fiction. . . . Brooks's book is that of an avid reader impatient to demonstrate such a plentitude in her subject that ineptnesses or uncertainties are forgotten. Early in her account she seems to argue that some incongruities of Hardy's voice merely dramatize 'man's predicament as a striving, sensitive, imperfect individual in a rigid, non-sentient, absurd cosmos', and later she delivers so many shrewd observations of his 'poetic' effects that there is no time to ask questions. . . . [She leaves] me with the impression that the boldness of Hardy's achievement—and the reason so many critical minds are drawn to it—is somehow a function of the plentitude and the uncertainties." Alexander Welsh

Yale R 61:459 Mr '72 850w

BROOKS, JOE. Trout fishing; drawings by Tom Beecham. (An Outdoor life bk) 302p $8.95 Harper

799.1 Trout fishing

LC 70-178838

The "editor of Outdoor Life magazine offers new information and new approaches to old information in this narration of his personal trout fishing experiences in many nations." (Library J) Index.

"[Brooks] expertly outlines the flies employed in different waters and discusses the backgrounds and developments of famous fly patterns. No aspect of fly fishing is ignored and the intricacies of this ancient sport are made available to all. It is obvious that Brooks is both a fisherman and a writer and that he possesses more than a superficial knowledge of benthic limnology and trout ecology. All of us who fish and who enjoy fine writing are richer. . . . Recommended for all libraries and fishermen."

Choice 9:1001 O '72 170w

"A detailed chapter on casting techniques is especially noteworthy; well illustrated with line drawings, it alone is worth the price of the book for the novice and is an excellent review for the expert. In addition to having unusually attractive color photographs, the book is clearly written and sturdily bound. Highly recommended." C. F. Clotfelter

Library J 97:2424 J1 '72 130w

BROOKS, LESTER, Jr. auth. Blacks in the city. See Parris, G.

BROOKS, NOAH. Washington, D.C. in Lincoln's time. See Mitgang, H., ed. Lincoln's long shadow

BROOKS, PAUL. The house of life: Rachel Carson at work; with sels. from her writings published and unpublished. 350p il $8.95 Houghton

B or 92 Carson, Rachel Louise. Marine biology. Ecology
ISBN 0-395-13517-6 LC 72-173777

The author was Rachel Carson's editor when she wrote Silent Spring (BRD 1962). He presents an account of Carson's life as a biologist for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, and an author, lover of nature and champion of conservation. He includes a selection from unpublished material, letters, government pamphlets, speeches, and excerpts from Under the Sea-Wind (BRD 1941), The Sea Around Us (BRD 1951), The Edge of the Sea (BRD 1955), and Silent Spring. The latter third of the book is concerned with the writing of Silent Spring—work that described the dangers of the indiscriminate use of pesticides. Bibliography.

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 229:124 Ap '72 430w

"[Rachel Carson] is responsible for one of the great revolutions of history—the Ecological Movement. Very few people could even define the word ten years ago; now it is a household word, as well it should be, for the Greek root meaning of ecology is 'house,' hence the book's title. . . . The present volume has a twofold purpose: to present a selection of Rachel Carson's best writing, and to show—in her own words—how she achieved what she did. . . . This is a wonderful book giving us not only a small introduction to a gentle, sensitive, lovely person but also a collection of her best writings on the world household that she loved so much." F. J. MacEntee

Best Sell 32:8 Ap 1 '72 480w

Reviewed by John Hay
Book World p6 Mr 26 '72 550w

Choice 9:668 JI/Ag '72 120w

Reviewed by R. J. Cattani
Christian Science Monitor p11 My 10 '72 250w

"Young people coming to Miss Carson's life and writing for the first time will find enough inspiration to last a lifetime." M. S. Cosgrave
Horn Bk 48:392 Ag '72 180w

Reviewed by I. B. Moon
Library J 97:1313 Ap 1 '72 100w

"This biography, reappraising Miss Carson's contribution as an author . . . is a rich and readable work. . . . A high point is [Brooks's] replay of the genesis of 'The Sea Around Us,' a book that was three years in the writing. . . . Throughout, her biographer demonstrates that Rachel Carson was a trained and careful biologist who came reluctantly to see that our earthly habitation could not take care of itself any longer . . . that man could (and would) destroy his environment if he continued on his present course. Brooks's final chapters (about the writing of 'Silent Spring') are deeply moving. They emphasize Rachel Carson's wit, warmth and humor, her refusal to be spoiled by success with its flood of honors." Josephine Johnson

N Y Times Bk R p30 Ap 30 '72 800w

"Any man or woman whose outlook and inlook are the richer for having read Rachel Carson . . . will wish to enter this 'House of Life.' . . . What does perhaps need saying, to the uninitiated, is: Read this book if it is the first or last wise thing you do in 1972. . . . What Mr. Brooks has produced is not a personal biography . . . but a strong, unsentimental yet affectionate study of a professional biologist who had the genius, the passion, and the sensitive ear to write exquisite prose. Perhaps Mr. Brooks takes her prose style (and its importance) a little too much for granted. But certainly he has offered his readers a brilliant selection of Miss Carson's work." David McCord
Sat R 55:108 Mr 25 '72 900w

BROSE, OLIVE J. Frederick Denison Maurice; rebellious conformist. 308p il $12.50 Ohio univ. press

B or 92 Maurice, Frederick Denison
ISBN 0-8214-0092-4 LC 74-141380

Maurice is "remembered today for his efforts to apply Christian principles to social reform, especially after the revolutionary events of 1848. This study . . . shows him as leader of that group of Christian Socialists who argued that socialism was the truest expression of democracy. A convert from Unitarianism to Anglicanism, he wrote and lectured widely, taught at Kings College, London, and Cambridge and founded a Working Men's College to further his theological and social ideas." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Brose has assiduously culled the standard sources and some less well known. The authorship, however, is often more enthusiastic than admirable. Manifesting a penchant for clichés and exclamation points, Brose tends to adduce evidence in the manner of an undergraduate. . . . Most annoyingly, an extended series of comments comparing Maurice with Kierkegaard appears to be based on an ad hoc reading of some improbable texts, with a fine disregard of the problem of Kierkegaard's pseudonyms. It is doubtful whether young students should be exposed to this book."

Choice 9:827 S '72 200w

"[This] is an intellectual rather than a personal biography, with a new angle of approach centering on Maurice's conversion experience (from Unitarianism) as the key to his thought. . . . Brose shows the essential consistency of Maurice's thought in terms of the unique mind-set resulting from his conversion experience. Perhaps her main contribution to history is to make clear the distinction between Maurice's biblically based theology and the liberal tendencies collectively misnamed the 'broad church.'" J. L. Altholz
Christian Century 89:373 Mr 29 '72 400w

"[Maurice's] individualistic views and his efforts to extract the essential truths from divergent religious groups made him 'a gadfly to all parties,' the author compares him 'in radical depth' to Kierkegaard. Olive Brose has written a well-researched book, not exciting, but valuable in its intellectual portrait of one who managed to be both radical and conservative."

N Y Times Bk R p10 Mr 5 '72 120w

"[Brose's] analysis of Maurice's tangled thought shows, with many important quotations from his writings, that however unsystematic he is—not surprisingly, since he loathed systems—his ideas do in fact radiate from an all-governing centre. One feels little hesitation in taking Dr Brose as a guide."

TLS p717 Je 23 '72 750w

BROTHERS, JOAN. Residence and student life; a sociological inquiry into residence in higher education [by] Joan Brothers and Stephen Hatch; introd. by W. R. Niblett. 419p $17 Barnes & Noble

378.1 Students—Great Britain. Colleges and universities—Great Britain
SBN 442-73720-8 LC 77-885766

A study "by British sociologists of 'The place of residential provision in higher education.' The central question posed by the investigation (done under the aegis of the Department of Higher Education, University of London Institute of Education) is 'What contribution, if any, does it [residence] or can it make today to the kind and quality of education students get?' . . . Eight case studies of institutions form the nucleus of reference for a . . . set of conclusions which impinge on questions of academic performance; the sense of institutional community; social mixing; preferences of students; residence as an essential part of liberal education; and costs." (Choice) Author index. Subject index.

"A comprehensive study [which] . . . is regarded as an updating of the one undertaken by the University Grants Committee (Report, UGC Sub-Committee on Halls of Residence, H.M.S.O., 1957), and reflects the tremendous changes in British higher education since. The study includes considerable material on the historical development of British higher education, with some notices of analogous or differing developments in the U.S., and thus has value for the American reader. . . . Although conclusions are not clear, a valuable set of 'Policy implications: residence for the Seventies' is articulated. . . . Recommended only for specialized collections in higher education."

Choice 9:693 JI/Ag '72 200w

"We have in this country a unique and very expensive system of higher education which involves most students leaving home to go to university. . . . In the search of a means of opening these exclusive institutions to ever-larger numbers residence is a natural target. . . . Is it true, as supporters claim, that residence is an essential part of the total experience of university education? The question is of vital practical importance at a time when some predictions envisage a doubling of the demand for higher education over the next few years. [The authors] offer no simple answers to policymakers, but it will be impossible to debate the subject in future without reference to their work. This comprehensive report effectively clears away numerous myths and sets out practicable alternatives to traditional forms of student accommodation."

BROTHERS, JOAN—Continued

TLS p768 J1 7 '72 800w

BROUÉ, PIERRE. The revolution and the civil war in Spain, by Pierre Broué and Emile Témime; tr. by Tony White. 578p il maps $15 MIT press

946.081 Spain—History—Civil War, 1936-1939

The authors "analyze the origins, events, and consequences of the Spanish Civil War. [They cover] . . . political, economic, diplomatic, and military factors." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"What was the revolution, and who were the revolutionaries? [As this readable history shows] what happened in Spain between 1936 and 1939 was that the mediatory and adjudicatory function of government broke down irremediably. This left the various groups of Spanish society confronting one another . . . with their mutual fears, ambitions, and cupidities. In such a situation, since there was no power to prevent it, these groups had no alternative to mutual repression, proscription, confiscation, and extermination. . . . The authors of [this book] use the word 'revolution' . . . to mean . . . anarchist and other Leftist seizures of power which took place in Barcelona and elsewhere." Elie Kedourie

Encounter 39:45 J1 '72 470w

"[This work] fails to enlighten the reader. Although the authors have attempted to arrange their source material into a readable synthesis, they have lost the historical perspective necessary for a comprehensive treatment of the war. The chapters are poorly organized; and seemingly incidental material, such as brief biographical sketches, is often distracting to the reader." R. L. Blanco

Library J 97:2585 Ag '72 130w

BROWER, BROCK. The late great creature. 300p $6.95 Atheneum pubs.

LC 72-168255

"Simon Moro is a legendary figure, the leading man in a long string of super-horror films, who, at 68, falls in with an elaborate return-from-the-dead promotional scheme to publicize his last film, based on Poe's 'The Raven,' and ends up unable to return from the dead at all. The story is narrated first by a free-lance writer, Warner Williams, second by the director of the film, and then by Moro himself." (Publishers' Weekly)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:108 Mr '72 100w

"Among the people he works with Moro is an artist—mad, untrustworthy (relatively), a bastard—but an artist. He is the center of this thoughtful, disciplined, and extremely funny book, but at least two other characters will command your attention: Quincy Adams, a bitchy, epically horror star . . . and an authentically ghastly hack director, Terence Cowan. Brock Brower lets these people speak for themselves—their just deserts—and never loses them. His control of improbability is remarkable, and his satiric aim is sure. If nostalgia has begun not only to bore you but give you the creeps, this novel will help you understand why. . . . A less intelligent writer might be trapped by the neat little formula that we are the monsters, but Brower's wit and exuberant humor resist such confinement. An exhilarating novel, highly recommended." Alan Hislop

Book World p5 Mr 12 '72 380w

"The author uses the history and lore of horror films to construct a metaphor for the beauty and terror of life; but beauty and terror are replaced by ennui. Since . . . the 'late great creature' of the title has recognizable features of Lorre, Karloff, and Lugosi, one might expect some humor and light thrills; but the novel has surprisingly little action and suggests movie criticism that finds layers of symbolism in the horror films of the 30's and 40's and misses their potential for fun and excitement." J. A. Avant

Library J 96:4106 D 15 '71 130w

"Where 'Debris' [BRD 1968] was a mere tour de force of terror, Brower's 'Creature,' like Dr. Frankenstein's, is a complex thing of many parts. . . . Brower's artistry has gained in complexity and depth of intimation since his first novel. Though still dealing with junk, he has . . . transformed the whole into a wonder-work, a display of wit in the oldest and truest sense of the word, style that illuminates the total structure. . . . Despite the dubious materials, this is a novel of statement, of ideas, even wisdom, masquerading as a freak show. The book is not without its dropped stitches and imperfect seams, however. As in 'Debris' (though far less often), Brower reveals an occasional, hasty disregard for matters of credibility, and worse, a tendency to commit what the English call 'howlers.'" John Seelye

N Y Times Bk R p4 Mr 12 '72 900w

New Yorker 48:106 Ap 1 '72 40w

Newsweek 79:98 Mr 13 '72 400w

Reviewed by Peter Wood

Sat R 55:86 Ap 22 '72 500w

Reviewed by R. Z. Sheppard

Time 99:94 Mr 27 '72 550w

BROWER, REUBEN A. Hero & saint; Shakespeare and the Graeco-Roman heroic tradition. 424p $10.50 Oxford

822.3 Shakespeare, William—Characters. Shakespeare, William—Criticism, interpretation, etc. Shakespeare, William—Tragedies ISBN 0-19-501515-0 LC 72-176003

The theme of this study "is the survival of ideas derived from classical epic and their interaction with Christian ideas in Shakespearean tragedy. . . . It begins with an introductory chapter on Othello. This is followed by three long chapters on Greek and Roman literature; and the rest of the book deals with seven of Shakespeare's tragedies: Romeo and Juliet, Macbeth and Timon of Athens are excluded." (TLS) Index.

"A major work of Shakespeare criticism . . . [which] adds immeasurably to our understanding of Othello, Titus Andronicus, Julius Caesar, Troilus and Cressida, Hamlet, Antony and Cleopatra, Coriolanus, and King Lear. Brief references to a number of other plays are illuminating also. The classical heroic tradition is treated fully and brilliantly, and then used as the foundation for broad-ranging criticism of Shakespeare's works. Treatment of the relationship of the tradition to characterization and imagery in the plays is especially valuable. Documentation is full, but selective in such a way that the reader may go from this book in any of several directions [for] further study. . . . The work is readable without being simplified."

Choice 9:643 J1/Ag '72 130w

"The themes of human magnificence, heroism and greatness are here lifted out of Shakespeare and presented to a hero-hungry, greatness-lacking age."

Christian Century 88:1362 N 17 '71 20w

Reviewed by L. C. Knights

N Y Rev of Books 19:3 O 5 '72 300w

Reviewed by Frank Kermode

N Y Times Bk R p35 D 10 '72 500w

"[This is] an admirable [book] on Shakespearean tragedies. . . . One of the fascinations of Professor Brower's book is to see the way in which Achilles earned the approval of Christians. . . . The author is aware that in a great writer, 'it is not sources that count, but inner resources'. He has interesting things to say about all the tragedies he deals with. He regards Julius Caesar as the turning-point in Shakespeare's growth as a tragic dramatist and thinks that it is closely related to his discovery 'in North's Plutarch of the Graeco-Roman hero in a relatively pure form.'"

TLS p800 Ap 7 '72 950w

"Brower has drawn on his extensive knowledge of the classics to write a remarkable book which should help . . . to redirect our thinking about several of [Shakespeare's] greatest plays. Although Professor Brower avoids polemics, he is well aware of the dismal misinterpretations of Shakespeare's tragic heroes by those who succumb to the anti-heroic prejudice of our day. By way of righting the balance he reminds us of some of the favorite reading of the Elizabethans—the famous Greek and Roman portrayals of legendary heroes and of the great men of history. The recollection of such 'patterns of nobility' greatly facilitates the task which Professor Brower sets us: 'Perhaps the main theme of this book is simply the recognition of greatness, a feat more difficult for the twentieth-century reader or auditor than for the Elizabethan. Yet failure to achieve this recognition while reading Shakespeare's heroic tragedies means either distortion or a kind of non-reading.' E. M. Waith

Yale H 61:441 Mr '72 700w

BROWN, CHARLES H. William Cullen Bryant. 676p il $12.50 Scribner

B or 92 Bryant, William Cullen
SBN 684-12370-3 LC 79-143949

This is an account of "Bryant's life, his poetry, and his era." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by H. E. Spivey
Am Lit 44:485 N '72 1150w

"[This book is] thoroughly researched and straightforward in manner and style. . . . Well chosen illustrations, ample documentation, and a full index complement the text, which is marred by a few minor errors. Though Brown's readable narrative deals more with what Bryant said and did than with his inner life, the character and force of the man emerge unmistakably."

Choice 9:366 My '72 150w

Reviewed by E. H. Cady
J Am Hist 59:707 D '72 550w

"This biography presently ranks first in Bryant studies in many ways: the first full-length biography in the 20th Century; the first study to correct serious factual errors introduced by earlier biographers Godwin and Bigelow and perpetuated in succeeding monographs; the first truly scholarly account taking advantage of extensive manuscript materials available to Bryant biographers. . . . Though somewhat pedestrian in style, the book is uncommonly complete." E. J. Wilcox

Library J 96:2303 J '71 120w

"Brown writes in the spirit of his subject—evenly, judiciously, using and weighing his materials."

N Y Times Bk R p16 F 13 '72 190w

"The neglect of Bryant by the generations that followed him is surprising: this biography is the first full-dress affair in more than seventy-five years. As one reads through its dutifully written, very conventional pages, however, one's surprise begins to evaporate. Bryant does not catch at the imagination."

New Yorker 47:95 Ja 29 '72 210w

Reviewed by R. A. Johnson
Va Q R 48:630 autumn '72 1000w

BROWN, CHRISTY. The poems of Christy Brown. 64p $4.95 Stein & Day

821
ISBN 0-8128-1414-2 LC 78-163350

"Nearly all of these 36 poems (written between 1963 and 1969) are lyrics of unhappy love. . . . [Included are] elegies on [Brown's] mother, Behan, Kavanagh, and Helen Keller." (Library J)

"[Brown] has yet to learn that one clear word is more impressive than a vague stanza, and that a tight short poem is better than a cluttered long one. . . . There is potential in [his] unique vision of the world. The achievement, though, is badly flawed by verbal imprecision and excess." Paul Kameen

Best Sell 31:458 Ja 15 '72 170w

"Brown's literary affinities seem to lie with Sean O'Casey and James Joyce—an upwelling, sometimes bolsterous, sometimes muted Irish rhetoric. It fails at times, but mostly it succeeds and gives this book a juicy vitality rarely found in contemporary poetry. . . . All in all, there is a human quality to this book and great skill in catching the ordinary moments of the mortal condition. It is very Irish and very good. Recommended for all libraries making any attempt to keep up with contemporary poetry."

Choice 9:366 My '72 200w

"After the amazing appearance and success of his novel Down All the Days [BRD 1970], Brown's first book of poetry is disappointing."

His rhapsodic flights are wordy and undisciplined; the language is frequently 'poetic' in a shopworn, strained manner. . . . and his excessive fondness for alliteration further emphasizes the gap between wanting to write about a subject and actually pinning it down, especially in a lyric. . . . The book is, sadly, more important as a document in this obviously talented Irishman's career than as a volume of poetry in itself." J. W. Charles

Library J 96:3139 O 1 '71 190w

BROWN, DALE. American cooking; the Northwest, by Dale Brown and the eds. of Time-Life books; studio photography by Richard Meek. (Foods of the world) 208p il col il $7.95

Time
641.5 Cookery, American
LC 73-138262

This book contains recipes from the region ranging from Iowa and Wisconsin to Oregon and Alaska, and is illustrated with pictures combining scenes of the land with the foods of the area. A separate spiral bound recipe book contains duplicates of the ones given in the hard covered book. Recipe index. General index.

"[This book] has vivid writing—pancakes that burst into bloom, raspberries that are poured into a crust and quilted with cream, cookies that are butter-blond; and a mad index, which lists fried cornmeal squares and fresh strawberry pie respectively under fried and fresh. The classy magazine format defeats the reader: There are boxes, inserts, continuations, and luscious pictures often unrelated to the actual recipes. . . . There is as much detail about how Brown traveled as about what he ate. As for the dishes, they are rather special; shad roe pâté and croquettes; razor clam cakes; marinated fiddleheads; and grouse, reindeer, elk, and venison." Nora Magid

Book World p6 F 20 '72 80w

"Each book in this series . . . is more delightful, and this one, with its American aroma, is surprisingly so. . . . The book reflects the feel and psychology of the frontier in its stories of the cuisine of this huge territory. . . . Recipes for sourdough white bread, rolls, and 'sourdough starter' are among Alaskan recipes included in the 140 recipes. Since commercial fishing is a major industry in the Pacific Northwest, seafood in a host of delicious forms tops the list of specialties. . . . In the final chapter, Mr. Brown proves without question that some of the best foodstuffs, at least in these areas, are indeed free. Wild rice and mushroom dishes are delicious testimonials to his accuracy."

Christian Science Monitor pB2 N 18 '71 500w

BROWN, DORRIS D. Agricultural development in India's districts. 169p maps $10 Harvard univ. press

338.1 Agriculture—India. Agriculture and state, Agriculture—Economic aspects
ISBN 0-674-01230-5 LC 71-131467

This study describes "the operational aspects of [India's] . . . IADP [Intensive Agricultural District Program]. . . . Over one-third of the book is comprised of detailed tables comparing results in IADP Districts with other districts in the same state." (Pacific Affairs)

"The IADP experiment represents an important effort to increase Indian agricultural production levels by improving the quality of governmental programs and program implementation. Many controversial features of that effort bear careful and critical evaluation, for it is of considerable scholarly and practical interest to learn what substantive returns, if any, this experiment has yielded. Regrettably, Brown's study brings us very little closer to that goal." S. J. Heginbotham

Ann Am Acad 399:185 Ja '72 1000w

"The author was a member of the Ford Foundation team whose reports played a role in development of the IADP, and served as a Ford Foundation consultant to the program in its developmental years. The book will be of interest to the careful historian as a statement of the views of a foreign participant in the operational controversies of the program. This very fact calls for care in accepting the author's judgments on policies in which he took a position as a consultant. Unfortunately, Brown treats superficially a number of important but complex issues. . . . The book [also] suffers a lack of perspective." J. W. Mellor

Pacific Affairs 45:300 summer '72 500w

BROWN, EDITH. Cooking creatively with natural foods, by Edith and Sam Brown. 302p il $6.95 Hawthorn bks.

641.5 Cookery
LC 71-182818

In this organic foods cookbook there are sections on "beverages, soups, salads, fish, vegetables, beans, whole grains, pasta and pancakes, seeds, nuts and dried fruits, breads and muffins, and pies, cakes and cookies. . . . Index." (Library J)

"[This book] is all right if you are a nut about organic foods. . . . Natural foods I have nothing against and am in much favor of millground corn meal and flour and organically raised vegetables, but this is a little, more than a little, hard to take. However, there are growing hundreds who will take it avidly." Friede Gruenrock

Best Sell 32:178 J1 1 '72 150w

"The Browns, founders of New York City's Brownies, (a soybean's throw from Union Square) now bring the best of their remarkably wholesome creations to you. Imaginative and natural delights like avocado 'n fresh fruit, vegetarian lasagna, carob cashew mousse, oatmeal bread, and pumpkin seed fruit squares surely will not only arouse the appetite, but also will prove nourishing and good. Each of the easy-to-follow sections . . . is punctuated with introductory, helpful asides. The natural ingredients required are easily obtainable in neighborhood health food stores. The gourmet and the dieter, as well as the consumerist and the young of America will surely welcome this reasonably priced, creative, quality approach to natural cookery." D. L. Gustafson

Library J 97:1325 Ap '72 130w

BROWN, GEORGE. In my way: the political memoirs of Lord George-Brown. 299p il pl $8.95 St Martins

942.085 Great Britain—Politics and government—20th century
LC [76-588147]

"Lord George-Brown (as he has become since leaving the House of Commons) was born in ■ poor district of London. . . . He first began working in a London store, but soon left commercial life for a career in the unions. Not long after his election to Parliament he was holding high office. As foreign secretary, he made far-reaching changes in the system of appointments." (Christian Science Monitor) "On the night of March 14-15, 1968, Mr. Brown broke with Mr. Wilson and resigned as Foreign Secretary. Effectively, that ended his career as a Labour politician, although he continued to serve as deputy leader of the party until he lost his seat . . . in the general election of June 18, 1970." (TLS)

Reviewed by Rev. Stephen McKenna

Best Sell 32:9 Ap 1 '72 380w

Choice 9:1187 N '72 230w

"These memoirs of George Brown are, like the man himself, lively and frank. They are perhaps less generous to his old colleagues in the Labour Party than they are to his political opponents. . . . [He] has clearly enjoyed his career. He is not unduly depressed that the chance of being a Labour prime minister passed to another man, though he is convinced that in rejecting him the Labour Party made ■ great mistake." Harold Hobson

Christian Science Monitor pB7 N 11 '71 600w

"Anyone who has supported or suffered from George Brown should read these memoirs. Their title is 'unashamedly cribbed' from the Frank Sinatra hit record of 'My Way,' and at the very beginning of the book he quotes with great approval two verses of the song. . . . Some of the most penetrating sections of the memoirs are [the author's] judgments on the leading post-war political leaders he has known. . . . But possibly the very best parts of the memoirs are his reflections on Europe and the debate on the common market within the Labour party, and on the future structure and philosophy of the party itself."

Economist 239:il Ap 3 '71 800w

Reviewed by T. R. Fyvel

Encounter 38:81 F '72 900w

Reviewed by J. H. Thompson

Library J 96:3749 N 15 '71 160w

"Perhaps the proper way to regard this book is not as an autobiography nor even as a memoir but ■ a suicide note. It would still, however, be a monstrous injustice for anyone to bring in a verdict on George Brown on the basis of it. For, inevitably, the picture it presents is of a man at the end of his tether—not the colorful, magnetic figure who six short years ago stood at the height of his powers. . . . The one statement which I am sure he is right to make in this book is that he should have left the Wilson government long before he did. . . . One day, no doubt, someone will write the definitive piece on the First Secretary's relations with his Premier. Founded in resentment, they moved inexorably towards rancour and recrimination. Just once, in the one vivid passage in this book, we are given a sight of their true nature. . . . No politician, free not just of the restraints of office but of any possibility of future ministerial employment, can ever have had a better tale to tell. But, alas, George Brown—whether out of pique, disappointment or simple exhaustion—has totally muffed it." Anthony Howard

New Statesman 81:461 Ap 2 '71 1550w

Reviewed by Paul Johnson

N Y Times Bk R p6 Ja 7 '73 360w

"The gifted but emotionally volatile politician whom we must now try to remember to call Lord George-Brown has figured through the years in so many lavishly reported quarrels, tantrums, and contretemps that it always seemed safe to predict that his recollections in tranquillity would come with the effect of anticlimax. So it proves. Here, with a complaint against the lowered standards of the newspapers, he gives his own account of the incidents which carried him into the headlines, and he seems to see himself as a persecuted and abused man. But he is not—he could not be—so innocent as that. . . . It is necessary to discuss George Brown's personality because the heart of his book deals with what was fundamentally a personality clash between him and Harold Wilson."

TLS p378 Ap 2 '71 950w

BROWN, GEORGE MACKAY. Greenvoe. 279p $5.95 Harcourt

ISBN 0-15-137060-5 LC 72-78449

This novel is about the people "and their village in the Orkneys, off the northeast coast of Scotland. . . . Farming, weaving, lobstering and mischief-making are the chief industries. . . . At the bottom of the social ladder is Bert Kerston, a thieving lobsterman. At the top is Lord Fortin-Bell. Bringing them closer together is Alice Voar, who has illegitimate children attached to seven local family trees. Greenvoe's population also includes a Marxist, a derelict, a religious zealot, a poison-pen letter writer, a schizophrenic, and a sect of underground Druids. In the end, the activities of this social mix are dismantled by the murder of the 1000-year-old village, which stands in the way of military-industrial progress." (N Y Times Bk R)

"It is [the] presentation of myth through symbols which makes the novel an attractive one. . . . I felt at times that the intrusion of the technological power was rather fragmentary, introduced only to emphasize the power of the myth. Possibly, the myth did not receive a severe enough testing at the hands of science which to some contemporary minds is the great enemy of a symbolic life. This objection, however, alters only slightly my admiration for a writer who is capable of aiding so much in the restoration of the novel to the realm to which it belongs and from which so many contemporary best sellers are trying to improve it, the realm of poetry of which imagery, symbolism, and sound are essential elements." F. L. Ryan

Best Sell 32:246 S 1 '72 600w

"This superb novel evokes the surface and spirit of a vanishing way of life in the Orkney Islands. . . . [It] resembles ■ fusion of Norse saga and film documentary. . . . Brown displays a sensitive ear, memorable imagery, and a thoroughly intelligent mingling of modern occurrence with history and myth." Rowe Portis

Library J 97:2750 S 1 '72 90w

Reviewed by John Spurling

New Statesman 83:720 My 26 '72 90w

"Poetic imagery fortifies this unusual regional novel—but the story's the thing. . . . [This book comes] as close to being a work of art as anything you will find in many a season." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p42 S 17 '72 230w

BROWN, J. A. C. The Stein and Day International medical encyclopedia. See Stein and Day

BROWN, JOHN A., Jr. auth. The Cayuse Indians. See Ruby, R. H.

BROWN, JUDITH M. Gandhi's rise to power; Indian politics 1915-1922. (Cambridge South Asian Stud) 384p maps $19.50 Cambridge

320.954 Gandhi, Mohandas Karamchand, India—Politics and government
ISBN 0-521-08353-2 LC 71-171674

"This Ph.D. thesis treats seven crucial years in Indian politics, beginning in 1915 when Gandhi arrived in India . . . and proceeded to establish himself as an undisputed leader with the help of an organization that he himself built. . . . The first two chapters deal with Gandhi's South African and Indian background, while the remaining chapters go into the details of Gandhi's campaigns in Bihar and Gujarat, his relations with the Raj, the Khilafat and Punjab movements, and the emergence of Gandhian leadership at the Calcutta and Nagpur sessions of the Indian National Congress." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"In 1915, Gandhi stepped off a boat in Bombay with a reputation for little more than philanthropy and crankiness. By December, 1920, he had become virtual dictator of all India politics and, during the following 15 months, not only maintained this position but persuaded many hard-headed politicians to follow him in a remarkable course of political action—non-co-operation. This book sets out to . . . explain Gandhi's rise to power and his ability to hold it, if only briefly, in terms of hard political facts. . . . The subject is important; so is the period of Indian history [but there are] some general conclusions about Indian politics which [the author] does not quite sustain. . . . On Gandhi she has much to offer. Above all, she is realistic about his aims and achievements. . . . There is a lot here for the Gandhi fanatics, but less for the general student of politics."

Economist 243:63 Je 3 '72 400w

"The author's distinctive contribution lies in the voluminous data she has marshalled to support hitherto vaguely suspected assumptions. This is a welcome addition to the long list of works on modern Indian politics and will be particularly useful to the specialist. The biographical notes are of little use. The sources, however, are comprehensive, and the presentation is lucid and forceful." B. G. Gokhale

Library J 97:2836 ■ 15 '72 200w

BROWN, KENNETH D. Labour and unemployment, 1900-1914. 219p $9.50 Rowman & Littlefield

331.1 Labor unions, Insurance, Unemployment. Labour party (Great Britain)
ISBN 0-87471-039-1 LC 73-29419

The author deals with "the rise and fall of unemployment as a political issue in Edwardian England. He explains the part played . . . by the Labor movement in a . . . chronological survey." (Ann Am Acad) Bibliography. "Index." (Choice)

"[When] Winston Churchill . . . introduced legislation providing for labor exchanges and unemployment insurance, the Labor party gave first priority to supporting the Liberals. Dr. Brown's account of Ramsey MacDonald's role in this connection is one of the most interesting parts of his book." P. F. Clarke

Ann Am Acad 400:187 Mr '72 280w

"[This] is a well written straightforward account. . . . Originally a doctoral thesis, the book's subject is rather narrow for all except university libraries or special collections, although it may be valuable for all to point out that riotous demonstrations and harassment of officials is not as contemporary as we think, and that the Edwardian era was not as golden as we had been led to believe. Well documented; comprehensive bibliography; biographical notes of important people."

Choice 9:684 J1/Ag '72 160w

"This is a worthy but pedestrian account. . . . Too much space is devoted to accumulated factual detail and too little to the development of a coherent argument about Labour's precise influence on government policy, whether Tory or Liberal, on unemployment."

Economist 240:56 J1 17 '71 80w

"Brown gives us a quiet, factual account of the way in which [the labour movement's pressure] was exerted and of the divisions and conflicts which were a part of it."

TLS p1088 S 10 '71 460w

BROWN, LETITIA WOODS. Free Negroes in the District of Columbia, 1790-1846. (The Urban life in Am. ser) 226p $7.95 Oxford 917.53 Negroes—Washington, D.C.

ISBN 0-19-501552-5 LC 77-186497

The major portion of this book describes the growth of the Negro population of Washington, D.C. prior to the Civil War. "Mrs. Brown examines the various routes from bondage to freedom—descent from free mothers, by will of the master, and by sale and petition. . . . [She offers] evidence drawn from court records, real estate conveyances, newspapers, diaries . . . the vocabulary of contemporaries [and deeds of manumission]. . . . Part of the book describes the life of free Negroes in Washington." (Foreword) Bibliography. Index.

"A doubly significant study, for it fills a void in pre-Civil War Afro-American history and it casts light upon race relations in the only municipality directly under the control of the federal government. . . . [Brown's] monograph gives pertinent insight into what might be described as a microcosm of the national mind during a period in which the race question was developing into the divisive dilemma that was to rip the Union apart. Impressive research has been distilled into a succinct volume which adds much to our understanding of antebellum free Negroes, urban race relations, and the divided mind of white America on the eve of the Civil War."

Choice 9:1196 N '72 170w

Christian Century 89:698 Je 14 '72 30w

"Most of Brown's exhaustively researched work is concerned with the various ways in which slaves obtained their freedom in the District of Columbia, and also with the differing traditions of servitude in Maryland and Virginia. Of great interest to this reviewer was the chapter on the life of free Negroes in the District, as well as the author's constant attention to individual lives. The appendixes and chapter notes are by no means the least valuable part of the book. Because it deals with a highly specialized subject, this work will not be of interest to all libraries. Those which have collections in black history or Southern history will find it a valuable addition." B. E. Marks

Library J 97:2585 Ag '72 130w

BROWN, MALCOLM. The politics of Irish literature from Thomas Davis to W. B. Yeats. 431p $12 Univ. of Wash. press

941.58 Ireland—History. Irish literature—History and criticism
ISBN 0-295-95170-2 LC 72-152328

The author "examines Irish history from the birth of the Nation newspaper in 1842 to the Tory election landslide and the death of Home Rule in 1895. . . . [arguing that] out of the history of [that] half century . . . came the main corpus of modern Irish literature. The issues were numerous—race, religion, politics, land reform, and, most important of all, nationalism. . . . Relating the ideas, personalities, and events to their appearance in specific works of Irish literature, the author places particular emphasis on James Joyce and W. B. Yeats [but considers also] George Moore, Sean O'Casey, J. M. Synge, Brendan Behan, Frank O'Connor, Sean O'Faolain, George Russell, Liam O'Flaherty, and others." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The scholarship is impeccable; the style is forceful, clear, and characterized by humor, irony, and wit. . . . This book will interest the general reader equally with the specialist."

Choice 9:966 O '72 180w

"Mr Brown argues that Ireland's impressive literature was brought to birth by nationalist politics. He seeks to place it back in its historical context. . . . It is all most erudite but somewhat confusing, and clothed in obscure literary jargon. Undoubtedly, romantic nationalism was a potent artistic aphrodisiac; but in the end Mr Brown reaches no more profound conclusion."

BROWN, MALCOLM—Continued

Economist 244:58 J1 22 '72 180w

"Based on a study of nationalist journalism and of the writings of nationalists as diverse as Sir Charles Gavan Duffy and John O'Leary, this work traces the continuing struggle between the advocates of 'moral force' and 'physical force'—a struggle that culminated with the Fenians on the one hand and with Parnell and the Home Rule movement on the other. That Yeats and Joyce employed both Fenians and Parnell as symbols with more literary impact than historical accuracy is but one of the points explored with enlightening effect. For all libraries." J. F. Moran

Library J 97:2602 Ag '72 150w

"It is clear that Mr Brown has done a lot of homework on his subject: equally clear that he speaks the language of Irish politics in an acquired tongue. He is not an elegant writer. . . . Even in paraphrase, he is insecure. He has a habit of quoting phrases so far out of context that even their original use is compromised. . . . Many of [his] quotations are so inaccurate that they appear the result of memory rather than transcription. . . . On matters of judgment, he is daring, especially where the evidence is slight. . . . [The] book is likely to be found useful as a 'background' study."

TLS p764 J1 7 '72 600w

BROWN, MICHAEL, ed. A cavalcade of legends; il. by Krystyna Turska [Eng title: The Hamish Hamilton book of sea legends]. 274p $8.50 Walck, H.Z.

808.8 Sea stories—Juvenile literature. Legends—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-8098-2419-1 LC 77-175941

"This collection is divided into three categories: 'Mermaids and Monsters,' 'Superstitions and Legends,' and 'Voyages and Adventures.' Included are ballads; an adventure of the Argonauts . . . the editor's translation of an early version of the Flying Dutchman; tales of mermen, sealmen, and the Island Whale. . . . Tales of the fearsome Draug (a Norwegian sea spirit) and of the uncanny Finns (also furnish story material. Emphasizing the folklore of the sea, the Orient, Middle East, and Ancient Greece are represented while most of the selections originate in Northern Europe. . . . Grades five to eight." (Library J)

"[This book] disappoints. Under the unimaginative editing of Michael Brown, what might have been a magical procession of tales from the deep turns into a funereal-paced march." J. F. S.

Christian Science Monitor pB4 My 4 '72 50w

"Some of the selections have introductions, while Notes on Sources specifies the origin of each selection and states: 'Some of the stories I have included are long and complex in the original. I have adapted these where indicated, but have tried to retain as nearly as possible the flavour of the original.' V. H.

Horn Bk 48:366 Ag '72 140w

"Styles of writing vary, many having an old-fashioned flavor of dialect or archaic usage, but all add up to an excellent collection to keep in mind for young adults as well as junior 'old salts.'" R. M. McConnell

Library J 97:2481 J1 '72 120w [YA]

Reviewed by John Coleman

New Statesman 82:668 N 12 '71 40w

Reviewed by Basil Heather

N Y Times Bk R p10 N 26 '72 120w
TLS p1511 D 3 '71 60w

BROWN, PETER. Religion and society in the age of Saint Augustine. 351p $12 Harper

270.2 Religion and sociology. Augustine, Saint, Bp. of Hippo
ISBN 0-06-010554-2 LC 70-181609

The author attempts "to develop a . . . picture of the cultural history in the . . . age of Saint Augustine. . . . [Brown's] essays, articles, and papers on topics falling within the age [are] tied together by the theme of Saint Augustine's intellectual development and expanding vision." (Choice)

"On the whole . . . [this book] is quite successful in its larger aims and will be extremely useful to many students interested in discovery of the mental activities in religion, especially in Christianity of the late fourth century. The great value of Brown's work is the immense number of detailed insights both of other scholars and his own. This is an excellent and important book for students in the field of history of religion."

Choice 9:827 S '72 160w

"This book is a collection of [the author's] articles, essays and reviews from the past ten years or so. It is convenient to have these papers gathered in one place, but it is disconcerting, if one reads the collection as a whole, to have to switch from the casual manner, and fairly flimsy substance, of a review in the Oxford Magazine to a bibliographical survey where footnotes often outweigh the text. . . . Mr Brown has at times a brilliant touch in evoking the symptoms and the consequences of ideas that governed men's minds in late antiquity. But we need more than this to understand 'the sharp thoughts of men in their loneliness' and 'the heavy lumber of ideas at the back of their minds.' Mr Brown can tell us what it felt like to have ideas. But on the ideas themselves, as a primary factor in the determination of men's consciousness, he is silent."

TLS p608 My 26 '72 650w

BROWN, PETER LANCASTER. What star is that? (A Studio bk) 224p il $12.95 Viking

520 Astronomy
ISBN 0-670-75865-5 LC 73-149587

"This British astronomer begins his stargazers' manual with several . . . chapters on the constellations and on observing techniques. The bulk of the book consists of a . . . constellation-by-constellation description of the sky, with discussions of the most important viewing objects in each constellation. After a final chapter on planetary observations there are various charts of the sky and a table of planetary positions." (Library J)

Choice 8:1601 F '72 220w

"Brown's text is clear, concise, and informative; it is aimed primarily at beginning astronomers in Great Britain and North America, but there is much detailed information of value to more advanced students." J. W. Weigel

Library J 97:79 Ja 1 '72 140w

"For identifying what you can see out there either with the unaided eye or with a telescope . . . [this book] has all the answers. . . . A surprise is the inclusion, in a back pocket, of 15 color transparencies of constellations and galaxies." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 54:49 D 4 '71 70w

BROWN, RAYMOND E. The Gospel according to John (xiii-xxi). See Bible. New Testament. John

BROWN, RICHARD MAXWELL, jt. ed. Anglo-American political relations, 1675-1775. See Olson, A. G.

BROWN, ROBERT E. Carl Becker on history and the American Revolution. 285p $7.50 Spartan press

973.3072 Becker, Carl Lotus. U.S.—History—Revolution. Historiography
LC 73-120779

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Marcus Cunliffe

Am Hist R 77:113 F '72 360w

Reviewed by P. J. Baker

Am J Soc 77:634 N '71 700w

Reviewed by H. G. Nicholas

Engl Hist R 87:223 Ja '72 500w

BROWN, SAM, jt. auth. Cooking creatively with natural foods. See Brown, E.

BROWN, SANBORN C., ed. Scientific manpower; a dilemma for graduate education; ed. by Sanborn C. Brown and Brian B. Schwartz. (MIT report no. 22) 180p $6.95 MIT press

331.7 Scientists. Labor supply. U.S.—Economic policy
ISBN 0-262-02082-3 LC 72-151154

This volume contains "discussions of the supply, education, and utilization of persons with the doctorate in science or engineering. . . . Discussants raised such questions ■ How bad is the current situation and how bad will it be in the future? What is the evidence? Why didn't we foresee the problems? What should we do? Who is to blame? . . . [The material is presented] under five headings: manpower projections, national planning, research and university finances, the student and the information process, and implications for graduate education." (J Higher Ed) Index.

"This summary of an M.I.T. Symposium on the Supply, Need and Utilization of Graduate Scientists and Engineers held in May 1970 could be an eye-opener to many faculty and students in these fields. Unfortunately, the grim facts of oversupply and underconsumption tend to be buried in verbiage, recommendations, and theories, in turn cut up into excerpts and daily topics which bear only minimal relationship to the specifics. . . . Nevertheless, this book should be in every library catering to science and engineering students. It can serve as a reference (albeit not a handy one) for a variety of specialized studies and reports, statistics and projections, and organizations dealing with scientific and technical manpower." Choice 8:1218 N '71 170w

"The symposium brought together a group of able people. They discussed a problem of great immediate importance without agreeing on recommendations for action. The record is evidence both of the uncertainties and disagreements over what we should do, and of the need for more penetrating analyses of the economic-educational-political-scientific-social trends and issues involved ■ that we can move closer to agreement upon what to do." Dael Wolfe J Higher Ed 42:770 D '71 470w

BROWN, STANLEY H. Ling; the rise, fall, and return of a Texas titan. 308p $7.95 Atheneum pubs.

B or 92 Ling, James Joseph. Trusts, Industry LC 72-175290

This is an account of the career "of James Joseph Ling, builder of Ling-Temco-Vought, Inc.—one of the nation's largest industrial enterprises. . . . [Brown] begins his narrative in 1946 when Ling, a high school dropout, developed a small electrical contracting firm in Dallas. . . . [He later] merged his firm with Temco Electronics and Missiles Company and finally bought control of Chance Vought, Inc., an aerospace company. Brown chronicles L-T-V's growth as its interests widened to include steel making, pharmaceuticals, meat and food processing, electronics, etc. and discusses the effects on Ling and L-T-V of a 1969 antitrust suit and Ling's new plans." (Library J) Index.

"If the name had not been grabbed off by others, this lucid and troubling book might profitably have been subtitled 'Metamorphoses.' It describes three mysterious changes in a man and in his institutions which take place before the reader's eyes, but so subtly that one cannot determine exactly when each change occurred, what exactly happened, and above all why." Roger Starr

Commentary 54:103 D '72 2350w

[This is a] slow-paced, almost exhaustive study of a financial genius whose accomplishments are already legend. For all business collections and libraries collecting corporate histories." Sylvia Mechanic

Library J 97:2573 Ag '72 170w

"[Brown] keeps his focus tight on Ling's career. But the book is far more than ■ finely textured business biography; it paints the corporate world with all its warts, its chance decisions, its ego clashes and its fumbling in the boardroom." V. G. Vartan

N Y Times Bk ■ p3 S 10 '72 600w

"[Brown] retells Ling's story knowingly and with absorbing elaborations. His book is also a good document of business excesses in those heady years, when the market was climbing to the skies and everybody was dazzled by entrepreneurs with 'vision.' . . . Author Brown is sometimes wordy and overpraising of his subject. All correction made, though, Ling comes through as an honest, essentially likable man. The book, however, does not confront the larger question of the effect of conglomerates, and whether or not Ling, whatever his intentions, was more of a force for good or ill in America." Marshall Loeb

Time 100:62 ■ 4 '72 800w

BROWN, STUART GERRY. The presidency on trial; Robert Kennedy's 1968 campaign and afterwards. 155p $6.95 Univ. press of Hawaii $29.973 Presidents—U.S.—Election. Kennedy, Robert Francis. U.S.—Politics and government—20th century ISBN 0-8248-0202-0 LC 70-175162

"Professor Brown describes how Presidents and presidential candidates in the recent past have approached or used the office of the Presidency as a base for exercising . . . political techniques. He [seeks to] show . . . by piecing together statements made in campaign speeches, how Robert Kennedy held out ■ promise for presidential leadership, and how a consequence of his death has been a return to 'politics as usual.' Against this background, the author analyzes the performance of President Nixon in handling the Vietnam war, civil rights, welfare, and other [matters]." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by J. P. Nyitray

Ann Am Acad 403:196 S '72 430w

"[This] is an excellent chronicle of the present presidential incumbency with emphasis on its major shortcomings. The author's partisanship accounts for the book's anti-Nixon tone but it is given in the best political tradition and should not be viewed as treasonable as many Nixonphiles will conclude. Brown is equally critical of the American two-party system and suggests reform that will undoubtedly raise the hackles of party regulars. This is indeed a pithy work and should be read by all—Presidential candidates and voters alike." T. H. Scully

Best Sell 32:74 My 15 '72 400w

"This book is not an objective study. It is written by ■ scholar who is convinced that the 'Presidency is on trial' because Kennedy died before he became our leader. However, this lack of objectivity does not in any way diminish the book's importance. In fact, I believe that it is one of its strengths. Highly recommended." J. J. Fox

Library J 97:1022 Mr 15 '72 150w

BROWNE, HENRY R. From the fresh-water navy: 1861-64. See Milligan, J. D., ed.

BROWNE, MICHAEL DENNIS. The wife of winter. 120p $4.95; pa $2.25 Scribner

821

LC 74-123832

The title sequence is ■ seven-part song cycle "written as a text for music by the young British composer David Lord, and performed at the 1968 Aldeburgh Festival." (Library J) Some of these poems appeared in such periodicals as The Bennington Review, North American Review and The New Yorker.

Reviewed by J. T. Demos

Library J 95:2688 Ag '70 130w

"This is an outstanding first collection of poetry. . . . Browne's profuse imagery is a key to his style: there is a preeminence of fantasy, of surrealist association, a Chagall-like flow which combines memory and the present subjectively and in a high fever. Thus two war poems, 'The Delta' and 'The Dream of the Soldier,' convey a childlike confusion which builds into horror. . . . In a quite different context, the same fantasy-memory imagery is sustained in 'The Wife of Winter.' Spectacular is the word for the series of Christopher Morley poems which forms the longest section of the book and features an admixture of gaiety, whimsy, and fine intellectual awareness. . . . [This] volume belongs in all poetry collections and should be a contender for a major poetry award." P. H. Marvin

Library J 96:83 Ja 1 '71 270w

"In his first volume, Browne has tried his hand at many different kinds of poetry: satirical, occasional, 'New York School,' Yeatsian, and Lawrencian, as well as poems for children. . . . It is possible that David Lord's music gave [the little sequence] a resonance that the words alone do not convey. . . . Songs for Children combines whimsical cuteness with nonsense lines. . . . Often [Browne] tacks on a refrain . . . with an effect that is certainly childish, but quite unchildlike. . . . Most of the poems in [this book] flounder out of control." Phoebe Pettingell

Poetry 119:288 Ja '72 260w

BROWNE, SYMMES E. From the fresh-water navy: 1861-64. See Milligan, J. D., ed.

BROWNING, DAVID. El Salvador: landscape and society. 329p il maps $17.75 Oxford 333.3 Salvador. Land tenure—Salvador. Agriculture—Economic aspects
ISBN 0-19-823208-X LC 71-855356

This study of El Salvador deals with "the changing pattern of land-tenure and use from the pre-Columbian era to the present day. . . . [It] is divided into four main sections, each dealing with Salvadorian land and society in a particular period." (TLS)

"The predictions of the author, lecturer in the geography of Latin America at Oxford, are not encouraging. Rural society is disintegrating, and the traditional hostility between the large landholders and the subsistence farmers makes more difficult the government's attempts at a general policy of land use. El Salvador's predicament is not unique; and for this reason, Browning's scholarly, readable, and highly interesting analysis has general relevance." R. D. Harlan

Library J 97:209 Ja 15 '72 120w

"Browning sees the conflict between concepts of land use in El Salvador—commercial agriculture and subsistence farming—as fundamentally irreconcilable. . . . Refreshingly, he offers no facile remedies, but he does provide in this painstaking, well-researched study not only an indispensable work on El Salvador but also an important book for anyone concerned with land reform and agricultural development. One of its chief merits is the appreciation that behind present problems lies a complex historical development, the understanding of which is the first prerequisite for clear thinking about the future."

TLS p62 Ja 21 '72 950w

BROWNING, ROBERT. The Pied Piper of Hamelin; il. by C. Walter Hodges. unnp $5.95; lib bdg $4.97 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

821

LC 73-156957

This legend, in poetic form, describes how the ratcatcher caused the children of a medieval town to disappear just as he did the rats and mice. And why. "Grades three to seven." (Library J)

"[Hodges,] winner of the Kate Greenaway Medal for Shakespeare's Theatre [BRD 1964], is an ideal illustrator to interpret the medieval Brunswick background of the well-known poem. Each of the . . . scenes can be lingered over for its detail, lively action, and humor. The artist deals splendidly with crowds and vistas. His skipping children and town views have charm, and the rats and the overstuffed councillors provide comedy." V. H.

Horn Bk 48:156 Ap '72 60w

"Hodges has captured the whimsy of the Pied Piper . . . in this new, full-color illustrated edition of [the] timeless poem. Although most of the illustrations first appeared as part of Encyclopaedia Britannica filmstrips, they have adapted well to the printed page and do much to enhance the poetry." Sharon Karamazin

Library J 97:772 F 15 '72 60w

"The romantic pictures would help quite a young child through the text. [This book is] well worth having."

TLS p1328 O 22 '71 20w

BROWNLIE, IAN, ed. Basic documents on African affairs. 556p $14.50 Oxford

960 Africa—History—Sources
ISBN 0-19-876020-5 LC 73-877454

This "collection, which emphasizes international affairs . . . is composed of seven sub-topics: African international organizations; economic development and investment; non-proliferation of nuclear weapons; territorial boundary disputes; self-determination and racial discrimination in southern Africa; relations with non-African powers; and the Congo situation 1960-64. Each of the seven sections is introduced by a brief explanatory note, and individual documents are preceded by brief comments." (Choice)

"[This is a] useful compilation of documents by a specialist in international law. . . . The book is one of the very few accessible collections of documents relating to contemporary Africa, and the only one with an international focus. It therefore helps to fill an enormous gap in the literature of African studies. However, the volume lacks maps and a bibliography. . . . Recommended for medium and large size university and public libraries; and a necessary addition for all specialized collections in African affairs and international relations." Choice 9:434 My '72 160w

Reviewed by Louis Barron

Library J 97:1304 Ap 1 '72 100w

BROWNRIGG, RONALD. Who's who in the New Testament; advisory eds. for this volume: Canon E. Every [and] Wolfgang E. Pax. 443p il col pl maps $14.95 Holt

225.9 Bible. N.T.—Dictionaries. Bible. N.T.—Biography

ISBN 03-086262-0 LC 75-153654

In addition to discussing Biblical individuals, this work contains "photo-reproductions of manuscripts, ikons, frescoes, paintings, tapes, tries, and statues from every age and corner of Christendom. To these are added . . . maps of Palestine and the Mediterranean world and . . . photographs of archaeological sites, artefacts, and landscapes. . . . There are . . . [also] aerial shots of Masada, the Herodium (Herod's palace-tomb), Bethlehem, and Bethany [and] the Old City of Jerusalem." (Commonweal)

Reviewed by R. J. Clifford

America 127:450 N 25 '72 130w

"[This volume is a] handy addition to the library of popular easy-to-use, and pictorially inspiring Bible dictionary-encyclopedias. The blunder was the decision to pass up the gleaming gold of the King James Version text of Holy Writ for the dull and lifeless tin of later translations, particularly the Revised Standard Version's. . . . The text is generous without being ponderous and benefits from much recent scholarship. [A] comely book to own; [a] helpful book to use." J. G. H.

Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 9 '72 40w

"[This] is a splendid book of pictures and is to be recommended for that reason. The text (of which there is quite a lot) is not nearly so good. . . . [It] is more or less dependable in scholarly matters where 'more or less' does not count. The author consistently favors external witness to a biblical book or passage over internal. . . . In general, the picture captions are less precise than the text. . . . [This volume is] recommended. Students and scholars will be grateful for the pictorial record, finding the inclusion of many 'old masters' a matter of taste, whereas devotees of the fine arts will experience the difficulty in reverse." G. S. Sloyan

Commonweal 95:429 F 4 '72 600w

"[This book offers] considerably more than the usual bare-bone statistics of a Who's Who [and is a] handsomely printed, profusely illustrated volume. . . . Highly recommended to the general reader for pictorial and textual excellence."

N Y Times Bk ■ p18 D 19 '71 90w

TLS p225 F 25 '72 80w

BRUBACHER, JOHN S. The courts and higher education. 150p $7.50 Jossey-Bass

344.73 Colleges and universities—U.S.
ISBN 0-87589-082-2 LC 74-138458

This book offers "information on recent U.S. court opinions on student, faculty, and administrative rights and responsibilities in light of university disruptions. Issues at stake include race, protest, dismissal, publication, academic freedom, autonomy, religion and taxes." (Sat R)

"[The author] argues that those engaged in higher education must acquaint themselves with the impact the courts are exerting, and he views with concern the recent tendency of judges to review discretionary issues, which previously were the prerogative of the faculty and administration. . . . Most valuable is his summary of the occasions of court intervention when constitutional questions are raised. . . . Chief student personnel administrators ought to read the book and distribute it to their staffs. University attorneys who seem preoccupied with tax questions and union negotiations would find a refreshing respite in the forty-five pages devoted to student-related legal questions. Courses in instruction in college administration can use it as a basic text. It is a book superior to its few competitors and deserves recognition for the service it performs in compiling and tersely condensing the legal issues of concern to the higher education community." C. J. Hartmann

J Higher Ed 42:774 D '71 700w

Reviewed by John Calam
Sat 54:80 S 18 '71 70w

BRUBAKER, STERLING. To live on earth; man and his environment in perspective; pub. for Resources for the future. 202p $6.95 Johns Hopkins press

301.31 Ecology. Conservation of natural resources. Human ecology
ISBN 8018-1378-6 LC 75-185514

"By analyzing the underlying causes of environmental threats, classifying them according to their nature and seriousness, and differentiating short-range from longer-range problems, the [author seeks] to bring man more nearly into harmony with his natural environment." (Foreword) Bibliography. Index.

"An assessment, devoid of much of the extremism characteristic of many recent popular works on ecology, of man's impact on his environment and of his prospects for rectifying current levels of environment degradation. . . . A unique feature of this book is a thought-provoking consideration of possible solutions for current environmental problems. . . . Well written and of interest to the mature individual desiring an unbiased analysis of man and his environment. Recommended for academic libraries."

Choice 9:672 J1/Ag '72 150w

"A serious attempt is made to analyze why American society has fallen out of love with growth. . . . A complicated environmental matrix extending over several pages will give a good deal of fun to those who like that sort of thing."

Economist 243:64 Je '72 70w

"A senior staff member of Resources for the Future presents a balanced assessment of the conflict between the environment and economic growth. He discusses in detail man-made global climatic changes, radioactivity, the use of pesticides and fertilizers, and soil erosion. Other problems and the technical and economic alternatives available to deal with them are also included. Intended for laymen, the book is conceptually sound, but weakened by a sometimes ponderous style." G. H. Siehl

Library J 97:1028 Mr 15 '72 80w

BRUCAN, SILVIU. The dissolution of power; a sociology of international relations and politics. 388p $10 Knopf

301.5 International relations
ISBN 0-394-2-46741-8 LC 70-136311

The author, a sociologist, presents a sociological approach to international relations and politics. "Working in a blend of Marxism and cybernetics, Brucan argues that politics originates in inequalities and that the inequalities of nations combined with nationalism have created the traditional pattern—which is culminating in an international system characterized by anarchy. The only escape from this situation (and ultimate doom) is an attempt to reduce the inequalities of nations." (Choice) Index.

"[The author's] central point is that, if mankind is to survive, the types of power relationships between nations must change from domination to integration. . . . Despite some reservations one may have concerning Brucan's pessimism toward the present international system and his optimism about changing it, the book is imaginative, challenging, and highly worthwhile."

Choice 9:575 Je '72 130w

"[Brucan] has written a polemical treatise against the simple-minded economic determinism of 'orthodox' Marxists who naively believed that the advent of (economic) socialism would per se be the panacea for the world's ills. . . . He is especially persuasive in his discussion of the influence of the expressions of nationalism . . . upon national development and international power struggles. . . . He is particularly sharp in exposing the use of sheer power by the big powers (especially the U.S. and the U.S.S.R.) to advance their national interests. . . . The work suffers stylistically from a kind of genuflectory need constantly to underscore the argument with the sayings of Marx, Engels, and Lenin; but . . . [it] is well worth the reading and is recommended for university and public libraries." L. S. Kaplan

Library J 96:2653 S 1 '71 650w

BRUCCOLI, MATTHEW, J., ed. As ever, Scott Fitz—. See Fitzgerald. F. S.

BRUCE-BRIGGS, B., jt. auth. Things to come. See Kahn, H.

BRUCKBERGER, R. L. God and politics; tr. from the French by Eleanor Levieux. 160p $6.95 J. Philip O'Hara, inc.

261.7 Christianity and politics. Church and state—Catholic Church
ISBN 0-87955-302-2 LC 78-190754

The author divides his "work into three parts. In the first, he analyzes the dangers of making a political figure of God as well as those of extending politics to spiritual matters. The second section deals with the subject of the church and revolution and [warns] that unconditional devotion to revolution is no healthier to Christianity than is unconditional devotion to an Emperor. In the third part, there is an appeal to the clergy to maintain its distinct role, above and beyond politics, to lead the flock and not accompany or represent it. To conclude . . . [there is] a chapter addressed to the American reader." (Publisher's note)

"[The author] is upset—very upset. He figuratively takes all of the following over the coals: modern scientists; . . . young clerics (particularly the 'progressive' variety); communists; the bishop of France; and, to a lesser extent, the American people. . . . This offering . . . is probably best described as a series of three essays with a long introduction to the American edition. In that introduction [Bruckberger] says that the United States has lost the great victory it had won after World War II . . . because America's spiritual dimension has not come across to the rest of the world. . . . Bruckberger's naivete with regard to modern scientists borders on the unbelievable. . . . He [also] accuses young clerics and the bishop of France for selling out on Christianity either by trying to see too much good in the communist movement or by not speaking clearly the message of Christ. . . . Fr. Bruckberger might have helped his cause much more by a less impassioned, more reasonable presentation." C. J. Keffer

Best Sell 32:370 N 15 '72 500w

"[Bruckberger] speaks out on relations between civil and religious realms and includes some wary words about revolution. He does not want the church to be wholly withdrawn, but wants it to concentrate on spiritual and transcendent realities. Nothing new here, but well stated in its defense of his theme."

Christian Century 89:990 O '72 60w

"Wide-ranging, intensely personal, very French, and very Catholic, [the author] hammers away at controversial, somewhat old-fashioned truths which religious moderns, immersed in liberal causes, tend to forget." W. C. Heiser

Library J 97:3720 N 15 '72 130w

BRUEMMER, FRED. Seasons of the Eskimo: a vanishing way of life; photography and text by Fred Bruemmer. 131p $15 N.Y. graphic

970.4 Eskimos
ISBN 0-8212-0298-7 LC 73-162720

This is a pictorial study "of Eskimo families living in small, isolated, self-sufficient hunting camps, dependent for life on their own skill and on the vagaries of weather and migratory game. . . . [It portrays] their joys, their hardships, and the values that give their life meaning: the excitement and challenge of the hunt; the enjoyment of food and of human warmth; and autonomy, that is, the freedom to live and hunt where and how one chooses, and to be governed by one's own mood and need."

BRUEMMER, FRED—Continued
(Natur Hist)

Reviewed by J. F. Husband
Library J 97:1340 Ap 1 '72 80w

"It is difficult to generalize about Eskimo life without either diminishing the variety of ways in which Eskimo hunters actually live or confusing the reader with a wealth of regionally specific detail. But here it is successfully done; Bruemmer has distilled the essence of camp life. The first thing that strikes one about the book is its visual beauty. The photographs, which are arranged according to season, are superb, and the vividly written text introducing each season enhances the pictures rather than distracting attention from them. . . . [However] his description of Eskimo life, while on the whole admirably empathic is in one respect one-sided. Perhaps one might say that it is too Eskimo—too much as the Eskimo themselves would like to be perceived by outsiders. Bruemmer gives an idealized picture." J. L. Briggs

Natur Hist 81:97 Mr '72 750w

"[This book] is a love song . . . to the hardy survivors of a dying culture. Bruemmer . . . has lived with the Eskimos for extended periods, and his book is dedicated to 'Ekalun and the other Eskimos of Bathurst Inlet who shared with me their tents, their food and their wisdom of the land.' Nelson Bryant

N Y Times Bk R p60 D '71 110w

BRUNDAGE, PERCIVAL FLACK. The Bureau of the Budget; foreword by Robert P. Mayo. 327p il $10 Praeger

353 U.S. Bureau of the Budget. Budget—U.S.
LC 72-83330

"After sketching the history of the bureau [Brundage] discusses its organization and its activities with regard to budget preparation, administrative management, legislative reference, and statistical policy. The bureau's handling of substantive programs (defense, natural resources, etc.) is surveyed. Chapters on the bureau's relationships with other governmental bodies and budget trends complete the book." (Choice) Bibliography.

"The book does not have much to say about the politics of the budgetary process nor does it systematically analyze or evaluate the role and impact of the bureau as an executive management agency. It does make available, in quite readable fashion, a lot of useful information on the bureau's formal organization and activities. It is a good place to begin a study of the agency and all undergraduate libraries should have a copy. Several appendices, bibliography, and index all add to its value."

Choice 8:108 Mr '71 150w

"[The author] says, 'Changes are continually taking place and contemplated.' The result is that the contents of this book are increasingly out of date. . . . One looks in vain for a discussion of BOB tactics and strategy in budgetary battles. I suspect that a more astute (or perhaps just a more articulate) observer of bureaucratic politics could have provided a number of insightful and important observations and illustrations that might have qualified or reinforced the findings of [A.] Wildavsky [The Politics of the Budgetary Process BRD 1965]. . . . The relations that exist between the Office of Legislative Reference and the White House Office are discussed hardly at all. . . . [This account] is not likely to have much interest for social scientists. But . . . there is a useful brief history of the Bureau . . . [and] a readable discussion of budget preparation and areas of spending in a number of policy areas." J. W. Davis

Social Studies 63:132 Mr '72 400w

BRUNER, RICHARD. Black politicians. 119p $4 McKay

920 Negroes—Biography—Juvenile literature. Negroes—Politics and suffrage—Juvenile literature
LC 79-144020

The biographies in this book concern "Mayors Richard Hatcher of Gary, Indiana, Kenneth Gibson of Newark, New Jersey, and Carl Stokes of Cleveland, Ohio; members of Congress Shirley Chisholm of New York and John Conyers of Michigan; and Julian Bond, a young legislator from Georgia. . . . Grades five to eight." (Library J)

"Brief biographical sketches in this dully written book emphasize the political achievements of six prominent black leaders. . . . Little of their individual personalities comes through. No sources are listed for the many quotes employed in the text; there is neither an index nor suggestions for further reading; and, except for a sketchy, unattractive view of six heads on the dust jacket, no illustrations of the politicians are included." Rosalind Miller

Library J 96:4182 D 15 '71 110w

Reviewed by Toni Morrison
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p43 My 2 '71 50w

BRUNHOFF, LAURENT DE. Babar's birthday surprise. unp col il lib bdg $3.95 Random house

Elephants—Stories
SBN 394-90591-1 LC 74-123071

The birthday surprise for Babar, king of the elephants, is a statue of him carved out of a nearby mountain. The problem is to keep this rather visible present a surprise. "Kindergarten to grade three." (Library J)

Economist 241:79 D 18 '71 20w

Reviewed by Marilyn Walker
Library J 95:4383 D 15 '70 80w

"[This] is the 15th and latest volume in a series that began with The Story of Babar [BRD 1933] by Parisian Jean de Brunhoff, and became a family business when, after his death, his son Laurent de Brunhoff took up this diverting pack of pachyderms. . . . The inexplicable charm of the Babar stories is that they can be read with equal pleasure by kids who have barely heard of Paris and francophile parents."

Time 96:62 D 21 '70 110w

"Babar, the benign despot of the elephants, is once again seen basking in the affection and admiration of his family and subjects. . . . If this book does not break any new ground it does nothing to disappoint the expectations of addicts."

TLS p1343 O 22 '71 70w

BRUNHOUSE, ROBERT L. Sylvanus G. Morley and the world of the ancient Mayas. 353p il maps $8.95 Univ. of Okla. press

B or 92 Morley, Sylvanus Griswold. Mayas—Antiquities
ISBN 0-8061-0961-0 LC 78-160489

A biography of the scholar, lecturer and archeological explorer who excavated the ruins at Chichén Itzá in the Yucatan. Bibliography of the writings of Sylvanus G. Morley. Index.

"Brunhouse has produced a fine book about a most colorful and energetic scientist. Delightful to read, with only a few rough spots to distract the reader momentarily, the book should appeal to a wide range of individuals, from laymen to professional archaeologists, as it unites adventure, history, and archaeology. It should be an excellent addition to an undergraduate library."

Choice 9:417 My '72 110w

"Morley, a pioneer Mayan archaeologist, is here short-changed through a focus on the man rather than on his work. He is important as a scholar, and the lack of a basic interpretation relating his research to a 'bigger picture' is a serious omission. The author, professor of history at the University of South Alabama at Mobile, is unfamiliar with the field of archaeology and presents little that is new. Morley's World War I intelligence activities are relevant to some anthropologists' current ethical concerns and his relationships with contemporaries may be of professional interest, but as a source on early scholarly Mayan research, this book is pedestrian." F. W. Lange

Library J 97:489 F 1 '72 150w

BRUNNER, RONALD D. Organized complexity; empirical theories of political development [by] Ronald D. Brunner [and] Garry D. Brewer; foreword by Harold D. Lasswell 190p $7 Free press

320.01 Underdeveloped areas. Political science
LC 79-141936

This volume "deals first with relationships between political development on one hand and modernization and mass politics on the other. A small computer simulation model of modernization and mass politics . . . is applied to Turkey and the Philippines in the 1950's. The second part uses the model as a pedagogical device in the consideration of some important issues of scope and method." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[The authors] have asserted and illustrated an important approach to the study of social phenomena, one that will become more popular if not theoretically decisive, in the coming years. This approach increases theoretical sensitivity without causing empirical paralysis; it deals with macro-system behavior . . . and it provides a link between political inquiry and the languages of systems rather than restricting the usefulness of systems to a general allegory." Henry Teune

Ann Am Acad 400:150 Mr '72 750w

"This imaginative exercise in method is beset by a good many limitations. . . . Moreover, the model does not capture one of the most fundamental dilemmas of a political leader in a developing nation: the choice between investment (and future standards of living) and current allocations to urban or rural consumption. . . . The model requires quite a lot more complexity before it can successfully grip the important set of relations [the authors] have chosen to explore." W. W. Rostow

Pol Sci Q 87:280 Je '72 700w

BRUNT, P. A. Social conflicts in the Roman republic. 164p maps $6 Norton

937 Rome—History—Republic, 510-30 B.C. Rome—Social conditions
SBN 393-04335-5; 393-00586-0 (pa)
LC 78-128044

The author's "main emphasis is on the discontents of the rural and urban poor [but] he also discusses the internal struggles within the propertied class, for at times it was among sections of the propertied class, denied the political power or social esteem to which they aspired, that the poor found support against the narrow ruling oligarchy. The author holds that the discontents of the poor were a major cause of the fall of the Republic, but he also suggests in an epilogue that they gained relatively little from the monarchic system they had helped to found." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Chronology. Index.

Reviewed by E. P. Stickney

Library J 97:1428 Ap 15 '72 180w

"[The author sticks] to his subject and [refuses] to be drawn into general history of marginal relevance. However, he does, appropriately enough, begin by indicating how the internal structure of the State was influenced by Rome's external expansion. Then he briefly surveys the economic conditions of ancient Italy. . . . [This book is] full of enlightening observations, based partly on [Brunt's] own earlier writings and partly on studies by other scholars listed in the bibliography. . . . The book is so meaty that it is not as entertaining or exciting as it ought to be, given such a remarkable subject. It achieves so much that it seems unfair to demand more."

TLS p782 Jl 2 '71 1200w

BRUTUS. Confessions of a stockbroker. 263p $6.95 Little

332.6 Investments. Speculation. New York. Stock exchange
LC 74-175470

"Brutus is the pen name of a broker and office manager of a branch of a national firm, members of the New York Stock Exchange. In this . . . account he develops the three-way relationship of broker, customer, and market. . . . [The book] is in the form of a diary covering events in the great bear market from July, 1970, to January, 1971, in which 280 billion paper dollars were lost." (Best Sell)

Reviewed by R. E. O'Brien

Best Sell 31:481 F 1 '72 400w

Reviewed by George Wheeler

Book World p7 Ap 2 '72 850w

"Brutus touches on many aspects of stock trading and investing—all chattily, informally set forth. Hiding behind the diary form and the anecdotal flizz is a meaty, well-organized collection of seasoned observations about the quality of research, the tactics of trading, back-office problems, investor protection—all the things that serious books on the market dutifully cover. . . . Stockbrokers may read 'Confessions of a Stockbroker' for its wry, cynical, and perhaps infuriating view of their business, its profits, its risks, its nuisances its satisfactions. But Brutus really aims at a much larger audience; the discouraged, confused, or ignorant individuals who want to know why they have fared so badly and what they can do about it." F. H. Guidry

Christian Science Monitor p10 Ja 13 '72 600w

Economist 244:62 S 9 '72 350w

"The author takes us backstage and tells us about his offbeat, greedy customers and also enlightens us to the many roles the broker plays in the everyday lives of his clients. . . . The speculator will learn precious little [from this book] and the reader who does not invest will probably be more sure than ever that he can make more money on the horses than in the market." Sylvia Mechanic

Library J 97:1426 Ap 15 '72 170w

"[Here are] the witty, sardonic 'confessions' of a broker who if he doesn't exactly say that 'you'll never get rich' does offer practical advice and sound cautions. There are numerous anecdotes about his clients, some of whom should never have copped their inheritance."

N Y Times Bk R p11 F 13 '72 110w

BRUYERE, TONI MARSH. For gourmets with ulcers [by] Toni Marsh Bruyere & Sidney Jean Robey; with introd. by Eric G. Schweiger and Robert L. Rowan. 226p $6.95 Norton

641.5 Cookery for the sick
SBN 393-08645-3 LC 78-152655

This book contains over 250 recipes "for appetizers, soups, meats, vegetables, salads, pastas, desserts, and sauces. They have been prepared to stay within the basic ulcer-food program and do not contain irritating or acid-producing foodstuffs. Most dishes are for about four people and can be adapted for the whole family. The authors have also included a maintenance diet for those with healed ulcers, and marginal recipes for those who can tolerate them." (Library J) Index.

"The premise here is that the diet 'should be more than merely safe, non-acid producing filler, that latitude is possible and desirable.' Indeed the book has not one but two medical imprimaturs. . . . Still, when the book is weighed against the standard hospital brochure, it does seem that the authors go out of their way to use sherry, rum, brandy, cranberries, oats, cucumbers, dried beef, and lemon juice. . . . Hardly bland." Nora Magid

Book World p5 F 13 '72 130w

"This unique and ambitious cookbook provides a collection of recipes that are 'nutritionally sound and intrinsically appealing' for the ulcer patient. . . . [It] should be very useful for dieticians or for anyone interested in cooking for the ulcer patient." Neva White

Library J 96:2772 M 15 '71 130w

BRY, ADELAIDE. Inside psychotherapy: nine clinicians tell how they work and what they are trying to accomplish. 162p $6.95 Basic bks.

616.89 Psychotherapy
ISBN 0-465-03314-8 LC 74-174808

The author, "a psychotherapist, has visited and interviewed nine leading experts in their field, and this book is the result of her talks with them. Each therapist uses a different technique. . . . [Those interviewed are] Hamment, Hart, Singer, Perls, Wolpe, Speck, Alger, Stoller, and Bindrim. They discuss group therapy, family and encounter group therapy, Jungian and Frommian and behavioral therapy." (Best Sell)

"The subtitle of this slim book is 'Nine clinicians tell how they work and what they are trying to accomplish,' and that is an accurate statement of the whole volume. . . . Dr. Lewis Wolberg writes a lengthy and scholarly introduction to the text, and he speaks the truth when he writes that some of the techniques may be 'dramatic, boring, reasonable, ludicrous, enlightening, confusing, educational, puzzling, amusing, shocking and even revolting.' The experts cannot seem to agree on a precise definition of Psychotherapy, either, and that may explain some of the varying techniques. . . . [Dr. Wolberg] cautions readers to discount some of the results produced." E. A. Dooley

BRY, ADELAIDE—Continued

Best Sell 31:481 F 1 '72 700w

Choice 9:579 Je '72 130w

"In informal dialogues, the . . . nine therapists . . . explain and in some cases demonstrate how they would treat Bry's claimed symptom—a fear of flying. The introduction points out the common elements in all the various forms. A practicing psychotherapist herself, Bry is also a good recorder editor, and writer. Very readable, and possibly very helpful for those considering therapy and those advising them." C. E. Wadsworth

Library J 97:1447 Ap 15 '72 80w

"The perfect Nichols and May psychotherapy reader. Everything from soup to nuts—Freudian, Jungian, humanistic, Gestalt, behavioral, group. . . . The interviewer is a naive therapist herself, acting like a bunny with freshman-social-worker enthusiasm. The Experts are almost uniformly self-parodistic. The last chapter on Nude Marathon is an inadvertent camp masterpiece. There are some responsible practitioners represented in the book; but, really, a great and noble discovery like psychotherapy deserves better."

N Y Times Bk ■ p28 Ja ■ '72 90w

"Reading this book you might think therapy is a form of grooving, not treating sick people. . . . I didn't like the way it failed to deal with the tough problems of therapy and mental illness. In other ways I did like it. Marvelous interview with Fritz Perls. Miss Bry wants to intellectualize. Perls decides she's a patient and treats her. Lewis Wolberg's introduction tends to challenge the institutionalizing process that has left therapy representing Freud's poetry. And [the volume] is full of telling insights. . . . Perhaps some deeply troubled people will read it and feel confusion; maybe professionals will bone up on . . . it; and, of course, those who tried therapy won't be able to put it down." Webster Schott

Sat R 55:61 Ag 19 '72 550w

BRYANT, ARTHUR. The great duke; or, The invincible general. 492p maps $8.95 Morrow B or 92 Wellington, Arthur Wellesley, 1st Duke of
LC 74-189273

This "is primarily a study of Wellington as a soldier and commander. . . . I have drawn on descriptions of his Peninsular and Waterloo campaigns and battles from my Years of Victory [BRD 1945] and Age of Elegance [BRD 1951]. Where I have done so I have revised, rewritten and expanded them to form part of a comprehensive portrait of the man and his achievements. As Wellington was a very plain and direct man, I have tried to make my account of him match his character." (Introd) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Michael DeMichele

Best Sell 32:302 O 1 '72 500w

"This is military history by a master of the medium, with no account of Wellington's uneven, at times unhappy, years as statesman and aging folk-hero. The counterpoint, running through and just under the main theme, is the rivalry with Napoleon. According to Bryant, the two men . . . were not unlike. . . . [This] oft-told tale . . . thanks to the high gloss of [Sir Arthur's] professional skills, seems very new." Burke Wilkinson

Christian Science Monitor p11 S 20 '72 850w

"Sensibly, Sir Arthur closes his book with Waterloo, leaving any assessment of Wellington as a politician to Lady Longford and the second volume of her biography [volume one Wellington: The Years of the Sword, BRD 1970]. The easy, undemanding and old-fashioned narrative that Sir Arthur has reshaped will still, presumably, command an audience. But, surely, Wellington is now, even in the realm of popular history, an overworked mine. There are no new nuggets to be found, not at least as far as Wellington's military doings are concerned. So, perhaps, it was wise as well as modest for Sir Arthur to stick to his original last, now a quarter of a century old." Economist 241:68 N 13 '71 230w

"Although no new material is presented as such, this well-written work [is] . . . recommended for those libraries which desire an additional authoritative work on 'The Iron Duke.'" M. J. Smith

Library J 97:3306 O 15 '72 160w

Reviewed by D. C. Acheson

N Y Times Bk R p54 D 10 '72 1200w

"Sir Arthur admits that he has drawn on descriptions of Wellington's Peninsular and Waterloo campaigns and battles from his . . . [previous books] but he has not revised, rewritten and expanded the relevant sections to anything like the degree he implies. Paragraph after paragraph is reproduced verbatim. . . . Even mistakes in the original volumes have been perpetuated. . . . A score of authors given as sources in the footnotes find no place in the bibliography, and certain important and easily found places are omitted from the maps. One must regret such blemishes in a work which, if it provides no new interpretation of a perennially fascinating man . . . is nevertheless marked by the sure grasp and many of the virtues which have made Sir Arthur Bryant one of the most widely read historians of the present age."

TLS p1498 D 3 '71 700w

BRYANT, DOROTHY. Ella Price's journal; a novel. 227p $5.95 Lippincott
ISBN 0-397-00894-5 LC 75-39758

Ella, "the mother of a teen-aged daughter, [is] thirty-five years old, married to a civil servant, lives in a suburb near Berkeley, California. Sensible, supportive, and accommodating, she is a model of middle-class womanhood. Her discontent seems to her neurotic, something vaguely unhealthy that should be kept in check. What right has she, Ella wonders, to inflict her agitation on her daughter's contented adolescence or to force her husband to grow intellectually beyond the Doris Day movies he loves? . . . So Ella takes up the slack of her life by returning to college, a small community school, where she starts a daily journal as a class assignment. The novel is made up of Ella's five notebooks, covering a period of about a year-and-a-half." (Sat R)

Reviewed by Melody Hardy

Best Sell 32:330 O 15 '72 650w

"The journal Ella keeps . . . is a minor masterpiece of eloquent innocence. Winding from embarrassed self-consciousness through tentative confidence to garrulous despair, her story poses liberated-woman questions in a decidedly non-Woman's Lib fashion. Ella is a suburban Snow White awakened by a kiss from the Prince of Intellect, not always sure that she wouldn't be better off still sleeping. A poignant, credible, extremely appealing book." Marilyn Gardner

Christian Science Monitor p12 O 18 '72 160w

"This first novel . . . is essentially a platform for feminist thought. It shows that women are most often defined by and preoccupied with their relationship to men, conditioned to repress their sexuality, considered unnatural if they don't want children, demoralized by male chauvinist psychiatrists, taken advantage of socially and sometimes financially when divorced, etc. But great fiction this isn't—though Ella's metamorphosis is predictable, she's just too narrow-minded and unintelligent initially for it to be believable. And, while the major human interrelationships depicted are suitably complex, individual characters tend to be one-dimensional. . . . Still, because it's fast-paced and current in appeal—a new kind of formula fiction—this book will be read." Diane Gersoni-Stavn

Library J 97:2640 Ag '72 200w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p14 D 24 '72 200w

"The journal begins awkwardly because Ella is inarticulate and hesitant. But she gradually opens and levels with herself. . . . The author has chosen a cumbersome technique: yet, written in the first person, the novel takes on the immediacy of an ongoing conflict with the outcome uncertain until Ella herself discovers it. . . . The novel's impact is diluted only because, in exploring Ella's inner life, the author has roamed too far into the outer world. Bryant wants to gather it all in, to show how Ella reacts to every circumstance from student unrest to the peace movement. . . . Her recurring dream of having another baby, misinterpreted by Ella (and by her male psychiatrist) as a need to rediscover her lost femininity, is to the reader too obviously symbolic of Ella's struggle to give birth to herself. Nevertheless, this is an affecting novel, a first-rate work by a talented new writer." Genevieve Stuttaford

Sat R 55:83 O 28 '72 390w

BRYANT, JERRY H. The open decision; the contemporary American novel and its intellectual background. 416p $8.95 Free press
813 American fiction—History and criticism
LC 79-128473

"Bryant demonstrates that American fiction since the Second World War is largely existentialist in its philosophy. . . . The first third of [his] book establishes and defines this basic philosophy as it appears in the work of scientific and philosophical thinkers such as Einstein, Husserl, Heidegger, Mannheim, Sartre, and Camus. The second part surveys abundant examples of three types of fiction which illustrate the dominance of the 'open decision': the war novel, the business novel, and the 'hip' novel of writers like Alexander Trocchi, Jack Kerouac, and William Burroughs. The third part is devoted to longer discussions of such representative post-modernists as John Barth, Saul Bellow, John Updike, Bernard Malamud, Kurt Vonnegut, and Norman Mailer." (Am Lit)

"[This is a] wide-ranging and useful book. . . . The principal virtue of Bryant's book is his clear and emphatic demonstration of a contemporary world-view that is certainly pervasive in our literature and thought. In fact, he makes his point so strongly and so often that we finally become aware that our fiction actually contradicts the philosophy it is supposed to convey. . . . In his consideration of his major contemporaries Mr. Bryant keeps discovering the same few ideas, a consistent pattern of insistence on free individuality that implies an all too rigid conformity to the philosophy that happens to be dominant in our society." Maurice Beebe
Am Lit 43:488 N '71 500w

"[This is] an ambitious book, but . . . academic and limited, falling tidily under the rubric of intellectual history. In some 100 pages [Bryant] tries, awesomely enough, to digest the chief scientific, psychological, sociological and philosophical thinking of our time. This thinking he then applies to explain and to account for the modern American novel. . . . Almost inevitably he is summary and bland; his categorising, a locking-up for all its talk of openness, falls both the vitality of the thought and the immediacy, the individual reality, of the novels. Also, in academic fashion, he chooses novels which seem to illustrate the thinking he synthesised, many of which one has never heard of and should surely not hear of now, but which, having once existed, must be worth considering." Theodore Weiss
Encounter 88:67 D '71 400w

BRYANT, KEITH L. Arthur E. Stilwell; promoter with a hunch; by Keith L. Bryant, Jr. 256p 11 maps $10 Vanderbilt univ. press
385 Stilwell, Arthur Edward. Railroads—History
ISBN 0-8265-1173-2 LC 78-170282

"Between 1886 and 1912 Stilwell built 2,300 miles of railway and founded several dozen hamlets and villages and the city of Port Arthur, Texas, which he named for himself. After retiring from active business in 1912, Stilwell wrote novels, poetry, plays, and songs. . . . His allegation that his projects were inspired by 'spirits' and 'brownies' who came to him in sleep . . . made him the focus of national journalistic attention. . . . In addition to the story of his life [this book considers] the role of the promoter in American economic history and tells . . . about the economic development and the urbanization of the south central states." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[Stilwell] left a lasting imprint on the South Central region (Missouri to Texas) and northern Mexico, where his grandiose railroad ventures provided basic transport facilities from the 1880's to 1912. . . . [Bryant] provides a detailed, readable chronicle of Stilwell's wide-ranging railroad promotions and other activities. . . . Based on research in newspapers, corporate archives, and D. Fletcher's Rails, mines, and progress: seven American promoters in Mexico, Bryant's book is workmanlike in execution and fills a gap in the business history literature. The sections on long-term economic effects of Stilwell's Kansas City, Pittsburg, & Gulf line, his Port Arthur development, and other ventures, however, badly lack depth and so leave undone perhaps the most important part of the subject. Highly recommended for collections of Southwest regional history; worth the price for collections of business and economic history."

Choice 9:688 J1/Ag '72 250w

"Promoters are 'a race unto themselves,' and indeed Bryant's biography of Stilwell proves the adage. . . . The author has used meticulous scholarship to develop a detailed study of one of the lesser empire builders of the railroad era; and, in a way, the wealth of detail might overwhelm the casual reader. But this is an interesting study of a man who was driven by inner forces to create an economic empire." R. T. Redden

Library J 97:1313 Ap 1 '72 140w

BRYHER. The days of Mars; a memoir, 1940-1946. (A Helen and Kurt Wolff bk) 190p $5.95 Harcourt

B or 92

ISBN 0-15-124055-8

LC 79-174505

In this supplement to the Heart to Artemis (BRD 1962) the author describes how she voluntarily returned to London from Switzerland to join her embattled friends "and share their hardships. 'In wartime,' she says in her Foreword, 'the only things that matter are a blanket, food and one's friends.' Those friends people her memories, and they are of the widest variety: . . . [they included] the Sitwells, the Compton Mackenzies, the American poet H. D. [and] London's 'little people.'" (Publisher's note) Index.

"Some thirty years after the event, Bryher, the historical novelist, remembers the six years of World War II. Memories like this, of course, cannot be pleasant; but neither do they have to be splenetic. Unfortunately, Bryher's memoir is. . . . The book oscillates between acerbic comments on wartime diet and fulminations against the duplicity of the Churchill government. . . . Occasionally, like a rare walnut in a flat cake, there is a view of brief English beauty." Eileen Kennedy
Best Sell 31:499 F 15 '72 330w

"These memoirs relate the experiences of a group of literary celebrities . . . who, when historic landmarks were being obliterated by bombs, fought to save England's literary heritage. Bryher scathingly accuses the 'Appeasers' of causing the war, and ridicules the endless red tape, 'muddle and stupidity of official departments.' Her sense of humor is sometimes grim. The Days of Mars is an important, forthright eyewitness account of wartime London, written with philosophical insight and a deeply rooted love for England." R. W. Henderson

Library J 97:1422 Ap 15 '72 130w

BRZEZINSKI, ZBIGNIEW. The fragile blossom; crisis and change in Japan. 153p $5.95 Harper

309.952 Japan—Politics and government.
Japan—Economic conditions
ISBN 0-06-010468-6 LC 75-181610

"A political scientist and director of the Research Institute of Communist affairs at Columbia University, Dr. Brzezinski argues that 'Japan suffers from major handicaps, from high vulnerability.' He believes that Japan's 'economic attainments and even its prospective military power are a fragile blossom.'" (Sat R) Bibliography.

Reviewed by V. S. Kearney

America 126:544 My 20 '72 80w

"Unlike the great majority of experts who have written on the subject, Brzezinski expects a considerable slowdown in the growth of the Japanese economy leading to greatly increased turmoil at home. . . . Perhaps the most significant reason for Japan's underlying instability is the state of the Japanese psyche. As Brzezinski points out the Japanese yearn for a role that will command respect and satisfy their intense national pride. . . . [This] book carries an important message. One hopes that people in Washington will get it. Otherwise, the United States may find itself, at the very time it is settling old problems with China, creating new ones with Japan." K. B. Pyle

Christian Science Monitor p11 Mr ■
'72 650w

BRZEZINSKI, ZBIGNIEW—Continued

"[The author] sees the country ■ having ■ kind of stability that 'appears to be extremely solid until all of a sudden ■ highly destabilizing chain reaction is set in motion by an unexpected input.' . . . Among those facing Japanese economic competition, especially American industrialists and Asian businessmen, Brzezinski's idea of Japan as a delicate plant needing special protection certainly will draw huge laughs. . . . His arguments to support this assertion [are] completely unconvincing. There are, however, some sound ideas behind this choice of characterization. It is unlikely that his arguments or this book will carry much weight because, in spite of great common interests of the United States and Japan, Brzezinski develops these interests in terms of themes that are quickly becoming passé in U.S. policy making." D. D. Buck

Library J 97:1022 Mr 15 '72 280w

Reviewed by H. S. Stokes

N Y Times Bk ■ p6 Ap ■ '72 360w

"Dr. Brzezinski, who spent less than a year researching and writing this book in Japan and elsewhere in Asia, tends to dwell on Japan's weaknesses and to underestimate its strengths. . . . [His] book is flawed on several counts. There is ■ little evidence to suggest that the author has read deeply in Japanese history, ■ prerequisite for understanding modern Japan. Nor does he appear to be completely at home with his material. . . . In addition, Professor Brzezinski subscribes to ■ number of myths that do not stand up under scrutiny. . . . Furthermore, the reader who prizes lucidity may well wince on coming across such turgid specimens of academic jargon as 'programmatic incompatibility,' [and] 'new technetronic era.'" Richard Halloran

Sat ■ 55:67 F ■ '72 850w

BUCHANAN, CYNTHIA. Maiden. 212p $5.95

Morrow

LC 70-163446

Fortune Dundy, a thirty-year-old virgin, grimly seeking to lose her virginity, moves into ■ Southern California swinging singles apartment complex, the "Villa Dionysus, which offers date-ship, mateship, and year-round Bacchus Bashes. For Fortune, a creature of the Fifties drawing her airs from the 'mannered billowing' of Loretta Young, Ann Blyth, Blanche Dubois, Jean Brodie, Complete Dionysation is ■ process of utter insult, loneliness, and hysterical despair. As if things weren't grim enough, Fortune ■ interrogated and judged throughout by none other than Bert Parks, the emcee of the American Dream, to whom the entire memoir is addressed." (Book World)

"Buchanan is ■ master puppeteer, using her characters to show us how macabre, how vacant, how desperate life can be, without our even guessing at this truth. Despite—or because of—its elusiveness, this novel is ■ work of distinction whose narrative form supports at every juncture the author's point. The point being?—that our ramshackle lives are overflowing with senseless babbling and posing, that we rarely see beyond those tenuous, filigreed shadows which we think of as ourselves." Lael Pritchard

Best Sell 81:466 Ja 15 '72 400w

Reviewed by J. R. Frakes

Book World p2 Ja 9 '72 820w

Reviewed by Diane Ackerman

Library J 96:3635 N 1 '71 100w

"Fortunée is an exemplary creation. Buchanan has given her a diction and idiom which has the nervous instability and dazzling awkwardness of a woman in spike heels sashaying down a concrete ramp. Most of Buchanan's language is brilliant. She writes like a broken-field runner . . . [and] has few illusions about the prestige, pomp and power America gives to men. Fortunée lives in a world in which, no matter how day-glo the fun might be . . . women must take their identity from men. . . . Sexual vulgarities will read Maiden vulgarly. They will say that Buchanan is advocating ■ good screw as the answer to every woman's troubles. On the contrary, Buchanan is verbally blowing up the culture that advocates sex as a woman's only redemptive interlude." Catherine Stimpson

Nation 214:117 Ja 24 '72 700w

"The world that hard-sells life, death, sex and the five senses back to their bewildered possessors has not had so fine a satirist ■ Cynthia Buchanan since . . . 'The Loved One' [by Evelyn Waugh, BRD 1968]. . . . The few obvious flaws of this novel all seem traceable to one mistake. The author occasionally confuses the 'voice' of Fortune's perceptions with her own voice. . . . In spite of these lapses, 'Maiden' compares with 'Play It As It Lays' [by Joan Didion, BRD 1970] and 'The Bell Jar' [by Sylvia Plath, BRD 1971]; these books form a natural trilogy. In some ways 'Maiden' is the best of the three . . . ranging surely through satire and the gentlest of romances to blood-sacrifice. All three heroines are women struggling for breath in the smog of commerce and sexism, but only with Fortune do we finally get free of the long-suffering victim." Annie Gottlieb

N Y Times Bk ■ p6 Ja 9 '72 800w

Reviewed by P. S. Prescott

Newsweek 79:92 F 14 '72 820w

Reviewed by Joseph Catinella

Sat R 55:68 My 27 '72 160w

Reviewed by Martha Duffy

Time 99:84 F 7 '72 320w

BUCHANAN, JAMES DAVID. The professional. 208p $5.95 Coward McCann & Geoghegan

ISBN 698-10477-3 LC 72-77936

"Guerin is a professional spy whose loyalty is to 'the Firm,' a U.S. government organization which is neither the FBI nor the Secret Service. Refusing to take sides in the Firm's internal rivalries, Guerin goes to Cuba to bring out some documents which he is not allowed to read, and a female agent, whom he is authorized to kill if she makes trouble. But the plan goes astray and so do the papers; Guerin and the girl are caught in a desperate power struggle between two factions in the Firm who regard Guerin as expendable." (Library J)

"[Buchanan's novel] is tautly put together, races along, and yet has some fine characterization, particularly of the central 'professional.'" Best Sell 32:222 Ar 1 '72 140w

Reviewed by K. E. Stevens

Library J 97:3473 O 15 '72 130w [YA]

"Everything [in this novel] is thoroughly conventional. . . . [The author] has been influenced by the espionage verismists (Le Carré & Co.). In this kind of book, the agent is manipulated by forces he does not understand. Friend cannot be distinguished from foe. The truth and the lie are indistinguishable. . . . In Buchanan's favor are a smooth style and a good amount of sensitivity." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk ■ p42 O 15 '72 120w

TLS p612 My 26 '72 60w

BUCHANAN, JAMES M., ed. Theory of public choice; political applications of economics; ed. by James M. Buchanan and Robert D. Tollison. 829p il $15 Univ. of Mich. press

$30.08 Finance, Welfare economics
ISBN 0-472-08191-8 LC 76-163619

These studies are intended to illustrate a theory developed by "the 'Virginia' school of economics. . . . [It offers a] basis for making positive predictions about the allocation of resources via governmental processes, and for analyzing the effect of alternative incentive schemes on public choice. . . . [The essays concern] issues of public policy: the military draft, the control of monopoly, socialized medical care, the fiscal-monetary mix, the federal-state allocation of functions, the organization of education." (Publisher's note)

"The authors are methodological purists who wish to distinguish prediction from prescription and who judge ■ set of assumptions by their usefulness for prediction rather than by any reference to their realism. In practice, prediction means consistency with observed fact, so some of the authors are content if they can show that a few apparently silly assumptions plus some economics-type logic produces conclusions which are not silly. . . . Sometimes a 'representative individual' is used to explain things; sometimes majority choice is assumed, as in a discussion of the effects of different ways of financing education on the amount provided. Some of the authors love to generate paradoxes and display an academic style which may fail to attract many readers. . . . However, it would be wrong to dismiss gleams of insight on the grounds that the [essayists] fail to illuminate everything at once. The economics approach is stimulatingly different and if pursued with due modesty provides a useful challenge to political scientists."

Economist 244:50 Ag ■ '72 400w

"The essays in the present volume are an instructive sample of the work done by the Tullock-Buchanan school [of economics] once located at the University of Virginia and now at Virginia Polytechnic Institute. The opening substantive essay illustrates both the nature of the work and its present limitations. . . . [The authors] cover a wide variety of questions in public policy: fiscal policy, debt structure, tax burden and public expenditure (including two essays on military conscription). The essays are almost unfailingly unconcerned with formal theory, are usually methodologically self-conscious, and are intended only for specialist readers. These specialist readers, however, will inevitably widen their horizons as they read these fresh and irreverent reexaminations of ancient questions." G. J. Stigler

Nat R 24:1257 N 10 '72 500w

BUCHER, FRANÇOIS. The Pamplona Bibles; a facsimile compiled from two Bibles with martyrologies commissioned by King Sancho el Fuerte of Navarra (1194-1234): Amiens manuscript Latin 108 and Harburg ms. 1,2, Lat. 4<sup>o</sup>, 15. 2v pl col pl set $175 Yale univ. press

096 Bible—Pictorial works. Illumination of books and manuscripts. Sancho VII, King of Navarre
LC 73-99820

In "1194, Sancho el Fuerte, King of Navarra, decided to have a pictorial Bible made for his own use. . . . [This was the] Pamplona Bible . . . completed in 1197 and now housed in Amiens. . . . [Later King Sancho] ordered a second Bible, done on a finer vellum. . . . This second Bible is now at Castle Harburg in Germany. A century later . . . another copy of the work was commissioned, this time with many changes, [including] conversion to the French language. . . . This manuscript is now in the Spencer Collection in the New York Public Library. . . . [Bucher presents] these pictorial Bibles . . . in this two-volume work. The . . . text volume presents his investigations and findings . . . a biography of Sancho, three historical bibliographical chapters (one on each of the manuscripts) and two chapters devoted to the state of art in Navarra about 1200 A.D. and the iconography of the period in Spain." (N Y Times Bk R) Bibliography.

"Not a publication likely to engender wide popular enthusiasm, least of all for its princely cost. Moreover, the illustrated medieval manuscripts . . . which form the basis of the study possess limited aesthetic appeal and the accompanying essays are both tiresome and pedantic. A bewildering array of graphs, charts, and appendices further serve to baffle and frustrate the general reader and specialist alike. The latter may find the volume of reproductions of interest . . . although the fragmentary character of a 'selective' facsimile limits its utility."

Choice 8:371 My '71 140w

"Two of the Bibles, the King Sancho and the Harburg codex, were done about the same time in the same place and under the supervision of the same artist. Bucher treats these as a unit, reproducing whichever illustration is the better, while giving exact information about all of them in the appendixes. . . . The carefully reproduced facsimile volume is especially interesting and often very entertaining, with a naïve charm. . . . Well worth the price for academic and scholarly libraries, but probably a luxury item for the general library coping with a shrinking budget." Julia Sabine

Library J 96:2074 Je 15 '71 230w

"[Bucher's] derivation of the Bible in the New York Public Library from the Pamplona Bibles is a fresh discovery and is convincingly presented. His bibliography is extensive and excellent. The crowning part of [his] work, however, is his thorough study of the three manuscripts, illustration by illustration, arranging them in their original pattern, and then assembling a set of 570 plates reproducing pages from the Pamplona Bibles so as to produce a continuous and complete book, his second, facsimile volume. . . . Most pages are reproduced in sepia, but 12 are done in color. Much reference was made to the New York Bible in this study, but no pages from it are reproduced in the facsimile volume, although some are printed together with other art material, on 130 photographic reproductions in the text volume. . . . The set is of the greatest value for students of Spanish art, of general iconography, of manuscript illumination and of the transmission of the Scripture narrative through historiated manuscript." N. H. Sonne

N Y Times Bk R p8 Ap 11 '71 800w

BUCKHORN, ROBERT F. Nader: the people's lawyer. 310p $6.95 Prentice-Hall

B or 92 Nader, Ralph
ISBN 0-13-609222-5 LC 76-38579

The author writes "of Ralph Nader, his life and times, his modus operandi, and his enemies, friends, and disciples, with analyses of 'what makes Nader run.'" (Library J) Bibliography.

Reviewed by E. J. Linehan

Best Sell 32:60 My 1 '72 430w

"Buckhorn, a United Press International newsman in the Washington bureau, succeeds in telling the reader what he knows about Nader, not what he suspects or feels. He understands where and how Nader fits into the town. Where [C.] McCarry [in Citizen Nader BRD 1972], tries to suggest that Nader is maladjusted, Buckhorn sees the subtler reality that Nader is non-adjusted. He refuses to adjust to corporate violence, government inaction and congressional duplicity that many of the rest of us have long ago accepted as normal. . . . Buckhorn sees that although Nader burns with rage, it is not a destructive flame but one that tries to light the darkness." Colman McCarthy

Book World p13 Ap 9 '72 500w

"A somewhat disjointed account. . . . Buckhorn provides a useful bibliography of Nader's articles and appearances at Congressional hearings. The book advances through a series of loosely connected chapters with such journalistic titles as 'GM's hired dicks,' 'Side door lawyers,' etc. Although only a thin, eulogistic image of Nader the man emerges . . . and there is no general portrait of the consumer movement, the book does introduce the reader to the activities of an important and interesting public figure."

Choice 9:1165 N '72 130w

"[This volume] is better [than Charles McCarry's Citizen Nader, BRD 1972]. The same ground is covered, but in greater depth and with more attention to the essential quality which makes Nader important and compelling—the righteous indignation with which he attacks. Buckhorn makes us feel that emotion to a greater extent, without himself descending into a polemic. And he gives a more complete picture of the way Nader's enemies regard him. This book also has some features which McCarry's work lacks: a bibliography of consumer advocacy publications which have been written or sparked by Nader and a more orderly list of the legislation which has resulted from Nader's activities. Finally, more attention is paid to Nader as a potential political candidate, his rejection of that possibility, and why." Dem Polacheck

Library J 97:1415 Ap 15 '72 100w

Reviewed by Thomas De Baggio

Nation 214:597 My ■ '72 450w

BUCKLE, RICHARD. Nijinsky. 482p il $12.50 Simon & Schuster

B or 92 Nijinsky, Waslaw. Ballet
SBN 671-21169-2 LC 78-180717

"This biography attempts to record Nijinsky's dance accomplishments and his . . . performing career." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Cornelia Holbert

Best Sell 32:317 O 15 '72 850w

Reviewed by Kathleen Cennell

Christian Science Monitor p15 D 13 '72 700w

"[Mr Buckle's biography] is far too long and much of it is irrelevant. He appears to be trying to put all he knows about ballet into one book about one dancer. But he has been immensely industrious; he has talked to those who remember Nijinsky and the Diaghilev era; and ballet lovers prepared to pay the high price of the book will find much to interest them."

Economist 241:68 N 13 '71 230w

"Buckle has done exhaustive research for this definitive biography of Nijinsky; he has not only consulted all the printed sources, but he has also conducted extended interviews with Romola Nijinsky, Bronislava Nijinsky, Karsavina, Massine, Stravinsky, and many others. [He] has painstakingly checked dates and dance events, and he patiently notes and corrects discrepancies in what has so far been available to us. . . . [He] doesn't pretend to greater knowledge than that which is available and documented. An admirable book that keeps strictly within its self-imposed bounds, and which is completely successful in what it attempts to do. Highly recommended." Dorothy Nyren

BUCKLE, RICHARD—Continued

Library J 97:2719 S 1 '72 120w

Reviewed by Betty Roszak
Nation 215:501 N 20 '72 1600w

Reviewed by Arlene Croce
N Y Times Bk R p27 O 11 '72 1900w

Reviewed by Walter Clemons
Newsweek 80:102 O 9 '72 1200w

"[Buckle] devotes a lot of space to the sheer glamour of the ballet world and lapses frequently into a quasifictional re-creation of scenes that seem especially exciting to him. In the end he settles for neither the Nijinsky achievement nor the Nijinsky legend. He has amassed an enormous quantity of material . . . but he never seems to have discovered what to make of it all. The result is that we get only a hazy impression of Nijinsky, both as a man and as an artist. The simple legendary outline of his life is confused by a series of abrupt changes in subject matter, whose purpose seems to have been to make Nijinsky's artistic significance clear but which only muddles the reader." Dale Harris

Sat R 55:96 O 7 '72 1950w

"The first part of Nijinsky—after a delightful beginning—becomes bogged down not only with correspondence but also with long quotations from other books. . . . The quotations destroy [Buckle's] narrative and he himself plays a less vital part in the book than one would have wished. . . . The most exciting part of the narrative concerns the ballets of Nijinsky. . . . Mr Buckle has been tireless in his questioning and delving in an attempt to evaluate [the] choreography. . . . [The book] is not always easy reading, but there are occasional flashes of pure Buckle that must not be missed. His translations of the abuses hurled at L'Après-midi and Le Sacre are obviously designed to reproduce the shock value they would have today. . . . The illustrations are superb."

TLS p35 Ja 14 '72 210w

BUCKLEY, MICHAEL J. Motion and motion's God; thematic variations in Aristotle, Cicero, Newton, and Hegel. 287p $10 Princeton univ. press

211 Motion. God
ISBN 0-691-07124-1 LC 73-132234

This work is an attempt "to clarify the theme that God can be demonstrated from motion as it runs through the four philosophic systems of Aristotle, Cicero, Newton, and Hegel." (Introd) Index of persons. Index of subjects.

"The central drawback of this book is just its lack of theological focus. . . . [What Aristotle, Cicero, Newton, and Hegel] mean by motion is so radically different that what one might call the quasi-existentialist connotation of the title phrase is fuzzed over from its original protest against abstract philosophizing, since the 'motion' against which it protests may well be that of Aristotle and Newton, but surely is not Cicero's (the rhetorical movement leading to consensus), or Hegel's (the dialectical movement of the Notion realizing itself as Absolute). That which can be praised in the book is the fine grasp of the methodology of each of the four thinkers as evidenced in this part of their cosmology. . . . Documentation from primary sources is far more thorough than from secondary ones. . . . Though groundbreaking, not recommended except to large collections catering to graduate or advanced undergraduate historical work."

Choice 8:1187 N '71 220w

"[The author] has turned out a formidable essay. . . . Not recommended for the days when you seek summer reading; it's designed more for an autumn work-out."

Christian Century 88:836 J1 7 '71 50w

BUCKLEY, WILLIAM F. Inveighing we will go. [by] William F. Buckley, Jr. 410p $7.95 Putnam

309.173 U.S.—Politics and government—
1961— U.S.—Civilization
SBN 399-11087-2 LC 72-83409

The editor of National Review presents this volume of pieces published between 1969 and 1972 in his syndicated column. It is a collection of articles, columns and essays on such subjects as President Nixon's trip to China, the Vietnam War, pollution, conscription, busing and ecology. Chapter 1 originally appeared in Playboy magazine. Index.

Reviewed by J. M. Murphy
Best Sell 32:318 O 15 '72 180w

Reviewed by R. C. Bergenheim
Christian Science Monitor p9 O 25 '72
450w

"The best of [these pieces is] a delightfully urban model of what scholarship could be: a review of the new two-volume edition of The Oxford English Dictionary. . . . The essays are divided into sections roughly coinciding with themes. . . . There is, quite predictably, nothing new in the telegraphed punches, except, at times, rather better form and style than used to be the case." C. L. Markmann

Nation 215:281 O 2 '72 1400w

"[This] is a good book. . . . [It contains] a steady stream of civilized argument, entertaining discourse and, as always, wit. If anything, there is less asperity and a little more ease than one found in earlier Buckley. . . . The columns . . . all continue to read well and, for the most part, they hold up on the issues. . . . I found myself most taken with the items on men and manners. For my money, Bill Buckley is at his best in the warm but not at all maudlin article on his brother Jim; in the perceptive appreciation of the late John Dos Passos; in his exquisite vivisection of a squirming Helen Gurley Brown and her Cosmopolitan; defending a beleaguered Beethoven from the slings of William Rickenbacker (with which slings I nevertheless agree); and capturing the essences of two very contrasting countries and people in his outstanding pieces on Switzerland and the Soviet Union." Aram Bakshian

Nat R 24:1185 O 27 '72 2500w

"'Inveighing' is [the author's] natural genre, and this collection shows him at his best. . . . I suspect I disagree with every one of his major premises except his respect for the ground rules of the democratic order—but . . . even when you wince, reading Buckley is fun. . . . When he is in top form, that rapier can really cut. Perhaps best of all, the venom of his early years has been watered down to a sort of genial malevolence. . . . Keep in mind the erroneous character of his major premises, but by all means go 'Inveighing' with Bill Buckley." J. F. Roche

N Y Times Bk R p40 O 8 '72 1000w

BUCKMASTER, HENRIETTA. The walking trip. 204p $5.95 Harcourt

ISBN 0-15-194189-0 LC 73-182324

Maddy, a 19-year-old liberal activist student, "is urgently summoned from Boston to London by her elder brother, Richard, who, having become mysteriously involved in Zambian and Rhodesian affairs, disappears from sight before he can get in contact with her. At first Maddy is not too upset; she takes a quick tour of London and meets a group of young people in the King's Road, Chelsea. However, it then becomes clear that her brother had actually arrived in London and when it is obvious that malevolent people are preventing her from getting at the truth, she goes into high gear and does a little detecting on her own." (Library J)

Best Sell 31:519 F 15 '72 150w

"This is not only a good suspense story, it's a believable one. . . . While [the author] mystifies us, she does not confuse us. Here is no super cast of characters dashing around breathlessly—with CIA agents turning into KGB men and getting eliminated before one had properly realized who they were anyway. Miss Buckmaster's protagonist is a credible character—not a whizz kid with a tape recorder at the ready in her lipstick. What's more, she's likable. . . . [The story] focuses on the anguish of black Africans but does not use it to hold the plot together. This is not one of those books that you put down only to ask yourself ten minutes later: How come all those people happened to turn up at that place at that moment anyway? [This] is Miss Buckmaster's first suspense novel. More, please." P. M. C.

Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 9 '72 170w

"Political and racial ramifications bring senior civil servants into the intrigue, together with many colorful and unlikely people, and the plot moves along with a fine sweep, finishing up with a fascinating Buchan-like chase in the Highlands. Of course, all turns out well in the end; and there is a touch of romance for the sentimental." H. C. Veit

Library J 97:519 F 1 '72 160w

Reviewed by Virginia Borland

Library J 97:1624 Ap 15 '72 170w [YA]

Reviewed by Newgate Callender

N Y Times Bk R p40 Mr 12 '72 50w

TLS p1174 S 29 '72 80w

BUECHNER, FREDERICK. Open heart. 276p $5.95 Atheneum pubs.

LC 76-190401

This "is a continuation of the Bebb saga, begun in last year's Lion Country [BRD 1971]. . . . The narrator is still Antonio Parr. He has married Sharon, the mercurial adopted daughter to Leo Bebb . . . [who] is on his way to starting a new church, called Open Heart. . . . The Holy Love church of Lion Country has lost its impetus, and the legacy of a stalwart Holy Lover, Herman Redpath, convinces Bebb that the establishment is necessary." (Book World)

Reviewed by P. A. Doyle

Best Sell 32:191 J1 15 '72 400w

"Some sequels are bad news; this one will be widely welcomed. . . . Like Peter De Vries (whom Buechner much resembles), the attitudes are fundamentally scholarly and thoughtful, woven through a series of plotless episodes—the death of Redpath, the Open Heart church, the disappearance of Lucille, the appearance of the possibly angelic Mr. Golden, the cuckolding [of Parr], and so forth. It is comedy of the most serious sort. Antonio explains that his life is formless and implies that the book he is narrating cannot have an end, another way of saying that it must have a sequel. That would be fine." Paul Theroux

Book World p4 My 28 '72 350w

Choice 9:1290 D '72 140w

Reviewed by Robert Baker

Christian Century 89:830 Ag 16 '72 340w

"We have another Christian parable [here]. . . . Buechner is a writer of great daring and invention. He uses the novel because it is a handy form, and he does with it what he wants to. . . . [Here] we see various tacky sins and grotesque deaths all falling together to shape the foreordained (the Rev. Buechner is Presbyterian) drift toward the triumph of good over evil. . . . Good to read, vastly entertaining, never for a second dull, Mr. Buechner writes a new kind of novel that may have bobbed up before in the eighteenth century when novels were social adjuncts and not Works of Art. The imitation is not of life but of the manners of everyday." Guy Davenport

Nat R 24:697 Je 23 '72 400w

Reviewed by T. R. Edwards

N Y Rev of Books 19:20 J1 20 '72 750w

Reviewed by Cynthia Ozick

N Y Times Bk R p4 Je 12 '72 1200w

New Yorker 48:78 J1 22 '72 150w

"The humor of Open Heart runs less to slapstick [than did Lion Country] . . . and more to De Vriesian one-liners: 'I knew that I had to get away that day—their fresh-faced guilt was too great a reproach to my shifty-eyed innocence.' . . . Through it all, Antonio remains essentially an equivocal but clever device to help the author work things out in his head. Given this undisguised sketchiness in a central character, it is something of a mystery how Buechner has produced a live, warm, wise comic novel. And yet that is exactly what, in all shifty-eyed innocence, he has done. . . . [He] seems to have found an acceptable way to deal with religious mysteries in fiction. His stratagem is to leave the very existence of such mysteries an open question. . . . Another question is left, too: whether this indefiniteness is merely tact, or a measure of the author's own uncertainty. . . . [But] Buechner is a talented writer clearly bound somewhere. And ■ interesting man to watch." John Skow

Time 100:63 J1 '72 1000w

Va Q R 48:cxix autumn '72 110w

BUECHNER, THOMAS S. Norman Rockwell; artist and illustrator. 328p il col il $60 Abrams 741.9 U.S.—Social life and customs. Rockwell. Norman ISBN 0-8109-0452-7 LC 75-125785

This "album of more than 600 . . . specimens of [Rockwell's] work is a pictorial history of average America in the twentieth century." (Book World)

"Most of [Rockwell's] work is narrative and the twice-told tales he affectionately tells are immediately intelligible; he does not deal with deep emotions but plays variations on such themes as nostalgia for days of yore, dreams of glory, pride going before a fall, the love of a boy for his scruffy dog, the camaraderie of a barbershop quartet. . . . This is a fine memory book, an attic chock-a-block with the artifacts of folk history, the baseball bats and anvils commingled with the furbelows and souvenir spoons." Jean Stafford

Book World p1 N 29 '70 1200w

"Without reservation, this book is recommended for all nostalgic readers . . . [and] for popular, social history collections." Roy Nelson

Library J 96:467 F 1 '71 80w

"At first blush there is something vulgar about a one-pound album of Norman Rockwell's paintings. But at second blush there is something rather wonderful about it, as if the America we remember (or at least like to think we remember) existed after all, unobscured by present-day pollution, racial conflict and student dissent. . . . The volume is a fitting memorial to a superb craftsman and folk hero of the middle class. . . . It is as expensively produced as though it were the Book of Kells. . . . The question arises, Is this social history? In a sense it is, but mainly as an exercise in nostalgia. . . . Urban settings are rare and seldom unpleasant. Ethnic America is absent. We are uncomfortably aware that . . . Rockwell provided 20th-century America with a sort of false identity, and that he did this by looking backwards while seeming to look straight ahead." David Dempsey

N Y Times Bk R p8 N 1 '70 380w

BUEL, RONALD A. Dead end: the automobile in mass transportation. 231p $6.95 Prentice-Hall

388.3 Transportation. Automobiles. Automobile industry and trade ISBN 0-13-196980-3 LC 75-175808

The author criticizes "the automobile, the automobile industry, and American highway engineers. Several factors, such as auto and highway safety, air pollution, energy requirements, environmental effects of freeways, socioeconomic effects of auto ownership and travel, and the dominant political and economic role of the auto industry, are discussed. The author also criticizes the administration of the Bay Area Rapid Transit system in San Francisco for being too engineering-oriented. Some suggestions for improving urban transportation by providing alternatives to the automobile are presented." (Choice)

"[This book] was written by a journalist, is reasonably well documented, and is presented in an easily readable style. Although [it] presents a biased view, it should be of interest to planners and engineers interested in transportation." Choice 9:1156 N '72 170w

"[This] low-key polemic anchored in sad fact . . . shows how the auto interests wield power of frightening proportions, and how this power is abetted by our elected officials; . . . and details how automobile manufacturing and its attendant enterprises, as well as the oil, steel, construction, and manufacturing industries, all act in horrible concert to keep the car foremost, forevermore. Sometimes the author's approach is circuitous, and he does enjoy using some liberal helpings of radical-chic sociology to heighten his facts. However, he readily admits that some of his rage is subjective, and this reader thinks his art is in the right place. . . . Buel's writing style [reflects his] years on the Wall Street Journal, which he quotes heavily; and despite some stylistic flaws, he eventually lands on target." M. H. Sawyer

BUEL, R. A.—Continued

Library J 97:1691 My 1 '72 350w

Reviewed by Virginia Carpio

Library J 97:3820 N 15 '72 120w [YA]

BUELL, JOHN. The Shrewsdale exit. 279p $6.95 Farrar, Straus

ISBN 0-374-26342-6 LC 72-81009

"When a young married couple and their little girl drive away from a highway Howard Johnson's, they are followed by three motorcyclists. Forced off the road, Joe Grant is beaten unconscious, and his wife and daughter are raped and murdered. Lack of evidence to bring the three to trial leads Joe to hang around and invite them to attack him again." (Library J)

"Buell seems happily innocent of prison life and some of the incidents during Joe's internment do not ring quite true, but the futility and boredom of prison come across. For the rest, Mr. Buell's skill, manifest in his first book, The Pyx [BRD 1960], seems to be on the increase. The writing is spare and singularly vivid, the choice of detail, the dwelling on the right point are accurate. Through an objective, clear presentation of a mind confronted with deadly and unreasonable violence he has made us look at something that is far from new but which has taken on new aspects in our time—innocence opposed to brutal and unjust strength." W. B. Hill

Best Sell 32:294 O 1 '72 300w

Reviewed by R. H. Donahugh

Library J 97:3179 O 1 '72 130w

"In most plots of this kind there is a great big climax. Buell goes about it differently, with a complete avoidance of heroics. He is more interested in searching into a man's motives than in supplying a conventional ending. And so he ends with a question mark. That does not take away anything from the taut quality of his book which is a pleasure to read." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p43 O 1 '72 120w

"Buell treats us to some fascinating insights into the paradoxes encountered by the men who enforce the law, together with laconic delineations of how convicts organize their prison societies. But Buell cops out (pun not intended). He wraps it all up with one of those ambiguous endings that leaves you cliffhanging. [The book] can still be recommended, but its ending turns a sure-fire winner into an also-ran." O. L. Bailey

Sat R 55:89 O 28 '72 120w

BUJRA, ABDALLA S. The politics of stratification: a study of political change in a south Arabian town. 201p il $9 Oxford

320.9 Hureidah, Southern Yemen—Politics and government

ISBN 0-19-823157-1 LC 78-25586

This "study of Hureidah—a . . . community in Hadramaut, South Arabia . . . focuses on the stratification system of Hureidah, its relationship to the distribution of wealth and the political process itself. There is [also an] . . . analysis of tribal genealogy and the role of marriage in gaining upward mobility [as well as a] . . . study of political change presented in Part II of the volume. The traditional role of the Attas elite as rulers and its ability to preserve and perpetuate its power under changing circumstances is presented . . . through case studies. In the concluding section, the author brings in the impact of external influences on social change in Hureidah." (Choice)

"Much has been written about social change in developing countries, but relatively little exists about the actual process of change at the micro level. This is precisely what Bujra presents in his detailed [study]." Choice 8:1216 N '71 180w

"Mr Bujra writes in cool and orderly English, reasonably free of jargon; and although primarily a piece of social anthropology, his book will be quite digestible for the general reader."

TLS p757 J1 2 '71 850w

BULATOVIC, MIODRAG. The war was better; tr. from the Serbo-Croatian by B. S. Brusar; adapted by Michael Wolfert. 424p $7.95 McGraw

ISBN 07-008846-2 LC 79-33518

"Since Bulatovic's thesis is that war is the true pornography, the images of the book and, therefore, the language that expresses them, have come from the street, the brothel, and the barnyard. . . . The novel is made up of a series of picaresque adventures of an anti-hero named Malić, a Montenegrin madcap idealist who, astride his donkey with a parachute on his back and a globe of the world in his hand on which he marks his victories in red paint, achieves conquests of numerous willing bodies of women, many of whom are symbolic of their countries. For as Malić has learned in his own country of Montenegro, war and fornication are the same thing." (Publisher's note)

"The author is deadly serious. His seriousness cannot tolerate a light touch. The grotesque images and scatological language lose by tedious repetition any comic irony that had been intended. Bulatovic's attempt at political satire by a Genet-like reversal of values is boring because so obvious. The insertion of François Villon into a contemporary narrative as a reincarnated crusader and the allusions to dramatists of the theatre of the absurd signal the author's ambitions. He wants desperately to teach his readers about the true nature of reality. But he forgets to interest the reader. . . . The characters' sufferings—and this is entirely a world of suffering—mean nothing because we realize that the people are not flesh and blood human beings but representations of abstract concepts. The author seems to intend political content for these concepts but his allegorical meaning never becomes clear." T. A. McVeigh

Best Sell 32:144 Je 15 '72 600w

Choice 9:975 O '72 160w

Reviewed by R. H. Donahugh

Library J 97:697 F 15 '72 110w

"Although [Gruban Malić] died in the earlier novel, 'Hero on a Donkey,' here he is alive and well again. . . . Where the earlier novel still observed some amenities of realism, 'War Was Better' moves beyond the opaque surfaces of literalness and zeroes in on the outré, the flagrant and monstrous in contemporary experience, and does it with a will that for sheer invention and energy might leave a Genet or a Burroughs exhausted. In this 'higher reality,' to use Bulatovic's own phrase, dislocation is the norm, and one can take little issue with Roman Braun, the German critic, who has said that among younger European writers Bulatovic alone has made the grotesque completely his own." Joseph Hitrec

N Y Times Bk R p34 J1 16 '72 800w

"An utterly zany novel by . . . a Serbian writer who has been the most talked-about (albeit more abroad than at home) Yugoslav author for two decades now. . . . [This] is a first-class surrealist trip backward into the war and postwar days, an emotional circus replete with atrocities, absurdities, and dementia. It is not, however, a war novel in the true sense of the term, nor is it a typical antiwar novel. Rather, Bulatovic uses the war in the Balkans as a pretext to mock war in general and to show what it does to man. . . . Although [the book] suffers from unwieldiness and occasional lapses of taste, it is an eloquent and important protest against the failures of modern civilization. Moreover, its sheer zaniness and heady flights of fantasy make this Yugoslav's latest outburst—which has yet to be published in his own country—a delight to read." V. D. Milatovich

Sat ■ 55:84 My 13 '72 470w

BULGAKOV, MIKHAIL. Diabolad, and other stories; ed. by Ellendea Proffer & Carl R. Proffer; tr. by Carl R. Proffer. 236p $5.95 Ind. univ. press

ISBN 0-253-11605-8 LC 76-172127

These eleven short stories, by the author of The Master and Margarita (BRD 1967. 1968), were published in the nineteen-twenties.

"Sporadically successful in Russia but always controversial, Bulgakov has been neglected here, in part because he does not fit into any handy category. This same cantankerous unpredictability makes him a writer of continual interest and surprise. . . . The stories tend to wildly inventive, anti-bureaucratic satire. Bulgakov's mixture of sardonic fantasy and fast, burlesque action might, if these stories had been translated in the twenties when they were written, have seemed merely barbarous. Arriving fifty years late, it seems fresh and pointed. Notes and background information are lavishly provided . . . and the translation reads easily despite the puns and local references that must have driven the Proffers to distraction before they surrendered to footnotes." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:113 My '72 50w

"[Bulgakov's] strong point was his ability to amplify the hoots of man's dementia, the howls of political pandemonium, and many of the stories here build up pressure as the characters thrash along, pursuing, or pursued. 'Diaboliad' and 'The Fatal Eggs,' the best of the lot, are good examples of this. . . . A brilliant Chinese machine gunner, gargling for bonuses in the Red Army, is the hero of 'A Chinese Tale,' an original conception; the hero of 'The Adventures of Chichikov' is a straight lift from Gogol. There are minor efforts here as well, dated feuilletons and parodies made incomprehensible by the obscurity of the originals they poke fun at. Nonetheless it is a lively collection, a new translation, and it is responsibly edited." Paul Theroux
Book World p4 My '72 600w

Choice 9:652 J1/Ag '72 160w

Reviewed by Rosemary Neiswender
Library J 97:1015 Mr 15 '72 120w

Reviewed by Michael Berman
N Y Times Bk R p7 J1 23 '72 270w

Reviewed by Elena Levin
Sat R 55:59 Ap 29 '72 1300w

"The reader is always conscious of the barrier of translation, a problem which makes itself felt on the first page, when we are told that a character 'exterminated' a thought from his mind. . . . That kind of infelicity is evident throughout: 'He started to stop' . . . it may be the fault of the translator, but that is no compensation. If enjoyment of the stories is inhibited by the rebarbative style, then any real judgment of them is likewise inhibited by the feeling that we are getting Bulgakov-and-water. Presumably, though, we can assume that the plots of the stories remain unchanged, and they, for the most part, seem unremarkable, though the time and circumstances in which they were produced, and the targets at which they were aimed, lend them a significance outside their qualities as works of the imagination."

TLS p1013 S 1 '72 250w

BULGAKOV, MIKHAIL. The early plays of Mikhail Bulgakov; ed. by Ellendea Proffer; tr. by Carl R. Proffer and Ellendea Proffer. 418p $10 Ind. univ. press

891.7
ISBN 0-253-11885-9 LC 70-166117

"This volume of five plays contains Bulgakov's 'first full-length play, The Days of the Turbins . . . a sympathetic treatment of the White cause in the Revolution. Zoya's Apartment, a comedy, is a . . . satirical picture of the world of the 'NEP-men'. . . . Flight presents an apocalyptic vision of a society in chaos, as the dispossessed and spiritually adrift frantically seek for hiding places. The Crimson Island deals with the . . . subject of censorship. . . . A Cabal of Hypocrites, set at the court of Louis XIV, depicts Molière as the archetype of the artist who is forced to bend to the demands of a despot." (Publisher's note)

"Bulgakov has been neglected here, in part because he does not fit into any handy category. This same cantankerous unpredictability makes him a writer of continual interest and surprise. The plays range from the realism of Days of the Turbins to the brazen reordering of history in A Cabal of Hypocrites. . . . Notes and background information are lavishly provided . . . and the [translations] read easily." Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 229:113 My '72 50w

"[The plays] are prefaced by articulate and informative introductions. . . . The Proffers must be congratulated upon their sheer industry in offering the non-Russian-reading public such a rich selection from one of the most gifted writers of our century." Rosemary Neiswender
Library J 97:1015 Mr 15 '72 120w

"With the publication of 'The Early Plays' . . . we have a wealth of new and highly rewarding examples of Bulgakovian fantasy. . . . [He] reveals himself as master of a second style, radically different from his usual grotesqueries . . . [which] displays a Chekhovian talent for convincing psychological portraiture and approaches both Chekhov's economy and his tendency to treat all but the most villainous of his characters with sympathy." Michael Berman

N Y Times Bk R p7 J1 23 '72 270w

"Unfortunately . . . [the Proffers] have little feeling for spoken language. A warning is in order that, if the plays are to be produced, their texts should be revised." Elena Levin
Sat R 55:59 Ap 29 '72 1300w

BULGAKOV, V. F. The last year of Leo Tolstoy; tr. from the Russian by Ann Dunnigan; with an introd. by George Steiner. 235p $7.95 Dial press

B or 92 Tolstoy, Leo
LC 73-131182

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by A. P. Mendel
Am Hist R 77:549 Ap '72 600w

Reviewed by E. B. Greenwood
Encounter 33:83 F '72 400w

Reviewed by John Bayley
N Y Rev of Books 17:24 D 30 '71 600w

BULLOCK, ALAN, ed. The twentieth century; a Promethean age; texts by Alan Bullock [and others]. 371p il col il pl col pl maps $35 McGraw

901.94 Twentieth century
ISBN 07-008870-5 LC 75-159299

This volume in the Dawn of Civilization series is introduced by a chapter by the editor explaining the applicability of "Promethean" to the twentieth century. "After an outline of international developments between 1900 and 1970 . . . there follows a series of chapters each concerned with the history of the 20th century in a particular area. For the most part, these are geographically defined—Europe, America, the Middle East, the Far East, Africa south of the Sahara—but in one case, that of the Communist World, the definition is political. . . . The second half of the book is concerned with trends and patterns of development in the most important spheres of human activity, from the scientific and economic to the intellectual and artistic." (Foreword) Index.

"[This book is] about as fine a coordination of text and graphics as anyone is apt to come up with. The essays are arranged in topical, not chronological, manner and they cover practically everything that has occurred in an age of incredible change in the world—in life styles, in politics, in medicine, in science. The essays are not meant to be exhaustive treatises; neither, on the other hand, are they without distinction or marked merit. The big volume (13 1/4 x 10 1/4) is crammed with material. This is a great piece of craftsmanship from every angle."

Best Sell 31:482 F 1 '72 190w

Choice 9:416 My '72 160w

"The editor has chosen a very distinguished team of contributors to discuss the controversial and open-ended history of the twentieth century. The trouble is that most of them fail to do more than give a sort of potted chronological account of what went on over a period that will be very familiar, after all, to most of its readers. . . . The other signal failing of the book is to move outside a self-confessedly Eurocentric view of the world that conveys very little of the cultural and political perspectives of the developing countries. . . . One can still look at the pictures. And they are well worth looking at; if one can afford the book."

Economist 241:xxi N 6 '71 250w

Reviewed by Colin Bell
Encounter 33:64 Mr '72 150w

"Individually, the geographical and political chapters are miniaturized versions of the Annual Register, and collectively of Chatham House's Surveys of International Relations. The authors, most of whom have been contributors to annual works of that kind, have accomplished their tasks with practised ease. The last six chapters are different and in some ways more valuable. They are concerned with the arts, philosophy, science, technology, economics, and social change. . . . [Religion has been] deliberately excluded. . . . What they seem to lack is the human touch. . . . [However] the copious illustrations do something to redress the balance. . . . [There are] more than 200 colour prints and nearly 500 photographs, engravings and maps. They greatly enrich without dwarfing the text; and their relevance is emphasized by frequent references in every chapter."

BULLOCK, ALAN—Continued

TLS p1379 N 5 '71 460w

BULLOCK, BARBARA. Wynn Bullock. See Bullock, W.

BULLOCK, WYNN. Wynn Bullock; text by Barbara Bullock; with notes by the photographer. unp $25 Scrimshaw press

779 Photography, Artistic
ISBN 912020-11-3 LC 70-156774

These black and white photographs by Bullock are arranged by period extending from the 1940's to the present. His daughter wrote the text. His work attempts to show "contrasts in texture; rock and water, flesh and bark, misty forests and lichen-covered trees. He sees the photograph as a symbol of experience that depends on sharpness of detail and tonal fidelity to 'record not only what the eyes see but that which the mind's eye sees as well.'" (Newsweek) Chronology.

"Unlike his teacher Edward Weston, who grasped the essence and form of common objects with intuitive vision, Bullock, searching for an event, juxtaposes textures, time sequences, and techniques. What results is not an event, but a romantic interpretation which destroys the integrity of the situation. His most successful photographs do not posit an event but deal with an object." Tom Lovcik

Library J 96:3599 N 1 '71 150w

"Can Wynn Bullock be both a pompous bore and an honest, sensitive photographer? Apparently. Verbally, in [this book], he keeps making solemn, naive pronouncements. Visually, he takes both good pictures and inflated, pretentious ones. When he forgets to try to be profound, he can be lyrical. . . . His strength is in seeing, not in understanding, never in explaining. How are these pictures? My count: Ugh, 6; So what?, 27; Passable, 18; Beautiful, 13. Nine blatantly bad layouts kill 12 pictures. (Six are sliced in two by the gutter and the white stitches: six die in collisions). The other layouts are good, and the printing is excellent. Bullock is irritating, but he matters, [and] . . . this book matters, too." David Vestal

N Y Times Bk R p43 D 12 '71 120w

"[Here] is an excellent example not only of photography as a fine art informed by the personal vision of a photographer who keeps setting greater obstacles for himself, but of the art of bookmaking as well. . . . A few of these pictures seem to be too indebted to the dark-room, but many are superb, with an illusion of depth that you can almost put your hand in."

P. S. Prescott
Newsweek 78:109A D 13 '71 90w

BUMSTED, J. M. Henry Alline, 1748-1784. (Canadian biographical studies) 116p Can$4.50 Univ. of Toronto press

B or 92 Alline, Henry
ISBN 0-8020-3247-8 LC 73-24664

This "monograph sketches the life and theology of Henry Alline, 'apostle of Nova Scotia.' When Henry was twelve years old, his family left their home in Newport, Rhode Island, for Falmouth, Nova Scotia, settling along the north bank of the Pisquid River. . . . When young Henry reached manhood, he did not assume the expected role as manager of a respectable family farm, but turned instead to . . . that of itinerant preacher. From 1776 to his death in 1784 Alline promoted the work of the Great Awakening in Nova Scotia." (J Am Hist) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"For the 'external biography' of Alline, Bumsted . . . is necessarily dependent upon Alline's own Life and Journal, first published in 1806. The author's principal contribution comes in his analysis of Alline's theology; in this regard he argues that his much-neglected protagonist is 'British Canada's most important and prolific intellectual voice in the eighteenth century'. Such a claim hardly prepares one for the meagerness of Alline's output: only a single theological treatise, ■ few sermons, ■ small pamphlet, a volume of hymns, and the autobiography. . . . Nonetheless, Alline's influence remains limited and his historical niche modest. Among the Baptists of Nova Scotia and within the Free Will Baptist movement in the United States, his is a recognizable name." E. S. Gaustad

J Am Hist 59:406 S '72 380w

TLS p536 My 12 '72 350w

BUNTING, JOSIAH. The lionheads; a novel. 213p $5.95 Braziller

SBN 0-8076-0632-4 LC 78-188356

"Written by an officer who served in the Vietnamese Delta and teaches at the U.S. Military Academy, this first novel . . . is the story of George Lemming, the ambitious, arrogant commanding general of the 12th Division ('The Lionheads'), who achieves only success; in one way or another he buries his mistakes. . . . All action occurs shortly after [the Tet offensive in Vietnam] in March-April 1968." (Library J)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 229:112 My '72 60w

"This is a novel which might be more precisely labelled 'a slice of military history with ■ dash of melodrama.' . . . The plot is rather non-existent; the events of a two-month period are narrated in a manner most common to military histories. The characters are never much more than extremely well defined caricatures. . . . [But] as a nearly factual, well-written account of military maneuvers in post-Tet Vietnam, which yet offers some of the 'dramatic, war-story' stuff one expects from such a book, it has much to offer. . . . While the book would stand out on merely the merits of its role as a micro-cosmic military history, it also offers passages of some poetic beauty which transcend the scope of a mere chronicle." B. P. J. Przekop

Best Sell 32:3 Ap 1 '72 450w

Reviewed by Bernard Bergonzi
Commonweal 97:84 O 27 '72 360w

"Although Bunting has a good ear for dialogue and a skill for incisive character portrayal, he indulges in excessive details of strategy, ordnance, and topography. Superbly realistic, these details interrupt rather than support the story. One can hope that Bunting will produce a second military novel with more emphasis on who and why and less on how." C. R. Andrews

Library J 97:1458 Ap 15 '72 110w

Reviewed by Joni Bodart
Library J 97:1933 My 15 '72 120w [YA]

Reviewed by James Finn
Nation 214:766 Je 12 '72 900w
New Repub 167:22 Ag 19/26 '72 400w

"[The author's] formidable talents include ■ nimble literary style. He moves in edifying stages from division headquarters to a terminal rice paddy, documenting his route with logistical data and peopling it with unsteriotyped officers and men—including a maverick brigade commander from the Point. (Lemming came through the Citadel.) It is Major Bunting's pluralist view of the military that gives his novel an unusual cachet." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p30 Ap 16 '72 180w

Reviewed by Martin Ross
Sat R 55:76 Ap 29 '72 750w

Reviewed by Lance Morrow
Time 99:82 My 29 '72 750w

BUNTING, W. H., comp. Portrait of a port: Boston, 1852-1914. 519p il $20 Belknap press of Harvard univ. press

387.1 Shipping—Boston. Ships. Boston—Description—Views
ISBN 0-674-69075-3 LC 77-145893

Explanatory captions accompany this maritime history. "Most of the 234 photographs, covering coastal and deep-water schooners and steamers, were taken by 'pioneers' in the art and are published here for the first time. Although the majority of the photos depict vessels in port or just embarking, there are also a few . . . selections portraying other related facets such as shipbuilding, fishing, recreation at sea, and the Navy." (Library J) "Index." (Choice)

"Following Bunting's text is rather like being taken on a tour of the port by a venerable harbor pilot. Crisp and competent, he directs your attention to features which . . . would be overlooked by the novice. Yet, despite the wealth of detail, one is left with the impression that he has said only a fraction of what he knows. . . . [The] captions are minutely researched and cheerfully expounded. . . . The book has a serious purpose and the author has winnowed ledgers, shipping registers, port records, and log-books to provide a sound framework, but it is still a book for the amateur to enjoy." Timothy Severin

Book World p7 Ja 30 '72 1400w

"While delightful for the browser, this gratifyingly informative work should be considered seriously by all libraries for maritime and economic history collections, and especially for those in urban studies. . . . A brief but useful history of Boston port includes chapters on port facilities, vessels, shipbuilding and repairing (coastal and deep-water sail and steam), recreation, and naval activities. Annotation is refreshingly comprehensive and solidly based on both source and major secondary works. Brief appendices on photographers and sources of illustrations."

Choice 9:430 My '72 150w

"Combining his Harvard education and his commercial fisherman's knowledge, the author has compiled and annotated a photographic maritime history of the Boston port. . . . Bunting hopes the reader will measure these old photos in a 19th-Century frame of mind; his succinct description and often salty commentary succeed in setting such a perspective. This well-designed book will appeal to those who are familiar with Boston Harbor and adjacent waters and to those who enjoy good photographic art. Landlubbers will need some help with the nautical terms as there is no glossary included." David Bower
Library J 97:494 F 1 '72 150w

Reviewed by D. B. Little
New Eng Q 45:298 Je '72 750w

BURCHFIELD, R. W., ed. Oxford English dictionary, v 1. See Oxford English dictionary

BURGESS, ANTHONY, tr. Cyrano de Bergerac. See Rostand, E.

BURGESS, ANTHONY. One hand clapping. 215p $5.95 Knopf

ISBN 0-394-47280-2 LC 73-125826

Janet Shirley who tells the story is a "lower middle-class girl who lives in a fictitious Midlands city called Bradcaster. [She] is married to [Howard] a used-car salesman who . . . has a 'photographic brain' that ultimately wins him a thousand pounds on a television quiz show. . . . He parlays his quiz-prize money into a fortune by intuitively picking a succession of winning racehorses." (Sat R)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 229:108 Mr '72 140w

"As an exemplum of the sermon that 'money is the root of all evil,' we see the yearning, pot-of-gold dreaming of the Shirleys, an ordinary working class couple, turn to reality. Howard with his loot is no blighter. . . . He and Janet go on a whirlwind tour—they see nearly all of America in one chapter! Back home again [they are] exhausted from their inability to spend their fortune. . . . The novel is vintage Burgess: a short, neat professional way with a tale and all-caution-to-the-wind willingness to experiment with voice. Here he deliberately chooses Janet's voice to tell all, just to see if he could pull off the challenge of male writing as female." J. J. Murray

Best Sell 31:514 F 15 '72 360w

Reviewed by Audrey Foote
Book World p7 Mr '72 270w

Choice 9:1126 N '72 210w

Christian Science Monitor p10 F 10 '72 500w

"First published in Britain in 1961 under the pseudonym Joseph Kell [this] is a delightful work by a versatile and inventive craftsman. . . . While the diction is hardly Augustan, the narrative is witty and constrained, revealing the insights of a curiously intelligent but undereducated charmer. Highly recommended." Ed Sayre

Library J 97:698 F 15 '72 130w

Reviewed by R. P. Brickner

N Y Times Bk R p4 Mr 12 '72 1000w

New Yorker 48:154 Mr 18 '72 120w

Newsweek 79:73 Mr 6 '72 210w

"While Anthony Burgess's novels always have action and an array of characters, their outstanding trait, usually, is a flashing of verbal fireworks, as in the stepped-up Elizabethan language of Nothing Like the Sun [BRD 1964] or the grotesque, seemingly part-Slavic speech of a possible future Britain in A Clockwork Orange [BRD 1963]. No such pyrotechnics occur in [this work]. . . . Howard's sudden transformation from used-car salesman into an independently wealthy man . . . puts a strain on the novel's credibility. And as black humor, with occasional overtones of Edgar Allan Poe, takes over, the story become more unbelievable yet. . . . Burgess manages to remain mischievously amusing throughout most of this farfetched novel, whose Zen Koan title is also that of a play which Howard and Janet see in London." H. T. Moore

Sat 55:73 F 12 '72 700w

Time 99:73 F 14 '72 330w

BURIAN, JARKA. The scenography of Josef Svoboda. 197p il $25 Wesleyan univ. press

792 Theaters—Stage setting and scenery

ISBN 0-8195-4041-2 LC 77-153101

The author begins with a biographical and critical essay on the Czech scenographer. The major part of the study is devoted to "considerations of some sixty productions, described [partly] in Svoboda's own words, transcribed and translated from tape-recorded interviews with the author. Mr. Burian has . . . used more than two hundred black-and-white photographs to reinforce visually his explication of the development of Svoboda's methods." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"[An] annotated listing of all Svoboda's productions . . . round out this volume which, for the first time, gives western readers their first in-depth view of a man who is possibly the greatest working designer in contemporary theater and which also gives a clear insight into the recent innovative Czechoslovakian theatre that nurtured his development. Any serious student of theater history or production will find informative and inspirational value in this long-awaited study."

Choice 9:383 My '72 140w

"Burian, a professor at the State University of New York at Albany spent a year in Prague working closely with Svoboda in the preparation of this book, and it is an excellent book indeed. Svoboda is one of the most renowned contemporary European designers, perhaps best known for his many innovative experiments with light and theater space. Although Svoboda himself has said that photographs cannot convey the actual experience of the live production [those] here do capture the artistic excitement of a Svoboda production. Burian gives a complete survey of Svoboda's work from the earliest designs down to his work at the present time, and provides a complete chronological register of all Svoboda productions from 1943 to 1971." A. C. Willers

Library J 97:514 F 1 '72 150w

BURKE, GERALD. Towns in the making. 193p il maps $11.95 St Martins

711 City planning. City planning—Great Britain

LC 78-165469

A "survey of town planning and build[ing] from river-valley civilisations of prehistory, through classical Greece and Rome into medieval and Renaissance western Europe and thence, in rather more detail, to Britain over the past three centuries. Urban development of various periods is studied by reference to selected towns and districts and to the social, economic and political factors that contributed to changes in the urban function and scene." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The first third [of the book] is a short, sound, and standard survey of town building from the earliest times through the Renaissance; it contains all the predictable clichés.

BURKE, GERALD—Continued

The next third begins to concentrate on Britain after the Tudors. The final third deals with 19th- and 20th-century Britain. Because it is meant for British college students in city planning, it concentrates on physical planning and gives only very superficial references to social, political, ideological, and other factors in town and city development. Recommended for any city planning library because its last third contains useful information, well condensed and presented; also recommended for larger architecture, art, and Anglophiliac libraries. Brief bibliography.

Choice 9:496 Je '72 120w

"To have covered all the salient developments from pre-history to the Buchanan report in 180 well-illustrated pages is achievement enough, and students who have long needed some such handy and comprehensive coverage should be grateful to Mr Burke. Nevertheless the tracing of a few cross-currents and influences might have added coherence and a synoptic dimension to the merely sequential."

TLS p852 J1 23 '71 290w

BURKE, JOHN. Duet in diamonds; the flamboyant saga of Lillian Russell and Diamond Jim Brady in America's gilded age. 286p il $7.95 Putnam

B or 92 Brady, James Buchanan. Russell, Lillian
LC 75-187133

This is a portrayal of the careers and friendship of Diamond Jim Brady and Lillian Russell. "Brady, born above his father's waterfront saloon, began his career as a Broadway bellhop and railroad ticket taker. . . . He became a salesman . . . propelling his showmanship first as a superseller of railroad equipment and subsequently as a steel-car magnate, amassing a fortune of $12,000,000. Born Helen Leonard in a small Iowa town, Lillian Russell became the reigning queen of the musical stage with a phenomenal voice capable of hitting eight high C's in one performance and by general acclaim 'the most desirable woman in America.'" (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Burke writes not only of these two superstars, but of the era in which they lived. . . . The legends of Lillian Russell and Jim Brady are intertwined. They lived in a fabulous age, never to be forgotten and never to be repeated. Extensive research went into the writing of this book. Facts are abundant but there is a lack of feeling for the characters. Perhaps this is a flaw that is inherent in this type of book." I. N. Pompea

Best Sell 32:113 Je 1 '72 470w

"This tandem biography of two of the fin de siècle's most colorful characters reads better than many novels. Although the 'queen' of the late 19th Century stage and the first super-showman/salesman were a fantastic duo, their saga contains many American characteristics. . . . Here is a bit of social history retold with appropriate grace and gusto." R. W. Schwarz

Library J 97:2081 Je 1 '72 100w

BURKHEAD, JESSE. Public expenditure [by] Jesse Burkhead [and] Jerry Miner. 346p $12.95 Aldine pub.

336.3 Finance. Economic policy
ISBN 0-202-06042-X LC 76-91725

In this study the "economic aspects of public expenditures are synthesized by the authors with the political aspects, particularly within the context of public decision-making or social choice." (Choice)

"In examining the several dimensions of governmental expenditures, Burkhead and Miner provide an excellent survey of the current knowledge in the field and give several new insights as well. . . . [This volume] is highly recommended . . . for advanced undergraduate or graduate courses in public finance."

Choice 9:100 Mr '72 110w

"[This excellent exposition] proceeds from theories of partial and general equilibrium applied to public goods right through to the concept of public policy where there has been market failure and into the politics of collective choice; it also gives a detailed account of fashionable policies such as programme budgeting and benefit cost analysis. Indeed, it would be hard to find these last more lucidly analysed. . . . A short chapter at the very end ventures into what perhaps ought to be the subject-matter of another book, which is the determinants and consequences of public expenditure. This, however, while it offers a number of brief hints and indications, is a very slight essay. It is to be hoped that the authors . . . will pursue the subject further."

TLS p250 Mr 3 '72 480w

BURNET, SIR MACFARLANE. Dominant mammal; the biology of human destiny. 205p $8.95 St Martins

301.31 Biology. Philosophy. Human ecology. Man
LC 70-183879

The author's "thesis is that we must, quite soon, develop a stable human ecosystem on earth, as the growth and expansion that have characterized human achievements are approaching practical limits. The biological adaptations that served so well as our species evolved—making man the 'dominant mammal'—must now be redirected or changed before it is too late. It is the author's belief and hope that this will be done." (Library J) Bibliography. Index

"[This book] is readable and fascinating."

R. L. Hough

Library J 97:2420 J1 '72 140w

"It is depressing that so eminent a biologist as Professor Burnet should have no more than Wellsian platitudes to offer in discussing the most fascinating biological problem of all: the future of the human species. . . . The next hundred years may be critical for our species. It is not only pollution and population which will need to be controlled; there is a worse danger, intensified by books like Dominant Mammal, which serve to weaken the spirit of optimism needed to power our embryo scientific civilization."

TLS p400 Ap 7 '72 460w

BURNET, SIR MACFARLANE. Genes, dreams and realities. 232p il $7.95 Basic bks.

574.8 Molecular biology. Genetics. Immunity
SBN 465-02672-9 LC 72-177260

The first theme of this book "is that the success of medical research has come from contending with the impact of the environment—the illnesses caused by infection, injury and malnutrition. To master the remaining diseases—degenerative changes, genetically determined disease, disease caused by multiple factors, ageing and cancer—will present problems for science and medicine that may never be solved. The second theme is that all the effort put into the discoveries of molecular biology (DNA, the genetic code) . . . has produced little or no return for medicine; that [there is no value in] ideas of curing genetic abnormalities by "genetic engineering," or of a cure for cancer being just round the corner." (Economist) Index.

"A Nobel Prize winner in medicine discounts the ability of modern or future molecular biology to contribute significantly toward solutions of mankind's problems. Writing to the educated layman, Burnet predicts that the recent advances in molecular biology will never be utilized to correct human genetic disorders and questions the use of such techniques even if they become feasible. . . . A major defect of this challenging and provocative book is its complete lack of references to support its pessimistic views of the future value of all that may be encompassed by the term 'molecular biology.'"

Choice 9:390 My '72 150w

"When in this book Sir Macfarlane is writing on his own subjects—viruses, cancer and of course immunology (including auto-immunity), for of this he is the doyen—he is at his best. His best is much of this book; it is lucid and authoritative and a pleasure to read. . . . Elsewhere, in discussing mental disease, population, the limits of therapy, the future of biological science and indeed of the world (much of which seems irrelevant) he reveals a pessimism that becomes grating. . . . No doubt a corrective is necessary for a public led to expect marvels from bio-engineering. . . . But the book is also irritating. The author . . . does [not] mention genetic counseling . . . [and the index is] glaringly inadequate."

Economist 240:46 Ag 21 '71 700w

"[This book] is intended to introduce common sense into the discussion by giving a straightforward account of genetics in relation to human disease. This aspect of the book is admirable. It is when Sir Macfarlane Burnet takes off from the secure base of fact to plunge into speculations about such matters as the possibility of a cancer cure, the population problem, and the aims of medicine in general, that many of his admirers will part company with him. . . . Sir Macfarlane can see 'no hope for any revolutionary improvement in the cure of cancer'. This is a molecular biological statement that no molecular biologist would feel able to venture, so slight is our real understanding of the problem."

TLS p1310 O 22 '71 750w

BURNETT, ANNE, PIPPIN. Catastrophe survived; Euripides' plays of mixed reversal. 234p $11.25 Oxford

882 Euripides
LC 70-29942

In this study of seven of Euripides' plays, the author's approach "is along thematic lines: All seven plays in one way or another create a situation of catastrophe survived, and though they make differing dramatic analyses of that situation, all seven profit by it in the same way in the end. Each play shows human exertion to be blind and ineffective at best, sordid sometimes, and occasionally contemptible and cruel. And each play meanwhile depicts a divine pity and purpose that can, when it is ready, turn disaster into bliss." (Yale R)

"Drawing upon the whole corpus of Attic tragedy, the satyr plays, the fragments, and vase-painting, Professor Burnett studies plot and structure in seven plays of Euripides: Alc., I.T., Helen, Ion, Andromache, H.F., Orestes. She views each play as constituted out of a combination of 'matrix plots,' dexterously varied, distorted, parodied, destroyed. . . . After a brief general introduction (unfortunately rather dry and ungraceful), Burnett proceeds to show how Euripides brings together and modulates between three or even four of these type-plots in a single play. . . . The analyses are sensitive, closely reasoned, tightly packed. There is a wealth of valuable observations and often brilliant insights."

Charles Segal

Class World 65:275 Ap/My '72 750w

"This book is a highly stylized piece of writing. . . . [The author] recognizes but does not fully appreciate that the understanding of Greek plays requires an understanding of the gods . . . [and] has failed to do any hard thinking about the gods. . . . [This] limits the usefulness of her study, valuable though her many insights are." Seth Benardete

Library J 96:4095 D 15 '71 100w

TLS p374 Mr 31 '72 1600w

"Burnett is among the very best of the current-day readers of Greek drama. She writes a prose so eloquent that it very often verges on poetry. If one did not know that she has been publishing articles on Euripides for more than a decade, one could feel it from the intensity of the appreciation evidenced in her book. Her subject is not merely presented, he is savored. . . . The author does much to correct the cherished misconception of Euripides as Protogorean agnostic, although at times she does overjustify the ways of the gods. . . . [However], for all the brilliance of its insights, for all the many Euripidean knots untied by insightful readings, the book lacks a conclusion—one which might well be drawn from some of the author's observations."

Erich Segal

Yale R 61:452 Mr '72 1600w

BURNEY, CHARLES. The peoples of the hills: ancient Ararat and Caucasus [by] Charles Burney [and] David Marshall Lang. 323p pl maps $15 Praeger

956.6 Armenia—History. Caucasus—History
LC 76-77301

Beginning with the prehistoric settlements of Armenia, Burney describes the archeology "of the Anatolian societies and their artistic and technological developments all the way to upper Mesopotamia. The history of the Kingdom of Urartu, the rival of Assyria, is traced reign by reign from its origins until its downfall and the coming of the Armenians into their new homeland. . . . Lang retraces the histories of the Persians, Greeks, and Romans as they relate to that part of the old world." (Choice) Index.

"The authors made a serious and successful attempt to write a coherent story of the ancient Near Eastern cultures in what are present-day Turkey, Iran, and the U.S.S.R. . . . Most impressive are [Lang's] accounts of Mithridates Eupator and the epic story of Tigranes the Great as they struggled for freedom against Roman imperialism. The story stops when the Mongols invade these territories in the 13th century. The book is scholarly and ought to be read by students of archaeology. Historians will enjoy reading Chapters 5-7. Literature and architecture majors will find inspiration in the remainder of this magnificent book."

Choice 9:700 J1/Ag '72 170w

"The first two-thirds of the book [by Dr Burney] (as one learns from the cover, not from the book). . . . Professor Lang's third is a readable and useful survey of Armenia and the Caucasus over the later period, necessarily compressed, but covering history, religion, literature and the arts. The two parts seem to be addressed to slightly different readerships. Good illustrations, but less good maps, poorly tied in to the text; one has to read the book with an atlas at one's side."

Economist 241:63 D 25 '71 140w

"[The archeological] section of the book is learned and very informative. It will prove truly helpful to students of archaeology, yet it makes difficult reading as it is written in the style of an archaeological report; the wider public is unlikely to be stimulated by it. . . . [Some] infelicities recur, but the four final chapters make better reading. They seem to be aimed at the intelligent tourist. The information, although perhaps inevitably potted, covers a wide field reliably. Yet too little attention is devoted to describing Byzantium's as distinct from Rome's influence. . . . The absence of a bibliography is to be regretted for notes, however, detailed, are no substitute."

TLS p182 F 18 '72 800w

BURNINGHAM, JOHN. Mr. Gumpy's outing. unip il $4.95; lib bdg $4.59 Holt

ISBN 0-03-086612-X; 0-03-086613-8 (lib bdg)
LC 77-159507

This book was awarded the Kate Greenaway medal for 1970. It tells how the animals "squeeze themselves, one after another, into Mr. Gumpy's boat. All goes well until the tightly packed cow, pig and so on (not to mention two children) start misbehaving, when the boat tips the whole party into the water; undaunted they swim to the bank and walk back to Mr. Gumpy's house for . . . tea." (TLS) "Ages two to five." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by J. F. Smith

Christian Science Monitor p7 F 24 '72
50w

Horn Bk 48:[40] F '72 160w

"The illustrations, skillfully drawn cross-hatched brown ink drawings alternating with full-page impressionistic paintings dominantly in muted greens and browns, are outstanding for their very expressive animals and numerous warm, humorous touches—e.g., an around the table scene features a benign sheep sipping through a straw, etc. And, the simple, cumulative text and easy, natural attitudes of Gumpy and company are sure to please the picture-book audience." P. D. Pollack

Library J 97:274 Ja 15 '72 130w

"Mr. Gumpy (not quite grumpy) collects a risky punt load of energetic passengers. Each is separately introduced in a country-fresh, full-page watercolor; each can be rediscovered in smaller sketches of the ever more crowded boat. Print is large and sparse, easy for the adult to read upside down while showing the pictures. A blessing of a book. Pored over, read aloud or acted out it should bring joy to the nursery." J. B. Mercer

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p46 N 7 '71 110w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 54:45 D 11 '71 90w

TLS p1261 O 30 '70 100w

BURNS, J. PATOUT, ed. Grace and freedom. See Lonergan, B. J. F.

BURNS, JAMES MACGREGOR. Uncommon sense. 196p $6.95 Harper
917.3 U.S.—Civilization
SBN 06-010584-4 LC 78-161636

The author "deals with the problem behind the problems which are troubling the United States. It deals with why America's political system is stuck nearly at dead center and what can be done about it." (Christian Science Monitor) Reference and subject index.

Reviewed by T. H. Clancy
America 126:266 Mr 11 '72 360w

Reviewed by B. P. J. Przekop
Best Sell 31:507 F 15 '72 300w

"With a hint of possible apocalypse unexpected in so judicious a man, Burns attempts no less a task than trying to figure out what went wrong with America. . . . If sweeping changes do not begin soon [he] sees either a steady disintegration of society or revolution. He overestimates, I think, the possibility of an attempted revolution. As he points out, the circumstances for a successful revolution simply do not exist. . . . There's much in this slender book that stimulates the kind of innovative political thought we need." R. J. Walton

Book World p3 Ja 16 '72 1200w

Choice 9:714 J1/Ag '72 200w

Reviewed by J. Q. Wilson
Commentary 53:74 My '72 1050w

Christian Century 89:49 Ja 12 '72 60w

"Burns has written the right book at the right time for the right reasons. . . . And it comes at the right moment because the climate has never been more conducive to change—good and bad. It is, I believe, written for the right reasons in that it seeks to persuade public opinion and leadership opinion that basic reforms in the way Americans govern themselves are imperative and attainable. . . . There will be many who will not accept out of hand all that Professor Burns prescribes . . . [but he] deserves to be heard [and] he needs to be heard." Roscoe Drummond

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ja 13 '72 600w

"As Burns argues in detail, intractable modern problems such as those relating to poverty and race can be solved neither by piecemeal reform nor by revolution. But they can be overcome by 'Principled Realism,' a renewed commitment to the credo of individual liberty and equal opportunity that historically has energized American national action. Specifically, Burns suggests a series of critical reform projects, including the revivification of Congress, the streamlining of the executive branch, and the building of a coalition party of movement. His analysis struck me as more romantic than uncommon, but others might find it stimulating." Charles DeBenedetti

Library J 97:210 Ja 15 '72 130w

Reviewed by D. J. C. Brudnoy
Nat R 24:754 J1 7 '72 200w

Reviewed by Peter Caws
New Repub 166:24 My 13 '72 1000w

Reviewed by Elizabeth Drew
N Y Times Bk R p3 Je 4 '72 650w

"Written in an imperative though nondidactic tone, Uncommon Sense is a book from which everyone can learn and benefit. If the work suffers from any one flaw, I would say that it lies in the author's too easy rejection of the strategy of compromise. . . . [It] provides a critical and provocative view of our gains and failures, and of our national goals, which—as Professor Burns reminds us—always assumed not a planned but a planning society." M. R. Konvitz

Sat R 55:70 F 12 '72 1300w

Reviewed by S. K. Bailey
Va Q R 48:580 autumn '72 550w

BURNS, P. L., comp. Papers on Malay subjects; sel. and introduced by P. L. Burns. 468p $35 Oxford

959.5 Malaya—History
LC 79-942315

This reprint of selected studies from the series Papers on Malay subjects, originally edited by R. J. Wilkinson, includes the final 1923 reprise of Wilkinson's general history of the peninsular Malays.

"A useful reissue. . . . Prepared by six 'scholar-officials,' the Papers, long since unavailable individually, still possess value ■ documents of the period (especially the Perak State Council Minutes, 1877-82, published nowhere else). They are tidily re-edited with a brief, largely bibliographic introduction. No index or other scholarly apparatus is provided." Choice 8:1500 Ja '72 100w

"Wilkinson, one of those administrator-scholars that the British Raj produced in Asia, began in 1906 a series of papers on Malay customs and life in order that young British officers would have some background to the people they were called on to govern. From his post in Perak, he wrote (and organized others to do the same) pioneer essays, based on close personal observation, on Malay arts and crafts, Malay law, rice cultivation, literature and various other aspects of life and customs and history. Most of these papers are now out of print. A few of the most lasting are in fairly recent issues of the Journal of the Malayan Branch, Royal Asiatic Society. Writing of Wilkinson in that Journal in 1952, its erudite editor C. R. Gibson-Hill said of the history section, 'extensive editing would be needed before republication would be justifiable. The book here reviewed consists of three sections, all on history, and no such editing has been attempted.' K. G. Tregonning

Pacific Affairs 45:316 summer '72 250w

BURNSHAW, STANLEY. In the terrified radiance; a book of new poems, with selections from his earlier volumes. 208p $6.50; pa $2.45 Braziller

811
SBN 0-8076-0652-9; 0-8076-0653-7 (pa)
LC 72-80013

"This book of 49 new poems includes sections from three of Burnshaw's earlier volumes—The Iron Land [BRD 1936], Early and Late Testament [BRD 1953], and Caged in an Animal's Mind [BRD 1964]. . . . One portion portrays scenes from the life of Mallarmé, and another portion contains translations of works by Octavio Paz, Rafael Alberti, Paul Eluard, and others." (Library J)

"This book represents a summing up of Burnshaw for the past four decades, and is an ideal volume to purchase for libraries which do not have any of his previous works." P. H. Marvin

Library J 97:3163 O 1 '72 140w

"[The author] is not enslaved by his own theories; he goes around them, above them, inside them—and, above all beyond them. His refreshing openness results in a kind of all-embracing nature-mystique, an adventurous sharing of the earth with well, with the others. . . . In the Terrified Radiance' is a poetry of the 'whole creature,' all languages, all cultures contributing, mind and body leaping and singing, writing like ■ beast." James Dickey

N Y Times Bk R p4 S 24 '72 900w

BURROUGHS, WILLIAM S. The wild boys; a book of the dead. 184p $5.95 Grove
ISBN 0-394-47586-0 LC 78-155133

The story surrounding the 'wild boys,' revolutionary homosexuals charged with a mystical commitment to destruction, "fades out from St Louis in the 20's, Mexico yesterday, today, tomorrow, to Marrakech in the 1980's, with a diverted tour to Nome, Alaska, in 1898. . . . Most of the futuristic horror tale is devoted to the fantasizing of 'the coming of age in Samoa.'" (Best Sell)

"I suppose it's possible to turn pornography into art, but when the result is merely to artify it, I wonder if we shouldn't label it 'an expense of spirit in a waste of shame.' . . . The acts described [here] are always the same, the writing repetitive and boring (no pun intended), so much so that I paused during the reading to wonder if Burroughs was attempting self parody. . . . He dwells so lovingly on each piece of rectal pleasure one would think it was paradisiacal sex among the angels rather than aberrational acts he's describing. I don't question the legitimacy of the experiment. . . . I just don't think the artifying of it, using the best Robbe-Grillet techniques, lifts it much above the obviousness of experiment." J. J. Murray

Best Sell 31:352 N 1 '71 600w

"[This] is a difficult and perplexing novel, if indeed it is a novel at all. Rather it is a vision, a vision of humanity that goes beyond Kafka in its total denuding of the conventions and relationships upon which the business of life is conducted. Here humanity is fractured and the pieces rearranged into a new order. . . . [What emerges] evokes a quality of horror that is clear and palpable. Burroughs is ■ master of language and syntax. His narrative proceeds through a series of controlled images, images that are either intensely lyrical (as in the frequent descriptions of homosexual encounters) or cold and disjointed. As a result the work haunts the imagination: it is elusive, disturbing, and evocative. It is a book for the very few who would go the distance to its conclusion." Herbert Liebman

Library J 96:2539 Ag '71 200w

Reviewed by John Spurling

New Statesman 83:720 My 26 '72 400w

Reviewed by Alfred Kazin

N Y Times Bk R p4 D 12 '71 1700w

"Wild Boys are Burroughs's old characters apotheosized into a brotherhood of homosexual hashishins. Blessed with an emotional death that engulfs every passion and blots frustration out of mind, they're like viruses themselves. They infect without being infected. . . . Burroughs exults in their iciness. . . . At fifty-seven, Burroughs has never written better of the fiving psyche, never more vividly of the loathsome circumstances it flees. Wild Boys is brutal hagiography, a book of demon saints purged of hope or desire. They are one collective hero, the culmination of Burroughs's passion for the detached and abstract. Through them he captures the vibrations of total blankness, the sensation of freedom in ■ psychic nowhere." Josephine Hendin

Sat R 54:46 O 30 '71 1250w

"It is going to take more than an occasional sentence like 'The atom bomb explodes over Hiroshima spreading radioactive particles' to make it apparent that Mr. Burroughs's intentions are didactic or reformative, if clandestine. Indeed, assuming that Mr Burroughs has a point to make at all, one is left wondering how many close-ups of sodomy and masturbation will be needed to make it obvious. . . . The book is not pornographic; the sodomy is too mechanically similar for that, and the garden of tuberos organs altogether too literary. On the other hand, it is only by an effort of will that The Wild Boys can be taken to be holding a distorting mirror up to the horrors of our time, or to be offering, by implication, cautionary prophecies for the future."

TLS p622 Je 2 '72 480w

BURROW, J. A. Ricardian poetry: Chaucer, Gower, Langland and the 'Gawain' poet. 165p $5.75 Yale univ. press

821 English poetry—History and criticism

This book "attempts to define the essential characteristics of late fourteenth-century English poetry through study of its four great poets." (Va Q R)

"Burrow's book is distinguished from standard histories by its synoptic concentration on a few major figures, yet its concerns are conventionally formal in a way that, for example, [D.] Howard's in The three temptations [BRD 1967], are not. . . . There is a need for imaginative introductions to late medieval English literature. We are lucky to be offered one so readable, informed, and sensible in its judgments."

Choice 9:366 My '72 170w

"There are good things here, especially Burrow's perceptive remarks on the poetry of exemplification and on narrative structures, but his characterization of the style of the period will not, I suspect, prove convincing. With a too exclusive concern for surfaces, Burrow is forced to the superficial position that all of these poets, like Arnold's Chaucer, are somehow lacking in 'high seriousness.' Burrow's romantic reading of 'Troilus and Criseyde' and the 'Knight's Tale' shows all too clearly his notion of high seriousness in poetry, and it is therefore not surprising, though disappointing, that he reaches this view of Ricardian poetry."

Va Q R 48:lili spring '72 150w

BURTON, ELIZABETH. The pageant of early Victorian England, 1837-1861; il. by Felix Kelly [Eng title: The early Victorians at home, 1837-1861]. 335p $7.95 Scribner

914.2 England—Social life and customs
SBN 684-12569-2 LC 74-162746

"Burton carries her earlier studies of English history (The Pageant of Elizabethan England [BRD 1959], and The Pageant of Georgian England [BRD 1969], into the period between Queen Victoria's accession in 1837 and the death of Prince Albert in 1861. Chapters on buildings, food, medicine, recreation, gardens, etc. are sandwiched between treatments of Victoria's early years and a character sketch of her husband." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Mrs. Burton's emphasis, as in her earlier works . . . is not on social conflict, but on stability. Victorian society . . . lends itself eminently to her skills. She catches the spirit of the age. . . . When [she] has completed our kaleidoscopic journey, we know that, were we suddenly transported to Birmingham in 1850, we would find the scene familiar." A. J. Hamilton

America 127:372 N 4 '72 160w

Reviewed by F. K. J. Homer

Best Sell 32:302 O 1 '72 380w

"Although the book has neither the breadth nor the erudition of The Making of Victorian England [by G. Kitson Clark, BRD 1963], it incorporates information from a wide variety of printed sources into an interesting and well-written narrative. There is a considerable amount of what W. L. Burn has called 'selective Victorianism,' and the annotation omits page numbers; nonetheless, the work is useful." J. A. Casada

Library J 97:2390 JI '72 160w

Reviewed by Chris Waters

New Statesman 84:198 Ag 11 '72 230w

"The chapter on medicine is needlessly weighted by potted biographies of the pioneering surgeons and physicians of the day; it is not until Miss Burton discusses home remedies and the patent-medicine industry that she comes into her own and produces some interesting source material. . . . Her brief remarks on the characteristics and merits of authors are tendentious. . . . It would have been interesting to have included material on newspapers, periodical literature, and levels of literacy. One misses, too, any account of educational theory and patterns of schooling. Gardens however, are clearly a subject dear to Miss Burton; she deals with them at length with affection and scholarship. . . . [Her] style and presentation are for the most part easy and straightforward. . . . [The illustrations] are very pleasing, and one would not wish a single one to be removed."

TLS p841 JI 21 '72 850w

BURTON, HESTER. The Henchmans at home; il. by Victor G. Ambrus. 182p $4.50 Crowell
ISBN 0-690-37706-1 LC 78-171003

"England at the end of the nineteenth century is the setting for . . . [this] story of life in the family of a country doctor, spanning eleven years and consisting of six complete short stories. The book begins when Rob, the youngest, has a birthday party from which he is banished in disgrace for fighting with another little boy. The second story, which takes place two years later, is about Ellen. She is now twelve and puzzled by a mystery surrounding a former playmate. Eventually she discovers that her friend has had a baby and has been . . . ostracized by her family." (Horn Bk) "Ages eleven to fourteen." (Sat R)

"Funny, serious, touching—the stories vary as the growing experiences of the three young people vary, but all contribute to the depiction of a steady growth of personality and character and of the building of family strength. Beautifully and convincingly written, the story of the trials, triumphs, and everyday experiences of the Henchmans comes to a satisfying conclusion with romance for Ellen, William's knowledge that his life will be devoted to medicine, and young Rob's promising future in science." B. R.

Horn Bk 48:143 Ap '72 210w

"Best of all, I think, is the story of Ellen at 12 which marvellously captures that common feeling in early adolescence of foreboding, of nasty things just beyond one's understanding, of 'Nameless dreads hung about her like ■ swarm of gnats' Mrs. Burton scarcely puts ■ foot wrong and she must be forgiven the anachronistic hamsters." Ann Thwaite

New Statesman 81:312 Mr ■ '71 60w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 55:82 My 20 '72 80w

"It is an agreeable book—perhaps the more so (if the less historically telling) because its sympathies are always the implicit ones of a later day. Occasionally one queries a fact: were hamsters domestically current in England in 1891? At the same time, we find it wholly in key that heroine Ellen should be 'swept up on the crest of ■ huge swelling wave of pride and joy' when the band breaks into 'Onward Christian Soldiers.' 'How Wonderful to be English!' she thinks. 'How glorious to be C. of E!'"

BURTON, HESTER—Continued

TLS p385 Ap ■ '71 240w

BURTON, MAURICE, ed. The Shell natural history of Britain. See The Shell natural history of Britain

BURTON, ROBERT E. Democrats of Oregon: the pattern of minority politics, 1900-1956. 158p $7.50 Univ. of Ore. bks.

329.3 Democratic party. Oregon—Politics and government—1898-
LC 76-20919

This study is concerned with Democratic party politics in Oregon. Following ■ analysis of the political setting in Oregon, Burton traces the limited electoral success of the Democratic party. Included also is an account of the party's failure to capitalize on the increase in registration during the 1930's.

"Burton has written ■ lucid and coherent account of party politics which emphasizes elections, issues, personalities, and factional maneuvers. But there is more narrative than analysis. The clash of interests and the dynamics of electoral behavior are given inadequate treatment. . . . [This] history narrates well the events in changing party politics. But that isn't enough. . . . A broader perspective and further analysis would have enriched this fine study." L. G. Seligman

Am Pol Sci R 66:198 Mr '72 1050w

"Unfortunately, Burton provides little analysis of his subject. The book ends with an epilogue rather than a conclusion. And, indeed, there is little to 'conclude' since he had no central research hypothesis. It is recommended, however, as a contribution to a slim literature on state parties and the curious 'anti-party' politics of the West."

Choice 8:608 Je '71 120w

BUSCH, BRITON COOPER. Britain, India, and the Arabs, 1914-1921, 522p maps $14.50 Univ. of Calif. press

327.42 Great Britain—Foreign relations—Near East. Near East—Foreign relations—Great Britain
ISBN 0-520-01821-4 LC 71-132421

This work deals with the "shaping and execution of British policies in the Arab world during and immediately after World War I. It thus complements the author's earlier work, Britain and the Persian Gulf, 1894-1914 (BRD 1969)." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"In emphasizing the British side, Professor Busch has given little attention to Arab questions: the nature and content of Arab nationalism or Arab objectives in terms of independence and unity, for example. These problems are perhaps outside the scope of the present work, but they might have provided a useful counterpoint. Nevertheless Professor Busch has given us an extremely valuable study, well written and researched with admirable thoroughness. His book will go far toward illuminating a hitherto dark corner of Middle Eastern history." L. C. Rose

Am Hist ■ 77:1093 O '72 600w

"[For this study the author draws] from official correspondence and public documents, private correspondence and memoirs, ■ well as materials that have already been surveyed in many other works covering this period. . . . The account is lengthy and well documented. . . . While the author covers more than adequately the numerous interagency and countless jurisdictional disputes among diverse British official factions, and does make passing reference to public sentiment in India, the book would have been even more valuable if emphasis had also been placed on the attitudes, opinions, and outlooks of the Indian Indians ■ well as those who represent the British empire in India." Don Peretz

Ann Am Acad 401:166 My '72 600w

"Events themselves . . . are briefly outlined, since . . . [Busch's] major concern is with the how's and why's of political and military decisions. An equally appropriate title could have been 'The clash of personalities and policies: Britain and the Arab world, 1914-1921'.

[This] work is not for the general reader. It is a searching examination of policy decisions, sound and unsound, and frequently challenges generally accepted judgments put forth in works of a more narrative structure."

Choice 9:112 Mr '72 140w

"[This] book may be too overloaded with fact for the casual reader, but it is good reading for any student of modern Middle Eastern history, or of the British machinery of policy-making two generations ago. . . . [The author's] quotations are lively and his comment keeps his reader's eye on the main points, and the results, of the muddles that he retails. . . . [This book has] a good bibliography and minutely detailed footnotes, and . . . [its] only snag is a price that only the rich can afford."

TLS p1502 D 3 '71 750w

BUSCH, PHYLLIS S. A walk in the snow; phot. by Mary M. Thacher. 40p $3.95 Lip-pincott

500.9 Snow—Juvenile literature. Nature study—Juvenile literature
LC 79-151476

"Photographs are used both to show the beauty of winter and the ways in which an observant child can find clues to wind directions, read animal tracks, make a plastic copy of a snowflake, test the effect of color on temperature (a piece of dark cloth and a piece of white sink to different depths), or see the evidence of repeated snowfalls in the layers of a snowbank. . . . Ages seven to nine." (Sat R)

"The book is attractive, simpler than other factual materials now available, and should interest children." Margaret Bush
Library J 97:2476 JI '72 60w

"Clear, sharp photographs. . . . The text gives easily followed instruction that require little equipment for the investigation of natural phenomena." Zena Sutherland
Sat R 55:46 Ja 15 '72 80w

BUSH, DOUGLAS. Matthew Arnold; a survey of his poetry and prose. (Masters of world lit. ser.) 206p $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

828 Arnold, Matthew
LC 72-144817

This study is concerned with Arnold's "life, poetry, literary criticism, education, society and politics [and] religion." (TLS) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[Bush] argues convincingly for Arnold's real and continued relevance. . . . [His demonstration] that Arnold was a responsible social thinker is accurate and useful. Although the standards remain William A. Madden's Matthew Arnold [BRD 1967] for the prose, and A. Dwight Culler's Imaginative Reason [BRD 1967] for the poetry, this book will be ■ welcome addition." S. R. Rounds

Library J 97:501 F 1 '72 160w

"[This book] is loaded down to the water-line with information. . . . [Bush deals with] Arnold's poetry and prose in the light of contemporary Arnold scholarship and criticism. . . . Not much can be said about 'Balder Dead' in eight lines or about the Emerson essay in ■ single paragraph—but Professor Bush struggles to keep proportion. . . . He knows his subject's writings familiarly and has read with an admirable all-American thoroughness in the proliferating 'professional' literature. . . . [He] obviously fears . . . that to many general readers . . . 'Matthew Arnold's voice . . . may seem too far off and faint to reach us' at ■ time when 'extreme revolutionary zeal seems to be attended by anti-intellectual, anti-cultural intolerance and a false notion of 'relevance'."

TLS p59 Ja 21 '72 850w

BUSH, DOUGLAS, jt. auth. The minor English poems. See A variorum commentary on the poems of John Milton, v2

BUSH, SUSAN. The Chinese literati on painting: Su Shih (1037-1101) to Tung Ch'i-ch'ang (1555-1636). (Harvard-Yenching inst. stud. 27) 227p il $7 Harvard univ. press

759.951 Painting. Chinese
ISBN 0-674-12425-1 LC 78-152698

This book deals with the literati themselves ■ artists and calligraphers. "Basing her conclusions on the words of the painters and critics themselves (all translated in complete passages and transcribed in Chinese in an appendix). [Dr. Bush] shows how the attitude which Tung Ch'i-ch'ang has come to represent rather exclusively is only the climax of a movement of opinion traceable through the Ming period." (TLS) Bibliography.

"[This] is quite the best that has appeared in the West on the subject of Chinese art theory. . . . What makes this new treatise so original is Susan Bush's readiness to take historical views where others are content to accept authority. . . . With candour unaccustomed in such studies, Dr. Bush demonstrates how caste exclusiveness and social snobbery could be made overt criteria of excellence, so that personal and regional groupings of artists came to have real art-historical significance in Chinese eyes. . . . Her book will be indispensable to Western students of the subject. . . . [however, there are some items missing among the books listed in the bibliography.]"

TLS p761 J1 '72 800w

Va Q R 48:lxvii spring '72 90w

BUSSAGLI, MARIO. 5000 years of the art of India [by] Mario Bussagli [and] Calambus Sivaramamurti [Chapters 1-3, 5, 8, 9, 11, 12, tr. by Anna Maria Brainerd]. $55p col il $25 Abrams

709.54 Art, Indic—History

ISBN 0-8109-0118-3 LC 78-183846

"The text covers not only the history of Indian art through the Mughal period, but extends into Southeast Asia, Tibet, Ceylon, and Indonesia." (Choice)

"The bounty of 397 color illustrations gives this book sensuous appeal and its special distinction. Since much of the architecture and most of the sculpture is not served by color but by the sharper definition of good black-and-white reproductions, the use of color especially in the smaller plates is a negative factor. The quality of the color in the reproductions of paintings is less than satisfactory. . . . The text, which is divided between the two authors, both eminent scholars, is not a collaboration in the truest sense. . . . There are no plans or cross sections. . . . Despite its several shortcomings, this book can be recommended."

Choice 3:1576 F '72 180w

"Sivaramamurti's contributions can only be described as frustrating. [He] has an unrivalled knowledge of Indian art, but he has never been a popularizer. . . . Describing each work of art in two or three sentences with a generous sprinkling of such adjectives, as 'charming', 'magnificent', 'never to be forgotten', and occasionally quoting relevant passages from Sanskrit literature (which though all collected in a list at the end of the book, are never translated), he never attempts any general considerations of style or form. . . . Professor Bussagli takes the opposite approach and paints his picture in broader outlines, referring only rarely to the specific works of art illustrated. He writes freely about tendencies, currents, and influences, but these are difficult for the reader to sort out without a previous knowledge of both the art and the religious history of India."

Mary Morehart

Pacific Affairs 45:306 summer '72 250w

BUSTAMANTE F., JORGE A., Jr. auth. Los Mojados: the wetback story. See Samora, J.

BUTCHER, FANNY. Many lives—one love. 463p pl $10 Harper

B or 92

SBN 06-010402-3 LC 70-156511

The "many lives" of the title includes the years the author "spent as a newspaperwoman on the Chicago Tribune where she covered everything from politics to society news. . . . (She eventually became literary editor of the Tribune.) At one time Butcher ran a small bookstore, and her account of this period contains . . . [a number of] anecdotes. In the section 'Great Friends,' she provides reminiscences of Edna Ferber, Willa Cather, Carl Sandburg, H. L. Mencken, . . . Sinclair Lewis, and Ernest Hemingway." (Library J) Index.

"Miss Butcher, née Frances Amelia Butcher, in private life Mrs. Richard D. Bokum, has led an interesting life—can the life of a journalist be otherwise?—and she tells it here in 448 pages of autobiography supplemented by sixteen pages of photographs. . . . What she says will probably be of interest chiefly to Chicagoans, although she no doubt plays at least a minor role in the history of American literary criticism. Let it be said at once that this book reads like a talk before a woman's club. It's gossipy and name-dropping. . . . Clearly, the 'one love' of her book's title is books. The lover of books may find this one of some interest." J. S. Phillipson

Best Sell 32:163 J1 1 '72 750w

Choice 9:1290 D '72 120w

Reviewed by Roderick Nordell

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ag 30 '72 700w

"Butcher, now in her 80's, has written a supremely readable account of her [life]. . . . It is difficult to think of an author of her day whom she did not interview and/or become friends with, both here and abroad—André Maurois, Colette, Edith Wharton, Gertrude Stein, G. B. Shaw—the list is endless. The last chapter, 'My Life in Senescence,' will appeal to those past 60." A. C. Ringer

Library J 97:2179 Je 15 '72 200w

N Y Times Bk ■ p52 S 24 '72 140w

BUTCHER, MARGARET JUST. The Negro in American culture; based on materials left by Alain Locke. 2d ed 313p $7.95 Knopf

700 The arts. Negroes. U.S.—Civilization

ISBN 0-394-47943-2 LC 74-38321

"In this book, I have essayed to trace in historical sequence—but topical fashion—both the folk and the formal contributions of the American Negro to American culture . . . a whole. Its main thesis is that [racial differences account] . . . for some of the most characteristic qualities of American culture. . . . This book includes an analysis of [the issues] as they are reflected in . . . American literature and art." (Introd. to 2d ed) Index. For the first edition see BRD 1956.

"A welcome second edition. . . . Butcher undertook to review the entire field of Negro contributions and related achievements by white artists such as Joel Chandler Harris and George Gershwin . . . who portrayed Negroes in modern fiction. The effort is judicious and creates a bridge between earlier attempts to estimate writers . . . and the modern assessments required because of the cultural turbulence of the past decade. Many of the author's judgments are controversial, but can help inspire comparisons, for example between the goals and achievement of 'Harlem Renaissance' figures of the 1920s, and the dance, music, poetry, and fiction of more recent vintage. New preface and index, and a 'Postscript, 1972' which is mainly a listing of artists in many fields who have been on the scene since the book's first publication."

Choice 9:956 O '72 180w

Reviewed by R. R. Harris

Library J 97:2173 Je 15 '72 10w

BUTCHVAROV, PANAYOT. The concept of knowledge. (Northwestern univ. Pubs. in analytical philos) 325p $10 Northwestern univ. press

121 Knowledge, Theory of

ISBN 0-8101-0319-2 LC 78-107608

"This book has as its subject matter the conceptual foundations of epistemology. Its central task is the account of the concept of knowledge, but in the course of the inquiry . . . accounts are also offered of the concepts of necessary truth and sense perception. And much of the discussion is concerned with the notions of evidence, rational belief, and criterion." (Introd) Index.

"After a preliminary discussion of knowledge (which he takes to be true belief based on sufficient evidence), the author takes up the questions of a priori and a posteriori knowledge. The usual clichés are missing in this account of a posteriori knowledge. . . . The question, what is perception, is seen to have four basic answers which result from philosophers' committing themselves to one of four basic analogies. Butchvarov finds defects in all of the analogies and their corresponding theories of perception. . . . He offers an analogy and theory of his own. While his position has some affinities to Price's Sense-datum theory, it is different and plausible enough to merit serious attention. An important addition to the literature on epistemology, written clearly enough to be serviceable to advanced undergraduates." Choice 8:846 S '71 260w

BUTCHVAROV, PANAYOT—Continued

"[The author's] entire account rests on the concept of the unthinkability of mistake. There are few more obscure concepts upon which to build an epistemology than that of unthinkability. Nevertheless, . . . the book has a very significant virtue. It represents a serious attempt to build an epistemology on the assumption that to know something one must have some guarantee that what one believes is true. If the search for such a guarantee leads to obscurity and failure in the hands of a talented philosopher such as the author, then we have some reason for concluding that this important assumption of traditional epistemology is erroneous. Moreover, I think that the author is correct in contending that this assumption is also imbedded in our ordinary conception of knowledge." Keith Lehrer J Philos 69:312 Je 1 '72 2700w

BUTKUS, DICK. Stop-action [by] Dick Butkus and Robert W. Billings. 158p il $6.95 Dutton

B or 92 Football
SBN 0-525-210059 LC 72-82697

"Dick Butkus plays middle linebacker for the Chicago Bears. . . . In collaboration with Chicago Daily News feature writer, Robert Billings [he] gives the reader an account of the last week of the Bears' 1971 season. . . . [and] describes the frustrations of a . . . football player who must play out the last two games of a disappointing season. In his book he reflects on his childhood in South Chicago . . . his college career at Illinois, the college all-star game, and his life as a pro." (Best Sell)

"'Stop Action' gives the fans some indication of what goes on in a player's mind just prior to a game. It also touches upon the racial prejudice that existed on the team and the attempts to resolve it. . . . Butkus pulls no punches. . . . he has some harsh words for certain individuals of the game and the choicest cuts of all are saved for the Detroit team." J. J. Fitzpatrick Best Sell 32:349 N 1 '72 300w

"This is a rather pedestrian account of a great player on a losing team. . . . [The book includes] a few old George Halas stories, some painful tales of knee operations, and a jab or two at enemy players, coaches, and referees. But, overall, it's pretty flaccid and disorganized—nothing compared to watching Butkus slam a rival quarterback to the astro-turf on a Sunday afternoon. As he says, 'That's when I belong to the public.'" Charles Farley Library J 97:3328 O 15 '72 110w

BUTLER, DAVID. The British general election of 1970, by David Butler and Michael Pinto-Duschinsky. 493p il pl maps $15 St Martins 324.42 Elections—Great Britain, Great Britain—Politics and government—20th century ISBN 0-333-12142-2 LC [70-145587]

The authors deal with "the political developments as well as the . . . party developments leading up to the election. They provide not only [an] array of [political] figures, discussion of public and private polls, analysis of constituency activities, but also a . . . discussion of the kinds of analyses made possible by the availability of British census data." (Choice) Bibliography.

Reviewed by J. E. Turner
Am Pol Sci R 66:630 Je '72 1200w

Reviewed by S. P. Koff
Ann Am Acad 400:181 Mr '72 440w

"This is the latest in the series of studies of British general elections that Nuffield College established in 1945. Butler, associated with the series since 1950, is by now one of the leading students of British electoral politics. This volume compares most favorably with its predecessors and is a relevant complement to [D.] Butler and [D.] Stokes, Political change in Britain [BRD 1970]. . . . With its statistical sophistication and its persistent awareness of significant academic (i.e. theoretical) concerns, the book represents the continued development of British political science. Will interest students of comparative politics and political behavior as well as of British politics. Good bibliography."

Choice 8:1508 Ja '72 160w

"[Butler] at a relatively early age . . . has become the grand old man of British psephology, and there are signs in this volume that he is beginning to find the burden rather wearisome. That is not to say that with his latest partner, Mr Michael Pinto-Duschinsky, he has not turned in his usual competent job. . . . [His book is] as useful as ever, but because he simply gives the bare bones of fact without venturing into very much interpretation of those facts, it looks more like a scissors and paste job than ever before. . . . Nevertheless it is a book that will be studied over and over again between now and the next general election. . . . The book . . . is good, indeed extremely good, on some matters outside the campaign itself. . . . Yet what [it] chronicles more impressively than anything else is the decline of the mass party and the votes it attracts."

Economist 239:57 Ap 17 '71 750w

"As an elucidation of the riddle why the polls unanimously predicted a Labour victory and why those predictions were proved wrong . . . [this book] is of not much more use than the Times Guide to the House of Commons 1970. . . . This year most of the analysis of the public opinion surveys, the by-elections and the local elections between 1964 and 1970 has been relegated to appendices in order to make room for a new style account of Mr. Wilson as Prime Minister and Mr Heath as Leader of the Opposition. . . . Though the special survey of selected constituencies has been abandoned for no good reason, the continuous record of changes in party organisation has been faithfully brought up to date. The chapter on the Conservatives is a great deal fuller and more interesting than that on the Labour Party." Richard Crossman New Statesman 81:530 Ap 16 '71 1850w

"It is safe to say that in the present (eighth) study of a British general election since 1945, every fact of lasting importance about the campaign of May-June, 1970, is recorded and discussed under the leadership of an author who has learnt from experience how to combine the historian's discipline with the journalist's urgency. . . . Dr. Butler has been sooner on the bookstalls with other studies in the series, but it is worth waiting ten months after an election if he is willing to do all the reporter's footwork that has here been involved in interviews with Ministers, party leaders, party managers and officials to fill in the detail that newspapers and broadcasting have neither time nor opportunity to collect before the outcome of an election becomes known. . . . [This work] contains a thorough examination of . . . the public polls, and the sad errors into which they led all who put trust in them"

TLS p463 Ap 23 '71 1150w

BUTLER, GEORGE, jt. ed. New soldier. See Kerry, J.

BUTLER, J. A. V. The life process. 256p il $6.95 Basic bks.

574.1 Biology
SBN 465-03986-3 LC 76-135565

"More than half of [this book] is devoted to the molecular biology of the living cell, including . . . the regulatory and genetic mechanisms of bacteria and viruses. . . . The second half of the book . . . [covers] . . . in less than a hundred pages topics ranging from the origin of life, development and differentiation of complex organisms, hormones, muscles, sense organs, nerves . . . through to aging and death." (TLS) Glossary. Bibliography. Name index. Subject index.

"[This work is] intended as a comprehensive survey of contemporary research in all of the major processes in living things. Certain of the most fundamental of these processes are quite well described, especially the mechanisms of gene replication and protein structure and synthesis. . . . Throughout, the author attempts to introduce concepts to college-level readers who have no special training in biology, but often introduces terms without explanation. . . . Several important recent theories are not mentioned, such as holographic memory formation and the role of cyclic AMP in hormone function. Ionic relationships in nerve impulse transmission are inadequately explained. . . . The author has first-hand involvement in some of the research discussed, and is thus qualified in his knowledge of the subject."

Choice 9:988 O '72 260w

"[This book presupposes] at least a goodish A-level knowledge of biology and chemistry. . . . [Its arrangement] reflects the pattern of many university courses on biology nowadays, but it . . . produces an unbalanced result. With this reservation, however, Professor Butler's book can certainly be recommended for the purposes for which it has been written."

TLS D1360 N 20 '70 210w

BUTLER, WILLIAM E. The Soviet Union and the law of the sea. 245p maps $12 Johns Hopkins press

341.47 Maritime law

ISBN 0-8018-1221-6 LC 73-138037

"This book explores the origins and development of prerevolutionary Russian and Soviet doctrines and practices relating to certain aspects of the public international law of the sea: the legal regimes of territorial waters, internal sea waters, closed seas, continental shelf, deep seabed, and high seas." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"From a general point of view . . . Butler argues very convincingly that there is no connection between Marxism-Leninism and Soviet approach to substantive issues of the law of the sea—an observation which is true of all other areas of international law. Thus, Professor Butler concludes that Soviet collaboration with other powers on the law of the sea not only has occurred but can reasonably be expected to continue. . . . The book ends with a chapter containing a broad analysis of Soviet doctrine and practice; maps, tables of statutes and treaties, bibliography and an excellent index further commend the book to the attention of the reader." Kasimierz Grazybowski
Am Pol Sci R 66:278 Mr '72 600w

"This [is an] updated and revised version of [Butler's] doctoral dissertation. . . . It could not come at a better time. No topic is 'hotter' in international law. Witness the pollution and seabed exploitation problems. Unfortunately, Butler pays little heed to these current developments. However, his coverage of the [topics he does consider] is detailed and well documented. . . . [He] is more concerned with actual Soviet behavior than with jousting with real or imagined Communist legal intrigue. Butler's style is a bit 'grey' but no more so than many international law publications. The book will be easily digested by undergraduates, and equally useful for more advanced students."

Choice 8:1381 D '71 140w

"[Butler's book] is clearly for the specialist. . . . If one were to seek a message [in this study] it would probably concern the very small degree in which Soviet maritime policy has been dictated by communist ideology or even by any peculiarities of Russian character. . . . As Russia has evolved in recent decades from a land power beset by a sequence of powerful maritime foes to a superstate able to afford greater efforts to overcome its strategic disadvantages, its outlook on many maritime questions has moved toward that of the longer-established maritime powers. Mr Butler illuminates many legal aspects of this process."

Economist 240:45 Ag 21 '71 340w

BUTT, JOHN, ed. Robert Owen: aspects of his life and work. See Robert Owen: aspects of his life and work

BUTZER, KARL W. Environment and archaeology; an ecological approach to prehistory. 2d ed 703p il maps $15 Aldine-Atherton

551.7 Man, Prehistoric. Man—Influence of environment. Geology, Stratigraphic. Fossils

ISBN 0-202-33023-1 LC 74-115938

"The second edition of Butzer's . . . work on 'prehistoric geography' constitutes an . . . extended version of the 1964 edition [BRD 1965]. . . . The change may be expressed as an increase of the original 31 chapters and 624 pages to 34 chapters and 703 pages. Similarly, the 84 illustrations and 19 tables have been increased to 95 and 23 respectively. . . . These changes represent an extension of three previously neglected themes into the following chapters: 'The late Pleistocene events of North America,' 'Palaeo-Indians: origins and man-land relationships,' and 'Early colonization of Australia.' [Included also is] an updating of the bibliography to the 1970's." (Choice)

"[This] is a masterful synthesis which handles an overwhelmingly diversified body of data and clearly unifies these data within the concept of an ecological perspective. . . . Hopefully, this second edition of Butzer's [book], because of the new insights which it offers into the potential of cultural ecology, will result in even greater emphasis on the ecological approach in the training of archaeologists in American universities. The need for such emphasis is clearly indicated." Fred Wendorf
Am Anthropol 74:941 Ag '72 1000w

"Butzer retains the format of a detailed investigation of the geographic, geological, and biological approaches to 'pleistocene environmental analysis.' [This is an] appropriate introductory text for the student of Pleistocene geology, geomorphology, and prehistoric archaeology."

Choice 8:1369 D '71 180w

Reviewed by R. R. Harris

Library J 96:3594 N 1 '71 60w

"Butzer has brought together far more material relating to the understanding of man and his Pleistocene and early post-Pleistocene surroundings than is available in any other single source and has treated it with a depth of understanding seldom encountered in a field as inclusive as this. I have little doubt that this volume will remain the standard point of departure for everyone interested in these problems for many years to come." A. J. Jelinek
Science 176:665 My 12 '72 550w

BYARS, BETSY. The house of wings; il. by Daniel Schwartz. 142p $4.95 Viking

ISBN 0-670-38025-3 LC 77-183933

"A young boy reeling from the pain of temporary parental abandonment forges a relationship with an eccentric grandfather whom he despises. In attempting to rescue and mend a wounded crane, they come to respect each other for what they are, and as men." (Book World) "Ages nine to thirteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

"The story has a certain depth and life and is morally conspicuous in that the pay-off is maturity rather than 'getting' something." Julia Whedon

Book World p11 (children's issue) My 7 '72 180w

Reviewed by P. M. Canham

Christian Science Monitor pB5 My 4 '72 70w

Horn Bk 48:368 Ag '72 200w

Reviewed by M. A. Dorsey

Library J 97:2946 S 15 '72 170w

"[The author demonstrates] her extraordinary ability to explore that primitive point of experience where man and nature confront each other. . . . Thanks to Mrs. Byars's precise understanding of cranes, owls, boys and grandfathers, we . . . [are refreshed by a] vision of man at home in his natural world." Jean Fritz
N Y Times Bk R p8 Ap 23 '72 170w

"This gentle story by the 1971 winner of the Newbery Medal has an unsentimental and potent message about wildlife and draws a telling portrait of a human relationship. Save for the brief appearance of the parents, Sammy and his grandfather are the only characters. The book's spare construction makes it strong." Zena Sutherland
Sat R 55:81 My 20 '72 110w

C

CABANNE, PIERRE. Dialogues with Marcel Duchamp; tr. from the French by Ron Padgett. (The Documents of 20th cent. art) 136p il $7.50 Viking

B or 92 Duchamp, Marcel

ISBN 670-24017-6; 670-01907-0 (pa)

LC 77-83255

In this "series of interviews held shortly before his death in 1968, . . . Duchamp provides a . . . self-portrait . . . he sums up his life and career in a . . . recollection of events, people, and attitudes." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Chronology. Index.

CABANNE, PIERRE—Continued

"Includes photographs of Duchamp, but few of his art as the book is primarily directed to those with a previous familiarity with his work. . . . [The book] will appeal particularly to those interested in 20th-century art."

Choice 9:358 My '72 130w

"[Duchamp] candidly reveals much about himself while at the same time providing a backdrop to the introduction and final acceptance of modern art in the United States. . . . The unique and important contribution of [this] document . . . is that we are reading art history directly from the source or, as nicely put by Duchamp, straight 'from the horse's mouth.' . . . Highly recommended for general and subject libraries. . . . Essential reading in modern art history courses." W. J. Dane

Library J 96:2758 S 15 '71 120w

"[This volume contains] a recapitulation of old stories by Duchamp." Lawrence Alloway

Nation 213:666 D 20 '71 30w

Reviewed by Rackstraw Downes
N Y Times Bk R p6 D 31 '72 270w

TLS p1593 D 24 '71 180w

CABANNE, PIERRE. Van Gogh [tr. by Daphne Woodward]. 288p il col il $7.50 Abrams

759.94 Gogh, Vincent van
ISBN 0-8100-0523-X LC 71-143482

The text of this biography makes use of the "letters exchanged by Van Gogh and his brother Théo, who remained his one real friend throughout a life of turmoil and disappointment." (Library J) Bibliography.

"The book is arranged by chapter according to the artist's place of residence, and the numerous illustrations (149; 67 in color) are selected so that they fit well in this structure. But while the picture of Van Gogh that the reader gets is nicely composed, it is not very vivid. No central thesis is developed and no consistent approach is followed, so the book lacks focus."

Choice 8:1002 O '71 120w

"[Cabanne's book] is well presented, very readable, authoritatively researched, and modest in price. In addition, . . . the author . . . strips away much of the romantic embellishment and myth which have accumulated around this painter. . . . [The illustrations] include paintings, drawings, and a few photographs. . . . This biography is recommended for general and art collections where its popular approach will be just right for many readers." W. J. Dane

Library J 96:2483 Ag '71 170w

CABLE, JAMES. Gunboat diplomacy; political applications of limited naval force; pub. for the Inst. for strategic studies. (Studies in int. security, 16) 251p $11 Praeger

327 Sea power. International relations
LC 76-165526

This "book consists of definition, categorization and analysis in support of the thesis that a form of international behaviour [known as gunboat diplomacy and] popularly associated with the era of arrogant imperialism has been frequently and successfully used in the past fifty years, and is a factor which no nation wishing to play an active part on the contemporary world stage, even in the present age of nuclear deterrence and instant world-wide communications, can afford to neglect." (TLS) Bibliography. Index.

"In some respects more philosophical and speculative than descriptive, this work at times confuses more than it illuminates, but it states the case and raises questions about many of the assumptions shared by decision-makers and strategists. Those searching for a new theory of sea power may well find the seeds in this juxtaposition of evidence and ideas." R. G. O'Connor

Ann Am Acad 403:163 S '72 750w

"The only weaknesses of . . . [the author's] tentative analyses lie in his tendency to focus on great power capabilities in an era of naval, as well as nuclear, power balance. He fails to stress the blackmail power which smaller states have gained from similar balances in other fields. . . . [This] is an excellent theoretical study which will be much more useful to advanced students than to undergraduates."

Choice 9:130 Mr '72 140w

"In addition to the stringency of its argument and the quality of its documentation, the book is written with a wit and humanity rare in modern strategic writing. . . . [Cable] refines his concept [of gunboat diplomacy] into four categories of force—definitive, purposeful, catalytic and expressive—and provides historical examples of each. . . . [The book contains a] long appendix, an illustrative chronology covering the years 1919 to 1969, in which Mr Cable lists in adequate detail the year-by-year uses of limited naval force for diplomatic purposes, each incident grouped into its appropriate category and the success or failure, from the 'assailant's' point of view, noted."

TLS p71 Ja 21 '72 800w

CADOGAN, SIR ALEXANDER. The diaries of Sir Alexander Cadogan, 1938-1945; ed. by David Dilks. 881p pl $12.95 Putnam

B or 92 Great Britain—Foreign relations.
Great Britain—Politics and government—20th century
LC 70-183915

The author was Permanent Under-Secretary of the British Foreign Office during World War II. "The entries in this published version of the Diary have been chosen to illustrate the range and nature of the duties shouldered by the [Permanent Under-Secretary] thirty years ago, and to give some idea of his character, habits and recreations." (Introd) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by V. A. Lapomarda
America 126:547 My 20 '72 60w

"General readers . . . may well find much of the reading rather heavy going and many of the references somewhat obscure. . . . Few matters affecting wartime diplomacy did not at one time or another cross Cadogan's desk, and on many of these questions the diaries do shed additional light. . . . [But] for the most part [they] do not provide the sort of penetrating analyses of either issues or personalities which have distinguished the diaries of others, notably those of Cadogan's contemporary, Harold Nicolson [Diaries and Letters, volume one-volume three, BRD 1966-1968]. . . . Only rarely are there flashes of wit or riposte, and most of these tend to be more critical than complimentary. . . . The most striking—and most disappointing—quality of the book is its dullness." F. X. J. Homer

Best Sell 31:537 Mr 1 '72 800w

Reviewed by E. M. Yoder
Book World p8 Mr 19 '72 1550w
Choice 9:420 My '72 190w

"These immensely detailed diaries . . . give a more vivid picture of the anxieties, disasters, and triumphs of those memorable years than can perhaps be obtained anywhere else. Cadogan was a man of sensibility. . . . His temper was quick; when he disliked a colleague . . . he worked incessantly for his dismissal. . . . These memoirs have been received in the British press with something less than unrestrained enthusiasm. . . . What in some quarters has caused offense is that he thought Churchill to be a bungler. What emerges from these diaries, besides the uncertainties and the incompetence of most of the leaders of British public life between the wars, is a feeling of the vast brooding power of Britain during those years." Harold Hobson

Christian Science Monitor p9 F 17 '72 650w

Economist 241:65 N 13 '71 900w

"[Cadogan's] proximity to the center of power and his participation in decision and policy formation make these meticulously kept diaries an important contribution to the understanding of diplomatic negotiations from 1938 to 1945. The diaries are especially valuable since Cadogan was the only major English official to have kept such records during the whole of the war years. There are omissions, however, because the editor, professor of international history at the University of Leeds, believed some of the original to be of little or no pertinence. But Dilks insists that all important observations are included. An excellent introduction and the interspersing of numerous explanatory comments greatly enhance the book's value." E. A. Engeldinger

Library J 97:1313 Ap 1 '72 120w

Reviewed by Richard Crossman
New Statesman 82:655 N 12 '71 550w

"The author was at the . . . center of British policy making at its most stormy. Munich, the coming of war, the fall of Chamberlain, the emergence of Churchill, . . . the dominance of the United States, the defeat of Germany and Japan, are viewed, and recorded, from day to day, without hindsight or artistry, from the true corridors of power. Stalin's words are heard on the spot, and taken down verbatim, before the day is done. Churchill's tantrums are seen, and noted, as they take place. Sometimes the style of the diary is cryptic and fragmentary, but it is never dull or trite. . . . For all of the events Cadogan witnessed he provides much more than caustic comment. There is material in this volume to enrich several dozen biographies. No account of any of the major events which he describes can ignore him." Martin Gilbert

N Y Times Bk R p12 Ap 16 '72 750w

Reviewed by Mollie Panter-Downes
New Yorker 48:148 O 28 '72 3200w

"If Cadogan were to be judged solely by his diaries, it would be a puzzle to explain how he came to be Permanent Under-Secretary of the Foreign Office and an influential participant in the higher direction of the Second World War. He emerges from his own account as an averagely competent civil servant, but cantankerous, vain, and capricious. What is worse . . . his personal judgment was lamentably bad. It may be a matter of opinion whether his extravagantly contemptuous views of Britain's military commanders were justified. . . . But when he approached the highest level, his opinions were . . . contemptibly silly. . . . [Mr Dilks has] tried to fill the interstices [of these diary extracts] with historical commentary, but they are too gaping to be meaningfully filled." TLS p1416 N 12 '71 1100w

CADY, EDWIN H. The light of common day; realism in American fiction. 224p $7.50 Ind. univ. press

813 Realism in literature. American fiction—History and criticism
ISBN 0-253-33430-6 LC 70-159725

"Chapter 1 defines Realism as the 'common vision' which all men . . . 'might accept' . . . 'real' in some useful, and common, even though minimal, sense. Chapter 2 distinguishes among the sensibility of the Romancer (preferring the ideal of the good to its physical symbol), that of the Realist (valuing the 'reality of personal experience'), and that of the Naturalist (shocked at science's lessening of man's importance). Chapters 8 and 10 challenge the assumption of F. O. Matthiessen, Richard Chase, Charles Feidelson and R. W. B. Lewis that 'it is the nature of the American imagination that it yearns . . . for the fulfillments of Romance.' (Choice)

"Cady despite his admission that the essays are expressions more of 'experience and conviction than of scholarship,' is a 'responsible' and lucid critic who has made a constructive contribution to the definition of realism and to the criticism of American fiction." R. S. Moore

Am Lit 44:338 My '72 360w

"At the 1972 MLA Convention, the American Literature Group [devoted] . . . major session to discussing this book. . . . Although Cady's book is frankly personal, it supports its conclusions with responsible argument and should provoke discussion and thinking among teachers and students at all stages of development. Subject and name index. Recommended." Choice 9:210 Ap '72 190w

"In the last of the ten essays in this collection, Cady asks whether the teaching of literature—an activity which he rightly sees as including literary criticism—should be regarded 'as an expressive event or as a civic event. Ought teaching literature to be primarily the occasion for unique, personal, even Dionysian self-revelation? Or ought it to become the means toward an adventure in community?' In all of these essays, Cady affirms his faith in literature as 'a means of communion' between reader and author and between reader and reader. . . . His eloquent commentaries on a variety of literary texts give proper meaning and dignity to both of those terms. An important volume." Robert Regan

Library J 96:3326 O 15 '71 150w

CAFARAKIS, CHRISTIAN. The fabulous Onassis; his life and loves; by Christian Cafarakis; with Jacques Harvey; tr. from the French by John Minahan. 136p il $5.95 Morrow
B or 92 Onassis, Aristotle Socrates
LC 73-188186

This account of the Greek billionaire is told by a man who worked aboard Onassis' yacht Christina for ten years.

"[This] really is nothing more than a blow-by-blow report of how to spend money and not miss it. The dollars by the thousands are banded about and not once is there any mention of a single article carrying the common figure known to most of us. Not once is any item listed in the $1.95 category. How many people . . . boast that their wardrobe includes a pair of bedroom slippers with a price tag of $120,000? . . . The account of Jackie and her temperament is vividly narrated in the final chapter of the book. . . . Summarily, this is good reading for the disciples of movie magazines and monthly price lists from Tiffany's." Al Phillips
Best Sell 32:182 J1 15 '72 300w

"For all those waiting with bated breath for the inside details of the fabled Onassis wedding settlement, etc., the suspense is ended. Or is it? Cafarakis, Onassis' erstwhile ship-board maitre-d', hasn't been in the millionaire's employ for some time; and much of the gossip he has to impart is distinctly stale. For recent developments, he is forced to rely on second-hand sources. However, it probably won't matter a lot to readers who enjoy this sort of thing, appropriately dished out in breathlessly intimate movie-mag. prose." Barbara Nelson

Library J 97:2179 Je 15 '72 80w

CAHILL, JAMES. Scholar painters of Japan: the Nanga school. 135p il $15 Asia soc; for sale by N.Y. graphic

759.952 Paintings, Japanese. Painting, Japanese—History
ISBN 0-87848-038-2 LC 72-182236

"The Nanga school of Japanese painting of the 18th Century was a continuation of the literati tradition of Ming and Ch'ing China. Known as the Southern school, it consisted of scholars for whom painting was a pastime rather than a profession (as opposed to the Northern, or professional school). . . . The Nanga school flourished until the mid-19th Century. Cahill's essay, the catalog for an Asia House Gallery exhibit (and an exhibit at University of California, Berkeley, both in 1972) explains the theory and the art through a discussion of the lives of principal painters and their works." (Library J) Bibliography.

"An essential book for all libraries with Oriental collections. Cahill, a leading scholar, offers the first book concerning Nanga painting to appear in English. . . . In many Japanese art histories Nanga is hardly mentioned, and rarely can a reproduction be found. Seventy plates of good quality enhance this book, although unfortunately only one color reproduction is afforded. Of especial interest is the inclusion of paintings by the great haiku poet Buson, evidently conceived in both considered and eruptive styles. An excellent text. . . . Recommended without reservation for both historical and aesthetic reasons." Choice 9:633 J1/Ag '72 160w

"[This book] is most valuable; it gives importance to a movement concurrent with and overshadowed by the more flamboyant Ukiyo-e. As a book, it is a magnificent production, its long format being ideal for reproducing the paintings which are mostly hanging scrolls." R. D. Olson

Library J 97:2176 Je 15 '72 130w

CAIDIN, MARTIN. Destination Mars. 295p il $7.95 Doubleday
523.4 Mars (Planet)
LC 74-186011

"This book traces the evolution of scientific ideas about Mars from the early days of astronomy through the findings of today's modern space probes." (Library J) Index.

"The book's major value lies in its coverage of the later period: there are discussions of all the most recent photographs of Mars and the possible conclusions which can be drawn from them. For example, ten of the illustrations come from the Mariner 9 spacecraft, currently in orbit around Mars. Caidin, an authority on aerospace subjects and a broadcaster of space launches, is well known for his popular books in the field. This one, with excellent descriptions aimed at the layman, makes a fine companion volume to the complete collection of Mariner 9 photographs to be published by NASA." R. L. Hough

CAIDIN, MARTIN—Continued

Library J 97:2852 S 15 '72 150w

"[This book] is must reading for anyone who has followed the presently-orbiting Mariners and the scheduled (1975) Vikings, which will be equipped with Mars landers. Caidin has a knack for giving background in a suspenseful, at-the-time style. Of special note are the comparisons between the U.S. and Russian efforts (did you know that many details are withheld by the U.S. from the U.S. press, at Russia's request?) and the generous display of remarkable moon and Mars photographs."

N Y Times BK R p20 S 3 '72 100w

CAIDIN, MARTIN. When war comes. 159p $4.95 Morrow

355.02 Atomic warfare
LC 74-151910

The author "argues that the U.S., along with the Soviet Union, brings the day of nuclear disaster ever nearer by planning for it and building stockpiles; that Washington has lied about the effects of nuclear explosions; that the U.S. missile arsenal is virtually untested. . . . Disarmament is dismissed as visionary. [The author believes] a 'revolution in thinking' is required." (Christian Science Monitor)

"[The author] has been an instructor in atomic, biological and chemical warfare. His estimates of the military situation seem quite objective. While his book makes for really frightening reading, we recommend it most highly." (Brother) Berchmans Downey

Best Sell $1:500 F 15 '72 250w
Choice 9:575 Je '72 140w

"The nuclear strategy of superpowers is far too important a subject . . . to be treated in anything but a serious, balanced way. . . . This book, however, is not such an analysis. Instead, it is a polemic in 159 emotional pages. It argues a case—and parts of its case are open to question. . . . The writing, heavily ironic, ranges from imaginary dialogues to one-sentence paragraphs. Underlying it all is the author's view that nothing can really be done. . . . The book fails to include even a single reference to the SALT talks . . . [between] U.S. and Russian arms control experts. SALT (Strategic Arms Limitation Talks) is trying, in fact, to bring Mr. Caidin's vague 'revolution' into reality. . . . [His] book is right about civil defense programs in the past: in great part, they were wishful thinking. But it is wrong in some of its facts. . . . Too many quotes and statements are given without dates or other documentation." D. K. Willis
Christian Science Monitor p9 F 17 '72 650w

"Written by an aviation expert whose background includes stints as consultant on atomic warfare and aviation medicine, this is a plea for nuclear disarmament written on a very direct, personal level. Caidin obviously believes that young people should be made aware of the choices man now has, and teens will want to contemplate his grim, provocative thoughts and feelings on the subject." Jeanne Cavallini
Library J 97:1935 My 15 '72 120w [YA]

CAIN, GEORGE. Blueschild baby. 201p $6.95 McGraw

ISBN 0-07-009591-4 LC 72-137124

The author in "autobiographical style tells the story of a young black basketball star who has fallen a victim to drugs and, by the end of the novel, is fighting his way back to self-respect for the love of a good woman." (Yale R)

Reviewed by Robert Rafalko

Best Sell 30:435 Ja 15 '71 350w

"The fierceness of drug craving, the total alienation of the junkie from the straight world, the ultimate despair of the addict, as well as the intense malaise of blacks in a white world, are compellingly real. Less successful are the characterizations of the nonaddicts, especially the girl whose love helps George get clean. Despite an ending which seems contrived, the acute perceptions of Harlem street life and the whole drug scene make this apparently autobiographical first novel totally engrossing. For college and public libraries and all black fiction collections." Doris Bass

Library J 95:4279 D 15 '70 150w

"Written in language that is an integral part of the black community—a language that abounds in colorful in-group symbols and metaphors . . . the novel reveals a world that only black people can fully comprehend. . . . Evaluated in the terms so dear to white academicians—form, concreteness of character, organization of plot, usage of stream of consciousness, etc.—'Blueschild Baby' ranks high indeed. However, for those attuned to the Black Aesthetic, in casting well deserved censure upon the theology of the integrationists and in opting for black unity instead of black and white togetherness, the novel represents a major breakthrough for the black writer. For this reason, it is the most important work of fiction by an Afro-American since [Richard Wright's] 'Native Son' [BRD 1940]." Addison Gayle

N Y Times BK R p4 Ja 17 '71 700w

"Every detail of the plot is predictable from less good books and from documentaries. . . . [But the book] in some ways transcends the familiar convention to which it belongs. Mr. Cain possesses an almost Dickensian vitality that distinguishes him from better-known writers who have dealt with drug or race problems in their novels. He writes for himself, and all these familiar issues appear in his book in the genuine guise of personal experience related by a man who has a feeling for the English language. . . . The hero's situation is presented as a unique, not a universal, problem and the novel is all the better for it." Rachel Trickett
Yale R 61:121 O '71 500w

CAINE, STANLEY P. The myth of a progressive reform; railroad regulation in Wisconsin, 1903-1910. 226p il $7.95 State Hist. soc. of Wis.

385 Railroads—Rates. Wisconsin—History
SBN 87020-110-7 LC 75-630131

After providing an examination of "the legislative history of railroad regulation in Wisconsin in 1903 and 1905, the author . . . portrays the results of reform in an analysis of the early years of that state's railroad commission, when Balthasar H. Meyer was the guiding spirit." (J Am Hist)

"Caine's study reveals distinctive care and thoroughness in the use of sources (most notably the La Follette papers and the extensive records of the commission) and sensitivity to the role of individuals in the shaping of institutions. His bibliographical note is a model of effectiveness and good judgment. But though his findings are persuasive, some of his own conclusions are not. . . . What this book does best is to show, as its title implies, that although the reform politicians failed to achieve one of the things they set out to do, they later proclaimed that they had succeeded in doing it, and historians have generally believed them." O. A. Pease
Am Hist R 77:592 Ap '72 500w

"This book is a thoroughly researched and well-conceived study that will interest students of the Progressive era and government-business relations. . . . Caine contributes to our general understanding of how the new institutions of regulation, on a state level, could self-consciously serve a coordinating and liaison function in the emerging system of bureaucratic institutions that historians are recognizing as a highly important facet of the Progressive era. Hopefully his well-done study will provoke new interest in research into regulatory activities in other states." K. A. Kerr
J Am Hist 57:943 Mr '71 420w

CAIRNCROSS, ALEC, ed. Britain's economic prospects reconsidered. See Britain's economic prospects reconsidered

CAIRNS-SMITH, A. G. The life puzzle; on crystals and organisms and on the possibility of a crystal as an ancestor. 165p il pl Can$6.50 Univ. of Toronto press

577 Life—Origin. Molecular biology. Crystallography
ISBN 0-8020-1834-3 LC 78-185705

In this study of the origin of life "Part I considers the role of molecular biology in formulating a view of life as it exists now. Part II turns to more general aspects of the organization of matter. In Part III the author advances his own theories on the origin of life." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The third part is the most intriguing and provocative for it suggests that living organisms may have originated from insoluble inorganic crystals as a base, rather than organic polymers. Any educated person would enjoy this book and natural scientists will be particularly fond of the intellectual stimulation it provides them."

Choice 9:834 S '72 80w

"[This book] is an expanded version of a paper by the author (J. Theoret. Biol. 10, 53 [1966]). It is written in a very simple style, as if the author intended it for the general public. However, nonscientists will find [it] difficult reading." S. L. Miller

Science 177:602 Ag 18 '72 250w

CALAM, JOHN. Parsons and pedagogues; the S.P.G. adventure in American education. 249p $10 Columbia Univ. press

377 Church of England. United Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. U.S.—Church history. Church and state in the United States

ISBN 0-231-03371-0 LC 77-139603

This study attempts "a survey and reevaluation of the educational work of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, the . . . Anglican missionary organization active in America from 1702 to 1783." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"It is unfortunate that this study of such an important facet of pre-Revolutionary intellectual development falls so short in logical, literary, and methodological skills." G. W. Pilcher

Am Hist R 77:202 F '72 430w

"Calam, now associate professor of educational history at the University of British Columbia, has extensive experience as an editor and writer. His readable, fluent style, however, is marred by the overuse of his main title. . . . He does offer content beyond the conventional kind reputedly characteristic of traditional monographs on the history of education. But he lets value-laden words, unsupported by documentation slip into his text and . . . makes broad generalizations such as 'many Americans.' . . . The bibliographical essay is comprehensive and enlightening. . . . In all, the writer expresses his appreciation for the contribution by Dr. Calam toward our fuller knowledge and understanding of the colonial period of American education." W. W. Brickman

Ann Am Acad 400:165 Mr '72 600w

"The trials and tribulations of S.P.G. missionaries and schoolmasters sent to the American wilderness make fascinating reading. The schoolmaster's lot was worse than that of the minister, unless he had a colonial governor or other man of means as a patron. Much of the 'preface' should have been omitted. The thesis that the history of education involves more than what goes on in the classroom is decades older than the author claims. . . . Of considerable value to the historian of education and those students interested in biographical material on such forgotten figures ■ Urmston in North Carolina, Tomlinson, Whetmore, and others. Well documented; good index."

Choice 8:1367 D '71 170w

"The focus throughout is upon the ever-widening gap between the avowed goals of the Society . . . and its actual achievements. . . . Calam provides convincing explanations for this, often in the form of case studies. . . . While [he] makes his points forcefully (if repetitively), the book is both cursory and too burdened with detail. To cover eighty momentous years in thirteen colonies forces a highly selective sampling of S.P.G. problems in each—often dictated by the archival evidence rather than by historically significant dates or events. [For example] the Great Awakening is dismissed in two pages because that is the way the missionaries tried to dismiss it. Methodism receives short shrift for the same reason. . . . Unfortunately the style is far from felicitous. This monograph, however, opens up ■ wide range of topics for further research." W. G. McLoughlin

New Eng Q 44:491 S '71 850w

CALAS, ELENA, jt. auth. Icons and images of the sixties. See Calas, N.

CALAS, NICOLAS. Icons and images of the sixties, by Nicolas Calas and Elena Calas. 347p il $9.95; pa $3.95 Dutton

709.73 Art, American. Art, Modern—20th century

ISBN 0-525-13110-8; 0-525-47285-1 (pa)

LC 73-122796

The authors have produced ■ "history and analysis of the . . . directions of American art of the last decade. First, N. Calas defines the aesthetic postures of the two major apologists of the New York School, Clement Greenberg and Harold Rosenberg. . . . He then traces the reaction of the artists of the '60s against the romanticism of Abstract Expressionism, including in this narrative the phenomena of Cage, Happenings, Earthworks, and the art of Methodology. He concludes that art today is a game and that the artist pragmatically applies the principle that the criterion of a work of art ■ the market place." (J Aesthetics) Index.

"Summaries of the major directions in the '60s provide a wealth of technical and aesthetic information which could be provided only by knowledgeable critics close to the individual artists and aware of the broad spectrum of today's art. Frequently the analyses conclude that much of contemporary art is vacuous and fraudulent. Happily, both authors, but particularly Mr. Calas, apply stringent aesthetic criteria to current directions in art and often dismiss prominent 'names' when their work does not meet these standards. The categorical organization of this complex period, combined with the technical and aesthetic synthesis make this book a valuable tool." P. A. Quinlan

J Aesthetics 31:133 fall '72 250w

"This is without doubt the Calases' best book, combining the aphoristic punch of Nicolas Calas' bon mots with an acute critical sense of the competitions and priorities of the 1960s. It is an admirable guidebook to the synchronic intricacy of a decade." Lawrence Alloway

Nation 213:665 D 20 '71 50w

CALDER, NIGEL. The restless earth; ■ report on the new geology. 152p il $10 Viking

551 Geology

ISBN 670-59530-6 LC 71-178178

"The 'new geology' here refers to 'plate tectonics,' the theory that the Earth's crust is a collection of rocky plates which move about on a slippery base. The main issues discussed are wandering magnetic poles, drifting continents, and the large-scale building of mountains and ocean basins. Differing opinions are noted, and there is added information on the origin of the Earth and its crust, the origin and evolution of life, and the geological activity of man." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"This is ■ fine expository book. It is written in English rather than jargon and copiously supplied with pictures that are well placed in relation to the text and really do illustrate the author's points." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 230:92 Ag '72 70w

Choice 9:1312 D '72 170w

Reviewed by R. C. Cowen

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ag ■ '72 500w

"Intended for the layman (the work is based upon a three-part BBC television program), this is an excellent, admirably illustrated summation of material which this noted science writer obtained from many experts. Better for the general reader than Don and Maureen Tarling's Continental Drift: a Study of the Earth's Moving Surface [BRD 1971] this book is highly recommended." R. G. Schipf

Library J 97:2413 J1 '72 140w

"[Calder's] action in bringing out the complex ideas and discoveries of the new geology, in language that everyone can follow, deserves our warmhearted approval. . . . This reviewer, who is also a professional scientist, rarely approves of a popularization. Far too often the science writer is naïve and uncritical. Calder, however, seems to remain calm and judicious and expresses the story warmly yet fairly. He names names, indexes the work, and you can check him. It checks out." Rhodes Fairbridge

Natur Hist 81:90 Ag/S '72 450w

"[This is] a visually interesting, wide-ranging, remarkably up-to-date review [of the New Geology]. . . . The story is well told, and the photographs, diagrams, maps and reports of conversations on the issues with the men and women who make the science add clarity and a rare immediacy." Philip Morrison

CALDER, NIGEL—Continued

Sci Am 227:120 J1 '72 650w

CALDWELL, LYNTON K. In defense of earth: international protection of the biosphere. 295p $8.50 Ind. univ. press

301.31 Environmental policy. Man—Influence on nature
ISBN 0-253-1159-2 LC 70-180486

The book includes a "program for safeguarding the biosphere. . . . Professor Caldwell tells what has been done already and indicates how the work of the present boards, commissions, committees, organizations and secretariats can be strengthened and extended to moderate the crisis that faces us within the next thirty years." (Publisher's note) Index.

"This is a significant book on a crucial subject by a professor of political science at Indiana University, who is an established authority on the destruction of our world environment by man. . . . Mr. Caldwell finds that 'environmental degradation' . . . will lead to the destruction of 'the biosphere and ultimately of human society itself.' This cannot be prevented . . . without endowing a number of different world organizations with authority to operate on a world scale, each to meet a pressing need. Six concrete proposals for such functional organizations are made and the book is a compendium of the many international organizations which already deal with some aspect of the environment. . . . Caldwell emphasizes the folly of worshipping expanding Gross National Products. He finds growthmanship in many countries to be nothing short of malignant." D. E. Fleming

Ann Am Acad 403:164 S '72 400w

"This book provides a rich and detailed historical documentation of intellectual and organizational approaches to environmental crises. The first four chapters, notes and citations, and appendix offer a wealth of sources and data for students of international organizations and environmental policies. However . . . international cooperation is approached from a rather simplistic bureaucratic perspective which neglects the importance of political and economic conflicts between developed and underdeveloped countries. The proposals offered are exceedingly abstract and nebulous, and fail to consider the political dynamics of aggression and scarcity which impinge upon the feasibility of any administrative approaches to international cooperation."

Choice 9:1201 N '72 160w

"[Caldwell's] most detailed comments concern a proposed world system which would utilize the UN and existing scientific organizations in protecting the biosphere. A major work on the basis of its synthesis of an extensive literature alone, the book provides an analysis of environmental administration which is not elsewhere available." G. H. Siehl
Library J 97:512 F 1 '72 100w

CALDWELL, OLIVER J. A secret war: Americans in China, 1944-1945. 218p $5.95 Southern Ill. univ. press

940.54 World War, 1939-1945—China. World War, 1939-1945—Personal narratives
ISBN 0-8093-0545-3 LC 74-177597

An account of the year the author spent as an officer with the Office of Strategic Studies stationed in West China. He describes how "he worked directly with General Tai Li, head of Chiang Kai-shek's secret police, maintained contact with the three main Chinese secret societies, taught in Chiang's National Central Political Training Institute, and went back and forth across the battle lines." (Sat R) Index of names.

Reviewed by E. S. Wehrle

Ann Am Acad p172 S '72 500w

"Had the author concentrated only on those moments connected with the 'secret' war, then he might have reproduced an interesting, if not a significant book. Instead, many pages cover episodes which hardly warrant serious consideration. . . . [However] one also can find many 'wise' reflections about American involvement in mainland Asia. Though the fruits of Caldwell's agony during World War II, these aphorisms are clearly intended applicable to American problems today in Vietnam." Rev. J. M. Murphy

Best Sell 32:75 My 15 '72 400w

"Although episodic, repetitious, and undocumented, Caldwell's reminiscences deserve inclusion in any library collection on modern Asia and World War II."

Choice 9:860 S '72 160w

"Caldwell . . . currently professor of higher education at Southern Illinois University . . . intersperses accounts of some of his experiences in intelligence operations with accusations and condemnations of the wartime regime of Chiang Kai-shek. . . . [He] makes it clear that he did not consider Mao's Communists a preferable alternative to Chiang's Nationalists. On the whole this is a disappointing book. It is chatty and rambling, and unfortunately tells us almost nothing about the other Americans in wartime China." Hyman Kublin

Library J 97:1429 Ap 15 '72 150w

"Caldwell's lectures were standing room only [at the first CIA 'school']. . . . Indiscriminately mixing bombshells with trivia, Caldwell was funny when he didn't mean to be, and his intentional jokes fell flat. . . . But he convincingly demonstrated the 'stupidity' of American generals who, he insisted, had backed Chiang Kai-shek uncritically and had committed us to a 'disastrous China policy.' . . . Now Mr. Caldwell has put it all into [this book]. . . . The material is as good as ever; it may even have improved with age. . . . [The] book, which is utterly without scholarly pretensions, reads like a tape recording of fireside reminiscences. Even his stabs at political punditry add charm."

Sat R 55:67 My 20 '72 650w

Va Q 48:xcvi summer '72 100w

CALDWELL, WILLIAM A. In the Record; the Simeon Stylites columns of William A. Caldwell; sel. and with an introd. by Mark A. Stuart. 308p $9 Rutgers univ. press

081

ISBN 0-8135-0728-6 LC 70-189438

"For the past 40 years, journalist Caldwell has written a daily column for the Bergen Record in New Jersey. . . . This is a collection of [112 of his] columns, some of which figured in his winning a Pulitzer Prize for commentary in 1971." (Library J)

Christian Century 89:584 My 17 '72 50w

"The column, titled 'The Simeon Stylites,' has earned [Caldwell] the respect of many, even those who disagree with his liberal and scrupulously fair-minded opinions. . . . His writing style has a down-to-earth crispness, and every word has a specific purpose. Many of the columns deal with national and international problems. However, even those on local affairs are so enjoyable that their appeal transcends geographic boundaries. Of particular interest to readers in the New York-New Jersey metropolitan area, but very appropriate for large collections in universities and public libraries." Jack Forman

Library J 97:2196 Je 15 '72 140w

CALISHER, HORTENSE. Herself. 401p $10 Arbor house

B or 92

ISBN 0-87795-042-3 LC 72-82174

This work by the author of Standard Dreaming (BRD 1972) consists of "three main sections: a history of HC's zigzag progress as writer, 'crossbred' of European stock and settled aesthetic-ethical values, growing up in the 1920's turned on by non-representational art, then struggling with . . . marriage and career; . . . journal of a trip to the Far East; then, some . . . books-and-writers talk, issuing in prophecies for future art." (Library J)

Reviewed by Doris Grumbach

America 127:553 D 23 '72 280w

"There is an air of candor and aspiration in Herself which attracts me from the first. Miss Calisher, whose short stories in the New Yorker established her before she went on to her novels, has braided together her public and her private life with an honesty which makes me appreciate the difficulties, real or imaginary, which confront a woman writer. . . . Not every reader will wish to delve so intensely in her self-analysis, but for the non-writer there are delightful interludes in London, in Washington, and in her long flight through the Far East, where she is alternately teaching and being entertained. . . . I find myself skipping through her travel journal—for once started Miss Calisher seldom uses her brakes—but there are bright spots in it." Edward Weeks

Atlantic 230:132 O '72 1050w

Reviewed by C. M. Siggins

Best Sell 32:319 O 15 '72 1000w

"'Never a diary . . . partly a journal . . . more than a memoir . . . here is an autobiography, of great charm and forthrightness . . . that examines the enigma of 'woman's place' in the unstable context of American cultural expectations. . . . [It is] a thoroughgoing Cook's tour of the writer's life (as sometime journalist, lecturer, antiwar activist, 'anticritic') and the currents of tension (her 'fear of being a woman writer': the guilt felt by observers of life) that underlie literary creation. . . . [In it, Calisher] provides helpful comments on her own generally difficult fiction." Bruce Allen

Library J 97:2573 Ag '72 290w

Reviewed by Robert Kiely

N Y Times Bk R p3 O 1 '72 800w

"Hortense Calisher is one of those writers whose books are more admired than read. . . . Now the joint publication of her autobiography and her fifth novel may finally bring Calisher the recognition and readership she deserves. . . . 'Herself' is Calisher's personal statement about her art—and it is nothing less than a vertiginous guided tour through the mind of a wise and witty woman of 60 who since childhood knew she would be a writer. . . . Sometimes Calisher manages to stretch the words into weird contortions and enigmatic epigrams. . . . Never mind. Her literary and social criticism is provocative. The comments about Turgenev and Yukio Mishima (whom she admires) and Hemingway, Mailer and literary critics (whom she doesn't) are especially penetrating." Arthur Cooper

Newsweek 80:110 O 16 '72 300w

"Admirers of Hortense Calisher, familiar with her previous distinguished work and accustomed to the highly personal style she has made her own, would seem to be the destined, and very likely the delighted, readers of this autobiographical mélange. Others may find it something of a problem: to read and to make much of afterwards. . . . It seems a pity that Miss Calisher did not undertake to write an autobiography (her life and literary career would have justified it) but settled instead for 'an autobiographical work' that is a kind of scrapbook, unified by the fact that everything in it more or less relates to herself: some chapters of reminiscence; too many fugitive papers on books and plays; . . . letters to the editor; . . . all in all, a mishmash." William Abrahams

Sat R 55:75 O 14 '72 300w

CALISHER, HORTENSE. Standard dreaming. 127p $5.95 Arbor House

ISBN 0-87795-043-1 LC 72-82176

"The central figure in this . . . tale is Dr. Niels Berners, a Swiss plastic surgeon practicing in New York, a widower whose only son, Raoul, has dropped out of both Harvard and his father's life. Berners isn't even sure Raoul's alive and dreams only of reconciliation with him. To ease his burden—or perhaps to display his guilt—Berners joins a group of parents who all share Berners's dream and his despair. . . . Berners, who doubts that salvation lies in good works, nevertheless gives up his lucrative cosmetic surgery to help rehabilitate badly deformed children in Chinatown. . . . [He] sees 'bad flesh,' death and despair everywhere, especially among the young—'When any race begins to die, it is the child-cells that first say it.'" (Newsweek)

Reviewed by Doris Grumbach

America 127:553 D 23 '72 280w

Reviewed by Edward Weeks

Atlantic 230:132 O '72 210w

Reviewed by C. M. Siggins

Best Sell 32:330 O 15 '72 800w

"This powerful novella, despairing yet somehow elegiac, counterpoints the 'paleontological' death of our race against inconstant human efforts to 'keep the inanimate at bay.' . . . Like all of HC's best fiction, this relentless exploration of generational and cultural discords renders intellectually demanding material through realistic concentration on a complex of painful human dramas. Berners strives to make sense of the metaphysical limbo between the order his European upbringing forces him to mine from life, and the brutal void which it visits on him, in the form of his doomed, uncaring son. . . . What happens to those who . . . disengage from the mad flux and stand aside to observe and perceive, is presented by HC with immense compassion and understanding. . . . This is her most accessible and immediately moving book—not to be missed." Bruce Allen

Library J 97:2640 Ag '72 270w

"The novel is short, controlled, imagistic, a nightmare of love and grief. But it too is a meditation, one that treats some of the most disturbing problems of our time: drugs, the harsh impersonality of the city, the failure of marriage, the generation gap. Yet to string out the list in this way is to risk making the book sound like a series of chatty columns in The Ladies Home Journal. Of course, it is nothing of the kind. As usual, Hortense Calisher wastes no words surveying property and erecting signposts. She assumes her readers are fellow sufferers, that they already know the lay of the land. . . . Calisher is the rare writer who can move from a particular man to 'the species,' from a sharp observation to a generalization without appearing weary or ridiculous. Near the end of this short, beautifully wrought novel, she moves surely and powerfully into depths which would swamp a less skillful and sensitive artist." Robert Kiely

N Y Times Bk R p20 O 1 '72 1200w

Reviewed by Arthur Cooper

Newsweek 80:110 O 16 '72 300w

"Late in the text [of the author's autobiography, Herself, BRD 1972] we come upon a reference to a novel that Miss Calisher has begun to write. . . . That novel, Standard Dreaming, which is very brief, spare, tightly controlled, and, alas, not very interesting, originated in a notion that crossed her mind one day: 'that perhaps the race itself is now physically middle-aged.' . . . To dramatize the idea, Miss Calisher has invented a group of concerned parents, whose children have deserted them. . . . [Artistically] the tale is less dramatically persuasive than it might have been had Miss Calisher allowed the young to come on stage. As it is, they languish out of sight. . . . Dr. Berners [in the novel] is a good deal less interesting and sympathetic and credible than Miss Calisher in Herself. We are left, having read the two [simultaneously published] books in tandem, with a paradoxical conclusion: that there is too much of her in her autobiographical work, too little of her in her novel." William Abrahams

Sat R 55:75 O 14 '72 300w

CALLADO, ANTONIO. Don Juan's bar; a novel; tr. from the Portuguese by Barbara Shelby. 271p $7.95 Knopf

ISBN 0-394-47212-8 LC 70-171120

"Callado's novel of revolutionaries juxtaposes the plans of a group of inept Brazilian dreamers with the actualities of guerrilla action in Che's Bolivia. Most of the novel tells about the love entanglements of about a dozen Brazilians who regularly meet at Don Juan's Bar in Rio de Janeiro, rob banks to finance revolt, and make a half-hearted attempt to reach the Bolivian rebels." (Library J)

"As the novel comes to a slow conclusion several of the rebels are killed by the police, others find refuge in Cuba, and a few remnants are left to recruit new supporters for the continuing struggle. . . . [There is] little or nothing to recommend . . . this [book]. It is padded with trivial conversation and contains . . . relatively little exciting action. [It] also drags on interminably. . . . Callado's handling conveys the distinct conviction that, while he is a well-known journalist, he is a plodding, cumbersome writer of fiction." P. A. Doyle

Best Sell 32:51 My 1 '72 200w

"[This] is a clean, well-written book, crowded with characters who . . . seem to lead a significant and essential portion of their lives outside its pages. . . . [The novel's] weaknesses derive not so much from its occasional ineptitude but from the fact that it seems to be written in code, possibly to satisfy the demands of censorship. It is baffling, but at its best it is also haunting. For those who can read the code, it may have much to say. Shelby's translation is done with her usual competence and superior sense of language." L. J. Davis

CALLADO, ANTONIO—Continued

Book World p12 Ap 23 '72 490w

Choice 9:820 S '72 180w

Reviewed by Dorothy Nyren

Library J 97:698 F 15 '72 110w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk N p42 Ap '72 180w

"This funny, cynical, seductive Brazilian novel is virtually a textbook on how not to run a revolution. The many characters are mostly Rio radicals—the bohemian circle, the theater and movie crowd, the festive left.... Some have endured police torture [and] some have stockpiled guns.... Many die abruptly of their own recklessness; none of them make it across the Paragua River. Callado, a Rio journalist who has been in and out of jail himself, is jaunty and offhanded with his story, his level eye trained on his countryman and their dreamy, crazy ways. If he is saying anything, it is that the revolutionary impulse often leads to a most unsuitable quest for personal fulfillment, and the acts it engenders are the stuff of satire, not war."

Time 99:92 Ap 17 '72 160w

CALLAHAN, DANIEL, ed. The American population debate. 380p. $8.95; pa $2.50 Doubleday

301.3 U.S.—Population. Birth control
LC 79-144256

"The purpose of this book... is to bring together a variety of statements, analyses, and positions on American population growth and its implications for the quality and future of American life." (Introd)

"A very useful and accurately titled book. Materials for a genuine debate, or debates, are here—arranged in some cases in direct confrontation—data and arguments to support almost any contention in a very tangled and perplexing problem. The presumption of debate is further enhanced by Callahan's choice of papers of recent date (all since 1967), and for quite divergent viewpoints, though prepared by scholars of the highest stature.... Recommended for classroom or discussion groups where easy answers are not demanded. Some papers have no or few references, but Chapter 15 is an excellent summary of arguments and a review of the literature."

Choice 8:1516 Ja '72 180w

"There was a man, just returned from an extended stay at a monastery in central Greenland, who was unaware that population and ecology had become public issues in the United States, with widely diverse views being noisily aired in every public medium. It was for him that this collection was compiled. Of course, he would hardly have believed the nonsense being served up under these headings unless it was all spread out before him, and this was done.... Every degree of exaggeration, every type of misstatement, are well represented in academia itself, as we know after—if not before—reading Dr. Callahan's symposium." William Petersen

Contemp Sociol 1:568 N '72 1200w

"Among the contributors [to] this collection of 23 previously published essays are biologists, demographers, and sociologists, including Paul R. Ehrlich, Donald J. Bogue, Ansley J. Coale, and Marston Bates. Most agree that there is some kind of population problem.... [This book] will prove useful to the concerned citizen." H. O. Marcy

Library J 96:3111 O 1 '71 120w

CALLAHAN, NORTH. George Washington: soldier and man. 296p il $7.95 Morrow

B or 92 Washington, George, President U.S.
U.S.—History—Revolution
LC 74-170230

This "biography begins with Washington's appointment as commander-in-chief and his... victories in New England. It continues through the... winters at Valley Forge and Morris-town, the... defeats and partial victories, ending with the... Battle of Yorktown. There are also brief summaries of Washington's early and later years, including his terms as President." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] has written a very capable one-volume study.... [He] takes careful note of all the major and most of the minor [military] engagements in terms readily understandable to the untrained civilian.... Washington the man emerges as an individual whose heart was not completely in the fighting during those eight, seemingly interminable years.... Dr. Callahan has ably succeeded in his purpose: he has given us a skillfully drawn portrait of Washington as soldier and man. A one-volume portrait of Washington as president and man would be equally useful and welcome." J. Q. Feller

Best Sell 32:267 S 15 '72 650w

"[Callahan] presents the general reader with battle history approached through vignettes of officers, a flair for the romantic and dramatic, a breezy style, and an absence of scholarly impedimenta. Here the scholar will find no new information, few original insights, little depth of analysis, and occasional errors of fact.... [The author] whets the appetite with an appetit."

Choice 9:1348 D '72 120w

"[This] popular work [is] based on good scholarship.... Callahan's work is concise, readable, and accurate (he does not footnote, although he briefly discusses his sources and states that details are authenticated). However, he displays a relish for the supposed glory of bloody combat and appears little moved by its real consequences in human terms. With this caveat, the book is recommended." Jerry Cao

Library J 97:2382 JI '72 200w

"The book is written in a straightforward style, is moderately critical of Washington, and not in any sense original. It will be most useful to readers fond of military history who don't know much about military history."

N Y Times Bk R p48 D 10 '72 140w

CALLISON, BRIAN. A plague of sailors. 251p $5.95 Putnam

LC 73-151201

"Narrator-hero Brevet Cable, a British sailor-spy, is sent on a search for Anthrax-B, a biological weapon stolen from a research station in Scotland and now hidden on a ship en route to Israel carrying grain, supposedly for earthquake relief." (Library J)

"Callison has written a tense, spine-chilling story which practically brings the world to the edge of nuclear confrontation.... High recommendation for a fast-moving and very pertinent suspense story."

Best Sell 31:75 My 1 '71 230w

"Basically, this is a seagoing chase story, and Callison, author of A Flock of Ships (BRD 1970), appears to know ships and the sea intimately—certainly he writes of them skillfully. Anxious to prove to the reader he's not a 'super spy,' Cable cries a lot. If you prick him, he bleeds, and so does everybody else in this bloody melodrama. Callison can tell a story, but he relishes his gore a bit too much." J. L. Breen

Library J 96:2007 Je 1 '71 100w

Reviewed by Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p45 My 23 '71 120w

"Swag-bellied with overkill, Callison has still written a tempestuously exciting story.... Humanitarian hopes would be blasted by an especially foul form of disintegrating death, were it not for our camouflaged naval hero and the stick-at-nothing organization behind him. The pace is such that there's never a calm moment for marks."

TLS p511 Ap 30 '71 70w

CALVOCORESSI, PETER. Total war; the story of World War II [by] Peter Calvocoressi and Guy Wint. 959p il maps $15 Pantheon bks.

940.53 World War, 1939-1945

ISBN 0-394-47104-0 LC 72-8402

This volume sets out "the causes and courses of the war. Peter Calvocoressi writes two-thirds of it on 'The Western Hemisphere', and the late Guy Wint the rest on 'The War in Asia'." (New Statesman) Annotated bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by B. D. Williams

Best Sell 32:427 D 15 '72 500w

Reviewed by Edwin Tetlow

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ja 10 '73 650w

Economist 96:65 JI '72 500w

"Simply stated, the authors have produced the finest general account of World War II written to date. [It] is more than just a narrow military/political rehash, for considerable emphasis is placed on the drastic social and economic dislocation of a world turned upside down. Many chapters are devoted to the Asian theater, which is so often de-emphasized in other one-volume histories. The prose style is elegant, vaguely Churchillian; the generous statistical data are almost always thought provoking; and many excellent maps are included. Although the authors' interpretations are fairly traditional, the book contains countless lessons by implication—lessons still waiting to be learned by those in power today (e.g., air bombings have never won a war yet; it appears they never will)." M. R. Yerburgh

Library J 97:3583 N 1 '72 120w

"Calvocoressi might with advantage have brought more of his characters to life: only Hitler, Stalin and to some extent, Goebbels seem three-dimensional. He underestimates Marshal Zhukov. . . . Wint on the other hand devotes too much space to Indian politicians, and in particular to Subhas Chandra Bose. First-class features of the volume are the maps by Arthur Banks and the photographs, often harrowing in the extreme. The book is aimed in part at readers who are too young to remember the war at first hand. It performs this function admirably; but it goes much further and refreshes the memories of those of us who were involved. . . . As is the wont of British authors, rather too much space is given to the North African campaign." Geoffrey McDermott

New Statesman 84:58 J1 14 '72 1450w

Reviewed by David Schoenbrun

N Y Times Bk R p4 D 17 '72 2700w

"Mr Calvocoressi and Mr Wint have remarkably well-matched styles, equally crisp, imaginative and economical. It is as if a single historian with an equally specialized knowledge of Europe and Asia, as well as the United States and the Soviet Union, had written the whole book from a single point of view. . . . Both authors have a keen eye for personalities and striking detail as well as a sense of history and of the foundations of national character. They miss no opportunity of reinforcing pages of well-reasoned analysis with bizarre and significant anecdotes, like Ribbentrop's plan 'to arrange a conference with Stalin at which he would shoot Stalin with a specially designed fountain pen'."

TLS p789 J1 14 '72 600w

The CAMBRIDGE ancient history; 8d ed. v 1: pt 1: Prolegomena and prehistory; ed. by I. E. S. Edwards, C. J. Gadd [and] N. G. L. Hammond. 758p il maps $19.50 Cambridge 930 History, Ancient
SBN 521-07051-1 LC 75-85719

This new edition has been "entirely rewritten . . . and [is] about two times its previous length. It includes 10 chapters . . . and covers the prehistory of the Near East and Aegean from Paleolithic times up to the rise of the earliest urban centers." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies. Index to maps. General index. For the first edition see BRD 1923.

"[This volume] will not appeal to general readers who have available the much better illustrated Dawn of Civilization [ed. by S. Pigott BRD 1961] that covers some of the same area and includes some of the same authors. . . . The bibliographic system is awkward to use in that references in the text are given not to authors' names and dates but to sections and numbers of the bibliography, which is organized according to chapters and sub-chapters of the book. There is no single alphabetical listing for all the authors referred to in the text. The various chapters naturally differ somewhat in extent and intensity of coverage, but the emphasis of the entire book is on systematic presentation of available data. . . . The result is a sober, stolid reference work of considerable value to highly motivated scholars and students . . . but one which conveys nothing of the excitement of research . . . on particular problems (the food-producing revolution, the urban revolution) that do have a great deal of intrinsic interest." P. J. Watson

Am Anthropol 74:112 F/Ap '72 800w

"Eighteen specialists in particular problems, areas, and chronological periods have detailed what is currently known of man's prehistory and documented it with fifty pages of references that provide the serious student with the most comprehensive bibliography now available. . . . When judged by the competence of the contributors, the wealth of detail compressed into the text, the maps, charts, and bibliographies, this is by far the most useful presentation of man's history in the broad belt that extends from Greece to Iran from his earliest appearance to the end of the Chalcolithic period." J. B. Pritchard

Am Hist R 77:490 Ap '72 1000w

"The individual contributions are of somewhat uneven quality and often seem not entirely up to date. At least two of the authors treat radiocarbon dating . . . as some kind of new-fangled chronological method to be viewed with the greatest suspicion. From any viewpoint, the book is insufficiently well illustrated, especially considering the price. The plates for this and the subsequent three volumes are to appear in a separate volume which is apparently still in preparation. Some of the contributions are quite good, although the organization of the book as a whole is rather peculiar, with too little continuity on either a geographical or a chronological basis. Because of this, the individual chapters are more useful as reference sources than the book as a complete entity."

Choice 8:454 My '71 190w

CAMDEN, WILLIAM. The history of the most renowned and victorious Princess Elizabeth, late Queen of England; ed. and with an introd. by Wallace T. MacCaffrey. 351p $12.50 Univ. of Chicago press

942.0 Elizabeth I, Queen of England. Great Britain—History—Tudors, 1485-1603
ISBN 0-226-09218-6 LC 74-115682

This reprint of Camden's "1688 edition is abridged and only the period of Elizabeth's reign before 1589 is considered. . . . Not quite half of those years is actually reproduced." (Choice)

"Camden is rightfully considered by many as the father of modern British historiography, and MacCaffrey is one of our most prominent Tudor historians. It is thus a disappointment to find that in this book both men have comparatively little chance to use their talents. MacCaffrey is limited to a 40-page introduction. Here he brings forth many important questions, particularly about Camden's sources, but does not have the opportunity to answer them in full. . . . MacCaffrey was unable to add footnotes to even this relatively small portion of Camden. The result is that neither the Tudor scholar nor the student of historiography has the kind of book needed as a useful aid."

Choice 8:460 My '71 150w

"There is nothing superficial about Camden. In his life of the great Elizabeth he used few exact dates; but he wrote from an exact knowledge of the order in which events happened, and such knowledge is the proper base of the historian's craft. . . . Camden's book is usually called the Annals, for it is arranged as a summary of the reign by years, as had been the habit of medieval chroniclers. But it is far more than a chronicle. . . . MacCaffrey introduces it as 'surely one of the most neglected of the major English histories'. In a penetrating article he expounds the historian's career and prejudices. . . . [Camden's] history of Elizabeth I builds up an overwhelming impression of a wise, noble monarch through a cumulative series of small touches. . . . He [also] ranges outside politics, warfare and religion to glance now and then at social customs."

TLS p175 F 18 '72 500w

CAMERON, ALLAN W., ed. Viet-Nam crisis; a documentary history; v 1: 1940-1956; ed. with commentary and annotation, by Allan W. Cameron. 452p $18.50 Cornell univ. press

959.7 Vietnam—History—Sources
ISBN 0-8014-0582-3 LC 72-127600

"In the years covered by this first volume, the development of five questions is emphasized. The first is the policy of the Western allies, and particularly the United States, during World War II and the months immediately following the Japanese surrender. The second is the independence of Viet-Nam, whether Communist or non-Communist, from France. The third is the growth of the (Communist) Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam and its relations with the Communist powers. The fourth is the Geneva Conference of 1954, the agreements it produced, and the failure of those agreements to resolve the crisis. The last is the emergence of the Republic of Viet-Nam under the leadership of Ngo Dinh Diem with the strong support of the United States. . . . A second volume, covering the period from [1956 to 1965 is planned.]” (Pref) Bibliography.

CAMERON, A. W.—Continued

“[This] is a compilation of . . . public documents, arranged chronologically from January 7, 1943 . . . to July 6, 1956. . . . As a reference work dealing with ‘the international diplomacy of the Viet-Nam crisis since World War II,’ it is a convenient, competent, but quite restrictive anthology. . . . Chapter I (1940-45) is the weakest, lacking such crucial documents as (a) the diplomatic exchanges among the U.S., Japan, France, and China on the status of Indochina, in particular the Vichy-Tokyo economic and military agreements of July 1941; and (b) several essential documents on the rise of national Communism under Ho Chi Minh and the Viet-Minh league. . . . Well edited; good footnotes; no index; quite meager bibliography. Recommended for all libraries, public and academic.”

Choice 8:1628 F '72 190w

“For this first [volume] Cameron has selected 190 documents from the 3000 he claims are available. . . . They range widely from official state pronouncements, through speeches and press conferences, to private memoranda. Many are very brief extracts but major documents are presented complete. This volume makes much use of French originals, newly translated, but on the other side it is largely restricted to the foreign language press of Hanoi. Cameron concludes with the Geneva agreement and its aftermath. He supplies complete documentation and brief introductions, and his skill in selection has produced a surprisingly readable book. Through he had no access to still-secret documents, his volume is essential for research collections today.” Collin Clark

Library J 96:2002 Je 1 '71 40w

Reviewed by J. L. S. Girling

Pacific Affairs 45:143 spring '72 430w

CAMERON, AVERIL. Agathias. 168p $6.50 Oxford

949.5 Agathias, Scholasticus
SBN 19-814352-4 LC 72-496769

This is a study of the life, career, and work of “the sixth-century historian and poet Agathias.” (Class World) Bibliography.

“[Agathias] is one of the few secular historians of the early Byzantine period whose work survives in full . . . [and] is of uncontestable value not only as a source of data but also as a representative of the literary tradition in which he wrote. . . . [As Mrs. Cameron] insists, Agathias prized the literary quality of his work at least as highly as its veracity. . . . The Agathias who emerges [here] . . . turns out to differ very little from contemporary ecclesiastical historians in his concepts of historical process: disasters are the punishment for sin in a world governed by an unmistakably Christian God. By disclosing this tension between literary form and inner belief, Mrs. Cameron has made a valuable contribution to our understanding of the Byzantine mentality in the sixth century.” Walter Goffart

Am Hist R 76:767 Je '71 360w

“This is a very good and compact book. . . . It comprises twelve chapters, twelve appendices and a useful bibliography of the modern scholarly literature. . . . This should become the standard study of Agathias an historian. The author does not, except in Chapter II, give much attention to his poetry. She does offer useful precisions on his life and career and uses good sense in reaching a modest yet thoughtful and realistic appraisal of his abilities, pointing out his tendency to moralize and his efforts to achieve rhetorical effect. . . . [She] also offers a close study of his language and style, including the problem of archaism. The second half of the sixth century has suffered neglect and this study, with its high standard of scholarship, certainly helps to illuminate it.” W. E. Kaegi

Class World 64:161 Ja '71 800w

CAMERON, IAN. The impossible dream; the building of the Panama canal. 284p 11 maps $7.95 Morrow

386 Panama Canal
LC 79-151930

The author covers both the French and American efforts towards the building of the canal. Bibliography. Index.

“The story of the Panama Canal has been told many times by participants as well as historians. The author adds nothing particularly new to the subject; nevertheless, his lively prose makes for fascinating reading. . . . An absorbing account, Cameron’s study is bound to excite as well as instruct all who read it. It should be particularly appealing to thoughtful undergraduates.”

Choice 9:386 My '72 250w

“Climate, disease, and geology proved to be more perilous than anyone had dared imagine, and Mr Cameron describes the 30 years’ war against them with sustained brilliance. His style is controlled, and . . . he is able to generate a sense of awe towards those who fought it. At the same time he avoids exploiting the personalities self-consciously. But there are two major faults in the narrative. First, an omission. Mr Cameron’s heroes are the men at the top. . . . But [the] ordinary men who actually built it. . . . unlike those who built the pyramids of Egypt . . . worked voluntarily, dying in their thousands. Why? This is the mystery of Panama, and Mr Cameron barely touches it. The other fault is that he is too kind to the heroes he does choose.”

Economist 241:61 O 9 '71 500w

Reviewed by J. C. Shipman

Library J 97:1319 Ap 1 '72 100w

“The grand illusion that became the Panama Canal continues to attract historians . . . and ‘The Impossible Dream,’ is by far the best yet. Mr. Cameron, an Englishman, has a thorough understanding of the engineering problems involved. . . . This is incisive history; it cuts through many myths that have surrounded that monumental achievement.”

N Y Times Bk R p24 F 20 '72 90w

TLS p782 Jl 7 '72 800w

CAMERON, RODERICK. Australia: history and horizons. 288p 11 col 11 maps $14.95 Columbia univ. press

919.4 Australia—History
ISBN 0-231-03559-4 LC 76-155154

The author “portrays the style and quality of life in Australia from settlement in the late 1780’s through the 19th Century [with] a brief glance at the contemporary scene.” (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

“What interests [Cameron]—the explorers, bushrangers, painters, aborigines, gold miners, and whatever ‘society’ there was in those early days—he describes well, and he complements his text with judiciously chosen illustrations, many not previously reproduced. He also looks at the flora and fauna, again concentrating on the more picturesque aspects. The book is an easy-to-read, skillful evocation of certain facets of Australia’s history . . . but the index is inadequate. For larger libraries’ general interest and browsing collections.” Norman Horrocks

Library J 96:3754 N 15 '71 130w

“[This book] is something of a disappointment. Visually it is excellent. . . . But the text is thin. Most of it is a kind of beginner’s guide to the history of Australia—especially the early history—with all the politics left out. It is scholarly, well-written and accurate, but it does not pretend to tell us anything new. . . . One cannot help wishing that instead of relying so heavily on early histories and diaries, no matter how entertaining these are, [Mr Cameron] had used his own eyes more. The freshest chapters are those at the end of the book in which he simply describes Sydney and Melbourne today with a special emphasis on architecture.”

TLS p690 Je 16 '72 300w

CAMPBELL, A. E. America comes of age; the era of Theodore Roosevelt. 127p 11 col 11 maps $4.95 Am. heritage press 973.91 U.S.—History—1865-1898. U.S.—History—1898- . Roosevelt, Theodore, President U.S.

ISBN 0-07-009678-3 LC 78-136174

“The author treats the change of the United States into an . . . industrial nation. . . . The conflicting interests of farmers, industrialists, railroad builders, and other groups are . . . described. Populism, Progressivism, free silver, the tariff, and the like are explained. The account of the Progressive movement is built around the figure of Theodore Roosevelt." (Best Sell) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"In the brief space of about 120 pages, with over half the space devoted to illustrations, the author succeeds in cramming a vast amount of facts and producing an orderly and intelligible picture of an interesting and important historical period." F. J. Gallagher
Best Sell 32:60 My 1 '72 100w

"Campbell (Oxford) has written a brief, over-generalized account of the U.S. from [1860-1919]. The subtitle is misleading as less than half the book is devoted to the 25th President. The book displays an ignorance of recent scholarship and includes too many glib and sometimes false assertions. His account ignores such topical aspects as socialism and feminism. He does mention the Negro without, however, elaborating on Theodore Roosevelt's ambiguous attitude toward the race question. . . . [The book] is recommended for high school students, foreign students wishing to practice reading English, and illiterates who like to look at pictures. The illustrations are excellent."
Choice 9:570 Je '72 120w

CAMPBELL, ANGUS. White attitudes toward black people. 177p $8; pa $5 Univ. of Mich. Inst. for social res.

301.15 U.S.—Race relations
ISBN 87944-006-6 LC 74-161548

This monograph presents "data regarding racial attitudes accumulated in a series of sample surveys taken . . . between 1964 and 1970. The first six chapters report the findings of a study undertaken in early 1968 in 15 major cities of the United States at the request of the National Advisory Commission on Civil Disorders. . . . Chapter VII summarizes data obtained in response to a set of identical questions asked of samples of the national population in the Fall of 1964, 1968 and 1970. The final chapter considers the implications of these findings for the future of race relations in this country. . . . The present monograph extends the report of the data gathered from the white respondents in this survey. . . . A separate report of data from the black sample [is planned]." (Pref) Bibliography.

"Most of the research treats data from a 1968 survey of 2,945 white respondents in 15 American cities . . . and is fresh, wide-ranging, and explorative. . . . The findings (in 67 tables and 12 charts, clearly presented) are relevant for reference and research in higher education. On the minus side, the report has no depth or background. Too much is covered with too little care, both substantive and technical (including scattered typographical errors). Campbell has . . . assumed either that the reader will be familiar with much of what is omitted or neglected or that the reader does not want to be bothered with survey clutter. The 15 cities are not identified. . . . The work lacks definition. Some references, but no index and only a short bibliography lacking relevant literature."
Choice 9:440 My '72 210w

"Some findings merely reinforce common knowledge. . . . But others are provocative. . . . 'The educational system our respondents passed through had relatively little effect on their attitudes regarding race if they went no further than high school graduation.' Material concerning such attitudes . . . those toward civil rights legislation, federal aid to cities, police control, urban and suburban life, national origin, black protest, etc. is summarized in more than 75 tables, figures, and graphs, and is discussed briefly in the text with regard to causation and future implications." S. A. Smith
Library J 97:510 F 1 '72 160w

"[This] haphazardly timed survey conducted with varying objectives and methods in order to estimate trends in American opinions . . . illustrates both the promise of survey research and the severe limitations of present arrangements. . . . The most critical findings derive from secondary analyses of three national voting studies conducted by the author and his colleagues. . . . Three surveys designed for a different purpose are hardly ideal sources of data, but better ones are not available. Campbell's successive findings . . . show a steady though not dramatic improvement in white racial attitudes during these riot years. . . . [This book] can be recommended to all interested readers. Despite its neglect of the relevant literature and failure to probe deeply. The volume offers a useful overview." T. F. Pettigrew

Science 175:743 F 18 '72 650w

CAMPBELL, H. C. Canadian Libraries. 2d ed rev & enl 114p $5 Linnet bks.

021 Libraries—Canada
ISBN 0-208-01064-5 LC 78-21911

This "book was first published in 1969. [It] is divided into four major parts of which the first [is] 'Canadian libraries 1900-1960.' . . . The remaining three sections deal with post-1960 developments in 'Reference and research library resources' (university, special, and government), 'Provincial and regional library systems,' and 'Library planning and co-operation in Canada.'" (Col & Res Lib) Bibliography.

"[There are] 114 pages in the second ■ compared with 90 in the first edition; updated statistics; mention of recent developments in Quebec and Saskatchewan, for example, as well as at the national level; considerable re-writing and expansion of several sections, and the addition of a new chapter. There is a satisfactory index and ■ dreadful map. . . . Campbell has relied primarily on his own wide-ranging knowledge of Canadian libraries and on contacts in the field, rather than on documents for his information. This makes for a readable, highly personal impression; the student or reader who wishes to look further, however, may not always be well served." A. B. Piternick

Col & Res Lib 33:149 Mr '72 650w

"I am not sure to whom this book is addressed. Is it for Canadians? Is it for non-Canadians? Is it for people interested in libraries or people not interested in libraries? Is it vanity publishing? The author? The publisher? Certainly there is ■ need for a good one-volume work that will give considerable information about Canadian libraries, their history, purpose, background, etc. as ■ whole, but this book, in its present form, is not that document. So many things are barely touched on or eliminated altogether. . . . The book reads like an outline for ■ much larger work." C. D. Kent

Library ■ 96:3100 O 1 '71 370w

CAMPBELL, JOHN FRANKLIN. The foreign affairs fudge factory. 292p $6.95 Basic bks.

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations. U.S.—Diplomatic and consular service. U.S. Department of State
SBN 465-02473-5 LC 73-158438

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by I. M. Destler
Am Pol Sci ■ 66:671 Je '72 750w

Reviewed by Smith Simpson
Ann Am Acad 399:212 Ja '72 650w

Reviewed by Aaron Segal
Nation 214:152 Ja 31 '72 900w

CAMPBELL, JOSEPH. Myths to live by; foreword by Johnson E. Fairchild. 276p $6.95 Viking

291 Mythology
SBN 670-50359-2 LC 78-181974

The author of The Masks of God: Occidental Mythology (BRD 1964), and The Masks of God: Oriental Mythology (BRD 1962), "explains the necessity of myths to human well-being, and deplores the fact that (at least in his opinion) no religious myth at present meets this need. He describes the similarities between Eastern and Western religious myths, and the divergent uses that Occident and Orient make of the same fables; he talks of myths of war and myths of peace, myths in schizophrenia, space travel, love, and poetry." (New Yorker) Index.

"Campbell is interested in the myths of ancient man, his myth-making throughout history, and in myths forged in today's troubled world. His constant questions are: What are myths? and, What value do myths have for us today? . . . One of the most provocative chapters is on the need man has for ritual especially in times of stress. . . . Our author is at his best in the last three chapters on current myth: the 'Inner Journey' through the psyche, the 'Outward Journey' of the hero-astronauts, and the closing off of horizons in modern life. The book makes tough readings, but for the student of literature, psychology, religion, mythology, and sociology it is must reading." S. J. Laut

CAMPBELL, JOSEPH—Continued

Best Sell 32:164 J1 1 '72 450w

"The best chapter (Chapter 6) is based on what was the earliest lecture, entitled 'The inspiration of Oriental art.' That and the 1969 chapter on Zen should be required reading in every college introductory course, as well as in high schools, for their wisdom is much needed in these times of expanding contacts with the Far East. [The author's] discussions on Indian, Chinese, and Japanese modes of thought and action, on Kundalini yoga, Tao, and Zen Buddhism, are the best popular treatments of these topics by a Western author one could possibly wish for. On the other hand, his disenchantment with much traditional Judeo-Christian mythology often results in petulance; some of his treatment of the subject will probably cause offense. . . . A few, very few, of his anthropological observations are [dated]."
Choice 9:1118 N '72 290w

Reviewed by J. A. Appleyard
Commonweal 96:528 S 29 '72 1400w

"Modern science, it is clear, has destroyed the meaning of most of the ancient myths which supported ethical systems, at least in the Western world. It is Campbell's contention that these myths must be replaced if Western civilization is to continue. His presentation of this theme is moving and is illustrated from a wealth of accumulated knowledge. Unfortunately the book's positive suggestions are less intriguing; the author can only suggest as modern myths the fission of the atom and the moon walks." J. R. Bram
Library J 97:2420 J1 '72 160w

[This book] charmingly conserves the personal directness of speech while discussing, with pith and earnestness, some of the profoundest human concerns. . . . [In it the author] most hopefully suggests the shapes that new myths may take."
New Yorker 48:111 Je ■ '72 100w

"[This book] is badly written. It was reworked from public lectures given at Cooper Union over many years and, as a result, retains the cloying chatter of a rather unstructured lecturer talking to an undemanding audience. Professor Campbell, moreover, is much taken with the Orient, and the East is sometimes like one LSD trip too many. One's mind gets permanently blown, and clear thinking becomes difficult. Many associations that he draws are too irrelevant to tolerate in print, though they may have gotten some chuckles from his audience. The text is a miscellaneous bundle of personal impressions or observations, together with quotes from poetry or favorite authors. And parables take the place of argument." Emmett Wilson
Sat R 55:68 Je 24 '72 250w

CAMPBELL, PENELOPE. Maryland in Africa: the Maryland state colonization society, 1831-1857. 264p il $7.95 Univ. of Ill. press 325.752 Maryland State Colonization Society. Colonization. Negroes in Liberia.
SBN 252-00135-8 LC 75-131058

"At odds with the parent American Colonization Society over operation of its Liberian settlement, the Maryland State Colonization Society decided in 1833 to found its own African colony, Maryland in Liberia, at Cape Palmas, 200 miles south of Monrovia. For the next 21 years the society . . . coaxed several hundred . . . Negroes into resettlement, and struggled to keep internal conflicts and quarrels with neighboring tribes from destroying the colony. In 1854 the settlement achieved independence and three years later it was absorbed into the Republic of Liberia." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Campbell has researched and described these developments with a competence that recommends [her study] to general readers and serious scholars alike. [It] provides splendid insights into the problems of colonization and the ideology of border-state reformers pursuing a rather left-handed solution to the race problem. Weaknesses exist, to be sure: no maps of the Cape Palmas area, and its indigenous population is given short shrift. Little information is provided on Maryland Negroes to support the questionable claim that 'their situation was reasonably tolerable.' Despite these shortcomings, [this book is] required reading for students of the crusade to end racial injustice by deporting its victims."

Choice 8:1070 O '71 210w

Reviewed by J. H. Pease
J Am Hist 58:1012 Mr '72 420w

CAMPBELL, T. D. Adam Smith's science of morals. 244p $12 Rowman & Littlefield

170 Smith, Adam
ISBN 0-04-192027-9 LC [70-870557]

Campbell discusses "Smith's works and emphasizes that Smith was concerned primarily with the origins and functions of moral judgments rather than with the logical clarification of moral discourse. Campbell explains Smith's idea of science and shows how he used the concept of sympathy to explain moral judgment, authority, political obedience, and the content of civil and criminal law. Campbell concludes that, despite Smith's significant achievement, many of his generalizations depend upon a particular interpretation of ambiguous social phenomena and cannot be rigorously tested." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"This book is clearly written, balanced account of Smith's ethical and legal theories considered as contributions to the scientific study of morals and law. . . . A solid work."
Robert Hoffman

Library J 97:1720 My 1 '72 120w

"[Adam Smith's] first book was the Theory of Moral Sentiment published in 1759. . . . [Dr. Campbell] has studied the [book] in relation to all Smith's writings, not just the Wealth of Nations but also the posthumously published Philosophical Essays and students' reports of Smith's lectures on Rhetoric and Jurisprudence. His . . . book is without doubt sounder and more enlightening than any other study of Smith's ethical theory. The one point that he has not stressed sufficiently is the influence on Smith of Stoicism. In consequence his view that Smith is ultimately a utilitarian does not carry conviction."
TLS p918 J1 30 '71 700w

CAMPION, ROSAMOND. The invisible worm. 96p $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

616.9 Cancer
LC 72-77275

The author "is in favor of local excision of early breast cancers as opposed to radical mastectomy. She recounts her own experience in choosing local excision as treatment for her own breast cancer, and criticizes doctors who treat physical disorders without informing patients of possible alternate solutions and their implications." (Library J)

"Although some of the author's digressions seem irrelevant, she presents an authoritative and rational argument for her position."
Barbara Lucas

Library J 97:2625 Ag '72 90w

"Campion happens to be a writer and a good one, so this is more than a clinical account. The drama here revolves around the author's stubborn decision, in the face of you-are-a-child authoritarian advice from her surgeon, not to undergo a mastectomy. . . . This story reflects the increasing rebellion of women against all-or-nothing breast surgery."
N Y Times Bk ■ p38 O 1 '72 100w

CAMUS, ALBERT. A happy death; tr. from the French by Richard Howard; afterward and notes by Jean Sarracchi. 192p $5.95 Knopf
ISBN 0-394-47262-4 LC 78-171141

A translation of the late French writer's "first novel written between 1936 and 1938. . . . The hero, Mersault . . . commits a murder for the sake of money in order to buy himself a life of leisure time in which to create his own happiness. The 'happy death' of the title signifies the completion of a life lived to satisfaction in a state of self-willed happiness. . . . A selection of textual variants [is provided]." (Library J)

Reviewed by J. D. O'Hara
Book World p4 My 14 '72 550w
Choice 9:974 O '72 130w

Reviewed by J. F. Smith
Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 28 '72
400w

Economist 243:66 Je 10 '72 400w

"[Howard's translation] preserves ■ sense of the verbal felicities of the original. As a work of fiction, the book is not entirely satisfying, but in its relationship to The Stranger [BRD 1946] and to the essays, its importance is undeniable. . . . While lacking the unity and thorough development of Camus's later work, this short novel includes many of his recurrent themes: rebellion against the mundane and mediocre, conscious acceptance of the rigorous truth of one's own actions, exile in gray northern regions, union with nature in the unrelenting sun of Algeria, and rejection of societal morality. The novel's flaws are in its episodic disparity and the decreasing impact from the initial description of the murder until the hero's natural death from pleurisy. The author's decision not to publish this book during his lifetime is understandable, but this edition, completed by . . . a perceptive brief critical essay by Jean Sarracchi, will be welcomed by students." Karen Horny

Library J 97:1458 Ap 15 '72 260w

Reviewed by David Osborne
New Repub 167:25 Jl 22 '72 800w

Reviewed by Shirley Toulson
New Statesman 83:799 Je ■ '72 400w

Reviewed by John Weightman
N Y Rev of Books 18:6 Je 15 '72 2550w

Reviewed by Peter Sourian
N Y Times Bk R p4 Je 12 '72 950w

Reviewed by John Updike
New Yorker 48:157 O 21 '72 3450w

Reviewed by Arthur Cooper
Newsweek 79:96 Je 19 '72 700w

"[This] is an unlicked bear cub of a book. . . . [It] is now being published for a general audience. . . . Yet this bad first novel of ■ famous author has nothing in it for the nourishment of the common reader. Its proper audience is the much more restricted one of professional specialists. . . . [The] section of notes and textual variants . . . will be useful to specialists. . . . [I could wish] that the very able translator . . . had been asked to write an introduction to the novel; it would have been at once sympathetic and scrupulous, and we might have learned from a writer who has had to pay minute and sustained attention to this text just what there is in it to justify our reading it." Emile Capouya

Sat R 55:63 Ap 15 '72 2550w

"With open trunks of manuscripts yawning around the publishing world, what widows do with material that writers originally considered unpublishable is an increasingly controversial matter. In this case Mme. Camus was obviously right. The dogged clumsiness of the construction and some superfluous scenes show a beginner hard at work. But the ability to describe the world as it might have been seen by an angel on his first visit shows that Camus was in some respects already near the height of his powers. . . . A Happy Death may be read as a preamble to The Stranger [BRD 1946] and The Myth of Sisyphus [BRD 1955], though it lacks their intellectual power and control. No matter. The book offers, like a gift from the grave, passages of radiant writing." Martha Duffy

Time 99:88 Je ■ '72 700w

CANALETTO. The complete paintings of Canaletto; introd. by David Bindman; notes and catalogue by Lionello Puppi. 128p il col il $5.95 Abrams

759.5

ISBN 0-297-00078-0

LC-556446

This book "includes a critical history, 64 color plates, [and] a biography in outline." (Nation)

"[This] latest addition to the 'Classics of World Art' does nothing to make one feel happier about this series. For whom is it intended? Colour reproduction is not faithful enough to endear the books to specialists; yet the ordinary reader wants more hand-holding than is provided by the two-or three-page introductions that precede the colour plates and the catalogues."

Economist 238:53 Ja 23 '71 40w

"[This book contains] tiny reproductions of everything. . . . [It is a] first rate [book]." Lawrence Alloway

Nation 213:667 D 20 '71 30w

CANCIAN, FRANK. Change and uncertainty in a peasant economy; the Maya corn farmers of Zinacantan. 208p il $7.95 Stanford univ. press

330.972 Zinacantan, Mexico—Economic conditions. Corn. Zinacantan, Mexico—Social conditions

ISBN 0-8047-0787-1 LC 72-153814

This is a "study of economic change in Zinacantan, a community of 9,000 Maya Indians in Southern Mexico. . . . The author first gives . . . [an] ethnographic description of corn farming in Zinacantan as of 1966, including the organization of agricultural production, the agricultural work cycle, transportation and marketing, and the costs and yields of farming. The second part of the book focuses on the changes that took place between 1957 and 1966 as the result of government road-building and corn-buying programs. Finally, the author develops and tests a theory relating behavior under uncertainty (contrasted with risk as usually defined by economists) to rank in an economic stratification system. This final chapter provides evidence for the importance of uncertainty in change situations, and for the importance of social structural variables in predicting economic behavior under these conditions." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"For the reader interested in ethnographic studies, this is a valuable book. . . . Cancian presents a sympathetic overview of community life and discusses in detail the socio-economic organization and the techniques of agricultural production from planting to marketing. . . . The author's generally carefully drawn conclusions rely heavily on interviews, surveys, participant observations, and several years of experience with the Zinacantecos. . . . Many readers could benefit from Professor Cancian's perspective and his analysis and organization of basic data, particularly those people planning a similar study." F. D. Miller

Ann Am Acad 403:210 S '72 550w

"[This is] a study of the part tradition and innovation play in adapting to changing economic circumstances. [It] is highly recommended for its empirical data, sound operationalization of theory and concepts, and testing of specific hypotheses from that theory. . . . Data obtained in field work in 1960s, excellent photos, index, informative maps, and relevant bibliography. Important book in economic anthropology and for Latin American studies."

Choice 9:886 S '72 200w

CANNING, VICTOR. The runaways. 222p $5.95 Morrow

LC 77-181352

"Fifteen-year-old Smiler, who has escaped from an English reform school, . . . makes a dash for freedom [during a storm]. . . . In the same storm a bolt of lightning also knocks down a fence at Longleat, the animal refuge, releasing a cheetah named Yarra. Smiler takes shelter in a barn loft, Yarra prowls below, and their paths cross repeatedly. It is only after the cheetah has had cubs, and she has died, that boy meets animal. Smiler feeds and trains the orphaned cubs, then stealthily returns them to Longleat." (Sat R)

Reviewed by S. F. Burke

Best Sell 32:192 Jl 15 '72 300w

"[This is] an unusual if not always credible story. Canning is at his best in the sections dealing with the cheetah and in his descriptions of the English countryside. Still, though this book might have made a good short story, the material is too thin for a full-length novel." Lola Dudley

Library J 97:83 Ja 1 '72 130w

Reviewed by Janet Kammermeyer

Library J 97:291 Ja 15 '72 100w [YA]

"Animal lovers will identify closely with Yarra as she stalks the Salisbury plain, picking off small game and eventually—well, wait and see. Sentimentalists will empathize with the plucky youth, nicknamed 'Smiler.' . . . Both are outcasts living off the land. This is the kind of animal adventure story that has been rolling along since Black Beauty was a colt, and Mr. Canning is so sure of his field that he has two sequels already on the drawing board. Coming next: 'Flight of the Grey Goose.'" Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk ■ p32 F 13 '72 120w

"Both story lines, told in alternate chapters and scarcely meshing, hold interest, but the emphasis is on Smiler. . . . What gives [this novel vitality is its judicious mixture of appealing characters, suspense, light humor and precise detail. For young adults." Zena Sutherland

CANNING, VICTOR—Continued

Sat R 55:81 F 19 '72 140w [YA]

CANNON, LOU. The McCloskey challenge. 272p $7.95 Dutton

B or 92 McCloskey, Paul N.
SBN 0-525-154329 LC 73-179860

The author, a Washington correspondent for Ridder Publications, "has traced the evolution of Pete, [actually, Paul N.] McCloskey from a military-minded young man who grew up in the sheltered atmosphere of Pasadena, California and went to war, to a Congressman seeking an anti-war referendum against President Richard Nixon." (Publisher's note) Index.

"This book is a distinguished and possibly futile achievement. It is a magnificent character analysis of a man, and an equally magnificent analysis of certain political processes ongoing in our country today. The achievement may be futile because Lou Cannon's hero, Congressman Paul N. McCloskey, Jr., has withdrawn from his presidential campaign, after receiving twenty percent of the Republican vote in the New Hampshire primary on March seventh. . . . The book, in spite of those portions which make McCloskey a combination Frank Merriwell and Joe Palooka, is recommended for readers who can draw their own conclusions." R. E. O'Brien

Best Sell 32:9 Ap 1 '72 380w

"Lou Cannon's thorough and objective account of [McCloskey's] Laos episode (he was there at the time) shows that it was more a case of misunderstanding than deceit; but Cannon's knowledgeable examination of McCloskey's whole career makes the resulting moral tantrum understandable. Marines must get angry to get themselves into battle; preachers must sometimes stretch a point to be emphatic; and, besides, the experience of inspiration is not only pleasurable, but self-validating; McCloskey's is a fighter truth—truth to his mission, not to minor things like the facts." Gary Willis

Book World p5 Mr 5 '72 500w

Reviewed by Collin Clark

Library J 97:1802 My 15 '72 130w

CANTOR, MURIEL G. The Hollywood TV producer; his work and his audience. 256p $7.95 Basic bks.

791.45 Television—Production and direction. Television broadcasting
SBN 465-03037-8 LC 76-174811

"An assistant professor of sociology at the American University has written a . . . study of the role and work of the prime-time television producer. The producer's . . . powers (as well as his responsibilities) are analyzed through interviews of and statements by producers themselves. The role of the networks and the audience are also studied, with emphasis on the complexities involved in bringing entertainment and enrichment to home audiences of all ages. The appendixes include Sections I-IV of the Television Code, information on the Nielsen ratings, [and] a complete copy of the interview used." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"There is a reasonably rigorous methodology in the collection of data. Conversely, there is a singular reluctance to go beyond that point. Facts without intuition are as sterile as intuition without fact is chaotic. . . . I have two other caveats about the book. The first is the failure to cite specific TV programs to illustrate the generalizations made by the producers. . . . [The second is that] the TV industry is itself in a state of flux, and conditions which obtained in 1968-1969 are either no longer relevant in quite the same way they were then or are totally irrelevant. . . . Therefore, despite the amount of scholarship illustrated in the planning and execution, I am compelled to view the work as a whole as artifact rather than fact. . . . In terms of its immediate use, I am afraid there is little save as a historical reference point. But perhaps that is sufficient to justify its existence." R. C. O'Hara

Ann Am Acad 403:211 S '72 350w

"Appears to be the result of extensive descriptive research, reminiscent of a Ph.D. dissertation in style and structure. However, this does not mitigate the resource value of the book. The author has described in detail, without naming names, the role of the television producer as the 'principal gatekeeper' of the content and production of the entertainment viewed by audiences of American network television. . . . The work is a good reference source for students, teachers, and professionals interested in a better understanding of the inner workings of American television programming processes."

Choice 9:227 Ap '72 170w

"Within the limited terms set for herself, Cantor has done a careful and competent job. We have a valuable addition to our literature on occupations with important sidelights on the television industry and the criteria used in shaping popular culture. The author hesitates however to consider related questions which loom large. One concerns the network which comes through as a rather faceless reified bureaucracy which may set policy, overrule and censor, all for profit and safety. How do we reconcile this image with the role of the network in news and public affairs which is sometimes professional, challenging, and socially oriented? The producers also come across with little depth or humanity. . . . But these criticisms go beyond the terms of reference Muriel Cantor set for herself." Frederick Elkin

Contemp Sociol 1:535 N '72 900w

Reviewed by J. L. Limbacher

Library J 97:870 Mr 1 '72 100w

CANTWELL, ROBERT. The hidden Northwest. 335p maps $8.50 Lippincott

979 Northwest, Pacific—History
ISBN 0-397-00871-6 LC 72-1306

"The first section of the book deals with the Northwest as it appeared to early explorers and settlers, reflected in the words of such men as Captain George Vancouver, Dr. William Tolmie, James Swann, and Theodore Winthrop. . . . [Winthrop's] adventure story, The Canoe and the Saddle, was a . . . reversal of the accepted view of this region as bleak, inhospitable, and storm-wracked. . . . The second section is a look at the Northwest a century after Winthrop's death. Mr. Cantwell retraces Winthrop's steps and finds the area still a place of vast promise, still a naturalist's paradise despite the encroachment of modern life." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Cantwell's Northwest—Oregon, Washington, British Columbia—is 'hidden' because so many of its discoverers and explicators were themselves mysterious figures, driven by unfathomable motives, working from obscurity back into obscurity. . . . Winthrop thought that scenery, by itself, would be a civilizing influence in a land called savage and storm-lashed by those who first saw it. Yet, the first wave of civilization clear-cut forests, fouled rivers, killed salmon runs, and left upon the land deserted lumber towns (which exert their melancholia into the present). The Northwest is hidden because a distinctively regional culture has not emerged. . . . [Cantwell] displays the pride and sadness Northwesterners feel toward the grandeur, yet failed hopes, of their land." S. A. Haffner

Library J 97:2198 Je 15 '72 120w

"In this wide-ranging history, with an approach more evocative than chronological, [the author] conveys the brooding, rain-soaked beauty of the region. A number of forgotten characters are revived, and especially interesting is a chapter on Northwest writers which masterfully describes how the land was refracted through their imaginations. There is some very good writing on salmon desperately trying to spawn in too-warm waters, also on the great storms that provide such a dramatic backdrop to the people who have made the Northwest what it is."

Y Times Bk R p38 O '72 110w

CAPLAN, GERALD L. The elites of Barotseland, 1878-1969; a political history of Zambia's Western province. 270p pl maps $8.50 Univ. of Calif. press

320.9689 Barotseland—Politics and government. Lozi (African tribe)
ISBN 0-520-01758-7 LC 77-119713

"This study attempts to describe the interaction between western imperialism and the political elites of one African people over the past century. . . . In the 1960s, the integration of Barotseland into the new nation of Zambia became a key to the transformation of a . . . colonial entity into a united . . . [state. During this period there developed] a power struggle between ethnic and class groupings in which the Lozi were intimately involved. . . . [The central concern of this book] is to identify the changing locus of power in Barotseland between 1878 and 1969. . . . [It] is based on written materials collected in 1964 and 1965, and on oral evidence." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by A. R. Booth

Am Hist 77:821 Je '72 700w

"Dr. Caplan has produced a useful and readable book, for which he has drawn on Lozi oral tradition as well as European documentary sources. But his failure to define his terms, notably nationalism and tribalism, leads him sometimes to draw rather doubtful conclusions from the facts which he marshals with considerable skill." William Tordoff

Am Pol Sci R 66:632 Je '72 900w

"Recent years have seen a remarkable surge of activity in historical scholarship in Africa. . . . This movement has been characterized by the skillful use of oral traditions and personal histories as well as the more familiar archival materials of an older approach to historiography. An expanding group of younger scholars has emerged within this approach. . . . Caplan falls into this group and his study . . . is of more than local interest. . . . The final chapter deals with the nationalist movement in Central Africa, the breakup of the federation, and the emergence of Zambia—within which the contradiction of the Lozi kingdom is being faced anew. This excellent study concludes with . . . a list of informants that is valuable in its own right." E. V. Winans

Ann Am Acad 398:145 N '71 800w

"Caplan's book thoroughly documents the political history from the reign of Lewanika to the incorporation of Barotseland into Zambia in the 1960's. In the absence of a more general history this is probably the standard work on the Barotse. It is, moreover, written primarily from an African point of view, incorporating extensive oral evidence obtained during the author's three visits to Barotseland. Excellent note on sources."

Choice 8:719 JI '71 190w

CAPORALE, ROCCO, ed. The culture of unbelief. See Symposium on the Culture of Unbelief. Rome, 1969

CAPTAIN X. Safety last; the dangers of commercial aviation: an indictment by an airline pilot. 264p $7.95 Dial press

387.7 Aeronautics, Commercial. Aeronautics—Accidents. Aeronautics—Safety measures
LC 72-2474

In this book about "airline safety procedures . . . 'Captain X' criticizes the obsession of certain airline managements with speed in favor of safety and deplores the lack of sophisticated guidance equipment at many airports. He . . . defends his fellow pilots against what he claims is the all-too-frequent verdict of 'pilot-failure' . . . [and] offers constructive suggestions." (N Y Times Bk R) Glossary. Index.

"Designed not to calm passengers' jitters—anything but that!—but rather to promote legislation for better safety, this anonymous and rather excited pilot's view of the air and the ground is but one more document in the sequence of generally unheeded warnings about air safety."

Christian Century 89:928 S 20 '72 50w

"Poorly organized and spotty in style, for the most part the book is overly sensational. Too often the reader is given a quick glimpse of an airline accident, usually in a paragraph or two, and then, with insufficient factual foundation he is given the author's conclusions. With little documentation and an inadequate review of the facts, the reader is asked to accept the assurances of the anonymous Captain X who tells us that his conclusions are right. . . . The book's title is catchy and its chapter headings provocative. . . . But the chapter titles promise more than the chapters themselves provide. Sometimes flamboyant and often sensational, the author does little to make his case. There is no doubt (however) that he knows a lot about aviation and existing safety problems." K. M. Ruppenthal

Nation 215:251 S 25 '72 1000w

N Y Times Bk R p52 24 '72 80w

"Accidents will happen, but, according to 'Captain X' in this salty . . . book, many of them don't have to—and, unless something is done, a lot more are going to. In fact, by the end of the book, one gets the feeling that flying has become a matter of Muzak roulette. The villains are not unfamiliar: corporate venality, government bureaucratic inadequacies, ill-equipped airports, technical deficiencies. The most alarming passages are those that deal with mid-air collisions and control-tower understaffing. . . . [The author's] message is loud and clear and ignored, no doubt, at our peril. . . . Not recommended for inflight reading, unless you prefer anxiety attacks to the usual bad movies."

Sat 55:109 O 7 '72 290w

CARASOV, VICTOR. Two gentlemen to see you, Sir; the autobiography of a villain; with a foreword by Michael Young. 191p $5.50 Taplinger

B or 92 Crime and criminals—Great Britain. Prisons—Great Britain
ISBN 0-8008-7920-1 LC 76-155091

The author, an English professional criminal who spent fifty years in various prisons, gives an account of his life and activities.

"[This] is a curious, crotchety, idiosyncratic book, but it is clearly Carasov's own. . . . The story the author has to tell is an uncommonly interesting one for connoisseurs of lives gone wrong. . . . As he sees himself, Carasov is an intelligent and sensitive man (as he surely is), with a discriminating palate and a taste for luxury, including the company of warm and handsome women. His fatal flaw, he points out, is his temper, which has betrayed him at critical moments in and out of prison." Kenneth Lamott

Book World p21 N 21 '71 900w

"Carasov's writing style is quaint and eccentric. . . . The direct stream-of-consciousness tale of humiliation, fear, and evil does convey the banality, absurdity, and existential isolation of a thief's life, as he experiences it. But Carasov has remarkably little to say about his compatriots in crime and punishment—stresses, rather, his sexual adventures on the outside—and his observations about the courts and the prisons are somewhat pedestrian. . . . This rather weird autobiography corresponds most closely to Charrière's Papillon (BRD 1970), although it is somewhat less provocative."

Choice 8:1516 Ja '72 230w

"[This book] certainly exposes the bulk of criminal confessions for the artificial book-making they usually are. . . . [It] is much more than a catalogue of crimes committed and indignities endured. It is an apologia in the true sense of the word: not an excuse for [Carasov] and his crimes but an honest attempt to tell it as it was, a process of habituation to crime that comes to seem inevitable as life itself. [This account] will hardly be an impressive monument to fifty years of English penal treatment, but it is one man's honest assessment of the built-in futility of too many penal attitudes. And, unlike most books of this kind, it is wholly free from self-pity."

TLS p1053 S 8 '71 550w

CARDWELL, D. S. L. From Watt to Clausius; the rise of thermodynamics in the early industrial age. 336p il pl $11.50 Cornell univ. press

621.4 Thermodynamics. Heat engines
ISBN 0-8014-0678-1 LC 72-16329

"This historical study of the development of the science of thermodynamics from about the 17th to the late 19th Century emphasizes the interrelationship of the history of thermodynamics as a theoretical science with the concurrent development of the technology of heat power. Cardwell considers thermodynamics to have (substantially) originated in the solution of technical problems connected with heat engines. . . . [He also discusses] contributions before Watt." (Library J) Index.

"[The book's] history of science is superb, neither overly intellectualized nor trivialized into the obvious consequences of technical invention. Since parts of the book are difficult to read and it requires some background in thermodynamics, its obvious audience will be scholars and graduate students, but advanced undergraduates with proper preparation will deepen their understanding of physical science if they read it. A must for any serious library of physics or its history."

CARDWELL, D. S. L.—Continued

Choice 9:76 Mr '72 80w

"The book is more or less limited to classical thermodynamics and does not discuss extensively the development of statistical mechanics or quantum statistical mechanics—which are, for the most part, post-Clausian. Highly recommended for its general informative value, as well as for its rather original interpretation of the origins of thermodynamics. A familiarity with the basic concepts of thermodynamics is assumed." B. L. Stern

Library J 97:510 F 1 '72 190w

"[This work] is detailed, explaining unfruitful as well as fruitful ideas leading to the engineering sciences of heat transfer and thermodynamics, and it follows a chronological pattern. It thus emphasizes rather than suppresses the confusion of diverging and converging chains of ideas and indicates the distance that lies between a logical textbook exposition of a science and the tortured path that its development actually followed. The book is intended for teachers of thermodynamics as an antidote to the arbitrary and sterile treatment usually found in the textbooks they use. It would be a pity, however, if other readers were not also attracted to the book, for Cardwell . . . has much to offer even those who will not follow all of his arguments to their conclusions. His insights speak not only to the sciences of heat but also to the nature of scientific thought and understanding." E. S. Ferguson

Science 175:745 F 18 '72 850w

"Cardwell introduces a social dimension into theoretical science, and shows in a very convincing manner how important power technology was in the formulation of the basic conceptual apparatus of thermodynamics. . . . [This] book, with its . . . discursive style, its photographs of Fairbottom Bobs and his kind, and its notes tucked out of sight at the end, might well strike a prospective reader as being a less severe essay in intellectual history, but this is not so. Dr Cardwell is rarely satisfied with mere allusion and he has a rare gift for explaining his subject in a concise but comprehensive and readily intelligible way. He refrains from that habit, even now endemic among thermodynamicists, of sliding over conceptual difficulties."

TLS p133 F 4 '72 460w

CARLETON, MARK T. Politics and punishment; the history of the Louisiana State penal system. 215p il $8.50 La. state univ. press

365 Prisons—Louisiana

ISBN 0-8071-0940-1 LC 78-165067

The author contends that "profits, patronage, class and race politics, and punishment not rehabilitation, have guided the Louisiana penal system since the 1830's." (Library J)

"This is Carleton's published doctoral dissertation and as such suffers somewhat from redundancy. Nevertheless, it is a good readable account. . . . This historical review proves that even the most primitive prison reform is hard to come by . . . and that economic values, at least as far as prisoners are concerned, far outweigh human values. Index; essay on authorities included. Readership will include historians and those interested in penal reform."

Choice 9:401 My '72 170w

Reviewed by J. P. Resch

J Am Hist 59:442 S '72 430w

"Carleton does an excellent job. . . . His treatment is judicious, and the in-depth research in manuscripts and other primary sources is thorough. The result is a model and definitive study which is an important contribution to Southern, Louisiana, and penal history." J. L. Forsythe

Library J 97:1333 Ap 1 '72 70w

CARLINGFORD, LORD. Lord Carlingford's journal: reflections of a cabinet minister, 1885; ed. by A. B. Cooke and J. R. Vincent. 173p $8 Oxford

942.07 Great Britain—Politics and government—19th century

ISBN 0-19-822345-5 LC 74-877374

This is an abridged version of the journal. Lord Carlingford "served in several Liberal governments during the late 19th Century . . . [and his journal gives a] view of cabinet affairs during [1885]. . . . [He exposes] the motivations of the powerful members of Gladstone's government . . . [and sheds light] on three crucial foreign policy issues of 1885; the Egyptian question, Sudan and the fall of Khartoum, and Russian encroachments in Afghanistan." (Library J)

Choice 9:422 My '72 100w

"[Carlingford] is known primarily as the comic lead in the political farce when Gladstone used every device from heavy tactfulness to outright exasperation to try to force Carlingford's resignation from the cabinet to make way for Rosebery. The diary gives us the worm's eye view of the swooping, predatory Gladstone. Oddly enough, Carlingford emerges with a kind of dignity. . . . This diary wins for Carlingford a wry salute. It is abridged to about half its length and is excellently edited."

Economist 240:47 S 4 '71 260w

"Recommended for large research libraries."

J. H. Thompson

Library J 96:4087 D 15 '71 110w

"Anyone who reads this very short book will . . . get an idea of how, . . . in those days, an unwanted Minister could frustrate all the Prime Ministers efforts to get rid of him. I should add that without the long introduction provided by Mr Cooke and Professor Vincent the actual text of the diary would reveal very little to the lay reader. . . . [but] despite his utter ineffectiveness in public life, this diary will earn Lord Carlingford a permanent place in our political history." Richard Crossman

New Statesman 82:655 N 12 '71 550w

"For whom was this diary written—a vital question? The editors answer plainly: 'purely for Carlingford's own satisfaction, and without any thought that it might one day be read by someone else'. . . . A long introduction explains, well and soberly, who Carlingford was and why he rose so far as he did. Only three pages are spent on setting the political stage for the diaries that follow. . . . [The editors] explain how Carlingford's inner isolation kept him from playing any part in the formation of the Liberal Unionist party that winter, or any large part in the struggle against Home Rule; from 1886 to his death in 1898 they say nothing for there is nothing of public interest to say. But in their notes they are more discursive and less judicious. Relying heavily on manuscript, rather than on printed, material, they display much of that prejudice that makes historians readable, sometimes at the expense of the impartiality that makes them reliable."

TLS p1473 N 26 '71 1100w

CARLISLE, HENRY. Voyage to the first of December; a novel. 253p $6.95 Putnam

Spencer, Philip—Fiction

LC 76-175259

"On Dec. 1, 1842 the son of the Secretary of War in Tyler's Cabinet was hanged at sea. His crime was the alleged plotting of a mutiny on the Navy brig Somers, to which he was assigned as a midshipman. . . . [This novel is] based on the private papers of the ship's surgeon. Dr. Leacock entertained doubts as to the justice of the punishment. He demurred at the fondness of the ship's commander [Alexander Mackenzie] for indiscriminate flogging, and he saw Philip Spencer, the hanged midshipman more as a wayward boy than a mutineer. (Leacock was a suicide shortly after the Somers returned to the Brooklyn Navy Yard)." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by W. B. Hill

America 126:550 My 20 '72 80w

Reviewed by Paul Kliniery

Best Sell 31:514 F 15 '72 550w

"This novel is a record of an inquiry, an examination of the characters of the captain, the officers, and the dead men. It is a complex anatomizing of justice in which ideas of authority are explained and tested. . . . It is a [work] that is sometimes unnecessarily dense, but always compelling, and as important as if the events it relates happened yesterday." Paul Theroux

Book World p2 Ja 23 '72 430w

"Carlisle skillfully blends fiction with fact to recreate forcefully the mood of the original tragedy. . . . The book is written in diary form and from Dr. Leacock's point of view, which encourages the reader's sense of personal involvement in the lives of the characters." Phillip Marr

Library J 97:698 F 15 '72 150w

Reviewed by Priscilla Wegars

Library J 97:1933 My 15 '72 100w [YA]

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p36 Ja 23 '72 210w

New Yorker 47:115 F 19 '72 130w

Reviewed by Arthur Cooper

Newsweek 79:91 F 28 '72 420w

"Although the mutiny story might easily have been presented as a period piece, Mr. Carlisle has skillfully managed to make it a thoroughly 1970s tale. He does so by posing the gist of the dispute between the antagonists as both generational and ideological—authority being represented by Mackenzie; the subtle subversion of it by the nineteen-year-old Spencer. By focusing on these differences as the central tragedy of the Somers, Mr Carlisle has produced a taut, suspenseful, and provocative novel. And one, moreover, that because of its fidelity to the historical record is completely credible." Alden Whitman

Sat R 55:74 F 12 '72 330w

CARLISLE, OLGA ANDREYEV, ed. & tr. Modern Russian poetry; tr. and ed. by Olga Andreyev Carlisle and Rose Styron. 210p il $6.95 Viking

891.7 Russian poetry. Poets, Russian
ISBN 670-48387-7 LC 73-165248

The "editors have arranged in reverse chronological order their . . . study of those poets they feel are most likely to endure, beginning with the youngest, Joseph Brodsky (born in 1940) and including Bella Akhmadulina; her former husband, Yevgeny Yevtushenko, . . . and Andrei Voznesensky. Another section of the book incorporates the work of nine poets of the World War II generation into one sequence. . . . [Included also are such] poets of the Revolution as Sergei Yesenin, Vladimir Mayakovsky, Marina Tsvetayeva, Osip Mandelstam, Boris Pasternak, Anna Akhmatova, and Alexander Blok." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Title index.

"Mrs. Carlisle has written an excellent brief introduction, tracing the historical background (so tragically important always to the poets of Russia), roughly from 1799, the year Pushkin was born, to the present. . . . The chapter I read with particular interest was 'The War Poets': . . . The 'war poets' are the ones who fought as young men in World War II, and who, like many of our own poets of the same age, write of losses: the less than heroic losses of war; political numbness; nostalgia for a lost world, a lost chance for action; a sense of present disaster and waste. Many of the same themes have preoccupied Lowell, Auden, Jarrell, and Berryman: spiritual man in the secular world, protesting, just by the act of writing, in the face of outward or inward oppression." Jean Valentine

Book World p10 My 28 '72 260w

"Twenty of Russia's major poets are the subject of [this] succinct and scholarly study. . . . Beginning with a review of the origins of Russian poetry, the editors introduce selected works of the poets in a preface about the poets, and conclude the anthology with a Chronological Chart of Modern Russian History. . . . Notable among all the poets is their love of country and compassion for the people." M. S. Cosgrave

Horn Bk 48:493 O '72 440w

"No confirmed poetry lovers should be put off by this book's weighty appearance, with its biographical notes, chronologies, and footnotes. Not only are the poets, from Blok to Brodsky, the best of their time; not only are the translations brilliant, but the choice of material is uniquely well calculated to speak to the young." Georgess McHargue

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p32 N 5 '72 70w [YA]

CARLSON, DALE. The mountain of truth; il. by Charles Robinson. 169p lib bdg $5.95 Atheneum pub. LC 78-175550

This novel is set "in the near future in Tibet where the Himalayas are studded with summer camps for the children of the international upper crust. . . . An American camper, Michael Jordan, discovers a hidden lamasery on the Mountain of Truth. Following instructions from the old Dalai Lama residing there, Michael founds a new, nonmonastic order of young people from all nations who dedicate themselves to developing psychic powers in order to solve world problems and bring about a worldwide spiritual awakening. . . . Finally, some of the young people decide to remain in the lamasery for a period of meditation, and reports of their disappearance prompt a parental expedition to seek some explanation. . . . Grade seven and up." (Library J)

Reviewed by Eleanor Cameron

Book World p5 (children's issue) My 7 '72 140w

"While little plot action takes place, one is deluged with pages of profundity and, unfortunately, often intrigued by it. The moral prejudices of today's young people—the search for Love and Truth, and the rejection of adult values—are overtly played upon. It is hoped that readers will recognize the supercilious didacticism that pervades this disquieting book and will demand something more honest from such a talented author." S. B. A.

Horn Bk 48:374 Ag '72 250w

"This open-ended novel will hold fans of speculative fiction, especially those interested in the occult. . . . The characterizations are often one-dimensional, with the exception of Michael's brother Peter, who believes in his brother's faith but is too bound by worldly compassion to reach the ESP development of the others. Drugs and sex, both heterosexual and homosexual are realistically treated (acknowledged, really); and the story successfully integrates present with flashback action and skillfully incorporates information on Eastern philosophy and parapsychology." M. A. Dorsey

Library J 97:1613 Ap 15 '72 260w

"From the beginning it is the story's premise that older people will never accept any of this. How much of it the average high-schooler will relate to is also a question. The necessarily simplified introduction to Buddhist philosophy will intrigue many, and the descriptions of Northern India are among the best passages in the book. The characters themselves are less vivid and the ending inevitably inconclusive. And yet the Credo of the Order has a beckoning tone—'To know . . . [one's own] necessity is to find one's own Truth'—and should speak hopefully to the secret restlessness in many an adolescent thinker." Annabel and Edgar Johnson

N Y Times Bk R p8 Mr 19 '72 430w

CARMICHAEL, HARRY. Death trap. 222p $4.95 McCall pub. co.

ISBN 0-8415-0137-8 LC 70-160058

In this novel "David Bennet is killed in an auto accident, burned beyond recognition. The details surrounding the accident are so unlike Bennet's life style that the Inspector in charge is curious and pokes further into the case. John Piper, an insurance investigator and a friend of Bennet's, plus Quinn, a newspaperman, are gradually drawn into the case and suddenly it is discovered that the dead man is not Bennet. Just as suddenly Bennet's body is found elsewhere." (Best Sell)

"[This is] an engrossing suspense story done in the usual deft English style . . . [and] told in a craftsmanlike way."

Best Sell 31:385 N 15 '71 130w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 96:3640 N 1 '71 20w

"[This] is a rather old-fashioned puzzle about a fake auto fatality. Things are seldom what they seem in this kind of book, and it remains for the crime reporter of a London dally to root out the truth. Ingenious and comfortably traditional, this one." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p15 D 26 '71 40w

TLS p1306 N 11 '70 70w

CARNICELLI, D. D., ed. Lord Morley's Tryumphes of Fraunces Petrarcke. See Petrarch, F.

CARNOY, MARTIN. Industrialization in a Latin American common market. See Industrialization in a Latin American common market

CAROVILLANO, ROBERT L., ed. Science and the future of man; eds: Robert L. Carovillano [and] James W. Skehan; based on the proceedings of the conf. sponsored by Boston college and the Am. assn. for the advancement of science, Dec. 28-29, 1969. 196p $10 MIT press

301.24 Science and civilization
ISBN 0-262-03031-4 LC 77-130273

"What role should science play in solving the great social problems of today, such as the population explosion, the urban crisis, and the pollution of air and water? How should scientists respond to society's increasing demands that technology itself be restrained and controlled? Should scientists continue to conduct basic research, or should research efforts be aimed directly toward solving the urgent practical problems of today? These and other related questions are discussed in this book." (Library J) Name and subject indexes.

"Familiar names like George Wald, Lewis Mumford, Philip Abelson, and Edmund Muskie—to mention a few—were there to provide provocative and informed discussions. . . . The gathering tried to assess the role of the scientist and science in society. The flavor of their remarks is here preserved, thanks to a light editorial hand. Lay and scholarly readers alike will enjoy this book, which should be in all college and university libraries."

Choice 8:1601 F '72 140w

Reviewed by M. S. Feider

Library J 96:3335 O 15 '71 130w

CARPOZI, GEORGE. Ordeal by trial; the Alice Crimmins case [by] George Carpozi, Jr. 332p il $7.95 Walker & co.

345.7 Crimmins, Alice
ISBN 0-8027-0374-7 LC 75-186179

"In July 1965, Edmund Crimmins, recently separated from his wife Alice, reported that two children missing from his wife's home. After both children's bodies were found, . . . Alice Crimmins was indicted for murder in the death of her daughter, and found guilty. With a new lawyer, she secured a reversal of the conviction and was then indicted for the murders of both children after the discovery of new evidence. Convicted of murder and manslaughter, she is now in prison. Journalist Carpozi describes the police investigation and the subsequent trials in detail." (Library J)

"Recommended for public libraries where interest in popular books on trials is high." D. W. Harrison

Library J 97:1732 My 1 '72 100w

"One gets the impression that Carpozi, a reporter for The New York Post, feels that Mrs. Crimmins was convicted more for the swinging life she had led than on hard evidence. Still, this is basically an objective report, superior in the genre."

N Y Times Bk R p28 Ap 30 '72 50w

CARR, JESS. The second oldest profession; an informal history of moonshining in America. 250p il $7.95 Prentice-Hall

641.2 Moonshining. Liquor traffic
ISBN 0-13-797563-5 LC 70-172277

This is a "book about the illicit distillation of whiskey. . . . [It] traces the history of moonshining from colonial times through the 1960's. Carr . . . [points out] that moonshining is not merely a part of the past, but is still going on especially in the South. . . . He concludes with accounts of several personal visits to mountain distilleries." (Library J)

"The author spins an engrossing tale of the families who supported themselves by their stills. . . . The book has a hundred thrilling and even amusing as well as tragic stories of running gun battles between the revenue agents and the bootleggers, and it is no secret that hundreds of agents have been either killed or wounded in these warlike contests." E. A. Dooley

Best Sell 32:252 S 1 '72 750w

"The author makes good use of contemporary reports of revenueurs in telling his story, which is always colorful and often violent. His richly detailed chapters on producing 'mountain dew' and the types of stills in use are never dull. . . . Moonshining is a legendary profession in the United States, and we finally have a book that sets the record straight." Andy Armitage

Library J 97:2183 Je 15 '72 230w

"[This is] an interesting bit of backwoods Americana."

N Y Times Bk R p53 S 24 '72 80w

CARR, RAYMOND, ed. The Republic and the Civil War in Spain. (Problems in focus ser) 275p $10 St Martins

946.081 Spain—Politics and government—20th century. Spain—History—Civil War, 1936-1939
ISBN 333-00632-1 LC 79-148464

This collection deals with the "problems of interpretation of Spain's crisis years, 1931-1939. Edited by the author of Spain, 1808-1939 [BRD 1966], . . . [it] includes studies of the political parties, . . . [an] analysis of the army, . . . the role of the parties during the Civil War, . . . the development of the rival armies, . . . [the] problem of foreign intervention, . . . and anarchist agrarian collectives." (Choice) Annotated chapter bibliographies. Chronology. Glossary. Index.

"A lively collection of contributions by specialists in the history of modern Spain. . . . Useful at all levels, from specialists to undergraduates. A welcome addition to collections in modern Spanish history."

Choice 8:1500 Ja '72 140w

"The range and erudition of the book is very great, and there are some excellent contributions, notably the chapters on non-intervention and agrarian collectives by Robert Whealey and Hugh Thomas respectively. On the other hand it is distinctly peculiar to see that the section on the Republican army is written by a man who was and remains a member of Franco's armed forces. The main defect of the book is the recurrent attempt to distinguish political factors from military ones." Christopher Hitchens

New Statesman 81:564 Ap 23 '71 450w

CARRIKER, ROBERT C. Fort Supply, Indian territory; frontier outpost on the Plains. 241p il maps $7.95 Univ. of Okla. press

976.6 Fort Supply, Oklahoma
ISBN 0-8061-0929-7 LC 71-123345

The author "presents the story of Fort Supply in three . . . segments. During the first, from 1868 until 1879, the garrison devoted the bulk of its effort to pacifying warring bands of southern Cheyenne, Arapaho, Comanche, and Kiowa tribesmen. By the end of the 1870's, these Indians ceased fighting, and the soldiers turned their attention to . . . expelling illegal whiskey vendors and chasing from Kansas and Texas cattlemen who wanted to graze their stock on Indian land. The third and last period found the troops helping superintend settlement in the Cherokee Outlet during 1893 and 1894." (J Am Hist) Bibliography Index.

"Carriker presents a straightforward biography of the post, and in considerable detail. At times, in fact, there is a plethora of names and minor incidents. These may be useful to readers in search of particular information, but they sometimes mar the flow of the narrative. . . . Extensive use has been made of the unusually complete archival material pertaining to Fort Supply. There are a number of well-chosen illustrations and useful maps."

R. W. Frazer

Am Hist R 76:1610 D '71 380w

"Although most recent studies of the frontier army discuss its contributions to western settlement, they pay slight attention to military campaigns and concentrate instead on depicting the soldiers as agents of the federal government. . . . [This] volume tries to do both, but emphasizes the former. . . . It offers those interested in the development of [Western Oklahoma] . . . another vantage point from which to study the problems of settlement and the role which soldiers played in that complex process, by showing the activities of the Fort Supply garrison. Historians looking for new generalizations about the army in the West will find few, because the author is content to avoid or to play down analysis. . . . [The] extensive bibliography will aid scholars."

R. L. Nichols

J Am Hist 58:478 S '71 420w

CARRINGTON, RICHARD. The Mediterranean: cradle of Western culture. (A Studio bk) 287p il col il $16.95 Viking

910.03 Civilization, Ancient. Mediterranean region—Civilization. Natural history—Mediterranean region
ISBN 0-670-46559-3 LC 76-156754

This book deals with "the Mediterranean before man, early Mediterranean man, the evolution of the area's geological structures and the flora and fauna. To this [the author adds an account] of the Mediterranean's great civilizations, from Egypt through Greece and Rome to Renaissance Italy; and the book concludes with a survey of the modern Mediterranean and some speculation on its future." (Library J)

"As the author states, this book is a 'companion' for those who have made the Mediterranean their home or who go there frequently, rather than just another guidebook. The distinction is a valid one. . . . Carrington is . . . interested in a leisurely and informed look at the total scene—the whole of the Mediterranean basin. . . . To see an area of the world treated on this scale is new and exhilarating; Carrington is to be congratulated for a book that will set the Mediterranean in a dramatically new perspective for all who read it." T. M. Robinson

Library J 96:4094 D 15 '71 170w

"[The book] has a photograph on almost every page, thirty-two of them in colour. Landscapes and antiquities depicted brilliantly and sympathetically, and the same sympathy is evident in the pictures of beasts and insects. . . . [Carrington has] a rather excitable manner, at times unduly given to using loud-sounding words without much regard for their meaning. . . . [His] best writing, lively, attractive and informative, comes in his description of birds, beasts, and fishes. . . . [This book] can be commended, and . . . will assure the reader of both pleasure and instruction."

TLS p1547 D 10 '71 400w

CARROLL, DANIEL B. Henri Mercier and the American Civil War. 396p il $12.50 Princeton Univ. press

973.7 Mercier, Henri, Baron Mercier de Lostende. U.S.—Foreign relations—France. France—Foreign relations—U.S. U.S.—History—Civil War
ISBN 0-691-04585-2 LC 77-132235

This study "examines Franco-American relations from the vantage point of Henry Mercier, the French Minister at Washington from July of 1860 to December of 1863. . . . [The book portrays] French policy vis-à-vis Union efforts to prevent the European recognition and intervention on behalf of the Confederacy. . . . It also . . . [discusses] some erroneous earlier interpretations of French motivations and Mercier's role in particular." (America) Bibliography. Index.

"Carroll's study [is] based on extensive use of French archival sources. . . . Read in conjunction with [L.] Case and [W.] Spencer's The United States and France: Civil War Diplomacy [BRD 1970], this book should remain a standard reference on the subject for years to come." R. H. Miller

America 125:270 O 9 '71 550w

Choice 9:112 Mr '72 180w

"[This] book affords some fascinating glimpses into the atmosphere of wartime Washington and into the personality of one cultivated European diplomat who struggled to understand the issues raised by the war and to relate those issues to the interest of France. . . . After a detailed examination of a wide and impressive range of source and secondary material, Carroll has some eminently sensible things to say about Civil War diplomacy and its historians. These views ought to be widely disseminated among students and teachers of Civil War history." Frank Merli

J Am Hist 59:151 Je '72 650w

"A diplomat deeply involved in [French-American relations during this period] might reasonably be expected to have left his mark: despite the painstaking efforts of Daniel Carroll to illumine Mercier's activities there seems little evidence to indicate that such was the case."

TLS p1114 S 22 '72 750w

"The diplomatic vacillation of Mercier's attitude toward both North and South provides a central theme of this work. Woven into the narrative is also a defense of Mercier against those who persist in labeling [him] pro-Southern. He was, maintains Carroll, only interested in the welfare of France. While this book is by no means excellent, it is certainly necessary and as such deserves to be read by all students of the American Civil War."

Va R 48:xxx winter '72 120w

CARROLL, DAVID, ed. George Eliot; the critical heritage. 511p $17.50 Barnes & Noble 823 Cross, Mary Ann (Evans)
ISBN 389-04073-8 LC 73-23395

This book presents "Victorian opinions of George Eliot's novels. . . . [Carroll's] selection from letters and journal entries by George Eliot . . . present her reaction to criticism. . . . [Included also are] letters and comments of such . . . contemporaries as Jane Carlyle, Dickens, Swinburne, Ruskin, and Trollope, and . . . reviews by Henry James." (Choice) Bibliography.

"The book is well edited, but scholars will want a more extensive bibliography listing reviews not contained in the anthology, and a sampling of reviews and comments on minor works such as the poetry (which was highly praised by James) might have provided a fuller picture of Victorian taste and George Eliot's reputation."

Choice 8:1450 Ja '72 150w

"Carroll provides a wealth of examples of the contemporary criticism of George Eliot's fiction between 1857 and 1885. There are sixty-five items, most of which are full-length reviews, omitting only plot-summaries and lengthy quotations from the novel discussed. The reader has ample evidence from which to discover the assumptions, expectations and intellectual quality of George Eliot's contemporary reviewers. The result is impressive, and a modern reader cannot but conclude that for close reading, critical acumen, and interest in the novel as an art form the nineteenth-century critics have not been surpassed, perhaps not equalled, by their successors."

TLS p805 JI '71 500w

CARROLL, DAVID. The matinee idols. 159p il $10 Arbor house

920 Actors and actresses—Biography
ISBN 0-87795-031-8 LC 72-184882

The author discusses two dozen screen and stage lovers, including Wilton Lackaye, William S. Hart, Valentino, Lou Tellegen, Douglas Fairbanks and Ramon Novarro.

"Mr. Carroll goes back as far as Edmund Kean and then he brings in the Booths and some lesser figures whose names have been long forgotten—and goes on to people who are still remembered dimly or vividly. The transition from stage to screen is noted. . . . Suitably, the book ends with the completely unforgettable John Barrymore. Nostalgia and information."

Best Sell 32:182 JI 15 '72 140w

"This book's insipid design and soggy text make it dreary even for hardened nostalgia buffs." Sammy Staggs

Library J 97:2637 Ag '72 130w

CARROLL, JOHN, ed. The ego and his own. See Stirner, M.

CARSON, RACHEL. The rocky coast; phot. by Charles Pratt; drawings by Bob Hines. 118p $6.95 McCall pub. co.

574.92 Marine biology. Seashore
ISBN 0-8415-0111-4 LC 70-157913

An illustrated edition of one chapter from the author's Edge of the Sea (BRD 1955, 1956). Index.

Best Sell 31:440 Ja 1 '72 50w

"To make a book from a chapter of one already published is a heady concept, but, in this instance, the effort was thoroughly justified. A wonderful little book for those who want to know more about the ebb and flow of life on a rocky New England shore." Nelson Bryant

N Y Times Bk R p62 D 5 '71 80w

CARSON, ROBERT B. Main line to oblivion; the disintegration of New York railroads in the twentieth century. 273p maps $12.95 Ken-nikat

335 Railroads—History
ISBN 0-8046-9003-0 LC 75-139352

This "examination of the railroad industry in New York State . . . [deals with the] corporate policy of the railroads in permitting their economic condition to deteriorate. The problem of excess capacity. . . the effect of government regulation, labor problems, and competition from the trucking industry are [also] discussed." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Attempting to interpret United States rail history by ignoring the development of other modes of transportation, and blaming the troubles of the industry on rail corporate policy and banking industry control, is hardly a contribution to economic history. To the claim that railroads serve only large cities, little comment is needed. It indicates a lack of understanding of industrial location and of the products that now move by rail. . . . [This] is a superficial history of a few of the major Eastern roads and a set of conclusions in the muckraking traditions. It is more illustrative of the sad state of writing in regulatory economics and in transportation in particular." P. H. Banner

Ann Am Acad 398:176 N '71 420w

"A thorough and extremely well documented [study]. . . . Should be of interest to transportation economists, business administrators and managers, and others interested in the current dilemma of American railroads and the causes of the present condition. Extensive bibliography; index; several appendices containing supporting data. A unique addition to the current literature on the railroad industry crisis."

Choice 8:1219 N '71 130w

"Although his style is rarely sprightly, Carson has written a straightforward book, with each chapter covering a decade or more of twentieth-century railroad history. His last chapter includes an excellent short summary of the background of the current Penn Central financial debacle. . . . The location of footnotes and maps, at the back of the book, seems to show a greater consideration for the pocket-book of the publisher than for the convenience of the reader. Even with these minor faults, [this] is a careful and scholarly review of a declining industry in the twentieth century." J. F. Stover

J Am Hist 58:1056 Mr '72 410w

CARSTEN, F. L. Revolution in central Europe, 1918-1919. 360p pl $11.95 Univ. of Calif. press
320.9 Central Europe—Politics
ISBN 0-520-02084-7 LC 78-165225

This is "a comparative study of the revolutionary movements that broke out in the Central European countries at the end of the First World War. . . . Its central theme is the rise and the decline of the Workers' and Soldiers' Councils, which flourished for a few months and exercised considerable influence, but never developed into Soviets in the Russian sense and soon lost their power. The book also describes the activities of the nascent Communist Parties, the role of Rosa Luxemburg and Karl Liebknecht, the new armies and their politics, the beginnings of right-wing extremism, and the relations of the Germans with their neighbors." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The thesis of the book is that the strong socialist parties and trade unions in Germany and Austria acted as a barrier to the spread of Bolshevism. They succeeded in establishing democracies in place of semi-authoritarian governments, but all attempts to establish a new social, and not only a new political order, were defeated. . . . Separate chapters explore the attitudes of the extreme Left and the extreme Right, the latter somewhat unbalanced by the emphasis on anti-Semitism to the exclusion of other issues. This organization inevitably leads to repetition and the volume becomes tedious in places." E. C. Helmreich

Ann Am Acad 403:186 S '72 550w

"Carsten has tackled an enormously complex subject. . . . Such a subject must be dealt with by the most judicious combination of topical and chronological outlines. What has actually happened has been a basically topical approach, which combined with a somewhat desiccated literary style, has resulted in a book which is simply unreadable in part; entire chapters seem like stacks of note cards committed sequentially to paper. There is much skipping around from one German town to another, repetitively describing a series of events from one point of view that have already been dealt with earlier from another aspect. . . . A book purporting to deal with 'Central Europe' which leaves out Czechoslovak and Sudeten problems and makes only the barest mention of the vitally connected agonies of Hungary in the same years also falls short. The book's fatal flaw—and it is a fatal one—is its abominable disorganization."

Choice 9:1339 D '72 200w

Reviewed by Elie Kedourie
Encounter 39:45 JI '72 470w

"[The author's] scholarship is impressive, the presentation highly readable, the perspectives offered challenging. The influence of the Bolshevik Revolution is treated lightly. One question: Why did the author ignore most of the historical writing of East Germany?" S. Z. Pech

Library J 97:1320 Ap 1 '72 100w

"[Carsten's masterly study] is based on a detailed and comprehensive knowledge of an immense range of original sources and makes skilful use of published research. It also breaks new ground by attempting a serious comparison of revolutionary events in Germany with those in Austria and Hungary. . . . As befits the historian of the German Reichswehr, Professor Carsten is concerned with explaining the failure of the Republican leadership in Germany—supported as it was by apparently 'revolutionary' soldiers' councils—to break the influence of the old German officer corps over the armed forces."

TLS p444 Ap 21 '72 1900w

CARSTENSON, CECIL C. The craft and creation of wood sculpture; ed. by William S. Brown. 179p il $9.95 Scribner

736 Wood carving
SBN 684-12480-7 LC 72-162740

"Carstenson begins with tools and wood, leads through the making of a simple mask, goes on to heads and figures, and finally covers multisculptural assemblies." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"An informal book about wood sculpture, gleaned from conversations with Carstenson by Brown. Eighty-four photographs show tools, techniques, materials, works in progress, as well as finished pieces by the author. [It includes] a list of suppliers of tools, suppliers of wood, [and a] wood chart. . . . While this is essentially a book for beginners, Carstenson's considerable experience in, and love for, wood make this a most valuable text for any wood carver."

Choice 9:50 Mr '72 90w

"Sculpture separates itself from other art forms in two basic ways. It has three dimensions and it is irreversible. These two differences run through this excellent guide. . . . The author, who has over 30 years of experience as a sculptor in wood, lifts this book from the usual specific, how-to manual class by his informal and easily understood interweaving of instruction and comments on art, art terms, and communication by art." W. T. Johnston

Library J 97:189 Ja 15 '72 100w

CARTER, CHARLES. The Western European powers, 1500-1700. (The sources of hist: studies in the uses of historical evidence) 347p $8.75; pa $4.50 Cornell univ. press

940.2 Europe—History—1492-1789. Historiography
ISBN 0-8014-0631-5 LC 75-146276

This "is a book on the extent, nature, and problems involved in handling the documentary evidence for European diplomatic history between 1500 and 1700, with particular emphasis on Spain, France, England, and the Spanish Netherlands." (Library Q) Index.

"[This] would seem to be a most useful book, but useful for whom? If the book is addressed to the practicing historian, . . . almost all that Carter says will be redundant. . . . If the book is addressed to the graduate student about to undertake a research project in the archives, he may find here some helpful hints, but he will surely not understand the nature of diplomatic history and research until he has plowed through the documents themselves. And it is unlikely that an undergraduate history major, still clarifying his interests, will find much here to hold his attention. . . . This is not a bad book. Rather, it is a solid book by a respected diplomatic historian, thoroughly familiar with his field and materials and enthusiastic about his craft. It is an honest and workmanlike book, and hence deserves respect. . . . The author has given us generous and carefully chosen examples from the archives which convey a sense of the texture and taste of diplomatic materials." D. P. Jordan

Library Q 41:351 O '71 550w

"[This is] a highly professional and very wise guide to the diplomatic records and their utilization. As such it will appeal mainly to the restricted circle of scholars and researchers. The fact that diplomatic history is very much out of fashion will narrow the readership still further."

TLS p857 J1 23 '71 260w

CARTER, HOWARD. The tomb of Tutankhamen. 236p 65il 17col pl $12.95 Dutton

913.32 Tutenkhamûn, King of Egypt. Egypt

-Antiquities

SBN 0-525-22080-1 LC 72-77218

"Carter, the archaeologist who opened Tutankhamen's tomb, published his report of that extraordinary find in three volumes over a period of ten years [1923-1933]. The present single volume is condensed from that work and concentrates on the suspense and excitement of the discovery and the difficulties of removing the invaluable tomb contents undamaged." (Atlantic) Index. For volumes one and two of the original edition see BRD 1923 and 1927.

"Carter wrote well; he was also willing to exercise his imagination on unprovable and intangibles and amusing digressions. The book is illustrated with Harry Burton's expedition photographs and seventeen modern color plates." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 230:135 O '72 180w

Reviewed by A. J. Solomon

Best Sell 32:371 N 15 '72 200w

"Carter's copiously illustrated account reads with all the suspense of a well-plotted mystery story, where the clues are based on solid scientific fact. A sense of humor, fascination with the life of ancient civilizations, and a philosophic romanticism, combine to make [this book] . . . an absorbing narrative. . . . In 1922, a war-weary world greeted the archaeological find ecstatically. . . . This year's reader will find that fascination not one whit diminished." J. F. Smith

Christian Science Monitor p9 O 25 '72 160w

"This excellent edition . . . still contains . . . the post-mortem report by Dr Derry on Tutankhamen's mummy, which makes the most fascinating reading of all . . . [but it] omits Carter's discussion of the Aten heresy, into which Tutankhaten (as he first was) was born. . . . Carter has an exuberant style, heady with the excitement of discovery and almost hysterical (can one blame him?) about the burden of the press and distinguished and demanding tourists, who flocked to the Valley of the Kings when the discovery became known."

Economist 243:51 Ap 1 '72 210w

"Carter's descriptions of his discovery and his gradual unveiling of the treasures still make vivid and exciting reading. In spite of its high price, Carter's book is a must wherever there is YA interest in the subject." Priscilla Wegars

Library J 97:3820 N 15 '72 110w [YA]

CARTER, JAMES RICHARD. The net cost of Soviet foreign aid; foreword by Raymond F. Mikesell. 134p $12.50 Praeger

382.1 Economic assistance. Russia—Commerce LC 70-127803

"The purpose of this study is to examine some aspects of the reciprocal relationship that exists between the Soviet economic aid program and the volume of Soviet foreign trade. . . . [It deals] with three main areas of inquiry: 1) the direct monetary cost of Soviet economic aid from 1955 through 1968; 2) the effects of this aid on the volume of Soviet foreign trade; and 3) the effects of the increase or decrease in Soviet foreign trade resulting from the economic aid program on the monetary cost of the aid program." (Pref) Bibliography.

"The task that Carter set himself is difficult for several reasons. For example, there are major data problems; the analysis raises several technical economic issues which are not easy to resolve; and it raises issues of values, both economic and political, which may be inherently insoluble." John Pincus

Am Pol Sci R 66:1051 S '72 1400w

"The study is a valuable contribution to the general knowledge on the subject because it gives detailed analysis of a particular aspect of the Soviet foreign aid. The breakdown between the Communist, less developed, and developed countries allows thorough analysis. A must for any library in the U.S., especially those concentrating on Soviet economics."

Choice 8:874 S '71 130w

CARTER, PAUL A. The spiritual crisis of the gilded age. 295p il $8.50 Northern Ill. univ. press

209.73 Religion and science. U.S.—Religion ISBN 0-37580-026-2 LC 72-156938

The author "concentrates on the years from 1865 to 1895 and discusses the tensions related to the crisis of faith brought about by the rise of modern science, especially Darwinism, both biological and social." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This book] supplements earlier work done by Richard Hofstadter, Robert Cross, Charles H. Hopkins, Donald Meyer, Henry May, Aaron I. Abell, and Edward A. White but it is much more than a synthesis. Carter has made a genuine scholarly contribution to the efforts of American historians to reinterpret the Gilded Age, an era which now appears a good deal more complex than it did a few years ago. . . . Very useful bibliography. Highly recommended for both undergraduate and graduate libraries."

Choice 9:711 J1/Ag '72 180w

"While [this account] is valuable (and immensely entertaining) to the general reader, the work also has significance for the specialist, who will find here some cultural and theological byways often unexplored in other studies. . . . The book is good—light and entertaining, yet thoroughly informed and informative. At times it may suffer because of the author's resourcefulness; Carter could make his points without such exhaustive stacks of evidence. But the evidence is always good reading. Among other things, he has given us a vault containing pertinent (and impertinent) quotes both from original sources of the period and from commentaries on the period. Extensive end notes are useful for the scholar, and the format is attractive, embellished by historical illustrations." Henry Brockmann

Christian Century 88:1391 N 24 '71 500w

"Carter's book has an admirable sweep and a daring sense: it is difficult for a historian to place landmarks, and that is what he is trying to do." Martin Marty

Critic 30:82 N '71 270w

"Obviously the product of at least a decade of thoughtful study of Victorian America, this work lays bare the roots of the moral and religious revolution of our own age. . . . The author demonstrates great breadth and depth of understanding, and he tells his story with verve and style, though the reader may occasionally lose his way among the closely packed quotations and complex allusions. An essential purchase for most libraries." D. W. Dayton

Library J 96:4006 D 1 '71 130w

Reviewed by John Lydenberg

New Eng Q 45:435 S '72 600w

CARTER, SAMUEL. Blaze of glory; the fight for New Orleans, 1814-1815; [by] Samuel Carter III. 351p il $10.95 St Martins

973.5 New Orleans, Battle of 1815

LC 70-166173

A history of the battle of New Orleans. Bibliography. Index.

"Carter's book took two years of research. His style is racy with enough detail to prove endless hours of scholarship in framing the background for the battle. Maps are provided to give the reader an 'on the spot' coverage of the terrain. 'War of 1812 buffs' will be fascinated with this detailed and penetrating study. [It] should easily make the Bestseller lists." F. C. Brown

Best Sell 81:367 N 15 '71 600w

"Making good use of contemporary accounts by participants and witnesses, Carter produces an account rich in local color and gory details. . . . Recommended to public libraries whose patrons have strong but not too analytical interest in battles and leaders."

Choice 9:274 AD '72 140w

Economist 245[book survey p15] N 11 '72 220w

CARTER, SAMUEL—Continued

"Written in a very readable and entertaining style, this is a popular, yet well-researched account. . . . By utilizing sources from both sides, Carter is able to present viewpoints and accounts of incidents not in other books on the battle. He also covers well the roles played by Jean Lafitte, the free Negro companies who fought for the Americans, and the Jamaicans who fought for the British. Pertinent illustrations, [and] good maps add to the book's value. Recommended." E. D. Johnson
Library J 96:4091 D 15 '71 110w

"Apparently there's a steady market for competently written narratives of U.S. battles. This one is . . . detailed and graphic, good on drama, but weak on causation, background and results. For boys of all ages."

N Y Times Bk R p28 Ja ■ '72 50w

Va Q R 48:lxv spring '72 130w

CARTER, SAMUEL. The incredible great white fleet [by] Samuel Carter III. 184p il $4.95 Crowell-Collier press

359 U.S. Navy—History—Juvenile literature. Voyages around the world—Juvenile literature
LC 77-129747

This book describes "the voyage of Theodore Roosevelt's Great White Fleet. It sailed around the world from 1907 to 1909, stopping at ports in New Zealand, Japan, China, Egypt and other countries. The purpose of the voyage was to impress the world with America's naval might and . . . to check Japan's growth in the Pacific." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index. "Grade seven and up." (Library J)

"To the author's generation (he was four years old at the time), this knot-by-knot account may be exciting, worthwhile fare. But for a young people's collection—no!" M. R. Sive

Library J 97:288 Ja 15 '72 60w

"A book about what? A fleet of U.S. battleships on a world cruise back in 1907? Sounds dull. And, actually, it isn't the most riveting chronicle ever written. Yet, there's a certain enchantment about the entire affair: America flexing its military muscles to the rest of the world while Roosevelt—Teddy not Franklin D.—whose brainchild the voyage was, stands by like a proud father passing out cigars. . . . The thought that haunts the reader is whether a half-century from now, a book about man's first steps on the moon might have the same air of bravado and naiveté that the editor adroitly injects in this one." Robert Cormier
N Y Times Bk R p40 Ap 18 '71 230w

CARTIER-BRESSON, HENRI. Man and machine. (A Studio bk) 116p il $12.50 Viking

779 Photography, Artistic
ISBN 0-670-45203-8 LC 72-179669

Included in this book of photographs are "pictures of scientists or engineers . . . [as well as] banks of computers, switches, and appurtenances of modern machines." (Library J)

"The wide range of confrontation with machinery is the subject of [this book]. One of the drollest of the photographs, all in true Cartier-Bresson style, shows some little girls dwarfed by a big slot machine."
Best Sell $1:440 Ja 1 '72 50w

"Some examples here rank among Cartier-Bresson's best work, but the book is filled with second-rate images which undoubtedly were selected to draw out the overall theme, and it contains a few pictures which one feels were forced into the set since their impact is solely on human terms without comparison with or reference to the machine element. . . . One familiar with the photographer's best work suspects that he did not have the final say in the selection or display of the photographs. The design of the book is crowded and reproduction not particularly good. . . . A picture book suggested for those libraries wishing a complete collection of Cartier-Bresson's work, but not essential to others."
Choice 9:358 My '72 120w

"Although it was commissioned by the International Business Machines World Trade Corporation, hardly a radical organisation, the feeling behind this collection is plainly revolutionary. IBM presumably wanted M. Cartier-Bresson to produce a series of artistically accomplished photographs that would illustrate 'the mastery by man of his own electronic and mechanical creations.' . . . But IBM apparently did not reckon with the photographer's artistic conscience. . . . Instead of the glorification of man and machine, we see a scientist at Houston's Manned Spacecraft Centre overwhelmed by a huge, mysterious machine that he controls—an up-to-date version of the Charlie Chaplin of 'Modern Times.' . . . There are photographs, too, of the way modern architecture and the machinery of cities dominate the individual. A workman is scarcely more than a dot on the side of a skyscraper he is helping to build. . . . M. Cartier-Bresson's perceptions are not unique. . . . However, their repetition by such a gifted man is important."

Economist 243:suppl 20 Ap 8 '72 470w

"This group of photographs is not among the most exciting that have been done by Cartier-Bresson. . . . This great journalistic photographer is aware of the dramatic impact of the juxtaposition of ancient and modern cultures. One picture shows three Indians working the crude but beautiful levers that raise water from a lower to a higher level. Elsewhere a technician adjusts one of a million parts of a Saturn rocket which tomorrow will be expended junk. On balance, such insights, as well as humor and sensitivity, make this a successful book." Tom Lovcik
Library J 97:[1308] Ap 1 '72 90w

CARTWRIGHT, FREDERICK F. Disease and history, by Frederick F. Cartwright in collaboration with Michael D. Biddiss. 247p $7.95 Crowell

$14.4 Diseases, Medicine—History
ISBN 0-690-24116-X LC 73-184972

The authors "examine the effects that disease, both epidemic and personal, has had upon the history of peoples." (TLS) Bibliography.

"The impact of disease upon human history is one of those obvious incalculables that most professional historians avoid either from ignorance or because of its difficulty to assess in all but obvious cases like that of the Black Death. Yet the subject is highly significant, and as topical as air pollution. The British authors of this unassuming survey have produced a comprehensive and comprehensible introduction which deals not only with the great killers such as the fevers (bubonic, malarial, typhus, and yellow), syphilis, and cholera, but also with those highly individualized diseases of mind and body that have had a massive historical effect. A final chapter on man-made problems of the present and future ranges from insecticides to geriatrics. Fascinating and highly recommended." R. R. Rea
Library J 97:1727 My 1 '72 130w

"Dr Cartwright has interesting chapters on the origin and spread of syphilis in the fifteenth century, and he believes that Henry VIII was probably a victim of this disease. The dreadful effect of typhus fever on Napoleon I's Russian campaign is told in a vivid fashion. . . . [and] the role of haemophilia in the downfall of the Romanov empire is dealt with at some length."
TLS p922 Ag 4 '72 400w

CARTWRIGHT, JOHN R. Politics in Sierra Leone, 1947-67. 296p Can$15 Univ. of Toronto press

320.966 Sierra Leone—Politics and government
ISBN 0-8020-1687-1 LC 71-18592

In 1967 "the opposition party, the All Peoples Congress, defeated the SLPP [Sierra Leone Peoples Party] . . . was called upon to form a government. This was the first time an opposition party in an independent tropical African state had come to power through the ballot box. . . . Dr Cartwright explains how Sierra Leone maintained this pattern of political competition. He concludes that the traditionally oriented political leadership was able to maintain its position because of the relatively slow rate of social change outside the political sphere, and because of its own ability to adapt traditional patterns of behaviour to its new needs." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"In the past [political analysts] have usually focused broadly on political modernization and political change to delineate the critical variables influencing change and instability in post-colonial Africa. Professor Cartwright's careful, informative study represents a modification of the existing analytical focus. He does not assume that instability is necessarily the dominant feature of contemporary African states.

... One of the most interesting chapters in the book analyzes the 1962 election patterns for Parliament Ministers and SLPP backbenchers by party, district, and occupation of themselves and their fathers. Cartwright ... [views] competitive, pluralistic politics ... as the distinctive attribute of Sierra Leone's political system. In sum, this is a good although incomplete political history of the many factors shaping recent political developments in Sierra Leone." Clement Cottingham

Am Pol Sci R 65:1199 D '71 900w

"Anyone with an interest in contemporary African politics and political modernization can benefit from this excellent study. ... The argument is thoroughly defended in a highly readable style which balances detail and generalization. ... Recommended for both experts and novices."

Choice 8:908 S '71 120w

CASAS, BARTOLOMÉ DE LAS. History of the Indies; tr. and ed. by Andrée Collard. 302p $8.50; pa $3.25 Harper

973.1 America—Discovery and exploration. Columbus, Christopher. Spain—Colonies. Indians

ISBN 0-06-131540-0 LC 74-146797

"Collard has translated and abridged [Las Casas'] Historia de las Indias [which is an] ... account of Spain in America from 1492 to about 1520." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Collard provides a generous example of the friar's version of Spanish exploits in America and preserves the flavor of his condemnation of the injustices perpetrated. The original convoluted prose is rendered in a simple free translation which, however, sometimes raises questions about the precise meaning of obscure passages. ... Although Collard's introduction is a thoughtful evaluation of Las Casas as man and historian, the brief bibliography omits many of the scholarly monographs concerning this controversial figure. Beginners will find the chronological outline of Las Casas' life helpful, but unfortunately a guide to events in the History itself is lacking."

Choice 8:1376 D '71 150w

"[This readable translation] deserves to be in every library in the United States. ... The abridgment is a blessing for most readers as the classical scholarship of Las Casas often proves too deadly for modern readers. ... Collard has divided the book into three parts, and has succeeded in joining these together even though he has been forced to omit rather extensive sections of the original work. ... The reader must recognize that Las Casas was prejudiced and in many cases misinformed. No historian of Latin America has even been neutral on the validity of his arguments, and now English-speaking people can learn why this is so." T. L. Welch

Library J 97:678 F 15 '72 230w

CASEBIER, MARJORIE, jt. auth. The spouse gap. See Lee, R.

CASEY, MICHAEL. Obscenities. (Yale ser. of younger poets, v67) 68p $5; pa $1.75 Yale univ. press

811
ISBN 0-300-01546-1; 0-300-01548-8 (pa)
LC 78-179470

"The poet, who served with the Military Police as a gate guard, patrolman and prison guard in a POW cage ... describes his collection as a 'book of poems written for the most part in a conversational form while I was an army conscript. It concerns things my friends and I heard or saw while in the army; the army taught me a lot.' (America)

"Humor is the sanity of Casey's nightmare world. But the nightmare of war and the particular ugliness of the Vietnam conflict are presented with newsreel-like objectivity in his poems. ... Some of these poems previously appeared in America. Obscenities won the Yale Series of Younger Poets award for this year.

Michael Casey is the youngest poet, I understand, ever to be so honored. He deserves it: he has an exceptional gift. Even the pain and vulgarity of war flower to his touch." J. F. Cotter

America 126:596 Je 3 '72 240w

"Understatement, matter-of-fact commentary, and coarse humor inform the carefully wrought poems. A compelling little volume." C. R. Andrews

Library J 97:2371 J1 '72 50w

"[Casey] has made expressive poetry from the experience of the unpoetic though by no means inarticulate men with whom he served. ... [He] adopts a bold dramatic and narrative strategy. Its success depends upon his sure ear for speech rhythms, his choice of revealing anecdote, and the economy with which he sketches his characters. [He] has made a sensitive instrument of the very crudities and incongruities of both barracks speech and army life. ... I do not think of Michael Casey as a war poet only. He has real gifts and will doubtless find new strategies appropriate to other experiences. It is a pleasure to acclaim what he has done in his first book and to take it as an earnest of the surprising and powerful poetry we may anticipate from him." Daniel Hoffman

N Y Times Bk R p2 My 14 '72 1850w

"Casey has the best ear for soldiers' speech I have ever encountered and he is witty, too. ... Each of [his] poems is rough, a condensed short story, deceptively informal." P. S. Prescott

Newsweek 79:104 Je 12 '72 80w

Reviewed by Norman Rosten
Sat R 55:58 Ag 12 '72 240w

CASHIN, FERGUS, jt. auth. Richard Burton: very close up. See Cottrell, J.

CASS, ANGELICA W. Basic education for adults; a handbook for teachers, teacher trainers, and leaders in adult basic education programs. 159p $5.95 Assn. press

374 Adult education—Handbooks, manuals, etc. Illiteracy
SBN 8096-1825-7 LC 70-152889

Following a "survey of the federal resources which have been made available over the past decade ... [the author] explores some of the crucial issues in adult basic education. How do adults learn? What are the special problems of adults in the area of basic education? How can teacher aides and paraprofessionals be used most effectively? ... [There are 16 chapters dealing with topics such as] the teaching of reading, handwriting, spelling, arithmetic, and the skills of living ... counseling and guidance ... the organizations and agencies which offer resources for the teacher in this field, and ... the function of testing and evaluation in such a program." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies.

"Since adult basic education has come into its own as a specialized concern only since 1962 when Federal funding first became available to attack the problem of illiteracy, there has been ... some confusion about its role in the overall educational system. ... A general overview of the whole subject is provided in this handbook by Cass, Chairman of the Commission on Adult Basic Education of the Adult Education Association of the United States, and assistant professor of adult education (C.C.N.Y.) She gives a clear, if brief, delineation of the nature of the adult learner, professional roles involved, psychology of adult learning, various aspects of the curriculum, the urgent need for counseling and guidance, and information on resources and agencies concerned."

Choice 9:412 My '72 170w

"This useful handbook condenses much information about the problem of adult illiteracy and ways of changing the situation. Looking for new outlets for service in your community? Learn how to get started in neglected area."

Christian Century 88:1213 O 13 '71 40w

CASSARA, ERNEST, comp. Universalism in America; a documentary history. 290p $10 Beacon press

289.1 Universalism
ISBN 0-8070-1664-0 LC 77-136226

The author "traces the history of Universalism in the U.S. from its beginnings in the late 18th Century. ... [The documents deal with] the clash between Universalists and orthodox groups . . . [as well as] changes in theology, and . . . the influence of Universalists." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

CASSARA, ERNEST—Continued

"An excellent survey of the documents of Universalism. Most of these documents are not readily available to the ordinary scholar, and it is now possible, through the use of this excellent collection, to find many of the sources for a history of Universalist thought. Controversy, argument, creeds, and the development of Universalism to be an inclusive faith are all recorded in the collected documents. . . . [There are] informative and accurate notes. For a study of the branches of American Christendom, this book is indispensable for a study of the Universalist branch. Excellent index, and a careful bibliography."

Choice 8:1192 N '71 130w

"[The documents] include excerpts from contemporaneous speeches, letters, periodicals, and books. . . . Recommended for larger public and theological libraries." R. W. Henderson

Library J 96:1619 My 1 '71 190w

"Well over three quarters of the volume is given over to selections from documents illustrating the development of the movement. The reader will find in these selections some surprises such as De Benneville's ecstatic mysticism which bears little relation to the 'rational' religion prized by liberals. But there are also the antislavery testimonies of Benjamin Rush and Elhanan Winchester as well as the theological and biblical reflections of Hosea Ballou and Orello Cone. The inroads of a radical humanism and the move away from an explicit Christian orientation are documented."

C. A. Holbrook
New Eng Q 44:670 D '71 500w

CASELL, FRANK A. Merchant Congressman in the young Republic; Samuel Smith of Maryland, 1752-1839, 283p pl $15 Univ. of Wis. press

B or 92 Smith, Samuel
ISBN 0-299-06000-4 LC 79-157390

This is an account of the life, career, and times of "Samuel Smith of Maryland, Revolutionary patriot, congressman, influential Republican senator, hero of the defense of Fort McHenry . . . whose life and influence spanned the early years of the Republic, from the War of Independence to the Van Buren Administration." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[Cassell's] biography makes politics its principal focus, providing detailed analysis of Smith's role in Congress under seven Presidents. Nothing here fundamentally revises the standard views of the Federalist and Jeffersonian years. But the detail on Congressional debate of commercial policies, the Jefferson-Madison responses to the Anglo-French wars, and the personal and partisan conflicts of the Madison Administration, provide a useful perspective on the nation's early politics. Only limited, and painfully superficial, attention is given to Smith's mercantile operations. This is unfortunate because this is the first published scholarly study of Smith's career. But as political and military biography the book is entirely serviceable. Footnotes on the pages are welcome."

Choice 9:401 My '72 150w

"[The book's] careful focus on the less well-known figures of the period gives the reader a deeper appreciation of men, motives, and ideas. Thus the value of the work lies less in the portrait of Smith and more in the picture it draws of the Jeffersonian Republicans. Of general interest also is Smith's role in the War of 1812, which clearly illustrates both his military and his political abilities."

B. E. Marks
Library J 97:1703 My 1 '72 110w

CASSON, LIONEL, ed. The plays of Menander. See Menander

CASTANEDA, CARLOS. Journey to Ixtlan; the lessons of Don Juan. 315p $6.95 Simon & Schuster

299 Yaqui Indians—Religion and mythology. Juan (Yaqui shaman)
SBN 671-21399-7 LC 72-83221

This is "the record of Castaneda's initiation into the mysteries of sorcery—of becoming 'a man of knowledge'—at the hands of . . . Don Juan, the Yaqui brujo (sorcerer). . . . The Teachings of Don Juan [BRD 1969] and A Separate Reality [BRD 1971] . . . were concerned with the use of hallucinogens in Don Juan's sorcery and recorded Castaneda's experiences . . . as he underwent the . . . apprenticeship of becoming a 'man of knowledge.' This new volume . . . shows the reader the means by which a 'man of power' sees, as opposed to merely looking, and how by his concentrated 'seeing' he can, indeed must, 'stop the world.' In it, Castaneda describes the lessons, . . . the exercises of the will and body, . . . [the] visions and experiences by which Don Juan . . . prepares the author for the task of perceiving things as they are." (Publisher's note)

"While some of Don Juan's practices strike one as amazing (for instance, his ability to walk directly to a destination in pitch darkness,) some ring of mumbo-jumbo. What I say is not that the other reality should be denied but that all of this comes from Castaneda in a way that is not convincing. However profound and authentic the experience itself may be, the expression of it is not persuasive." F. L. Ryan
Best Sell 32:404 D 1 '72 450w

"This new volume deemphasizes the author's interest in the primitive uses of psychotropic plants (jimson weed, peyote, and the mushroom genus Psilocybe) and summarizes what he believes he has learned of life through his association with the seemingly eccentric Yaqui sorcerer, Don Juan. . . . One cannot but take seriously Castaneda's experiences and the validity of release, as he understands it, in the Yaqui context. The author tells his fascinating story in a persuasive way, though with some tiresome descriptive reiterations of Don Juan's and his own reactions—belly laughs, yawns, whispers, terror, running, etc. . . . This book puts Castaneda's two earlier efforts in a new perspective and makes the lot an unusual trilogy. One wonders whether the story will go on to become a system rather than a contribution to anthropology." Lee Ash

Library J 97:3328 O 15 '72 260w

"Castaneda's [three] books . . . —and they should be read in the order they were written—form a work which is among the best that the science of anthropology has produced. . . . What makes these books great is that Castaneda has not been afraid to commit things to paper that he himself does not understand. . . . While 'A Separate Reality' is a sequel to 'The Teachings of Don Juan,' 'Journey to Ixtlan' is not a sequel except for the last three of its 20 chapters. Rather, because of a new sense of his relationship to the world which arose in him through experiences described in those chapters, Carlos saw the significance of a whole series of other 'lessons' which Don Juan had given him during the period described in 'The Teachings of Don Juan' and he recounts those 'lessons' in 'Journey to Ixtlan.' . . . None of the experiences described in [this book] takes place under the influence of psychotropic plants, but simply in relation to hills, valleys, animals and plants and, of course, Don Juan himself. . . . Castaneda makes it clear that the teachings of Don Juan do tell us something of how the world really is, and I feel that this is knowledge of great value." Paul Riesman

N Y Times Bk R p7 O 22 '72 700w

Reviewed by Joseph Kanon

Sat R 55:67 N 11 '72 800w

"Castaneda is a brilliant, self-mocking and—one assumes, despite the weirdness of the narrative—truthful storyteller. The account of his apprenticeship to Don Juan, with grueling desert marches and arduous disciplines, apparitions and struggles in fog and bright sunlight, as well as some mind-wrenching magic tricks, makes hypnotic reading. . . . [This book] is an astonishing document of friendship and moral responsibility." Robert Hughes

Time 100:101 N 6 '72 1150w

CASTANEDA, CARLOS. A separate reality; further conversations with Don Juan. 317p $6.95 Simon & Schuster

299 Yaqui Indians—Religion and mythology. Juan (Yaqui shaman). Hallucinogenic drugs
SBN 671-20897-7 LC 79-139617

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Stan Wilk

Am Anthropol 74:921 Ag '72 700w

Reviewed by Richard Gott

New Statesman 83:51 Ja 14 '72 950w

Reviewed by Paul Riesman

N Y Times Bk R p7 O 22 '72 700w

CASTELOT, ANDRÉ. Napoleon; tr. from the French by Guy Daniels. 627p il $12.50 Harper
B or 92 Napoleon I, Emperor of the French
SBN 06-010678-6 LC 70-83587

This "work traces Napoleon from his . . . boyhood in Corsica to his death in exile, highlighting early struggles, military and administrative genius, triumphs and tribulations, political duplicity, bedroom 'diplomacy,' and romantic entanglements." (Library J) Index.

"Castelot has produced a lively, readable, straightforward account of Napoleon's life and career. He makes excellent use of memoirs, integrating them into his text quite cleverly. Although he frankly admires Napoleon, M. Castelot does not disguise his defects. . . . Unfortunately [he] does not provide footnotes for his multitudinous and apt quotations, and there is no bibliography. . . . For one reading a biography of Napoleon for the first time this book is especially recommended, but anyone who is at all interested in Napoleon will read [it] with pleasure." J. S. Brusher
America 126:268 Mr 11 '72 400w

"[This book] fits into the traditional stream of Napoleonic biography. It is a long, . . . detailed account of his life, embellished by some fairly colorful romantic language. . . . A somewhat jerky narrative style, [does] not make for easy reading, which is a pity, because Castelot has a sound realistic grip on his subject." G. M. Fraser
Book World p3 Mr 5 '72 240w
Choice 9:564 Je '72 200w

"This is the most candid and thorough treatment of Napoleon this reviewer has seen. [It is] objective and unflattering. . . . No mere recital of military strategy and battles won and lost, or superficial chronicle of the monstrous ambition of a despot, Castelot's Napoleon is an immensely human document that, despite copious documentation, reads like a fictional account." E. A. Jones
Library J 96:3125 O 1 '71 150w

Reviewed by J. H. Plumb

N Y Times Bk R p2 Mr 12 '72 420w

"This work is a rarity among biographies of Napoleon, because its author restrains himself from immoderate admiration or execration, and does not vicariously exult in the 'glory' of the Emperor or become maudlin over the prisoner of St. Helena. . . . Castelot's minute, absorbing record moves us now this way, now that. . . . We respond as perhaps we might have responded if we had known this meteoric, bloody hero, this cruel and charming personality, sometimes thrilling and sometimes banal, who modernized France and murdered Frenchmen."

New Yorker 47:136 D 18 '71 170w

CASTRO, AMÉRICO. The Spaniards; an introduction to their history; tr. by Willard F. King and Selma Margaretten. 628p pl $15
Univ. of Calif. press

914.6 Spain—Civilization. Spain—History
ISBN 0-520-01617-3 LC 67-14000

In this book "I have utilized much of the material . . . contained in the first seven chapters of my earlier volume, The Structure of Spanish History [BRD 1954. I have revised] . . . some of the pages and incorporated new ideas, often different from my former theories, which are now fundamental to my theses. This new title, The Spaniards, indicates that I wish to accentuate and emphasize the personal, rather than the structural, nature of this history." (Pref) Index.

"This present work, controversial as it will certainly be among Spanish scholars, is going to be essential to anyone attempting to analyze the character and nature of the Spaniard of today, as much as the Spaniard of earlier periods. . . . [The] book, which is not easy reading, is a major contribution. . . . A remarkable fact, considering that the author's eightieth birthday was celebrated in 1965: even more remarkable is the fact that a Spanish scholar (though an American citizen) can be so remarkably detached about his own country." Economist 242:51 Ja 15 '72 700w
TLS p214 F 25 '72 200w

"Castro, Professor Emeritus of Princeton, has written an engaging, witty, marvelously sensible introduction to Spanish history that will be very much to the liking of those who prefer an investigation—however Sisyphean—into the nature of a country's soul over statistical data on its output of coal, steel, and statisticians." Va Q 48:lxi spring '72 80w

CATANACH, I. J. Rural credit in Western India, 1875-1930; rural credit and the co-operative movement in the Bombay presidency. 269p $8.75 Univ. of Calif. press 334 Agricultural credit. Cooperative societies. Bombay (Presidency)
ISBN 0-520-01595-9 LC 72-94986

"Catanach has examined . . . the role played by government officers and nonofficial leadership in the development of rural co-operative institutions. The impact of social and political institutions, including the castes and languages, has been discussed using the case studies of Gujarat, Maharashtra, and the Karnatak." (Choice) Bibliography. Glossary. Index.

"[This] book is an elegant monograph, strictly defined, soberly balanced, and gracefully presented. . . . Both in its original research and its application of the results of pertinent investigations (by Eric Stokes, Bernard Cohn, Ravinder Kumar, Harold Mann, and Henry Orenstein, for example), this is an outstanding contribution. Catanach . . . has not only measurably increased our knowledge of the workings of cooperative societies and conditions of rural indebtedness in what used to be called the Bombay Presidency, but he has made a permanent contribution to an increasingly sophisticated literature." Mark Naidis
Am Hist R 77:570 Ap '72 150w

"A well documented study. . . . Limited use for students specializing in Indian economic history in general and cooperative societies in particular."

Choice 8:1062 O '71 90w

"In this work it is evident that the author not only is in control of his topic, but also knowledgeable about the regions of Bombay. It . . . will be useful in understanding not only rural credit, but also the British Indian bureaucracy, politics of agrarian policies, modern Maharashtra and the functioning of voluntary associations. It is an eloquent model of careful, intelligent scholarship." F. F. Conlon
Pacific Affairs 45:129 spring '72 460w

CATTIER, MICHEL. The life and work of Wilhelm Reich; tr. from the French by Ghislaine Boulanger. 224p $6.95 Horizon press
B or 92 Reich, Wilhelm. Psychoanalysis
ISBN 0-8180-0220-4 LC 76-171016

"The greater part of this book presents . . . introduction to Reich's psychological, sociological, and political theories and work. . . . [It also covers] the last part of Reich's life and his work with orgone therapy." (Library J) Chronology. Bibliography. Index. Originally published in 1969 in Lausanne.

"Cattier, a Belgian psychologist, gives a more objective presentation and appraisal of Reich's ideas than other recent books. . . . Here is a fair description of events leading up to Reich's discoveries and of the bizarre controversies of his embattled later years. . . . The main flaw is that the book is repetitious at times, and has a writing style which can only be described as turgid. Long quotations from Reich are the only brilliant portions . . . which are then paraphrased circuitously and made unreadable by the author. The fault may be due to the translation from the French. Will be a useful aid for psychologists and students interested in a concise summary of Reich's major ideas, with a minimum of party politics."

Choice 9:284 Ap '72 190w

"In covering the last part of Reich's life and his work with orgone therapy, an extremely difficult area to cover, Cattier loses his objectivity and offers a mixture of facts and the kind of innuendos used by popular writers against Reich. Much of Reich's work on the measurement of sexual energy, which the author calls his obsession, proof of his madness, is being seriously considered. . . . For a far clearer and more balanced study of this difficult man's personality and his work with orgone energy see Ilse [Ollendorf] Reich's Wilhelm Reich [BRD 1969]. . . . Cattier's work is recommended for its coverage of Reich's earlier work and his sociopolitical theories and activities." Juliet Woodbury
Library J 97:2105 Je 1 '72 200w

CAUDILL, HARRY M. My land is dry il $6.50 Dutton

333.7 Cumberland Mountains. Ne sources—Kentucky. Coal mines
ISBN 0-525-16230-5 LC 76-1585

This examination of surface mining United States seeks to show "who

CAUDILL, H. M.—Continued

it and what can be done to end the destruction it invariably entails. Caudill first focuses on the strip-mining controversy in his native Kentucky, then broadens the scope of his concern to include the entire nation. . . . [He contends that] there is plenty of fuel of all kinds in America, especially coal . . . and more than sufficient technology to make feasible its efficient and less injurious extraction." (Sat R)

Reviewed by Evelyn Coskey

Library J 97:663 F 15 '72 110w

"Without improving job opportunities in the area, big corporations have sent in machines to strip the land (land for which they own only the mineral rights and those only because of slick dealing) for the hidden coal seams, leaving it a poisoned wasteland, incapable of supporting plant or animal life. By law, these corporations are required to restore the land, but their efforts in this direction are a joke. . . . Having despoiled much of southeastern Kentucky and Ohio as well as parts of West Virginia, Florida, California, Texas, Illinois, Alabama, and Iowa, the big machines are now starting to gobble up territory in Arizona, Colorado, Montana and Wyoming. It may already be too late to reverse the damage they've caused, but YA's should know the full story anyway." Janet Strothman

Library J 97:792 F 15 '72 270w [YA]

Reviewed by E. F. Roberts

Natur Hist 81:94 Je '72 800w

"[This book is] short (144 pages) and persuasive, with 35 pages of photographs that suggest a scale of devastation difficult to put in words. . . . Appalachia's hill people have been exploited for years by coal businessmen, talked into signing land deeds they couldn't understand, and ignored until very recently by the legislators they've voted into office. Here is the evidence, along with a general history of the rise in coal stripping since World War II. It is all told with admirable restraint."

New Repub 166:26 Ja 1 '71 150w

"Caudill . . . supplies more than indignation and lament. He presents a forceful case against Kentucky legislators, judges, and the TVA, now the nation's largest single consumer of coal. . . . Though strip mining is a national scourge (to date 3.2 million acres have been laid waste), Caudill concentrates on his home state, which is more indulgent toward the coal companies than neighboring West Virginia and Pennsylvania, to show how so-called 'reclamation' laws, weak in any case, have been easily evaded. Graphic, bitter, and eloquent, this is worth more than much of the recent mound of conservationist tracts."

N Y Rev of Books 17:29 D 30 '71 250w

Reviewed by Frank Graham

N Y Times BK R p[8] My 7 '72 800w

Reviewed by Calvin Tomkins

New Yorker 48:125 Je 10 '72 1400w

"Caudill—whose first book Night Comes to the Cumberlands [BRD 1963], remains a regional classic—has written a slim but pointed study of the strip-mining boom. . . . The upsurge in strip mining is a result of what its proponents call the 'energy crisis.' Listening to the executives of the nation's electricity-generating companies and the firms that supply them with fuel, one is led to believe that the country faces imminent blackout unless strip mining (which supplies an increasing amount of cheap coal to the electricity makers) is allowed to continue unchecked. This argument, Caudill says, is just so much boardroom poppycock." Robert Cassidy

Sat ■ 55:30 Ja 1 '72 800w

CAUDWELL, CHRISTOPHER. Romance and realism: a study in English bourgeois literature; ed. by Samuel Hynes. 144p $6 Princeton Univ. press

820.9 English literature—History and criticism

ISBN 0-691-06195-5 LC 78-120752

The author "traces the impact of social change on fictional and poetic techniques." (Library J) Index.

"[This is a] lucid, incisive, and penetrating analysis of the ideological basis of literary works by British authors from Shakespeare to Auden and Spender. . . . Caudwell reveals by implication the biased and obfuscating idealism of most contemporary critics, whether New Critic or archetypal, who ignore the concrete and over-arching scaffolding and foundation of imaginative forms. . . . Given the scientific socialist outlook, Caudwell discerns the significance of art in its acute grasp and faithful reflection of objective reality—man in dialectical interplay with his world. Highly recommended for all libraries."

Choice 8:1010 O '71 150w

"[Caudwell writes] with most assurance when discussing the modern novel. . . . This generalized rather than detailed discussion of writers is recommended for readers interested in an oblique but sometimes illuminating view of English literature since Shakespeare." W. H. Magee

Library J 96:1613 My 1 '71 220w

"The very comprehensiveness of this book, not so much in details, but in its consistent vision, argues its lasting value and importance. The book is a whole. Much of what it says is illuminating, most of it is useful, all of it is sensible. Of how many books of literary criticism can these things be said? . . . Caudwell is brilliant on Browning's dramatic monologues, where he shows why 'to be a source of individuality' in bourgeois society is to be 'a verbose hair-splitter.' He is also capable of making distinctions among individual poets within a historical movement, though this is often thought to be impossible for a 'collectivist' ideology like Marxism. . . . Hynes's introduction to this volume is brief and informative." Charles Molesworth

Nation 212:761 Je 14 '71 1150w

"[This book] does not do what it promises. In fact, it is little more than a syllabus for a survey course in the politics of English literature. A lecturer might type out pages such as these to remind himself of the general argument which he would later try to develop, but he would regard them as his lecture notes, not as a finished book. . . . Caudwell claims an interest in form, technique and social change, but his sense of these complex matters is so blunt that it cannot risk the test of detail. Not a single line of poetry or fiction is quoted in Romance and Realism. Nothing is produced, examined, pondered. No perception is advanced until its spirit is already broken, and then it is delivered to the guardians of the Party line."

TLS p470 Ap 28 '72 1200w

CAUTHEN, KENNETH. Christian biopolitics; a credo & strategy for the future. 159p $4 Abingdon

261 Christianity and politics. Religion and science

ISBN 0-687-07046-5 LC 78-162459

The author contends that a solely "technological solution to the problems of war, overpopulation and pollution is unlikely, and any political solution extremely remote. . . . It is in devising new modes of thought, new forms of social organization, and new visions of a humanly desirable future that the Christian is called upon to make his contribution. 'Christian biopolitics' is Cauthen's term for this task. . . . [It] requires the formulation of a theology of biopolitics: [one] . . . which takes into account the natural and biological as well as the political aspects of life. In part two Cauthen outlines the principles and methodology of a Christian biopolitics." (Christian Century)

"This book is addressed chiefly to the post-affluent, restless-to-radical Consciousness III group now emerging in the churches. . . . One welcomes Prof. Cauthen's efforts to articulate a responsible biopolitical theology. . . . Wherever [his] analysis implies scientific judgments on his part, he departs from the proper function of a theologian of culture and must be judged on the basis of scientific principles. As for the strategy which emerges from Cauthen's theology of biopolitics, this reviewer notes an emphasis on the biological to the neglect of the political, as well as a somewhat naive expectation regarding the ability of Christian consciousness to accomplish the requisite changes." W. B. Green

Christian Century 89:313 Mr 15 '72 440w

"Cauthen, one of an increasing number of 'ecological theologians,' spends three chapters outlining and summarizing contemporary ecological threats and futurist-projected crises. . . . The final two chapters—by way of theological justification for interest in ecology—contain a summary of contemporary secular theology that is accurate and stimulating. The language is inconsistent, being both pre- and post-death of God; this leads to some conceptual confusions. Not very technical, the book is evidently directed to WASPs in suburbia, who will find it interesting and timely." T. M. Young

Library J 96:3146 O 1 '71 130w

CAVAIANI, MABEL. The low cholesterol cook-book; introd. by Joseph T. Crockett. 258p $7.95 Regnery

641.5 Cookery. Diet in disease
LC 74-183813

The author advocates "the prevention of heart disease partly by maintaining a low-cholesterol diet... [and] provides only recipes which conform to the guidelines (included in preface) for such a diet established by the American Heart Association." (Library J)

"This is an excellent and thorough as well as imaginative collection of recipes." Friede Gruenrock

Best Sell 32:178 J1 '72 90w

"The recipes are generally tasty... [and] emphasize the strict, but hearty diet." Pauline Micciche

Library J 97:3589 N 1 '72 70w

CAVAN, SHERRI. Hippies of the Haight. 213p $7.95 Dutton

301.44 Hippies—San Francisco
ISBN 0-87853-003-7 LC 72-146984

"This monograph presents a sociological analysis of the relationship between the beliefs and the routine practices of the hippies resident in the Haight-Ashbury section of San Francisco... it is concerned with understanding how 'individual members manage to collectively coordinate their everyday affairs through sharing a common body of knowledge.'... [The author] examines the nature of the hippie vision, the transactions and evaluations that take place with respect to drugs, etc., the various troubles encountered in their daily lives, and the ways in which they manage trouble situations." (Library J) Author index. Subject index.

"The format of the book—relatively parsimonious, theoretically coherent, stressing observation and interviews—is attractive and successful... Making sense of the multiple levels of reality coexisting in the hippie world is a challenge, but Cavan succeeds admirably... In subject matter this volume compares best with [L.] Yablonsky's The hippie trip [BRD 1968, 1969]; it is less ambitious and comprehensive, but theory and analysis are more finely integrated here with observation. Recommended for both graduates and undergraduate libraries."

Choice 9:886 S '72 200w

"[This study] is similar in intent to Max Weber's study of the relationship between certain aspects of Calvinistic Protestantism and the development of capitalism. Thus, this is neither a community study nor an ethnographic account... The data were collected through the method of participant observation, which is described in detail; and the study is strongly influenced by ethnomethodology. Sociologists who are comfortable with this orientation will find this to be an excellent study, and it should also be interesting to many nonsociologists." M. A. Forslund

Library J 97:511 F 1 '72 200w

CAVANAUGH, GERALD J., jr. ed. Historians at work, v 1. See Gay, P.

CAVELL, STANLEY. The world viewed; reflections on the ontology of film. 174p $5.95 Viking

791.43 Moving pictures—Philosophy
ISBN 0-670-79002-8 LC 76-162654

This book is a "philosophical meditation, not on movies as such, but on the way they exist and their metaphysical relationship to other aspects of reality." (Best Sell)

"[Reading this] book on the 'ontology' of film is a little like reading any book by Marshall McLuhan: the reader must work his way slowly and painfully through forests of tortuous, opaque prose, and then sift through great many hasty, fuzzy generalizations, but if he persists, he will be rewarded with a few nuggets of genuine inspiration. 'The World Viewed' is not, however, a treasure hunt the average film buff will enjoy... A person with an extensive knowledge of modern philosophy might find Dr. Cavell's reflections pertinent and worthwhile, but anyone without such training will probably find it difficult to get past page twenty... [Cavell] has seen many familiar movies, and he refers to many of them in some detail, but he always discusses them from the specialized perspective of the metaphysician." J. M. McInerney

Best Sell 32:61 My 1 '72 390w

"Cavell may leave you with many questions about the nature of movie perception, but [his book] is sound with what movies are good at: their exploration of silence and of the mysteries of human motion and separateness, and their appeal to fantasy in our condition of existential displacement." J. M. Highsmith

J Aesthetics 31:134 fall '72 300w

"This new mythical-philosophical-psychological book on the movies makes an appreciable, if slight, contribution to film aesthetics when it discusses Baudelaire's theories of art as an anticipation of cinema. Many of the other 'reflections' are dense and learned, and some few are enjoyable to read; they are full of observations (some of which are penetrating), but the observations are so undigested that hardly any of the essays builds to a discernible point, and when you finish one you may not know what you've read. The author obviously loves the movies, but he loves his own words and thought processes more; and his words don't always make his thought processes comprehensible." J. A. Avant

Library J 97:213 Ja 15 '72 100w

"[Cavell] writes philosophy as philosophizing, in the sense that he creates a kind of dialogue with the reader: he appears to be thinking out in the open and to accept the hazards as they come and deal with them with terms and arguments fashioned before your very eyes. It may be a novel experience for many readers, even a difficult experience at first, but the prose does follow the contours of speech (it should be read accordingly), and the terms used are philosophically responsive and responsible... In the course of his deliberations on film Mr. Cavell has valuable things to say about modernity or modernism and about its early speculative theoretician, Charles Baudelaire." Lowry Nelson

Yale R 61:610 Je '72 2400w

CAWS, MARY ANN. André Breton. 133p $5.50 Twayne

843 Breton, André
LC 72-120021

A study of the French poet. Bibliography.

"An established critic on Dada, Breton, and Surrealism, Caws brings expertise to this latest biography in Twayne's World authors series. Yet this short study lacks a general, clear synthesis of André Breton and the surrealist movement he founded... Too many short chapters, subdivisions and themes give a fragmented effect that can be frustrating to the uninitiated reader and less than satisfying to the student of modern French literature... Caws' earlier books and essays on the subject were more penetrating."

Choice 8:1025 O '71 140w

Reviewed by James Hill

J Aesthetics 31:126 fall '72 220w

"Professor Caws has written not a biography but a study of Breton's works. On first reading I sorely missed the background. Political and personal squabbles are kept out. On second reading I began admiring the compactness and sensitivity of [this work]. In fact, the two chapters on Breton's adventure journals... and on his poetry offer the best criticism in English of his literary achievement... Like most other critics, Caws is so attentive to Breton's ideas and images that she seriously neglects the fluctuating tonalities of his style, especially in prose. There are a few too many muffed translations... Part of the 1922 item in the chronology belongs to 1925."

N Y Rev of Books 18:25 Je 1 '72 230w

CELINE, LOUIS FERDINAND. North; tr. by Ralph Manheim. 454p $10 Delacorte press
LC 75-164849

This, the second volume in the trilogy containing Castle to Castle [BRD 1960] "and Rigaudon (that Manheim [also plans to] translate)... sets forth in the apocalyptic mode a vision of Céline's travels through the Germany of the Third Reich." (Choice)

"Simply as the tale of a picaresque ordeal... North is fascinating and fizzy, but what makes it so potent a document is the 'remarkable sensibility' that Gide commended. The prose has a dense inconsecutiveness brought about in part by Céline's favorite device of the three dots... (which both invite you on and trip you up), but also by his flair for letting his imagination range further than his analytical mind wants to go. Thus, nonchronologically, you read the book by vaulting from one salient image to another." Paul West

CÉLINE, L. F.—Continued

Book World p3 Ja 30 '72 500w

"To Ralph Manheim, a vote of thanks for the labor he has devoted to translating Céline. After giving us an extraordinary new translation of Death on the installment plan [BRD 1968] and an award-winning version of Castle to castle, he has produced another fine translation, one that, like his earlier translations, will be useful even to those who read French, because of its glossary. . . . [This is the second volume] in Céline's most important postwar novel and should be in every library concerned with modern fiction. As critics are now beginning to discover, Céline, for all his garrulous ranting, was one of the most important voices in modern French fiction, and his influence on American as well as French novelists cannot be underestimated. [North] has already received favorable criticism in this country, and this excellent translation will undoubtedly increase Céline's public here."

Choice 9:374 My '72 150w

Reviewed by Arthur Curley

Library J 96:4029 D 1 '71 140w

Reviewed by Guy Davenport

Nat R 24:353 Mr 31 '72 800w

"North [is] very interesting as personal history and well worth reading by any student of the last days of the German Reich; but [it is a record] rather than fiction. . . . The use of the 'three dots' is also of a certain interest. Like the other seeds that grow in the mind, we suppose them to have loomed large in all Céline's work. But we find, when we check up on the matter, that they are used very little in Journey to the End of the Night [BRD 1934]. In . . . North they are the main feature of almost every sentence. The author, one feels, no longer has anything to 'say' but is using his famous trade-mark as a furious hammer with which to remind the world of his existence." Nigel Dennis

N Y Rev of Books 18:3 F 10 '72 700w

New Yorker 48:114 Mr 4 '72 150w

Reviewed by Walter Clemons

Newsweek 79:81 Ja 31 '72 320w

Reviewed by Richard Seaver

Sat R 55:57 F 5 '72 950w

TLS p1017 S 1 '72 450w

CELL, EDWARD. Language, existence & God: interpretations of Moore, Russell, Ayer, Wittgenstein, Wisdom, Oxford philosophy and Tillich. 400p $8.95 Abingdon

211 God. Philosophy and religion. Philosophy, Modern
ISBN 0-687-21063-1 LC 71-148079

"In this introduction to analytical philosophy and linguistics, Dr. Cell . . . examines the major philosophers and their thought in order to understand their positions and contributions and to consider the application of these in regard to the religious use of language. Dr. Cell first places the development of linguistics in the context of our cultural situation. Then he discusses the work of [the individual philosophers]." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Cell has provided a needed addition to the literature on religious language: a competent intermediate-level critical survey of major problems in the field, combined with some positive suggestions worthy of consideration by all. . . . Useful summaries of main points are found at the end of most sections. For maximum profit, the reader should already have some familiarity with recent British philosophy (and perhaps with Tillich as well)."

Choice 8:1028 O '71 160w

"[A] ponderous volume. . . . [The author] has produced a massive study of the 'tenuous dialogue' between linguistic philosophy and philosophical theology, complete with scholarly footnotes and extensive quotations from a wide variety of sources. This book will appeal primarily, or perhaps exclusively, to an academic audience. It is, therefore, only recommended for university and large public libraries." J. A. Clarke

Library J 96:2322 J1 '71 170w

CELL, GILLIAN T. English enterprise in Newfoundland 1577-1660. 181p Can$7.50 Univ. of Toronto press

380.1 Fisheries—Newfoundland. Newfoundland—History
ISBN 0-8020-5232-0 LC 72-485515

"This work deals with two areas of English enterprise, the development of the . . . fisheries off the Newfoundland coast from 1577 to 1660 and the attempts to establish permanent settlements on the island for both strategic and economic reasons. [Mrs. Cell's] work is based on the port records of the English west country, and for the colony she has discovered papers and a journal of Sir Percival Willoughby, one of the principal investors in the London and Bristol Company for the colonization of Newfoundland. These throw some new light on John Guy the first governor of the colony and later mayor of Bristol." (Am Hist R) Bibliography. Index.

"On the fishery itself the work gives only partial results. The impressive attempts at quantification indicate the development of a substantial re-export trade of Newfoundland fish by west country ports and fishermen, but the records are incomplete. This is a useful work with an excellent bibliography." Francis Coghlan

Am Hist R 77:741 Je '72 350w

"A significant contribution to Newfoundland historiography. . . . Cell's examination of the organization, financing, and operation of fishing and settlement ventures poses new probing questions and offers tentative answers."

Choice 7:1132 O '70 120w

CENSORSHIP: for & against: introd. by Harold H. Hart. 255p il $7.50; pa $2.45 Hart

176 Censorship. Pornography. Obscenity (Law)
ISBN 8055-0120-7 LC 73-142831

Twelve essays written specifically for this volume. Contributors are Hollis Alpert, Joseph Howard, Judith Crist, Carey McWilliams, Charles H. Keating, Jr., Eugene McCarthy, Rebecca West, Ernest van den Haag, Arthur Lelyveld, Max Lerner, Charles Rembar, and Nat Hentoff. Index.

"Seven of the essays are almost totally in opposition to any form of censorship, three are wholly in favor, and two are uneasy for a form of minimal censorship. The seven arguments against censorship are generally well researched, calmly reasoned and filled with appropriate references to a variety of legal, literary, psychiatric, and social authorities. Two of the discussions favoring censorship are emotional and moralistic. In addition, Charles Keating includes a wholly gratuitous attack on the entire nation of Denmark. This collection is a useful survey of the variety of thought in this area and deserves a place on library shelves."

Choice 8:1617 F '72 120w

"Apart from the obvious Charles H. Keating, Jr. (of Citizens for Decent Literature) and Msgr. Joseph Howard (of the National Office for Decent Literature), one wonders who among the others . . . might be for censorship. Surprisingly, several are, to varying degrees; and the book as a whole does present a reasonable spectrum of opinion on this ageless topic. The book is obviously stretched (large type, large margins) to achieve its 250-plus pages, and it contains little that is fresh. Only a fascinating essay by Rebecca West and the twinkling footnotes of Rembar provide breaks in the routine. All right as a primer for the general reader who has never read any of the basics." Eric Moon

Library J 96:2784 S 15 '71 140w

CENTER FOR STUDY OF RESPONSIVE LAW. One life—one physician. See One life—one physician

CERNUDA, LUIS. The poetry of Luis Cernuda; ed. by Anthony Edkins & Derek Harris. 171p $10 N.Y. univ. press

861
ISBN 0-8147-2151-6 LC 74-173878

A bilingual edition of poems by the Spanish poet who died in 1963.

"Well chosen selection of the poetry of a poet hardly accepted by his own generation yet now of increasing importance. . . . The English reads well and is the work of skilled craftsmen. There is no doggerel here. In translating poetry one has to choose between the 'music' of the verse and the 'meaning' found in it. The translators of Cernuda have decided wisely on the latter although the general use of blank verse . . . at least gives a poetic veneer to the English lines. This volume will be valuable to both the scholar of Spanish letters and the student of comparative literature."

Choice 9:513 Je '72 100w

"[Cernuda] left Spain during the Civil War. His exile was spent largely in English-speaking countries, and the influence of T. S. Eliot is seen in his later poems, especially those of a quasi-religious nature. His poetry, even the early poems which were written in Spain, reflects a sense of exile, a despair of happiness in life, and disappointment at the brevity of his homosexual love alliances. It is difficult for the non-Spanish-reading person to judge the quality of Cernuda's poetry from this collection of translations by four British professors. These renderings differ in their degree of pedestrian flatness, but are similar in never sounding like poetry. . . . The preface claims importance for Cernuda without expatiating the reasons why." Dorothy Nyren

Library J 97:1019 Mr 15 '72 150w

"[Dr Harris's introduction] is a disappointing essay from someone so dedicated to Cernuda, especially as his audience is likely to consist of those who do not share his knowledge or enthusiasm. Those familiar with Cernuda's poetry will find little to stimulate them in this ponderous essay. . . . Those who do not know Cernuda's work are unlikely to be won over . . . nor will they gain much idea of Cernuda's individuality from Dr Harris's mentions of 'poems . . . powerful and strangely beautiful' and 'an evocative style.' For that they will have to turn to the poems themselves, which . . . successfully illustrate with their varied manners, moods and themes what Cernuda called in 1933 'unity within diversity.' . . . The best translations are by Sage and E. M. Wilson, particularly the latter's elegant versions of 'Sadness of Memory', 'Gulls in the Park' and 'Urban Cemetery'."

TLS p769 Jl 7 '72 340w

CHAGALL at the "Met"; text by Emily Genauer [pub. for the] Metropolitan opera assn, inc. 149p col il $37.50 Tudor

759.7 Chagall, Marc. New York (City). Metropolitan Opera
ISBN 0-8148-0046-7 LC 75-169707

This "book deals with Marc Chagall's two contributions to New York's Metropolitan Opera—the pair of large murals in the foyer, and his designs for the set and costumes for Mozart's Magic flute. The text is . . . [an] essay on the aged artist's work for the 'Met.' Supplementing it are excerpts from the libretto; an unsigned article, 'The magic flute'; as well as a plot outline of the opera by the music critic, Irving Kolodin; and Chagall's dedication speech." (Choice)

"This [is a] richly illustrated coffee table [book]. . . . The volume addresses the viewer rather than the reader, and much of the text is an explication of the pictures. The plates offer good color details and the whole of murals and settings. The septuagenarian Chagall proves to be unequalled in his power of evoking chromatic splendor."

Choice 9:798 S '72 130w

"Of books about Chagall . . . there is no end, but not many of them are as meretricious as [this one]. . . . The principal text . . . is, well, embarrassingly appropriate." Hilton Kramer

N Y Times Bk ■ p75 D 5 '71 80w

CHAIKIN, JOSEPH. The presence of the actor. 161p il $6.95 Atheneum pubs.

792 Open theatre (Group)
LC 70-175287

The founder of the Open Theatre "presents his theories, some production notes, and some autobiography." (Library J)

"The Open Theatre [is] one of the best experimental theaters in New York. . . . [Chai-kin's] theory is somewhat pretentious, primarily because it is sketchy and assertive rather than argumentative. But the production notes and autobiographical matter are powerful statements of an actor and director who believes theater can and should be more than Broadway tinsel. The book is disjointed, partly because of the many interspersed quotations from diverse writers. Nonetheless, for those interested in new and revitalizing movements in theater, this is an exciting and valuable work."

E. G. Schreiber

Library J 97:1824 My 15 '72 100w

"[The book] bears the subtitle: 'Notes on the Open Theatre, Disguises, Acting and Repression.' It is an extremely loose and unstructured assemblage of writings on these subjects and themes . . . along with accounts of the genesis, intention and vicissitudes of Open Theatre projects like 'The Serpent' and 'Terminal' (there are photographs of these and other productions), observations on politics and society, . . . appreciations of playwrights like Beckett and Brecht, and autobiographical material which seems rather out of place. . . . What the book does say about acting is mostly cautionary and uttered in a context of concern for wider truth." Richard Gilman

N Y Times Bk R p5 Ag 6 '72 1150w

CHAKRAVARTI, P. C. The evolution of India's northern borders. 179p il maps $6.95 Asia pub.

327.54 India—Boundaries. China—Boundaries. Himalayan region—Politics
ISBN 0-210-22274-3 LC 75-26901

"Historical and juridical background relative to the territorial claims of the British, Tibetan, and Chinese governments in the Himalayas prior to India's independence is critically examined sector by sector from Kashmir to Burma. The current stand of the government of India in its border dispute with China is evaluated against this background." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Rejecting the Chinese territorial claims along the Himalayas as flimsy, Chakravarti concludes that the underlying motives for these claims are political, more an exercise in the show of muscle aimed at elimination of India as a 'rival from the Asian scene.' Other students of the Indo-China border dispute . . . basically concur with this conclusion. Chakravarti's stilted style contrasts with D. Woodman's refreshingly smooth, although well researched, authenticated, and more comprehensive statement on the same subject in Himalayan frontiers [BRI] 1970]. . . . Deserves a place in college libraries and on the shelves of students of Sino-Indian relations."

Choice 8:1628 F '72 230w

"Chakravarti's work provides what is essentially a sweeping survey of British India's involvement in the Himalayan area with a view to substantiating India's claims to the borders in its present disputes with China. . . . Sinologists and Tibetologists would have a hard time agreeing with Chakravarti's view of Sino-Tibetan or Tibeto-Indian relations in the eighteenth, the nineteenth, and the early twentieth centuries. Again, his treatment of Nepal in the historical context is quite fallacious. This use of selective data in marshalling his arguments, about the Simla Convention, for instance, marks his work as less than objective. Nevertheless, there are interesting sidelights on British designs in the Himalayas interspersed throughout the book; and as a concise and lucidly written work, it is well worth reading for those interested in Sino-Indian affairs." Kuniar Sharma

Pacific Affairs 45:134 spring '72 180w

CHALLINOR, JOHN. The history of British geology; a bibliographical study. 224p $11.25 Barnes & Noble

016.5542 Geology—Great Britain—Bibliography
ISBN 389-04566-7 LC 72-181401

"Part I [of this bibliography] lists 659 references, from 1538 to 1969, to 'works of purely original research, of summary and generalization, expositions of principles, and combinations of these.' . . . Part II lists these 659 works under 86 'thematic contexts,' a 'series of short essays, summaries, and compilations.'" (Choice) Index of authors, Index of names; places, counties, stratigraphical divisions, fossils.

"Whether a 'bibliographical study,' even by a veteran, is the best method of providing 'a short introduction to a great and hitherto entirely neglected subject: the general history of British geology' (the avowed purpose of this work) is debatable. . . . Three good appendices serve as a complete index with commendable cross-referencing. The book is well printed and cogently arranged. The material on British geology to 1822 is based on Challinor's papers in Annals of science (1970); historical allusions are from his Dictionary of geology. Readership: scientific bibliographers, historians of science, geology libraries."

CHALLINOR, JOHN—Continued

Choice 9:1147 N '72 200w

"The scope is ambitious, yet the list of sources is of modest size, suggesting inevitable subjectivity in selecting entries 'of the first importance.' . . . Challinor has digested an immense volume of literature into compact form that can be very useful for two groups of workers. First are those lacking any familiarity with the history of British geology; this includes many practicing geologists outside the United Kingdom. The second group of beneficiaries include anyone seeking an introduction to the history of geologic studies of specific areas or rocks within Britain. Because much of the origin of modern geology is rooted in British rocks, this group is potentially quite large. The author has done the greatest service for this latter group." R. H. Dott

Science 177:507 Ag 11 '72 600w

CHAMBERS, CLARKE A. Paul U. Kellogg and the Survey; voices for social welfare and social justice. 283p il $10 Univ. of Minn. press

361 Kellogg, Paul Underwood. The Survey (periodical)

ISBN 0-8166-0622-6 LC 77-172931

"This joint biography of an editor, Paul U. Kellogg, and a journal, the Survey, provides . . . insights into the story of social work, social welfare policy, and political and social reform in the United States during the first half of the twentieth century." (Publisher's note) Bibliography, Index.

"[This account] offers a scholarly and thoroughly documented, yet informal view of the intellectual and political currents of an era stretching from 1907 to 1952. Of special interest to social historians and social workers are the stories of The Pittsburgh Survey and the turmoil among social agencies during early years of the Great Depression. Sprinkled through the book are such names as John R. Commons, Mary Richmond, Jane Addams, Abraham Flexner, and Lillian Wald. Should be useful to a social science audience ranging from undergraduate to professional, especially students of social welfare or social change. Fine organization and easy style; rare references; excellent index."

Choice 9:844 S '72 120w

"Kellogg did not contribute to any significant shift in the theory or practice of American social reform or social work. Still, it would be difficult to choose a better subject for insight into the central theme of twentieth-century American social history. [This] study is useful not only for the light it sheds on the development of twentieth-century social work but also for the broader issues of social policy embedded implicitly in Kellogg's ideal of democratic social engineering." Roy Lubove

J Am Hist 59:449 S '72 500w

CHAMBERS, D. S., comp. Patrons and artists in the Italian Renaissance. 219p il $7.95 Univ. of S.C. press

709.45 Art patronage. Art, Renaissance. Art, Italian

ISBN 0-87249-220-6 LC 78-145530

"An anthology of 127 documents relating to artistic patronage in Italy between 1418 and 1521. All the documents come from . . . letters, contracts, extracts from books of payment, and other memoranda. . . . The editor has grouped them under five headings: . . . 'Classical Patronage', 'Guild Patronage', 'Civic Patronage', and 'Princely and Private Patronage' [and lastly, documents relating] to the artists' working conditions." (TLS Bibliography).

"The brief paragraph preceding many of these documents is simply not adequate explanation. . . . Students who come to these documents for the first time will have difficulty comprehending the full implications of these texts. All the documents published here have already appeared in print. The most readily available published source of the document and any study of the artist involved are cited here, but the location of the original document is not. . . . Also the translation often alters the tone of a letter. . . . Recommended for students advanced enough to know how to handle documents but not so advanced to be able to deal with original sources."

Choice 8:1442 Ja '72 220w

"[There are] five plates of good quality . . . and an accurate index. As the first extensive collection in English in its field, [this] will be of considerable value to students, though it seems highly priced for this market. The collection is both original, providing otherwise inaccessible source material, and broad, since it illuminates social and economic aspects, as well as cultural. . . . The documents are well translated and the editorial information sharp and relevant, directing the reader to the source for the text. Unfortunately this source is consistently a version found in print, which is not invariably accurate. . . . A second edition can remedy such weaknesses and some of the biographical references might also be revised."

TLS p484 Ap 23 '71 470w

CHAN, HENG CHEE. Singapore: the politics of survival, 1965-1967. 65p $9.60 Oxford

320.9 Singapore—Politics and government. People's action party

LC 79-942122

This study presents an "overview of the internal and external forces which have shaped the emergence of this new Southeast Asian city-state. . . . The initial portion of the book presents a description of the political, economic, and military factors which led to the merger of Singapore and Malaysia in 1963, as well as the divisive forces which resulted in the failure of this experiment in federation only two years later. Thereafter the narrative focusses primarily on the key issue of 'survival' for the 2,000,000 Singaporeans comprising a vigorous Chinese majority strategically located between large and suspicious Malay societies in Malaysia and Indonesia." (Am Pol Sci R)

"This brief monograph is an amended version of the author's Master's thesis submitted to the Department of Government at Cornell University in 1967. Its approach is an essentially traditional chronological coverage of the subject matter, although the work contains intermittent low-level analysis and commentary. . . . The book is compact and well written. It is scholarly and objective. It shows much careful research and extensive personal knowledge of Singapore's politics. It provides numerous useful insights into the early history of this independent island republic." F. C. Darling

Am Pol Sci R 66:1054 S '72 500w

"[This study is] thoughtfully analytical and gracefully written. . . . The only significant flaw in Miss Chan's presentation appears to come from her belief that past Chinese-Malay riots were generated almost solely by economic imbalance between the two ethnic communities." L. E. Williams

Pacific Affairs 44:648 winter '71-'72 120w

CHANDAVARKAR, SUMANA. Children of India; phot. by Stella Snead. 128p $4.50; lib bdg $4.14 Lothrop

915.4 Children in India—Juvenile literature. India—Social life and customs—Juvenile literature

LC 74-120167

This book of photographs of children from all parts of India is accompanied by a text. "Grades two to four." (Library J)

"In a variety of situations and settings, the children are pictured in photographs that have charm and appeal. The book should serve as an excellent and sympathetic introduction to the great diversity of life in India." B. R.

Horn Bk 48:163 Ap '72 120w

"A sympathetic but misleading and simplistic book of photographs that are accompanied by generally superfluous text. Most of the pictures show neat, clean, happy and well-fed children, making it easy for readers to deduce that famine, pestilence, overcrowding and illiteracy are things of the past. . . . Altogether, the errors of omission here are serious enough to give an inaccurate picture." Janet Kuenstner

Library J 96:2124 Je 15 '71 100w

"[This book contains] an improbable text notable only for its unctuousness. The narrator is Ravi, a middle-class youngster of egalitarian bent who . . . gushes with envy for other Indian children who don't enjoy his relative affluence. 'Wouldn't it be grand to be a nomad,' he asks, 'and sleep under a cart?' Maybe it would, but Ravi is as far removed from that life as any young American reader, so he has nothing interesting to say about it. Kim wouldn't have gushed; he would have done it."

Joseph Lelyveld

N Y Times Bk R p8 F 27 '72 110w

CHANDLER, ALFRED D. Pierre S. Du Pont and the making of the modern corporation, by Alfred D. Chandler, Jr. and Stephen Salsbury; with the assistance of Adeline Cook Strange. 722p pl $7.50 Harper

338.8 Du Pont, Pierre Samuel. Du Pont de Nemours (E.I.) and Company. General Motors Corporation. Du Pont family
SBN 06-010701-4 LC 78-123920

"This book traces the role of Pierre S. du Pont in shaping the family enterprise into a large modern corporation, and then tells how he also became president of General Motors and modernized that corporation as well." (N Y Times Bk R) Index.

"[This is a] voluminous, richly detailed study. . . . It is both a 'business biography,' dealing only peripherally with other aspects of Du Pont's life, and a business history. In more general terms, it contributes enormously to the history of modern bureaucratic organizations, a central theme for the 20th century. Based on voluminous records previously untapped or unavailable, it is deliberately confined to an 'insider's view' of the complex, intricate process of decision making and, with the exception of a brilliant, all-too-brief concluding chapter, eschews broader interpretations of corporations' role in American society. . . . The book is easily one of the best, most significant studies in American economic history during the last several years. . . . A must for any college or university library, and should also have a wide readership outside the academic community."

Choice 8:1219 N '71 230w

"[This] will undoubtedly be the definitive biography of this illustrious entrepreneur for some time to come. . . . [and is a] most thoroughly researched [and] documented work. . . . Smaller libraries may find it too scholarly for the casual reader." Sylvia Mechanic

Library J 95:4164 D 1 '70 150w

"The story is laced with details of fiendishly complicated financial transactions, and it is a bit one-sided, relying heavily on the company's version of what took place. Even so, the result is an unusually interesting book about business, down to earth and clear in setting forth a complicated tale. . . . While the authors contend Pierre was a financial and managerial wizard, their account suggests his power had more to do with a tireless ability to conciliate du Pont family disputes, and provide shape and direction to the family's investments. . . . This is not a biography of the man so much as it is a portrayal of various corporate deals. The personalities of Pierre and the other du Ponts remain in the background, where they seem shadowy and wooden." James Ridgeway

N Y Times Bk R p62 S 12 '71 1050w

CHANDLER, GEORGE. Libraries in the East: an international and comparative study. 214p il $5.95 Seminar press

021 Libraries—Asia
ISBN 0-12-815550-7 LC 76-162376

In 1970, the "librarian of the Liverpool Public Library and . . . president of the International Association of Metropolitan City Libraries [visited] . . . Lebanon, Egypt, Iran, Pakistan, India, Thailand, Hong Kong, and Japan. . . . [This volume is a] review of the state of librarianship in the eight countries. . . . Beginning with a chronological summary of recent notable events in the country, [Chandler] then considers library associations, education for librarianship, national libraries and documentation services, and the principal types of libraries. . . . He introduces his volume with a . . . survey of Asian development organized under the same topics, continues with country-by-country reports, and concludes with an interpretative chapter of predictions and recommendations for the future. [There is] a bibliographical survey of writings on Asia as a whole and on thirty-one individual nations." (Library Q) Bibliography.

"The work shows considerable haste. There are a number of contradictory statements, unconditional generalizations, too many long quotations for a short book, and the reader is snowed with statistics. Nevertheless, so meager is the coverage in this field, let's put out the welcome mat. . . . Appendixes have been included in a patent effort to broaden the reach of the book. The first is 'Select Bibliographies: Eastern Libraries 1950-1970'; it covers more than 30 Asian countries, nation by nation, in 21 pages but is unevaluative. A second, 'Library Service in Asia, 1967' consists of extracts from a Unesco document whose suggestions here and there conflict with the author's own peripatetic observations." Paul Bixler

Library J 97:172 Ja 15 '72 420w

"Chandler was able to produce so impressive a work because he prepared himself in advance and made judicious use of previous studies. . . . The result is as comprehensive a picture of librarianship in these nations as could be produced in any reasonable length of time. Since it is a status report, it can be only as accurate as the often fragmentary documentation that is available, and it will inevitably become dated. . . . The Bibliography, although a handy addition to this volume, is useful primarily for its quite recent references. . . . Chandler's descriptive and interpretative account is an excellent summary that will serve students of international librarianship well and will provide a valuable introduction for those who visit any of the countries described." W. L. Williamson

Library Q 42:275 Ap '72 700w

CHANDLER, RAYMOND. The midnight Raymond Chandler; with an introd. by Joan Kahn. 734p $10 Houghton

ISBN 0-395-12712-2 LC 74-162005

"Two complete novels featuring Philip Marlowe (The Little Sister and The Long Good-bye), plus four stories [Blackmailers Don't Shoot, The Pencil, Trouble is My Business, and Red Wine], and Mr. Chandler's essay 'The Simple Art of Murder' make up [this] volume." (Sat R)

"[This] collection of works by the author who originated private detective Philip Marlowe is a little too heavy a volume to hold comfortably in bed for reading as a somnifacient; but it includes some of the best of the late Raymond Chandler, with a perceptive introduction by Joan Kahn. . . . This is fine fare for Chandler fans and an excellent introduction for others to his epoch-making fiction."

Best Sell 31:472 Ja 15 '72 120w

"For anyone who doesn't know Philip Marlowe this is a perfect introduction." M. K. Grant

Library J 96:4032 D 1 '71 50w

"Chandler's prose is as clean, spare and evocative as any written in America during the past three decades. And perhaps just because of the good crackling prose, The Midnight Raymond Chandler doesn't quite satisfy. . . . A good collection, but the plots now seem contrived, the characters one-dimensional, the motivation often unconvincing, and, as a result, that marvelous style seems squandered on vehicles not quite worthy of it. Still, there are fine things here. . . . chief among them Chandler's detective Philip Marlowe, who manages to stand the test of time." J. R. Coyne

Nat R 24:169 F 18 '72 350w

Reviewed by Haskel Frankel
Sat R 54:58 N 27 '71 30w

Time 99:94 Ap 17 '72 180w

CHANG, CHUNG-LI, jt. auth. The Taiping rebellion, v2-3. See Michael, F.

CHANG, HAO. Liang Ch'i-ch'ao and intellectual transition in China, 1890-1907. 342p $11 Harvard univ. press

320.951 Liang, Ch'i-ch'ao. China—Intellectual life
ISBN 0-674-53009-8 LC 75-162635

"Emphasizing the period of Liang's greatest intellectual influence, 1900-1907, Chang . . . finds no anguished conflict in Liang's mind over repudiation of the Chinese tradition. Instead, he shows how Liang saw the possibilities of combining Chinese and Western ideas. He [argues] that even as Liang accepted the Western notion of the nation state, the morality and character of his 'new citizen' also had clear Chinese dimensions. He also shows how Liang foreshadowed the Chinese Communists with his emphasis on voluntarism and struggle, and the collective good over individualism." (Choice) Bibliography.

CHANG, HAO—Continued

"Important and necessary supplement and revision to Joseph Levenson's earlier, controversial work, Liang Ch'i-ch'ao and the mind of modern China. Chang, a student of eminent intellectual historian Benjamin Schwartz, reflects his mentor's depth and subtlety in handling the history of ideas. . . . The book, though clearly written, is essentially a scholarly work that will not be easily digested by the general reader. Students of Chinese history, however, will find it an important addition to their knowledge of the transitional period of early 20th-century China."

Choice 9:1025 O '72 160w

"One important aspect of [China's] fascinating pivotal period is the transition among contemporary thinkers from traditional internal sources of inspiration to a combination of these with the intruding external intellectual forces accompanying the imperialistic pressures of Western powers and Japan. A major problem for students of this transition process is the interaction of these two streams. . . . It is in this vein that Professor Chang's study of Liang Ch'i-ch'ao deserves to rank with the earlier contributions of Schwartz, Levenson and Ayers as standard references for this period. . . . This book does not replace previous studies in the same field, including Levenson's provocative treatment of the same individual. Professor Chang does however add considerably to our understanding of the whole process of value transformation between the restorationism of the Tung-chih period and the revolutionary commitment of the May 4th generation which would leave Liang Ch'i-ch'ao behind."

P. M. Mitchell

Pacific Affairs 45:413 fall '72 400w

"Chang is careful and scholarly and often extremely interesting. . . . But [he] does not have the force as a writer to convince us that he was right to end his discussions of Liang's thought in 1907. . . . And by paying no serious attention to the 1898 reform movement on the grounds of 'ample treatment elsewhere,' Chang further removes Liang from the dynamic happenings of his time. What we are left with is intellectual history of measured precision; but Liang is detached from the vast revolution that he helped to set in train. We miss [Joseph] Levenson's sense of grandeur and portent, even as we acknowledge that some valid corrections have been made to his vision." J. D. Spence

Yale R 62:136 O '72 850w

CHANG, KUO-T'AO. The rise of the Chinese communist party, 1921-1927; v 1 of The autobiography of Chang Kuo-t'ao. 756p $25 2v vi Univ. press of Kan.

B or 92 Communist party (China)
SBN 7006-0072-8 LC 76-14197

This is the first of two volumes "of Chang Kuo-t'ao's memoirs [and] covers the history of the Chinese Communist party to Chiang Kai-shek's coup in 1927." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by John Israel

Am Hist R 77:1493 D '72 600w

"One of the best works available in English, [this] will certainly become a standard source for future treatments of developments in China during these years. . . . The present volume is a great deal richer than Ch'en Kung-po's The Communist movement in China; an essay written in 1924 (BRD 1967), edited by C. Martin Wilbur. Although Ch'en, like Chang, was a founding member of the party, he did not develop a real power base, as did Chang. Robert Burton assisted Chang in putting together this monumental work. The result is a volume which is as readable as it is informative; the personal involvement of the author in the events he describes makes it exciting as well. Good index; glossary of Chinese personal names. Recommended for larger libraries."

Choice 9:419 My '72 180w

"While these memoirs naturally reflect the bias of the author, they nevertheless provide valuable insights into the early history of the party. The human element is evident throughout, thus adding support to those historians who believe it is not just social conditions that create revolutions and determine events, but the decisions and actions of individuals as well. One of the recurring themes is that due to a lack of understanding of local conditions Russian advisers, along with Kremlin interference, probably did more to hinder the early Chinese Communist party than they did to assist it. This work . . . will . . . interest scholars and students of Chinese Communism. A necessary acquisition for all libraries claiming a respectable Chinese history collection."

E. A. Engeldinger

Library J 96:2303 J1 '71 170w

"[The book] provides important, sometimes new, insights into the manner in which the CCP formulated its policies, strategies and tactics and the heated debates that often went on behind the scenes. . . . [It is] also an attempt by Chang Kuo-t'ao to explain the correctness of his standpoint on the controversial issues, the importance of the contribution he made to the Party, and incidentally, to show how it was, in fact, Mao who often held 'incorrect' views."

Ranbir Vohra

Pacific Affairs 45:419 fall '72 800w

"Unfortunately, the first part of the English version of Chang's long-awaited memoirs . . . does little to clarify the ambiguities in his political life history. . . . No light is shed on what is most obscure in Chang's history as a Communist—his activities during the Kiangsi era, his unsuccessful challenge to Mao in 1935, and his flight from Yen'an in 1938. . . . [Yet these] memoirs are of more than usual historical value, for unlike most ex-Communists who have published their recollections Chang moved not around the literary and intellectual fringes of party affairs but was at the center of the political process during a period of mass revolutionary upheaval." Maurice Meisner

Va Q R 48:606 autumn '72 1350w

CHAPIN, WILLIAM. Wasted; the story of my son's drug addiction. 216p $6.95 McGraw

362.2 Chapin, Mark O'Hara. Narcotic habit. Drugs and youth. Mental illness
SBN 07-010535-9 LC 71-38812

"The author, a former newspaper journalist who teaches journalism at San Francisco State College, describes . . . the transformation that took place in his son from the time the boy began smoking marijuana as a high school student until his institutionalization as a schizophrenic." (Library J)

"This is a tragic, poignant, fascinating chronicle of a wasted human life. Chapin has no answers. The family tried medical, psychiatric and even police answers. They even went together for extended family therapy. Looking back, the author realizes that he couldn't have handled the situation in any worse manner than he did. . . . Constant family bickering plus the father's concern with his own drinking and extra-marital affairs had ruptured family communication long before Mark reached his teens. . . . Those concerned with drugs, and all parents of teenagers, should read this valuable document." Charles Dollen

Best Sell 32:75 My 15 '72 300w

"The intelligent study of behavior which is labeled as sick, dangerous, immoral, criminal, or incorrigible suffers from a lack of firsthand accounts of the situation out of which the labeling develops. Therefore, Chapin's book is a rare document for the student. . . . Not a small part of the interest arises from the description of the father's participation in his son's psychotherapy, and the use of various tactics of surveillance and manipulation which were used in a vain effort to cope with the shattered pattern of the son's existence. Because of the questions it raises about commitment to confinement, as well as the role of parental authority in the boy's treatment, the account is decidedly different from an autobiographical account of a drug user. A puzzling, sad, and valuable book."

Choice 9:1360 D '72 200w

"Chapin effectively conveys a parent's helplessness in dealing with drug use, as well as the ineptitude of professionals who claim to be experts in treating drug problems. However, since Chapin's story is reportorial rather than analytical, and since his son's mental illness may be the result of factors other than drug abuse, the book is not likely to provide substantial guidance for the average parent confronted with the problem of a child taking drugs." Milton Travers

Library J 97:1024 Mr 15 '72 120w

Reviewed by Regina Minudri

Library J 97:2247 Je 15 '72 160w [YA]

"[In the beginning of the book] we have the kind of confession that a troubled man might make to his psychiatrist. . . . [Then] the book attempts to shift focus from the father to the son. But our picture of Mark never becomes clear or interesting. We begin to suspect that the elder Chapin does not know his son well enough to tell us much about him." George Davis

N Y Times Bk R p40 My 21 '72 1000w

CHAPMAN, A. H. The games children play. 250p $6.95 Putnam

155.4 Parent and child. Child study
LC 70-169249

"Addressed primarily to parents, this work shows ways in which children develop unhealthy patterns of relationships at home and in schools, and suggests ways in which such 'games' as 'King on the Mountain' can be replaced by genuine interactions." (Library J) Index.

"In this instance we have a rather superficial application of the 'games' approach to numerous childhood situations."

Christian Century 89:21 Ja 5 '72 30w

"The author of Put-Offs and Come-Ons [BRD 1968] . . . and Sexual Maneuvers and Stratagems here acknowledges his indebtedness to Harry Stack Sullivan for his interpersonal approach and to Eric Berne for his games concept. . . . Chapman's descriptions of ideal situations seem a bit conservative and his interpretations rather shallow. The games concept is familiar by now; but the book may be an eyeopener for some parents who have never looked at family relationships objectively." C. E. Wadsworth

Library J 97:507 F 1 '72 120w

CHAPMAN, FREDRIK HENRIK AF. Architectura navalis mercatoria; a facsimile of the classic eighteenth century treatise on shipbuilding; author's pref. to the Tractat om Skepps-Byggeriet, 1775; on the resistance which a ship in motion meets from the water, on the dimensions of ships, on the proportions of privateers, on the proportions of masts and yards for merchant ships, on the construction of the scale of solidity, on the measurement for tonnage and stowage, on the accommodations for provisions. 102p 62pl $25 Praeger 623.82 Naval architecture. Shipbuilding.

Ships—History
LC 70-100909

Chapman's book was "first published in Stockholm . . . in 1768. . . . [This edition] is dedicated to the memory of this . . . pioneer of naval architecture, who did . . . much to turn shipbuilding into a science. . . . [His] Tractat om Skepps-Byggeriet (Treatise on Shipbuilding), completed several years later, . . . is [an] . . . explanatory text to go with plans contained in Architectura Navalis Mercatoria, as Chapman had originally intended. It is . . . a manual of design of various types of craft of that period. For this reason the editor and publishers of this edition have thought it logical to combine the two parts, introducing in this way the author's own comments. Thus, selected parts of the 19th-century translation by the Rev. James Inman of the Tractat om Skepps-Byggeriet have been extracted, while the data such as dimensions, armament, cost etc. of individual ships featured in Architectura Navalis Mercatoria have been grouped for each plate and printed alongside it." (Introd) Index.

"[This] was a book of great contemporary importance, being originally translated into French, English, Russian and German. . . . In what must have been a remarkable feat for the time, the author assembles a considerable body of theory under such headings as 'On the resistance, On the dimensions,' etc. . . . An examination of the plates will provide a fascinating escape back to a time when art and science were one—and beauty was more often to be found in the works of man. . . . [This work] addresses a general human need for beauty resulting from the satisfaction of real needs and requirements with love and humility. The ships and boats of yesterday did that to a very satisfying degree, and the painstaking draftsmanship assembled in this book brings it all surprisingly to life." Carl Koch

Arch Forum 137:12 S '72 490w

"[This] beautifully produced, oversized facsimile . . . [contains] 62 large (foldout) and meticulously drawn plates. . . . Chapman, a career naval constructor and an internationally recognized authority, presents elaborate computations on such topics as vessel dimensions, proportions of masts and yards, measurement for tonnage and stowage, and water resistance to a ship in motion. While limited in its general appeal and understandably expensive, this volume may be of considerable interest to maritime and naval enthusiasts and is clearly essential for any library collections on maritime construction. Useful index and descriptions of the illustrated vessels."

Choice 9:113 Mr '72 150w

CHAPMAN, FREDRIK HENRIK AF. Tractat om Skepps-Byggeriet (Treatise on Shipbuilding). Selections. See Chapman, F. H. af. Architectura navalis mercatoria.

CHAPMAN, HESTER W. Caroline Matilda: Queen of Denmark. 221p pl $6.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

B or 92 Caroline Matilda, consort of Christian VII, King of Denmark
LC 73-183530

This is a portrayal of the "life of the young English princess, sister of George III, who came from London . . . to marry the sixteen-year-old king of Denmark, . . . Christian VII, under the terms of [an] . . . Anglo-Danish alliance. Arriving alone . . . [she learned] that the opulence and gaiety of the Danish court masked . . . political intrigues and . . . Christian's . . . lunacy. Bewildered and humiliated, Matilda turned to . . . the German doctor Johann Struensee. . . . [So began an] affair that led to a revolutionary two-year dictatorship by Struensee and culminated in a palace coup d'état and, ultimately, betrayal, disgrace, and death." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The story of Queen Caroline Matilda . . . has never been related more skillfully. As Miss Chapman says, it is a drama more suited to the age of Webster and Tourneur than to that of powdered hair and hooped skirts. . . . [The author's] exceptional gifts for discriminating narrative and the clear portrayal of complex character have never been used to more vivid effect." Christopher Hibbert

Book World p3 Ap 2 '72 800w

"Although [Queen Caroline Matilda] drew on herself much criticism and some ridicule, she was attractive, vivacious and intelligent and, both at the time and since, many champions have arisen to protest at her cruel fate. As Hester Chapman well says [in this entertaining book], 'she was stretched on the rack of marriage with a lunatic.'"

TLS p972 Ag 13 '71 700w

CHAPMAN, HESTER W. The thistle and the rose [Eng title: The sisters of Henry VIII]. 223p pl $6.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

B or 92 Margaret Tudor, consort of James IV, King of Scotland. Mary, consort of Louis XII, King of France
LC 79-159754

"In two separate biographies under one cover, Chapman discusses Margaret, queen consort to James IV of Scotland and sometime regent for James V, and Mary, who was Queen of France for 82 days until the death of the aged Louis XII and then became Duchess of Suffolk." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"After a brief introductory chapter relating how Henry Tudor secured the English throne, the author divides the book into two parts, one devoted to the career of Margaret, the other to Mary. The sketch on Margaret is by far the longer, taking over half the volume. . . . The story of the Princesses is interesting and informative in rounding out a picture of the Tudor period and is told in a lively dramatic way. . . . [There are] about a dozen illustrations; notes are given at the end of each chapter. An interesting, entertaining but not very important work." F. J. Gallagher

Best Sell 31:239 S 1 '71 700w

"Neither of the women emerge from these pages as particularly significant personages. Margaret's failure to receive the sympathy to which she felt herself entitled contrasts with Mary's stubborn insistence in selecting her second groom on her own, denying Henry VIII her services as a diplomatic pawn a second time. While the book reads smoothly, it may frustrate some readers by its apparently uncritical acceptance of older views criticized by modern scholars, for example, Francis Bacon's interpretation of Henry VII. With an appeal limited to popular audiences, this book combines the political and the social, exhausting neither."

CHAPMAN, H. W.—Continued

Choice 8:1501 Ja '72 170w

CHAPPELOW, ALLAN. Shaw—"the chucker-out"; a biographical exposition and critique; and a companion to and commentary on "Shaw the villager"; foreword by Vera Brittain. 558p il $15 AMS press

B or 92 Shaw, George Bernard
ISBN 0-404-08359-5 LC 74-152559

In this sequel to the author's earlier volume, (BRD 1963), "the principal speaker is Shaw himself, the public Shaw, in an . . . array of letters, wills, periodical articles, debating speeches, and lectures. . . . Chappelow has organized his materials thematically in an attempt to give a panoramic view of the development of Shaw's ideas on such subjects as the theater, sex education, socialism, democracy, communism, simplified spelling, war and peace." (Choice) Index.

Reviewed by Joan Gatz
America 127:271 O 7 '72 600w

"Many of the items have not previously been published; others appear here for the first time in book form. . . . The book is equipped with the kind of detailed index that so heterogeneous a collection demands, and it contains some interesting illustrations, including the author's superb full-length profile photo of Shaw at 94, for which the patriarch himself suggested the caption 'The chucker-out.' An essential acquisition."

Choice 9:504 Je '72 150w

"[Chappelow describes this book] as an attempt to assist towards a better understanding of Shaw by clarifying Shaw's paradoxical character and attitude to life." Approximately half the book consists of quotations from a grab bag of Shaw materials. The new materials comprise the main attraction of the volume, but taken in 500-page doses, Shaw can seem terribly cranky and tiresome. Chappelow has worked hard and long on what was obviously a labor of love, but his commentary nevertheless leaves something to be desired. . . . Often his fervent belief in his subject gets in the way of the reader. Altogether, the work is of interest only to large academic collections." Keith Cushman

Library J 96:4013 D 1 '71 200w

"What is one to make of the torrent of essays, letters to the editor, tracts, sermons and speeches with which Shaw argued his views on society, politics, sex and literature? They are still full of inconsistencies to which Shaw seemed indifferent. . . . To say that Chappelow's book deepens rather than resolves the contradictions in Shaw is not to detract from it. Mr. Chappelow . . . has combed the British Museum, Shaw's own documents and the notebooks of Shaw's contemporaries to make a collection of evidence of Shaw's views which might otherwise have remained inaccessible or even been lost." Brenda Maddox

Nation 215:92 Ag 7 '72 1100w

Reviewed by Stanley Weintraub
N Y Times Bk R p44 S 24 '72 800w

CHARBONNEAUX, JEAN. Archaic Greek art (620-480 B.C.) [by] Jean Charbonneau, Roland Martin and Francois Villard; tr. from the French by James Emmons and Robert Allen. 437p il col maps $30 Braziller

709.38 Art, Greek—History
ISBN 0-8076-0587-5 LC 78-136166

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Best Sell 31:360 N 1 '71 430w

Choice 9:50 Mr '72 150w

J Aesthetics 50:404 spring '72 160w

TLS p370 Mr 31 '72 850w

CHARDIN, PIERRE TEILHARD DE. See Teilhard de Chardin, P.

CHARLES, GERDA. The destiny waltz. 429p $7.95 Scribner

SBN 684-12936-1 LC 72-505

"This is the story of a poor, Jewish, East End poet who lived a short, miserable life but wrote remarkable poetry. Paul Salomon was a pathetically uninspiring and neglected person, crippled in his relations with other people by his sister's impossibly romantic notions which 'trained him to put aside his own instinctive judgements' . . . [T]heirs is the story within the story of a lonely, ageing ex-dance band leader, Jimmy Marchant, asked to help a banal team of television producers to make a documentary on Paul's life because Marchant began as an East End Jew like Paul and grew up with him." (New Statesman)

"Charles' fifth novel is busting with moral seriousness, but the didactic strain that occasionally threatened her fine novel A Slanting Light (BRD 1963) has now taken over completely. . . . Surprisingly like Ayn Rand, her philosophical opposite, Charles' main concern is with ideas, at the expense of her characters, who by novel's end have become earnest, humorless puppets tidily for or against her issues. The most exasperating aspect is that she has written an important novel in spite of her excesses and misjudgment, one which makes the reader ponder his own behavior and relationships. Many of her opinions are unfashionable, and therefore should be appraised; yet the rather smug solemnity of her book will discourage many readers." J. W. Charles

Library J 97:2750 S 1 '72 400w

Reviewed by Don Crinklaw
Nat R 24:1136 O 13 '72 340w

"There is not enough of a story and a disproportionate amount of sermonising on contemporary morality and clichés, however wise the sermons. Miss Charles displays a tough perversity, she can order her characters' feelings to fit a narrative form with easy skill—but still that doesn't make a novel." Lucy Cadogan

New Statesman 81:536 Ap 16 '71 380w

New Yorker 48:125 S 16 '72 210w

"It is rare to find a novelist tackling moral questions as explicitly and seriously as Gerda Charles does, making her characters expound their beliefs rather than stand for them. . . . Miss Charles wants Jimmy to be right, and though he talks too much, and occasionally with the tiresome fervour of a crusader, the reader is inclined to take his part. . . . Unable, perhaps, to bear his defeat, Miss Charles has unwisely made Jimmy fall in love, and this part of the novel suffers, as do some others, from a tone too humourless for comfort. The success of her novel lies in those strained encounters between people of different worlds, and nothing is better here than the scene in which she exactly catches the disdain of the school staffroom for the visiting peacocks from television and the unavailing efforts of the peacocks to appear neither superior nor enviable."

TLS p465 Ap 23 '71 600w

CHARLES, SYDNEY ROBINSON. A handbook of music and music literature in sets and series. 497p $11.95 Free press

781.9 Music—Bibliography
LC 71-143502

The author has arranged her lists of musical literature in "four sections. The first (Section A) deals with sets and series containing music by several composers. Section B deals with sets and series devoted to one composer. The third section, C, covers music literature monograph and facsimile series, while the fourth, D, relates to musical periodicals and yearbooks." (Choice) Index.

"Charles' objective was to select important sets and series in the field of music in order to provide scholars, teachers, librarians, and music students with a helpful reference compilation. Useful it is, but reliable it is not! One finds the selection uneven, details unchecked, numerous typographical errors, and questionable subjective decisions. . . . Section A, though containing 101 sets, fails to include standard sets currently in use. . . . [In Section B] one looks in vain for a composer whose works happened not to be published in two or more volumes or whose works were published in series or in limited series. Section C is fairly comprehensive with 85 entries. Section D, with 65 entries, could have been expanded easily to more than 100. Nonetheless, this guide should be placed on reference shelves as it will be used by scholars and librarians—but it will need to be used with care."

Choice 9:1113 N '72 300w

"This work broadly overlaps Anna H. Heyer's Historical Sets, Collected Editions, and Monuments of Music [BRD 1970], but Charles' presentation is clearer. . . . The first two sections cover material already available in Heyer's work, with the addition of helpful guides to composers and individual works. Charles' selection is good, but she should have included the publication dates of each volume. The last two sections provide a guide to materials not previously easily accessible. Particularly good are the guides to facsimile editions and special issues of periodicals. The book has a good index, and the reference librarian without extensive background in music should find it easy to use. Kenneth Groeppe

Library J 97:2374 J1 '72 130w

CHARLOT, JEAN. The Gaullist phenomenon; The Gaullist movement in the Fifth Republic; tr. by Monica Charlot and Marianne Neighbour. 205p $10 Praeger

944.08 France—Politics and government—20th century. Gaulle, Charles de, President France
LC 70-165527

"Charlot examines the development of the Gaullist party and its impact on the French electorate. He discusses . . . the role of charisma and the relation of Gaullism to foreign policy, economic stability, and prosperity. This section concludes with an analysis of the voter-directed party and the geographical, sociological and political distribution of the Gaullist electorate . . . [and] leads into individual chapters on the Gaullist party, its membership and organization, the various internal factions, and the distribution of power within the party. In his final chapters on de Gaulle and Pompidou, Charlot relates their personal influence to the impact of Gaullism as a general phenomenon and to . . . the internal workings of the party." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Index.

"[This is] a concise account of the development and staying power of the Gaullist movement. . . . While not underestimating the wide and perhaps unique appeal of de Gaulle, Charlot demonstrates that Gaullism as a political force could exist independently of and after the General. . . . Charlot argues that the UDR [Union des démocrates pour la République] represents the majority, and that the left is a permanent minority. One of de Gaulle's lasting achievements was to open the way to a genuine two-party system. . . . Excellent for introductory purposes; a handy primer on Gaullism and the Fifth Republic."

Choice 9:867 S '72 170w

"Professor Charlot was one of those who believed that the destiny of gaullism was no longer bound up with the fate of its founder and it must have been with a particular pleasure that he was able to complete his book under the regime of M. Pompidou's sort of gaullism. . . . There is an extremely interesting chapter on the attractions of gaullism which has some wise words to say about de Gaulle as a charismatic leader. There is a concluding and perhaps disappointing chapter on Pompidou. . . . This is a very able and important analysis of contemporary French political life."

Economist 240:61 J1 10 '71 650w

"For Professor Charlot there is no such thing as one particular form of Gaullism. There are many Gaullisms, and by far the most common mistake, we are told, has been to concentrate on the person of de Gaulle. What has happened, and what is studied in this highly intelligent work, is a transformation of French politics."

TLS p1195 O 8 '71 250w

CHAROSH, MANNIS. The ellipse; il. by Leonard Kessler. 33p $3.75 Crowell

516 Geometry—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-690-25856-9 LC 73-132293

A "step-by-step introduction to the ellipse as it is seen in the child's everyday environment. Common household objects . . . are used to illustrate the concept and serve as the bases and means for simple experiments. . . . Grades one to four." (Library J)

"I have only one criticism to make; and this is more a doubt than a fault—and as a doubt, it may even be a virtue. The opening pages describe what the rim of a drinking glass 'looks like' as it is viewed from different angles. I am not sure that by the time a child can read, he has not also developed to the point where his between-the-ears computer automatically (unconsciously, that is) takes care of the perspective correction, so that if he knows it is a circle, it will look like one regardless of the viewing angle. . . . The fault, if it is one, is hardly critical; either way, one could get an argument going which would clarify the nature of the ellipse. I should be greatly interested, though, in hearing what really happens in some kindergarten or first-grade class when the book has been read." H. C. Stubbs

Horn Bk 48:169 Ad '72 170w

"Kessler's illustrations carefully detail experimental procedures and are particularly useful as the experiments become increasingly more complicated. . . . This book is less closely related to the curriculum than are other titles in the Young Math series; but the choice of vocabulary, development of ideas, and lively pictures will have wide appeal among young mathematicians." Sandra Weir

Library J 97:762 F 15 '72 120w

CHASE, ALLAN. The biological imperatives; health, politics, and human survival. 399p $8.95 Holt

614 Public health—U.S. Medicine. Environmental policy—U.S.
ISBN 0-03-085986-7 LC 71-138886

"The author believes that it is absolutely necessary for us to concern ourselves with social biology and feels a pressing need to insist that every American, and particularly politicians, be educated on the 'essentially man-made threats to the biological survival of our species.' He believes that the recent cutback in funding for biomedical research and education is as much a threat to human survival as are pollution, alcoholism, hunger, automobile accidents, etc." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by R. E. Frisch

Bul Atomic Sci 28:46 N '72 1450w

"Chase is a medical writer of long experience, is well informed, and writes smoothly. Unfortunately, he is also unbelievably repetitious in his main points, although they are points certainly worth repeating, up to a limit (which he exceeds). The book is incredibly disorganized. In discussing the wider societal . . . determinants of good health, Chase is saying something very important, something often overlooked by the Jeremiahs of the health care scene today. Alas, his solutions are . . . utopian, and one sorely misses the kind of realistic political perspective that would serve as a solid basis for dealing with present-day problems. . . . The lack of any bibliographic material whatsoever seriously detracts from the book's usefulness. Even so, . . . it deserves a place in the college library."

Choice 9:386 My '72 150w

"The book's breadth of view, the coordination of information on the medical, political, economic, and social factors that affect human survival, lends new insight into the problems that face our society." S. B. Hesslein

Library J 97:894 Mr 1 '72 110w

"Diseases that can be prevented are rampant. . . . Chase points out side effects from automobiles, such as cancer-causing asbestos from brake linings, pollution from exhausts, consumption of natural fuels, and deaths from collisions. . . . Along with a plea for a more rational system of preventive medicine, [he] presents 'examples of major causes of sickness and death whose prevention is not the province of doctors, dentists, and nurses but plumbers, cobblers, farmers, engineers, and legislators.' These include malnutrition, auto accidents, war, pollution, and a number of less obvious factors, many of which Chase says, threatens our survival. In spite of Chase's good intentions, and a valuable perception of the symptoms, his book unfortunately remains a disorganized set of problems in search of a cure." Robert Bazell

N Y Rev of Books 19:39 N 2 '72 2600w

CHASE, SARA HANNUM. Diamonds. (A First bk) 90p il lib bdg $3.75 Watts, F.

553 Diamonds—Juvenile literature
ISBN 531-0722-7 LC 78-134835

This is an account of "the finding and the industrial and social development of diamonds. . . . [Included also are the] fables and fashions surrounding [them as well as] . . . some of the technical processes involved in mining, shaping and using diamonds." (TLS) Glossary. Index. "Grades five to seven." (Library J)

CHASE, S. H.—Continued

"Although this is more up to date than [H.] Zim's Diamonds [BRD 1959], it is not as direct, informative or well organized. Little is said about the diamond industry or diamonds that have been found in the United States, and while the Diamond Dealers Club is mentioned, there is nothing said about the 'diamond district' in New York of which the Club is perhaps the hub. . . . The material on cutting and polishing is neither clear nor complete." Margaret Bush

Library J 96:2128 Je 15 '71 80w

"Designed for older juniors whose inquiring minds are ready for new ideas and experiences [this book contains] abundant illustrations—sketches and photographs."

TLS p815 Jl 14 '72 30w

CHATFIELD, CHARLES. For peace and justice; pacifism in America, 1914-1941. 447p il $11.95 Univ. of Tenn. press

320.973 Pacifism. U.S.—Politics and government—1919-1933. U.S.—Politics and government—1933-1945

ISBN 0-87049-126-1 LC 70-142143

The author argues that "Pacifists in the years 1914-41 were not withdrawn isolationists: they were in the thick of things; they had realistic plans and a vision for the world." (Christian Century) "Bibliography. Index." (Library J)

"Timely for understanding the anti-war movements of this generation. . . . Chatfield's study will probably serve as the standard work on the interwar pacifist movement in the United States." C. D. Tompkins

Ann Am Acad 400:166 Mr '72 500w

"In his definitive study, Chatfield thoroughly covers all aspects—philosophical, organizational, and literary—of interwar pacifism. Cartoons, poems, and novels are skillfully utilized in this sensitively written and painstakingly researched volume. While the author offers no blanket eulogy of pacifist activities, he is neither patronizing nor scornful. . . . Despite sporadic errors, e.g. comments on the non-pacifist America First Committee—the book is a real tour-de-force and should propel the author into the foremost ranks of intellectual historians. Highly relevant to today's anti-war struggle, it is essential to all libraries and much needed in a paperback edition."

Choice 8:1506 Ja '72 160w

"[Much of] this serious, complex history of pacifism . . . is based on materials not previously publicized."

Christian Century 88:1117 S 22 '71 50w

Reviewed by D. S. Patterson

J Am Hist 59:201 Je '72 800w

"One of the most subtle and profound of the many changes that World War I wrought in American life was the appearance of modern pacifism. . . . For the next generation pacifist leaders like A. J. Muste and Devere Allen conceived and acted out an attitude of love and service in American life. And now, through the talents of Chatfield, an associate professor of history at Wittenberg University, their story is related in its full range and complexity. . . . Immaculately researched and engagingly written, this study should be made available to everyone from interested laymen to serious scholar." Charles DeBenedetti

Library J 96:4091 D 15 '71 270w

CHATMAN, SEYMOUR. The later style of Henry James. 135p $7.50 Barnes & Noble

813 James, Henry

ISBN 389-04481-4 LC [72-188419]

The author "uses linguistic analysis to distinguish James' later style, which reflects James' growing interest in aesthetics and the modes by which characters try to apprehend the world about them, from his earlier style and even from the styles of his contemporaries. . . . The book closes with a . . . discussion of parody as an avenue toward understanding style." (Choice)

"What Mr. Chatman's thesis comes to in this closely packed monograph is that although James's late style has all of the copybook flaws of abstraction and vagueness, these are concomitants not of 'inadvertent clumsiness,' but of a highly sophisticated attempt to actualize complex feeling states. . . . In specific analyses, Mr. Chatman offers solid comments on some aspects of James's late style. However, one is not convinced that the parts reflect the whole, and, overall, his book is not as analytically solid as he could doubtless have made it." S. J. Krause

Am Lit 44:494 N '72 700w

"To students of prose fiction this brief study will be important; to Jamesians it will be indispensable. Chatman's own style is modest, graceful, and engaging."

Choice 9:966 O '72 130w

"How deeply idiosyncratic the prose style of [the] 'late James' had become is patiently analysed by Professor Chatman. . . . and never more clearly than when [he] contrasts the affectionately accurate mockery of the Max Beerbohm parody, 'The Guerdon', with a careless off-the-mark whimsical effort by W. H. D. Rouse."

TLS p957 Ag 18 '72 500w

CHATTERTON, THOMAS. The complete works of Thomas Chatterton; a bicentenary ed; ed. by Donald S. Taylor in assn. with Benjamin B. Hoover. 2v il pl maps set $40 Oxford

828

ISBN 0-19-811848-1

LC 72-584147

This "bicentenary edition of everything decipherable that Chatterton ever wrote [contains] Rowleian poems, Ossianic prose poems, African eclogues, squibs, album verses, satires, letters [and] archaeological cook-ups." (New Statesman)

"A rich, indispensable edition which is bound to become standard."

Choice 8:1174 N '71 190w

"Now 'Rowley's' sometimes lovely work is at last available in a fine critical edition, with fascinating plates showing the forged documents. Here too are Chatterton's correspondence and 'modern' works, many of the pieces newly collected. An extensive glossary [and] a fold-out map of the poet's imaginary ancient Bristol. . . . are also provided. Attributions and chronology will be debated, but not lightly. These handsome volumes are indispensable to students of Chatterton and the literature of his period." F. M. Keener

Library J 96:2319 Jl '71 120w

"[The editor] works over Chatterton's pseudo-medieval language, he glossarises it with new care, he quotes Saintsbury on Chatterton's prosody, he attaches a commentary to each piece and poem, he includes Vivin-like drawings by Chatterton, yet never seems clear about his own activity. Is it poems he is dealing with? Is it problems of the verbal and antique inventiveness and the precocity of the marvellous boy? . . . Reading him all through again, I reaffirm to myself that there isn't much in all his work, whether in movement or image, of which one can say, 'This is Chatterton. indisputably.'" Geoffrey Grigson

New Statesman 81:498 Ap 9 '71 1500w

"So self-justifying is the Eng Lit industry nowadays that the editors and the publishers seem to have felt no qualms about producing this monstrously large, impossibly expensive edition of the works, mostly unreadable, of a minor and perhaps justly neglected poet, without any critical introduction, any excuse, any argument for reconsideration of Chatterton. . . . All critical questions are begged, and the labour of scholarly annotations forges doggedly on, as if the editors . . . did not dare to inquire too closely into the value of what they were doing."

TLS p859 Jl 23 '71 4800w

CHAUDHURI, K. N., ed. The economic development of India under the East India company, 1814-58: a selection of contemporary writings. 319p $19.50 Cambridge

330.954 India—Commerce—History. U.S.—

Economic conditions. East India Company

ISBN 0-521-07933-0 LC 78-129932

"The four reprints in this volume are concerned primarily with India's role in Britain's international balance of payments. They were selected 'to illustrate the quantitative aspects of Indian trade, and to cast light on its institutional and policy features.' . . . [They include] G. A. Prinsep's Remarks on the External Commerce and Exchanges of Bengal [which] recalculates official British Indian trade figures . . . [and] Thomas Tooke's appendix from his History of Prices [which] demonstrates how the imbalance in the eastern trade caused an increase in British exports of silver to India and China after 1850. . . [J. H. Palmer] describes the operation of the foreign exchange market for eastern trade. . . . John Crawford's Sketch of the Commercial Resources and Monetary and Mercantile System of British India . . . [gives a] description of the domestic economy." (Pacific Affairs) Index.

"The four tracts of the volume were originally published between 1823 and 1857 and comprise an excellent statement of economic knowledge in the first half of the 19th century. There is a superb analysis of the complex, multilateral trade system of the time and the institutional and policy framework in which the East India Company regulated the Indian economy. Though somewhat technical, the introduction is very good."

Choice 8:1357 D '71 130w

Reviewed by Patrick Peebles

Pacific Affairs 45:153 spring '72 260w

CHAUNCEY, HENRY, ed. Soviet preschool education, v2. See Soviet preschool education

CHECKLAND, S. G. The Gladstones; a family biography, 1764-1851. 448p il $16 Cambridge 920 Gladstone family. Gladstone, William Ewart
ISBN 0-521-07966-7 LC [72-134611]

"Against the social milieu of Liverpool, Eton, Oxford, and London during the industrial revolution, Checkland, professor of economic history at the University of Glasgow, offers a . . . picture of contrasts in the lives of John Gladstone and his family amid the complex factors of intense evangelicalism, laissez-faire economics, oligarchic politics, and paternalistic philanthropy." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by John Clive

Am Hist R 77:1445 D '72 1250w

"Informative, incisive, well paced . . . this book is a penetrating insight into a family totally committed to business and politics. . . . John Gladstone is the central figure, but William, the youngest, attains towering dimensions through the adroitness of Checkland. . . . Judicious reference to the family papers, letters, pamphlets, and secondary references. Epilogue, while lengthy, is superbly done. . . . Price high, but so is the recommendation."

Choice 9:120 Mr '72 150w

Economist 241:x N 6 '71 550w

"Sir John (his birth and death define the period covered) early demonstrated business acumen and built one of the notable fortunes of his time, beginning with corn and shipping, but including plantations, slaves, and railways. Among the children, William receives the most attention, especially at Eton and Oxford and during his early days in Parliament. Perhaps the most interesting aspect is the curious irony of human development: the father, a liberal early in life, became staunchly conservative, while his sons William and Robertson changed from conservatives to leading forces for liberal reform in the latter part of the 19th Century. Documentary sources include previously unexamined correspondence and diaries. An important addition to British and Caribbean history." R. G. McInnis

Library J 97:489 F 1 '72 160w

Reviewed by John Raymond

New Statesman 83:22 Ja 7 '72 700w

"Professor Checkland . . . has kept clear of that common tendency in biographers, to idolize or to detest their subject; he is far too austere a scholar to indulge in reconstructed conversations. He leaves his main characters, when he can, to tell their story in their own words, in their letters to each other, or in diary jottings. When his sources do not allow this, he uses his own wit and understanding to explain, with force and charm what they were doing. . . . The tone [of the book] is sometimes rather pawky. Yet there is real understanding, both of [William] Gladstone and of his world. . . . On the whole, this book is free of the spattering of small errors to which long books breaking new ground are prone. . . . [It] tells us much we did not know about the origins of that marvellous and still misunderstood phenomenon, Gladstonian liberalism."

TLS p1243 O 15 '71 2350w

CHEIFETZ, DAN. Theater in my head; phot. by Nancy Hellebrand. 173p $5.95 Little 792 Drama in education
LC 79-156366

"In a series of workshops for children of elementary school age Cheifetz experimented with . . . improvisatory games. . . . For Cheifetz, these improvisations took on 'the function of dramatic play, with its opportunity to try out many different roles, its power to help children believe there is more in them than they can let the world see, its quality of 'time out from real life.' . . . [His] book provides creative theatrical games for the . . . teacher at all grade levels." (Library J)

"Readable and worth reading. Not an important book, it joins the growing genre of anecdotal reportage of work with children. . . . There are no shattering breakthroughs, overwhelming successes, or absolute panaceas. It is an honest reporting of mild successes and occasional failures. It is this simple honesty which sets the value of the book. Those who work with children will find some base for encouragement and some buffers against failure in the many stories. It is not a 'how to do it' book, though techniques can be learned from its pages. Cheifetz is at his best when he tells his stories without interpretation."

Choice 8:1463 Ja '72 110w

Reviewed by M. B. Freese

Library J 96:3129 O 1 '71 140w

CHEKENIAN, JANE. Shellfish cookery [by] Jane Chekenian and Monica Meyer. 352p il col pl $12.50 Macmillan (N Y)
641.6 Cookery—Shellfish
LC 75-134514

"A compilation of some 300 recipes. Clams, lobsters, mussels, oysters, scallops, shrimp (and combinations of these in stews and chowders), abalone, conch, sea urchins, snails, whelks, crayfish, periwinkles—with hot and cold sauces for the various dishes—are [included. Index]. (Best Sell)

Reviewed by Friede Gruenrock

Best Sell 31:26 Ap 1 '71 90w

"Well-worked-out national and international recipes for all sorts of shellfish, by two enthusiastic Long Island ladies. It's a good book, but I would recommend wearing gloves when knifing off the top of a sea urchin." Nika Hazelton

N Y Times Bk ■ p32 D 12 '71 40w

CHENERY, HOLLIS B., ed. Studies in development planning; ed. by Hollis B. Chenery; with Samuel Bowles [and others]. (Harvard univ. Harvard economic studies, v 136) 422p il $13.50 Harvard univ. press 338.91 Underdeveloped areas. Economic conditions
ISBN 0-674-84725-3 LC 70-143227

"Seventeen papers prepared by a group of eminent economists directed toward formulating operational ways of thinking about development problems. Collectively, the papers stress the interaction between theoretical and empirical aspects of planning and the need to establish balance between them. Both econometric and planning models are utilized to test hypotheses and establish relationships between social objectives and instruments of policy. Basically, the study is designed to test the value of different approaches to policy problems. The papers are organized in four parts: (1) general planning models; (2) international trade and external resources; (3) sectoral planning; (4) empirical bases for development programs. Bibliography. Index." (Choice)

"A most important contribution to the literature on development. Highly recommended for students (assuming a strong mathematical background), teachers and government officials."

Choice 9:101 Mr '72 160w

TLS p1066 S 15 '72 230w

CHENEY, SHELDON. The theatre; three thousand years of drama, acting, and stagecraft; rev. and reset il. ed; with a new bibliography. 710p $14.95 McKay

792.09 Theater—History. Drama—History and criticism
LC 74-155254

"Originally published in 1929, this work has now received its third . . . revision. Cheney writes, 'The most important feature is the addition of about sixty illustrations. There are innumerable amendments and patches in the text . . . and fifty pages of new text.' There is also a new 12-page selected bibliography by Arthur B. Hopper Jr." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index. For earlier editions see BRD 1929 and 1952.

"One cannot deny the historical importance of Cheney's book. When it came out . . . it was the major, if not the only, effort to survey the whole of theater history, with an emphasis on acting and stagecraft. . . . Contrary to the claims of the dust jacket blurb, the 1972 edition is not 'a new, completely revised and reset illustrated edition.' While there are several new illustrations, and a couple of slight essays covering 'The theatre in decline' and 'Absurdity and defilement' which attempt to highlight theater between 1940 and 1970, there is essentially little difference between this printing and the 1958, the 1952, or even the 1929 edition. What sets Cheney's work apart from similar efforts is his spirit, and his admittedly 'theatrical' approach to theater history. . . . A book which is to be used for study should first of all be guided by as objective a perspective as possible. This is conspicuously missing in Cheney's interesting history."

Choice 9:985 O '72 290w

Reviewed by R. R. Harris

Library J 97:2173 Je 15 '72 60w

CHENG, PETER. A chronology of the People's Republic of China from October 1, 1949. 347p $8.95; pa $3.95 Littlefield

951.05 Chronology, Historical. China (People's Republic of China)—History—Chronology
LC 72-182378

The book "covers the daily recorded events concerning the People's Republic of China from the day of its inauguration in 1949 through 1970. This . . . account has been compiled from reports appearing in publications in China, England, France, India, and the United States." (Pref) Index.

"Cheng has compiled a useful reference work for serious students of the People's Republic of China. . . . The index, which is topically arranged, is particularly useful for foreign affairs. The book is stronger in recording official statements than it is in recording the events to which the statements refer. . . . This emphasis limits the usefulness of the book."

Choice 9:489 Je '72 100w

"China Quarterly, Facts on File, and Keesing's Contemporary Archives are but a few of the sources used. In the introduction, the author updates the main text through August, 1971, covering main events. Since no new material is contained in this volume, its usefulness lies in its ready reference synopsis of major events. . . . With a new era of relations beginning between mainland China and the U.S., resulting from President Nixon's recent visit, this chronology should be in demand. (A sketchy and very limited subject index is included)." D. F. Burlingame

Library J 97:1418 Ap 15 '72 120w

CHESNEAUX, JEAN. Secret societies in China in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries; tr. by Gillian Nettle. 210p pl $7.95 Univ. of Mich. press

366 Secret societies
ISBN 0-472-08207-8 LC 76-124425

This is an historical account dealing with "the nature and activities of the secret societies, ranging in time from the Opium War to the Communist takeover in 1949. . . . [Included are insights] into the dynamics of China's political and social life. . . . (and) into the problem of organized dissent in a highly coherent society." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Chinese character index. Index.

"This book is neither well organized nor well written, although the latter problem may be as much the responsibility of the translator as the writer. Nevertheless, it has its value in shedding light on the role of Chinese secret societies as vehicles of social discontent against the 'ancien régime.' Chesneaux concludes that the societies achieved real success not as movers of Chinese history, but as a supporting force for new forces in Chinese history, notably the republican and nationalist movements in the early 20th century. . . . This is a difficult subject on which to write because of the lack of documentation, but Chesneaux has used what is available and has included many documents in his text. Useful addition to academic libraries."

Choice 9:866 S '72 150w

"[This] is a translation of a pioneering work first published in French in 1965. . . . [It] consists of 60 extracts from original documents of or about secret societies, embedded in a series of comments highlighting what the author believes was the secret societies' essentially progressive role. The exposition is too disjointed and fragmentary to make a coherent essay for the nonspecialist; rather, the book serves as a source of ideas and documentation to spur further research in the field (although Chesneaux's failure to cite most of his sources is an unkindness to those who will follow him)." A. J. Nathan

Library J 97:2585 Ag '72 150w

CHESNEY, INGA L. A time of rape. 255p $6.95 Prentice-Hall

940.54 World War, 1939-1945—Personal narratives
ISBN 0-13-922013-5 LC 70-168757

The author gives an "account of her experiences as a teenager during the Russian invasion of Berlin at the close of World War Two." (Best Sell)

"Mrs. Chesney's unadorned, straightforward style, at times borders on the poetic, and even when she discusses her philosophy of life and justification for the actions of Germany during the Third Reich the writing holds up. 'A Time of Rape' is a good first-person report, well written, and is interesting, informative popular history. The book has to be read to be appreciated. Mrs. Chesney has expertly conveyed the emotions and experiences of a family caught in the final days of a collapsing empire. Her powers of recollection remain vivid and her sensitivity remains keen." D. F. Sharpe

Best Sell 32:27 Ap 15 '72 230w

"Inga Chesney writes here as an optimistic teenager, with the result that some of her ideas are rather naive. But there can be no doubt that the German people were made to suffer horrible deprivations at the end of World War II, and her perspective provides a needed balance for the similar diaries and experiences of those who were victimized by the Germans." Dale Thompson

Library J 97:2495 Jl '72 150w [YA]

CHESSER, EUSTACE. Strange loves; the human aspects of sexual deviation (Eng title: The human aspects of sexual deviation). 255p $5.95 Morrow

301.41 Sex. Deviant behavior
LC 76-165132

The author, a psychiatrist, contends that "the only dividing line in sexual behavior should be between what people do with mutual consent and what people do against someone else's will—in other words, between social and anti-social acts. Having made that distinction, Dr. Chesser proceeds to discuss specific sexual attitudes and sexual behavior." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Ostensibly, this book portrays 'a revolutionary change in our approach to the morality of sex,' but it is in fact little more than a series of brief case histories of individuals engaged in various forms of unconventional sex, ranging from fetishism to homosexuality. The 'new' morality Chesser is advocating holds that one should forego terms such as abnormal, perverse, and deviant and simply ask whether the acts involve love and consent. . . . Most of the topics are treated very superficially and sloppily, with the excuse, one supposes, that the book is directed at the layman. . . . In other words, save your money!"

Choice 9:288 Ap '72 180w

"The author has managed to put together in this handy compendium information on all the aberrations dealt with lengthily in Krafft-Ebing, et al., and his discussion is lucid and rational. The main thesis is that the only deviations from so-called normal behavior upon which judgment should be passed are those which can clearly be designated 'anti-social.' . . . This approach would remove a whole range of 'victim-less crimes' from the area of police supervision and, in addition, free certain sexual practices from social disapproval or ostracism. This reviewer finds the book eminently worthwhile (though badly edited)." B. G. Kohler

Library J 97:204 Ja 15 '72 90w

"[Dr. Chesser writes here] of a wide range of sexual deviations with something less than censure. He investigates fetishism, transvestism and trans-sexualism, homosexuality and lesbianism, voyeurism and exhibitionism, sadism and masochism, nymphomania and satyriasis, and the tone throughout is common-sense and gentle." Dan Greenburg
N Y Times Bk R p27 Ja 16 '72 950w

CHEVALIER, ÉTIENNE. See Fouquet, J.

CHEVIGNY, PAUL. Cops and rebels; ■ study of provocation. 332p $7.95 Pantheon bks.
322.4 Black Panther party. Trials. New York (City)—Police
ISBN 0-394-47218-7 LC 72-570

The author of Police Power (BRD 1969), is "a New York ACLU lawyer defending three Black Panthers accused of criminal conspiracy in 1970. [He] describes the use of [Wilbert Thomas], a black undercover policeman in apprehending the accused Panthers, tells the story of the youths' radicalization in their Brooklyn ghetto, and narrates their trial." (Publishers' Weekly) Bibliography.

Reviewed by J. A. Phillips
Best Sell 32:210 Ag 1 '72 300w

"This book is a further expression of the author's continuing concern about the abuse of police power. Advocacy is necessarily antithetical to objectivity, and this is reflected in the selective use of trial transcripts and of personal and political records. The author also includes a historical review of official provocation in an economic and political context. The study is informative as a case of special pleading. . . . The book does alert us to the constant danger of official malice and, in so doing, furthers the preservation of our liberties." Morton Bard
Library J 97:2112 Je 1 '72 200w

"As a case study that attempts to probe the murky and extremely subtle point where police undercover work becomes an unconstitutional abuse of police power, the book is a significant contribution. . . . The central theme [is] that while not all undercover agents [become agents provocateurs] those who do . . . are acting in accordance with official policy. . . . It is a measure of the subtlety of the issues involved that . . . Chevigny is unable to prove, at least to this reader, that Patrolman [Thomas] was in fact an agent provocateur. . . . It is a weakness of [the] book that the important distinction between the informant and the undercover agent is not always clear." David Burnham
N Y Times Bk R p6 Jl 16 '72 1600w

CHEW, ALLEN F. The white death: the epic of the Soviet-Finnish winter war. 313p $12.50 Mich. state univ. press

947.1 Russo-Finnish War, 1939-1940. Finland—History
SBN 87013-167-2 LC 76-169986

This account of the "105-day war between Finland and the Soviet Union in the winter of 1939-1940 . . . [describes the] Finnish victories at Toivajärvi, Suomussalmi, and other battlefields . . . [and discusses also] the political and social aspects of the conflict." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"[This] is a thoughtful, carefully researched, and well written piece of history with some emphasis on the Finnish side. Chew has sought to get behind the myth that one Finnish soldier equaled 10 Russians; the evidence shows that the myth is largely true. . . . The diplomatic aspect of the war is not neglected and the author adds a good epilogue on the reasons why Finland went to war in 1941. One cannot help feeling, as the author does, a great deal of admiration for the Finns. Throughout, the work is well illustrated by maps and the notes and bibliography are extensive. The absence of an index, surprising in a scholarly work, detracts from its usefulness. Highly recommended."

Choice 9:422 My '72 240w

"[Chew's] style is vigorous, concise, and free of pedantry, inviting the attention of the non-professional reader. The principal drawback, to a large degree unavoidable, is a plethora of unintelligible Finnish place names scattered about an unfamiliar geography; and it is only partly compensated for by the inclusion of better than average maps. The narrative is copiously documented. . . . This book is recommended." E. G. Hamann
Library J 97:1320 Ap 1 '72 130w

CHICAGO. Art Institute. The Art Institute of Chicago; with a foreword by Charles Curren Cunningham. 288p il col il $7.50 Abrams

708
ISBN 0-8109-0018-1 LC 72-125779

"About 200 works from [the Art Institute's] collections of Western, Oriental, and primitive art, including many . . . prints and drawings, are here reproduced and commented on by [the] associate director of the Institute. Nearly 100 additional works are reproduced without comment. The introduction is a brief history of the Institute and its collections." (Library J)

"Recommended for art collections and public libraries." M. E. Landgren
Library J 96:2484 Ag '71 130w

"[The author] pays tribute to the many local collectors and benefactors, former trustees, directors and curators who, during the past century, have contributed wealth, taste and treasures to build up the museum's collections to their present level of excellence. . . . He singles out for special praise 'a major group of old Flemish pictures and old Italian paintings', as well as, of course the famous nineteenth-century French collection. . . . [He] might have added the small but memorable group of major Spanish paintings—Greco, Velázquez and Goya particularly—and an impressive twentieth-century European collection. This last, which already includes several masterpieces, is in fact rather brushed aside by Mr. Maxon, who thereby does the museum an injustice. But he has not forgotten the importance of the Chinese and Japanese collections, nor of the incredibly rich collections of the Print Room. . . . The volume contains 279 illustrations, 33 of them being in colour. Sadly those in black-and-white are blurred; sometimes the sharpness of the colour plates jars the eye."

TLS p934 Ag 6 '71 320w

CHICHESTER, SIR FRANCIS. The romantic challenge. 194p il maps $7.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

910.4 Gipsy Moth V (Ketch). Sailing. Voyages and travels
LC 75-187141

"In 1971 the author sailed alone in a ketch between Portuguese Guinea and Nicaragua. His goal was to average 200 miles a day. Though he fell slightly short of that, one quarter of the 4,000 mile voyage was sailed at a speed faster than the goal. Here are chronicled his thoughts and experiences as well as other sailing runs in the Atlantic in 1970 and 1971 aboard the Gipsy Moth V." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by R. B. Wathen
Best Sell 32:76 My 15 '72 300w

"As always, one has to admire Chichester's fortitude, his expertise as a navigator, and his physical fitness. . . . His book is sometimes rather too full of sums and figures about distances run, latitude and longitude, and point-to-point fixes; but it never meanders into the incoherent ramblings of the badly sea-struck romantic. Sir Francis, the 'Old Wolf of the Sea' as the Nicaraguan press called him, is canny enough to keep his tale moving along in brisk fashion. Nevertheless the basic problem about writing any book about an ocean voyage is simply that there is an awful lot of ocean, a tiny amount of boat, and very little else except the author's thoughts to keep the reader company. . . . For this reason it is easier to enjoy 'The Romantic Challenge' if one is either a sailing man oneself or a continuing fan of Sir Francis Chichester." Timothy Severin
Book World p4 Ap 2 '72 700w

Reviewed by E. B. Hayward
Library J 97:1435 Ap 15 '72 100w

CHICHESTER, SIR FRANCIS—Continued

"As one reads . . . admiration for [the] writer's bravery gives way to irritation that [he] should be risking [his life] to such little purpose. . . . [The book is.] however futile the endeavour, extremely enjoyable and [a] warm and agreeable personality emerges. . . . Sir Francis is found swigging 'Champers', blocking a leak with his pants, and having nightmares about, of all people, Dorothy Parker." Arthur Marshall
New Statesman 82:751 N 26 '71 210w

CHIGOUNIS, EVANS. Secret lives. 80p $4.75; pa $2.45 Wesleyan univ. press

811
ISBN 0-8195-2060-8; 0-8195-1060-2 (pa)
LC 74-185195

A collection of poems.

"The reader is constantly reminded of William Carlos Williams in the poetry of Chigounis; and this is right, for the author of Secret lives was a friend and admirer of Williams, and is frank to acknowledge the influence of the older poet. There is no attempt to copy Williams, but the same precise images, the constant experiment with form and format, and the rich and lusty exuberance of Williams are to be found in the poetry of Chigounis. Will fascinate almost all lovers of contemporary poetry and should be on all library shelves."

Choice 9:127 N '72 90w

"Chigounis' collection is uneven. The first section, 'South,' is composed of poems about South America. The style is projective, the method surreal and allusive. There is too much of the 'this of that' syndrome for my taste; 'shirrtails of the sky,' 'novel of the world,' 'dreams of sleep,' and so on. The second part, 'Other Directions,' is more satisfying. The poems are shorter and tighter for the most part; the best ones are mysterious rather than obscure." Sanford Dorbin

Library J 97:1019 Mr 15 '72 50w

CHILCOTE, RONALD H., ed. Revolution and structural change in Latin America, 2v; a bibliography on ideology, development, and the radical Left (1930-1965). (Bibl. ser. 40) 2v $35 Stanford univ. Hoover inst. on war, revolution & peace

016 Latin America—Bibliography
LC 68-28100

The author "has assembled 10,005 citations dealing with political change in Latin America. The two-volume work is divided into sections covering books and pamphlets, articles and periodicals for each of the Latin American countries." (Choice) Author index. Periodical index. Subject index.

"Undoubtedly the most comprehensive bibliography available covering Latin American political topics. . . . Unfortunately, the collection ends in 1965 and so such interesting developments as the emergence of leftist military governments in Peru and Bolivia are not considered. An introduction which attempts to provide a theoretical framework for the collection is weak and can be safely disregarded. Nevertheless, the wealth of citations contained in these volumes will be of great value to libraries and scholars interested in the area."

Choice 8:1159 N '71 130w

"While emphasis is placed on the traditional and emerging leftist political forces, nationalism, development, and modernization are other topics of importance. Specialists . . . may have to weed out much material too general for a specialized bibliography of this nature. Its value, however, is unquestionable, and it will serve well as a reference tool, for the information contained is easily accessible. . . . [Some entries are] accompanied by brief annotations. . . . Sections by country are introduced by an informative note, and sources for obtaining material are cited." A. D. Trejo
Library J 96:2620 S 1 '71 150w

CHILDERS, THOMAS, jr. auth. Information service in public libraries: two studies. See Crowley, T.

CHILDREN'S rights; toward the liberation of the child [by] Paul Adams [and others] introd. by Paul Goodman. 248p $6.95 Praeger 301.43 Child study
LC 79-163913

"The theme of this book is that the rights of children are being violated, with society the loser. . . . Lella Berg tells about some schools and teachers who have tried to give children their rights. . . . Paul Adams stresses the importance of the home in molding character; Robert Ollendorff discusses adolescence; A. S. Neill reiterates his 'Summerhill' views; Nan Berger explains the law as it applies to the child; and Michael Duane, formerly head of Rislinghill school in London, points out some of the faults of the state system of education." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The six authors, from the fields of medicine, psychiatry, education, and law, subscribe to the ideas of Wilhelm Reich that the child must have freedom and must learn to use that freedom. . . . Since five of the six authors are British, most of the illustrations concern British schools; but they are equally pertinent to American education. This is a book which should be consulted in connection with the Amish case coming up before the Supreme Court, as it is a powerful argument against compulsory education." Marian Wozencraft
Library J 96:2766 S 15 '71 210w

"Touched here and there with interesting historical information and with some genuine common sense, the essays in this book as a whole fail to cast any light or even a shadow on the problems a teacher must face today when he walks into a classroom—an event not unlike walking the plank or treading the last mile. What is written here about the nature of childhood is mostly the product of dime-a-dozen books on psychology, religion, mental health, self-improvement, Zen, and that current chatter among educators that owes its burdensome murkiness to misunderstood Freud and Jung. . . . [This book] seldom really thinks very hard and truthfully about children; one hears rather the superior, arrogant voices of adults. It is . . . hopelessly bourgeois for all its rhetoric of liberation." Ned O'Gorman
Sat R 54:27 O 23 '71 2800w

"The title of this book is both contentious and trendy, but even the best essays within its covers have a curiously déjà vu quality. . . . The final effect, however, of Children's Rights is touchingly in accordance with common sense."

TLS p731 Je 25 '71 600w

CHILDRESS, ALICE, ed. Black scenes. 154p $3.95; pa $1.75 Doubleday 812 Negro drama
LC 70-150881

"A collection of scenes from plays about blacks by blacks, all of them American writers. . . . [The editor], herself a black actress and playwright, has gathered the scenes because, she says, there is a lack of such material for use in auditions and classrooms. The selections are brief, and in each case the editor has tried to pick a dramatic moment in which a crisis is reached or a character revealed." (N Y Times Bk R) Biobibliographies. Bibliography.

"The quality of the writing varies from the moving passages in [Lorraine Hansberry's] A Raisin in the Sun and the hilarious dialogue in Day of Absence [by Douglas Turner Ward] to the preachiness of Land Beyond the River [by Loftin Mitchell] and the dullness of The Daubers [by Theodore Ward]. Doubtless some scenes lose their point out of context; others are just unfortunate selections, considering the book's purpose. Many other black plays could have been used to advantage. . . . However, most libraries with performance-oriented theater clientele will want this, even though all the better plays should already be in these collections in their entirety." R. M. Buck
Library J 96:3155 O 1 '71 150w

Reviewed by Vicki Merrill
Library J 96:3907 N 15 '71 130w [YA]

"The speeches are a little strong on exposition and the characters often seem flat, more observation than creation. But these are the faults of much conventional play writing, black and white. At their best . . . the scenes have great vitality. As for the less vibrant offerings, student actors might enjoy trying to inspirit them through performance." Gerald Weales
N Y Times Bk R p8 Je 12 '72 210w

CHILDRESS, JAMES F. Civil disobedience and political obligation: a study in Christian social ethics. (Yale pub. in religion, 16) 250p $7.95 Yale univ. press

172 Government, Resistance to. Political ethics

ISBN 0-300-01493-7 LC 75-158137

The first chapter offers an "examination of the meaning of civil disobedience. The second distinguishes two major foundations for political obligation within the Christian tradition. Chapter three develops Childress' own theory of political obligation . . . [which] creates a prima facie obligation to obey positive law. Chapter four searches for principles and situations in which the prima facie duty to obey is outweighed by the right (and at times the duty) to disobey." (America)

"Childress' essay combines creative insight, diligent research and careful reasoning in a most fortunate manner. . . . [His] purpose in writing is to 'aid in the construction of a framework for the discussion and justification of civil disobedience—a framework which . . . is especially applicable to a relatively just constitutional democracy.' He implements his purpose in four closely reasoned chapters. . . . Chapter [four] is handled with considerable political sophistication. . . . Despite [some] minor deficiencies, Childress' book is a serious and intelligent effort to elevate the level of public discourse on a crucial contemporary issue. It is surely required reading for citizens concerned with questions of law and conscience." J. A. Rohr

America 126:518 My 13 '72 750w

"[This book] is complex and subtle; it will permit neither law-and-order folk nor recklessly disobedient types to have the field to themselves."

Christian Century 89:314 Mr 15 '72 30w

Reviewed by G. J. Schochet

Library J 97:2609 Ag '72 200w

"Since this is a study in Christian social ethics, Dr Childress pays particular attention to Protestant theories of the state and philosophical anthropology as well as to the contrast between natural law and legal positivism. He rebuts the charge that the appeal to natural law in support of illegal acts inevitably leads to anarchy and he equally rejects the contention that legal positivism necessarily provides a blanket justification for the status quo. . . . [The author] is very thoughtful but, as in all ethical discourse, one only has to weight the relevant considerations differently to justify almost anything one wishes to justify."

TLS p580 My 19 '72 700w

CHILDS, DAVID. Germany since 1918. 208p 6.95 Harper

943.08 Germany—Politics and government—

20th century

ISBN 0-06-010759-6 LC 77-149624

In this "study of the last fifty years of German history . . . chapters cover Versailles and the making of the Weimar Republic—its progress from crisis to stability and its subsequent collapse; Hitler's rise to power and his . . . persecution of the Jews; the Second World War; the postwar occupation and the creation of the two republics; Adenauer's Chancellorship and the German 'economic miracle'; Ulbricht's Germany and its relations with East and West. The book concludes with two chapters on East and West Germany in the sixties and . . . assesses the future of the country." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. General index. Index of persons.

"[Childs] only sketchily reviews Germany from 1918-45, devoting more space to Germany since 1945, an era that he is more familiar with (he is the author of the substantial work, East Germany [IBRD 1970]. . . . Though the book does not add anything to our knowledge of contemporary Germany, it treats the familiar material in an acceptable introductory fashion."

Choice 8:1632 F '72 80w

"[This book] refreshingly avoids the opportunities for platitudes and mediocrity which the writing of an introductory survey presents." Geoffrey Barraclough

N Y Rev of Books 19:32 N 2 '72 600w

"[This book] covers its ground competently though not very profoundly. The first five chapters are a straight narrative of events up to 1945, the remaining five hover rather more uneasily between chronology and detailed political analysis. There are, however, two good chapters on East Germany. . . . The style is a little pompous."

TLS p1169 O 1 '71 250w

CHILTON, C. W. Diogenes of Oenoanda: the fragments; a tr. and commentary by C. W. Chilton. 141p $11 Oxford

187

ISBN 0-19-713416-5 LC 70-885582

This is "a companion volume to this author's edition of the Greek text for Teubner (Diogenis Oenoandensis fragmenta, Leipzig, 1967). . . . [It is a] translation into English of a body of sources for Epicurean philosophy. . . . [The text itself is] an inscription set up about 200 A.D., in a public colonnade in a small city of Asia Minor, by one Flavianus Diogenes, out of evangelistic impulse. It contains quotations from Epicurus not otherwise known." (Choice)

"[This edition contains] a sensible and careful commentary. . . . Recommended for any collection that already contains the Greek text, and (given the sketchy quality of Epicurean sources in Greek) for any collection likely to be used by philosophers or historians of philosophy."

Choice 9:656 J1/Ag '72 120w

"Unfortunately . . . [Chilton's] edition and commentary were composed before M. F. Smith's discovery and publication of new fragments of the monumental inscription. . . . In his handling of the fragments Chilton is cautious and thorough. He makes good use of earlier studies, taking from them the readings and interpretations that seem most convincing. His own new readings are not numerous, for a work of this kind, and they are always well considered. The translation is remarkably clear. Wherever possible, continuity of thought is achieved by supplying (within parentheses) plausible expansions and transitions. The volume does not contain a systematic account of Diogenes' language, style or thought. There are, however, many scattered remarks on such matters in the commentary, with special attention to characteristically Epicurean terms and concepts. Diogenes' references to non-Epicurean doctrines are also examined in some detail." Phillip De Lacy

Class World 66:110 O '72 400w

CHILTON, JOHN, Jr. auth. Louis: the Louis Armstrong story, 1900-1971. See Jones, M.

CHILTON, JOHN. Who's who of jazz: Storyville to Swing Street; foreword by Johnny Simmen. 419p il $7.50 Chilton bks.

920 Musicians, American. Jazz music

ISBN 0-8019-5705-2 LC 72-188159

This book covers "the essential biographies of over 1,000 jazz men born before 1920. . . . It is not an evaluation of their work, but an attempt at objective chronicling of their major activities." (Choice) Bibliography.

"This startling and essential book is clearly the most intensive effort of scholarship in its line to date. . . . [Its] detail and authentication leave few possibilities for error. . . . At the astonishingly low price of $7.50 this book should be in every library and on the shelf of everyone who regards himself as a serious follower of jazz. Enthusiastically recommended."

Choice 9:953 O '72 100w

"The multitudinous, tight-packed facts, the almost obsessively comprehensive cross-referencing, above all, the macabre and quirky asides—all these ensure this [book] an important position in jazz literature. But there are shortcomings. The exclusion of musicians born after 1920 is certainly justified for Mr. Chilton says that there is another volume to come. Nevertheless the omission of such figures born before 1920 as Kenny Clarke and Dizzy Gillespie, on the grounds that 'most of their commercial successes occurred after the demise of "Swing Street"', is questionable. . . . Gillespie, who is in fact mentioned in a number of entries, is an important transitional figure in late 1930s swing. The corrections of jumbled or invented biographies are weakened by the absence of specific source notes. The introduction contains acknowledgments to informants and periodicals, but page references need not have been cumbersome and would have strengthened Mr. Chilton's claims to authenticity."

CHILTON, JOHN—Continued

 TLS p287 Mr 12 '71 650w

CHING, FRANK, ed. The New York Times report from Red China. See The New York Times

CHIPPERFIELD, MARY. Lions on the lawn. 176p il $5.95 Morrow 599 Lions. Lions of Longleat
 LC 77-151919

"Having a natural affinity with animals, the author and her family—members of Britain's celebrated Chipperfield circus—were inspired to create in England a wild animal sanctuary, the first of its kind outside of Africa. The story of their pioneering efforts [is told here]." (Horn Bk)

"Highly entertaining. . . Now internationally famous, the 'Lions of Longleat' reserve [on the estate of the Marquess of Bath] has expanded to include giraffes, zebras, hippos, sea lions, chimps, tigers, and other wild animals." M. S. Cosgrave

Horn Bk 48:392 Ag '72 190w

"What initially suggests an episode out of Evelyn Waugh is soon overshadowed by the endearing self-portrait Mary sketches. Nothing daunts her. She loves every moment of her crowded day, whether she is cleaning out the stable on a spring morning; scolding Hereward, the 20-foot python, for trying to slither into bed with her (then stuffing him back in his sleeping bag for the night); . . . [or] going tobogganing with the lion that adopts her as a mother. . . . Mary Chipperfield is one of the world's most engaging animal trainers and show personalities, a kind of Julia Child of the zoo." Paul Showers

N Y Times Bk R p54 O 31 '71 750w

"[This book] is witty and permeated with love for the animals, many of which the author raises in her home along with her children. Because the project met opposition from the public and press at first, this account has a dramatic tension few animal stories achieve." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 54:62 N 13 '71 100w [YA]

CHIRICO, GIORGIO DE. See De Chirico, G.

CHOATE, JUDITH. The gift-giver's cookbook. See Green, J.

CHOMSKY, NOAM. Problems of knowledge and freedom: the Russell lectures. 111p $4.95 Pantheon bks.

121 Language and languages—Philosophy. Knowledge, Theory of. World politics
 ISBN 0-394-47260-8 LC 76-162557

In the first of these two pieces, Chomsky considers Bertrand Russell's book, Human Knowledge (BRD 1948), "and discusses how, through a study of language and perhaps other domains of human intelligence, one might develop what he says further. This leads . . . into an introduction to Chomsky's own linguistic thought. The second lecture takes off from Russell's discussion of social conditions that would permit the greater freedom he felt to be essential to human nature. This in turn leads Professor Chomsky into an outline of his own political views." (Publisher's note) The material in this book appeared in slightly different form in the Cambridge Review, in England, in 1971.

"Both the linguist who is interested in further explications of Chomsky's theory of language and the political analyst who is looking for new formulations in his analysis of American foreign policy will be disappointed with this book. . . . Most of what Chomsky says here about language and politics, he has published elsewhere before this—and at greater length. But the book is significant for other reasons: first of all, it marks the first time Chomsky has joined his linguistic and political writings under one cover; second, it attempts to outline the intellectual progression that links the theoretical linguistic insights of the MIT academic with the radical political stance he has taken in response to the United States' involvement in Southeast Asia during the past decade. . . . The book, although it is aimed at a non-technical audience, is not a good introduction to Chomsky's general linguistic theory. . . . His goal [here] is to highlight principles of human knowledge and indicate the priority of these principles in the reconstruction of a society." K. J. Gavin

America 125:522 D 11 '71 800w

Choice 9:378 My '72 170w

"Chomsky is as well known for his opposition to the Vietnam War as he is for his linguistic theories. In brief compass and with a minimum of distracting polemic, he has presented excellent summaries of both positions in these lectures. . . . [The] overwhelming value of this book is the presentation of [his linguistic theories] . . . in a form that will be intelligible to the nonspecialist." G. J. Schochet

Library J 96:3762 N 15 '71 180w

Reviewed by George Steiner

N Y Times Bk R p25 Ja 9 '72 1000w

TLS p359 Mr 31 '72 1000w

CHOPRA, PRAN, ed. The challenge of Bangladesh; a special debate. 159p $5 Humanities press

954.9 East Pakistan—Politics and government. Bangladesh
 LC 74-30094

"This collection of papers focuses attention on the diverse aspects of the East Bengali movement, such as India's stake in it, history of recent politics, the military conflict, the involvement of the Big Powers, effect on West Pakistan, and the basic nature of the conflict." (Library J)

"The general thesis of the collection is that independence for East Pakistan is inevitable. . . . The book is a very significant contribution to our understanding of contemporary events in East Pakistan and their effect on Indo-Pakistan relations. The essays are for the most part carefully organized, succinct, lucid, well written examinations of the problem. The appendix contains a valuable concluding article by three Americans, all Harvard University economists."

Choice 8:1499 Ja '72 100w

"The essays are uneven in their reach and quality; some of them are random notes on a large subject while others display considerable insight and acumen. As the debate was held in India, Indian viewpoints very naturally predominate. But the volume is very timely and will be found useful as much by the specialist as by the general reader both for what it says and for what it fails in explicating fully." B. G. Gokhale

Library J 97:669 F 15 '72 140w

CHORON, JACQUES. Suicide. 182p $7.95 Scribner

364.15 Suicide
 ISBN 0-684-12577-3 LC 75-162757

This study of the "phenomenon of suicide encompasses the contributions of anthropology, psychology, psychiatry, and sociology. It deals on the one hand with the problem of suicide—its motives and causes as well as its prevention—and on the other hand with suicide as a problem—that is, the issue of whether suicide can ever be justified, and if so, on what grounds. In the latter connection . . . [there is] a survey of the views on suicide of leading philosophers from antiquity to modern times and a discussion of suicide and the meaning of life." (Publisher's note) Index.

"This is both a stimulating and soberly informative study. Within his brief survey, Chorón manages both an interesting history and philosophical discussion in crisp, lucid prose. Though not a 'handbook' of prevention [Chorón concludes] that, though prevention should be our prime goal, we should not impose undue restraints on those totally incapable of accepting their 'unwanted existence.' Neo-stoics may find this consoling; theists, seeing life as passage to a richer existence, will find it profoundly disturbing. But both will gain fresh perspectives on the darkest tragedy of the human condition." C. J. Huelbeck

America 126:327 Mr 25 '72 380w

"Mr. Chorón never explains suicide except on the level where no explanation is needed, but he offers a great deal of information about how the act has been viewed in various cultures and the theories concerning it evolved by assorted schools of philosophy and psychiatry. A kind of intellectual history of the problem, and some of it quite surprising." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:129 Ap '72 60w

"[This] is a thoughtful discourse, philosophically alert and humane in outlook."
Christian Century 89:259 Mr 1 '72 30w
Harper 244:102 Je '72 1750w

"Although all facets of the topic are touched upon, the author has chosen to devote about half the book to tracing attitudes from biblical days to the present. . . . He presents only the high points of the many new concepts and approaches to the scientific study of suicide and, in a series of extremely brief chapters, surveys suicide statistics, choice of methods, causes, definitions, and other miscellaneous topics. The brevity of these sections occasionally results in a lack of precision and in incomplete descriptions of such innovative procedures as the 'psychological autopsy.' The book does not explore issues in depth; it does provide a readable introduction to the subject." Harold Wilensky

Library J 97:75 Ja 1 '72 120w

Reviewed by J. D. O'Hara
New Repub 166:29 Ap 22 '72 1050w

Reviewed by W. H. Gass
N Y Rev of Books 18:3 My 18 '72 1100w

Reviewed by Timothy Foote
Time 99:85 Je 12 '72 300w

CHRISTENSON, CORNELIA V. Kinsey: ■ biography. 241p $6.95 Ind. univ. press
B or 92 Kinsey, Alfred Charles. Sex (Psychology). Sex
ISBN 0-253-14625-9 LC 72-154897

The "life story of the scientist who pioneered a revolution by applying some of the methods of insect taxonomy to his findings about the sexual behavior of men and women. [The author is] now a trustee of the Institute for Sex Research at Indiana University." (Library J) Five nontechnical papers written by Dr. Kinsey are included. Publications of Alfred C. Kinsey. Index.

Reviewed by P. A. Robinson
Atlantic 229:99 My '72 800w

"Mrs. Christenson's life is gentle, witty, and full of quotations—it also gives a little the impression of being written with one hand in a sling; that, during the lifetime of Kinsey relatives and colleagues, could hardly be otherwise. [The book] gives no key to the demonic drive behind the undertaking. Nobody goes into sex research, except out of private motives, any more than they go into any other research. Yet Kinsey was neither a militant permissive nor a well-camouflaged swinger." Alex Comfort

Book World p4 O 3 '71 1250w

"[The author of this] warm and sometimes moving [biography] . . . has documented her study meticulously and has gone far back into Kinsey's life and consulted teachers, friends, and associates. Although not a professional writer, she brings to her biography insights into the man whom she obviously observed with keen sympathy during her years as his student and later as a subject of his interviews, a faculty wife, and a mother. . . . If today Kinsey's revolution seems a mild one, he continues to loom as an important scientist in the great tradition that includes Galileo and Pasteur. This biography . . . preceded by Kinsey's 1930 Phi Beta Kappa address, Individuals, is also a tribute that should fill out the record of a remarkable academic career." Allan Angoff

Library J 96:2627 S 1 '71 250w

CHRISTIE, AGATHA. Nemesis. 271p $6.95 Dodd
ISBN 0-396-06423-X LC 72-173454

The elderly Miss Jane Marple goes on "Tour No. 37 of the Famous Houses and Gardens of Great Britain, a gift left her in the will of Mr. Rafael, the industrialist. . . . What Mr. Rafael expects her to find, she is not told, but since he has used the word Nemesis, she is sure the project is connected with crime in some way and that she must either correct an injustice or avenge an evil." (Library J)

"[This] may be slow-paced, but the old charm is there and a good deal of the old magic in plotting, too"

Best Sell 31:431 D 15 '71 120w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant
Library J 96:3642 N 1 '71 60w

Reviewed by Virginia Carpio
Library J 97:790 F 15 '72 160w [YA]

Reviewed by Newgate Callendar
N Y Times Bk R p34 F 13 '72 220w

"Miss Christie's idea is intriguing, but the plot ambles so slowly and all involved are so talky that the book can safely be recommended only to insomniacs."
Sat R 54:31 D 25 '71 70w

"Pleasant to meet Miss Marple again, an old, old lady now, of course, and a rather garrulous old, old lady, apt to repeat herself, but still capable, at a dead man's behest, of taking what looks like a cultural but turns out to be a mystery coach tour, and on it to discover what the dead benefactor hoped she would, knowing that a scent for evil was still, in the evening of her days, her peculiar gift."

TLS p1427 N 12 '71 80w

CHRISTO. Christo; text by David Bourdon.
321p il col il $35 Abrams

730

ISBN 0-8109-0051-3 LC 70-165543

This work portrays the artist's "20th-Century preoccupation with industrial packaging from small bottles to a 15-mile section of the Australian seacoast (!) in fabric and rope. . . . [It also contains] illustrations of Christo's work created during the last decade and Bourdon's . . . discussion of Christo's oeuvre." (Library J)

"To some Christo's work may suggest the mystery of the wrapped object, connote preservation or worth, or elicit curiosity; to others the objects may seem to be merely badly wrapped packages waiting for the moving van. It's ugly, true, but is it art? The book itself is splendid. . . . There is no denying the magnificence of the color photographs of the wrapped coast and one's emotional reaction thereto, but surely it is art imitating nature. Recommended for wealthy, avant-garde collections only." R. L. Enequist

Library J 97:2379 J1 '72 130w

"This is a valuable and instructive book. . . . Christo's epic ambition—and use of scale—infuses both text and illustration." Douglas Davis
Newsweek 80:110A D 11 '72 40w

"The book is almost a foot square. ■ handsome photographic retrospective of [Christo's] work with about 320 illustrations, a fourth of them in color. . . . Christo will not delight everyone, but there is a case to be made for his having provided us with a new, playful, untrammelled view of technology, at once understanding and ironic, to help heal a world where the power to build seems so closely linked to cupidity, spoliation or terror." Philip Morrison

Sci Am 226:133 Je '72 950w

CHRISTOPHER, JOHN. Beyond the burning lands. 170p $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

LC 78-152288

This second volume of the science fiction trilogy follows The Prince in Waiting, BRD 1971. Like the first it is set in England's distant future. It finds Luke, the Prince in Waiting, hiding in the High Seers' Sanctuary at Stonehenge while his half-brother Peter assumes the throne of Winchester. "Bored and restless, [Luke] seizes a chance to explore beyond the smoldering volcanic plain to the north, in search of the fabled city of Klan Gothlen. The quest leads Luke into unimaginable dangers and unexpected delights, but the gravest peril he has yet faced awaits him at home [where] murder disguised as tragic accident, . . . treachery and bloodthirsty revenge—all threaten him." (Publisher's note) "Grades six to nine." (Library J)

"[This] book is—unfortunately—an interim book. . . . Through Luke's experiences the seeds for a future book are planted. [The] clues have all been skillfully intertwined in a vividly depicted adventure story; yet one could wish for a more satisfying conclusion to a book meant to stand on its own. At the end, Luke kills his brother Peter—now half-mad—in single combat, and assumes the throne, thinking 'of the unalterable past—and all my dead.'" S. B. A.

Horn Bk 47:619 D '71 280w

"Although this sequel is slightly inferior to The Prince in Waiting in sustaining interest and in general readability, readers who have begun the trilogy will still be impatient to read it and the forthcoming third volume as well." Elizabeth Haynes

CHRISTOPHER, JOHN—Continued

Library J 96:4188 D 15 '71 270w

"[This volume] makes demands on the memory, and the discreet hints which Mr. Christopher drops are not enough to help those readers who missed the first volume. . . . It is not easy to follow the thought behind this story . . . but there can be no question of [the author's] mastery of his scene or his skill in devising episodes of high adventure."

TLS p767 J1 2 '71 350w

CHRISTOPHER, JOHN. The sword of the spirits. 162p $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

LC 74-176419

In this, the last book of Christopher's trilogy (see preceding entry), when Luke is crowned Prince of Three Cities the "prophecy made by the Spirits years before is at last fulfilled. But the power of the Spirits is a gigantic hoax perpetrated by the Seers to advance their plan for a scientific renaissance. The Seers' deception gave Luke his crown, and deception and intrigue besiege his reign . . . [bringing] chaos to Winchester and disaster to Luke, and . . . [coming] the civilized world to darkness." (Publisher's note) "Grades six to nine." (Library J)

"Comparisons between the tragic legend of Tristram and Iseult and this final book in the trilogy . . . will be inevitable. Indeed, should one be tempted to overlook the similarities, the author has included a Player King, who tells the Tristram legend to Luke's assembled court. . . . More psychologically oriented than the adventure-crammed narratives of the first two books, the last volume of the trilogy ends on a note of bitterness and loss, and misses being either high tragedy or completely satisfying science fiction." S. B. A.

Horn Bk 48:374 Ag '72 230w

"A thought-provoking conclusion. . . . [This] can be read as a fast-paced adventure, but it is also a serious consideration of the meanings of technology, honor, peace, freedom and love." Joanne Nykiel

Library J 97:1613 Ap 15 '72 200w

Reviewed by Catherine Storr

New Statesman 83:759 Je 2 '72 30w

"It is at last possible not only to see the total achievement of this 'Prince-in-Waiting' triple-novel but also to consider the success of the technique. As for the latter, it is not easy to see why [the author] has adopted so awkward and, one would think, economically dubious an expedient. The story would certainly be very long in a single volume, and each part rises to its separate climax; yet the parts are so incomplete as to be unacceptable separately, and many readers may feel that it was hardly worth waiting for the full flowering and withering of this prince."

TLS p480 Ap 28 '72 500w

CHURCHILL, ALLEN. The literary decade. 329p il $9.95 Prentice-Hall

810.9 American literature—History and criticism. Publishers and publishing
ISBN 0-13-537522-3 LC 73-152312

The author discusses American writers, critics and publishers of the 1920's. Bibliography. Index of authors and publishers.

"[This] is more a popular history than a scholarly one, and its author is seldom distracted by questions of critical discrimination as he breezily recounts what happened year by year on Publisher's Row. Fortunately, the book is quite thoroughly (if carelessly) indexed, and until it is replaced by a more professionally researched book on the period, it should remain useful as virtually the only literary history of the American twenties with pretensions towards completeness. It must be used cautiously, however, for it is marred by errors and misleading attributions." Maurice Beebe

Am Lit 44:519 N '72 1100w

"[The book has] a remarkable listing of titles of individual works. (For the reader who wants to know something about Elinor Wylie, for example, there are 14 entries given.) Disappointingly, however, these references are of interest only for . . . information which is already well known. But the book is well written and a delight to read, especially to those who remember the Jazz Age or those who are interested in it historically. A good but not definitive bibliography is also given. Churchill has been associated with the publishing business most of his life as editor, publisher, and writer. He is well qualified to write on this subject and does so with enthusiasm."

Choice 9:643 J1/Ag '72 130w

"[Mr. Churchill's] approach to the decade is to recount it in terms of personalities. The result is a series of rather gossipy profiles, which have obviously been researched from other biographers. Added to these are plots of the major novels of the time. . . . If Churchill were a more skilled writer, he might have pulled it off. . . . More questionable than the quality of the writing, however, are the omissions. Eugene O'Neill is barely mentioned. . . . If you can stand all those clichés, you'll be rewarded with a quick trot to some of the leading literary personalities of the Twenties." Alden Whitman

Sat R 54:56 O 30 '71 430w

CHURCHMAN, C. WEST. The design of inquiring systems: basic concepts of systems and organization. 288p $10 Basic bks.

003 Science—Philosophy. Systems analysis
SBN 465-01608-1 LC 72-174810

Can "we design our future? But what kind of future system shall we design? And what limits does . . . modern science impose on the kind of system we actually can design? . . . [In his] discussion of the basic philosophical aspects of the systems approach, Professor Churchman looks at some of the great philosophical systems of the past, from Leibnitz through Singer, from the perspective and in the language of modern systems analysis, and shows . . . the strengths and weaknesses of the systems approach." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"As used here, 'system' means a social system including such entities as government and corporations, yet including an inquiring system as small as a computer. Recommended reading for philosophers—especially philosophers of science—computer system analysts, librarians, educators, and scientists (physical, biological, and social), as well as interdisciplinarians of whatever breed. Requires careful and thoughtful reading."

Choice 9:1147 N '72 120w

"Churchman raises fundamental questions about science as an inquiry system and treats the difficult problems of how and by whom the products of science are to be evaluated. After an analysis of several inquiry systems important in the history of philosophy, he considers aspects of the interaction between science and society. He discusses what may be one of the central issues facing industrial civilization: how to involve the masses in the process of designing and creating their environment. . . . [Churchman claims] his book 'could be read as a philosophy of organizational theory, or of architectural or engineering design, or of operations research, or of planning.' It can also be read as a perceptive approach to the tough social and political questions of scientific technology. A welcome contribution." Harold Fruchtbau

Library J 97:878 Mr 1 '72 150w

"Professor Churchman is a philosopher of science who is no stranger to mathematics, to computation or [to] . . . physics. In [this book] where no graph or diagram breaks into the type and only a few sentences of statistical summary enter, he is all philosopher. His medium is the warmly but carefully written word, his message a kind of 'endless approximation' to the explanation of the concepts that form the title. . . . The bulk of the volume is an analysis of gaining knowledge, cast in the form of a classification of systems, in which the categories used are modeled on the epistemological issues raised by five philosophers, four of them classical. . . . [The book is a] yeasty mix of computers and theology and decision theory." Philip Morrison

Sci Am 226:128 My '72 950w

CHUTE, B. J. The story of a small life. 208p $6.95 Dutton

SBN 0-525-21108-4 LC 70-165597

The narrator of this novel, "Richard Harris, would-be social worker, tells the story of Mig and his girl friend, Anna, and of their struggle for survival in New York. Mig, 17, is poor but has big dreams, and Anna, who only wants to be with Mig always, tries to make him happy. In spite of his high hopes, Mig will never break out of his neighborhood and is doomed to fail in life." (Library J)

Reviewed by Sister M. Marguerite
Best Sell 31:466 Ja 15 '72 200w

"[This] is really the story of two small lives. The first is Mig's, a tough 17-year-old street kid. Mig can hardly read. . . . [The other small life] is that of Richard Harris. Harris works for a Foundation—though precisely what he does, beyond slipping a little money to Mig—is unclear. The bars of Mig's prison are external; a grim poverty, no education, the life of the street. But Harris' prison is mental. He seems incapable of actually doing anything. B. J. Chute divides her novel into a third person narrative about the events of Mig's life and the first person diaries of Richard Harris full of doubt and guilt. Both Harris' mind and Mig's slum are true prisons; but the gritty world of the ghetto, filtered through Harris' brittle wit, never quite comes to life. Nonetheless, the author knows how to tell a good story." Charles Horman

Christian Science Monitor p9 D 23 '71 260w

"The characters of Mig and Anna are exceptionally well drawn and their reactions ring true. . . . The book is interesting, even compelling, and moves at a good pace. However, half the novel concerns Harris and his desire to become a writer. The pseudophilosophizing and posturing spoil the story line and after a while, the book, for large fiction collections." L. E. Newman

Library J 96:3344 O 15 '71 110w

"Miss Chute (as readers of 'Greenwillow' [BRD 1956] will attest) is a far better writer than her dreamy [novel] . . . would indicate." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p26 F 20 '72 160w

CICHY, BODO. Great modern paintings. 242p il col il $25 Putnam

759.06 Paintings. Painters
LC 70-116154

The author is concerned with "the evolution and nature of modern painting in search of the underlying psychological forces that find expression in it. . . . He analyzes the departure of artists from accepted styles of painting, as described by 'The Academy,' for the freedom of expressing themselves as they best felt about form, color, movement, and texture. . . . [Cichy then makes] a study of plates illustrating the work of ninety-six artists, from Renoir, Pissarro, Degas, and Manet to Pollack, Hartung, De Kooning, and Chagall. Each artist is given a brief biography, and the color plate is discussed in relation to the painter's characteristics or environment." (Best Sell)

"[This book is] significant . . . not only for students of Art History, but for anyone who has a great appreciation of painting and the desire to acquaint himself with the background of the present-day works. . . . In addition to one superbly reproduced color plate for each artist, there are two small monochromes to show other examples of his work. It is this collection of excellent reproductions and critical biographies which gives the reader an opportunity further to investigate the evolution—for better or for worse—of expressive art forms in the twentieth century." Sister Babette Opperman

Best Sell 31:339 N 1 '71 330w

"A handsomely produced book . . . destined for the coffee table and not for the scholar's desk. . . . Most of the paintings reproduced are pre-1950, and those of well-known masters invariably do not represent their best. The text is elementary and is geared to the hopelessly random spread of plates. The whole appeared to be leveled at the novice who wants a one-volume survey which will brief him on the highlights."

Choice 8:1002 O '71 150w

CIKOVSKY, NICOLAI. George Inness. [by] Nicolai Cikovsky, Jr. 159p pl col pl $15 Praeger

759.13 Inness, George
LC 79-117471

The author "traces Inness's development through the various stages of his career. . . . [Included also is a] discussion of Inness's religious beliefs, particularly those relating to the Swedenborgian church, and their possible connection with the . . . spiritual connotations of his landscapes. The author traces the critical reaction in the nineteenth century to Inness's works, in order to delineate the differences between the art of Inness and that of his contemporaries." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This is a] well-illustrated and well-documented critical [biography] . . . that will serve the general reader, the student, and the specialist. . . . [It is] recommended for art collections and public libraries." M. E. Landgren

Library J 96:2483 Ag '71 20w

"Cikovsky's essay . . . is not quite free from the labored air of a dissertation." Rackstraw Downes

N Y Times Bk R p77 D 5 '71 40w

CINOTTI, MIA, comp. The complete paintings of Bosch. See Bosch

CIRINO, ROBERT. Don't blame the people. 339p $8.95 Random house; pa $2.45 Vintage

301.16 Mass media. Public opinion
ISBN 0-394-43162-3; 0-394-71788-0 (pa)
LC 72-2701;72-2261 (pa)

The author "believes that the media in the U.S. have failed to provide a free and open exchange of ideas and that our democracy is being eroded by the media's manipulation of public opinion. . . . [He begins] with a chronicle of issues suppressed or ignored by the media. He documents early cases of concern over hunger, auto safety, smoking, and other problems which were not covered by news media. . . . [He] then discusses types of bias (such as selection of photographs and use of headlines) and illustrates each with examples from the media. . . . He sees the basic problem as a national policy permitting the use of the communications system for profit." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"This is a carefully written book, complete with footnotes; and it is notable because the author is a layman not a journalist. . . . Cirino is convinced that the media's failure to inform the public completely is the cause of many social problems and that people would be more moral and humane if they were fully aware of issues." Lucy Caswell

Library J 97:3135 O 1 '72 340w

"[This book's] flat indictment of the press and the broadcasters seems . . . most persuasive. . . . [Cirino] has assembled his complaint with great industry. . . . [Despite typographical errors, his study] serves as the best direct testimony to the way it is." Murray Kempton

N Y Rev of Books 16:31 Ap 8 '71 900w

The CITIZEN Kane book: Raising Kane, by Pauline Kael; The shooting script, by Herman J. Mankiewicz and Orson Welles; and the cutting continuity of the completed film. (An Atlantic monthly press bk) 440p il $15 Little 791.43 Citizen Kane (Moving picture)

LC 72-149462

This work contains a history and criticism of the film by Miss Kael. "Along with the shooting script, this volume includes the cutting continuity (or transcript) of the finished film, as well as notes by Gary Carey on the differences between the transcript and the shooting script." (Library J) Raising Kane appeared in The New Yorker, Feb. 20 and 27, 1971.

Reviewed by J. J. Quinn

Best Sell 31:343 N 1 '71 550w

"Kael topples the auteur theory of filmmaking: The maximum director and boy-genius Orson Welles needed 'Mank' to write the satirical, near-libelous attack on Kane-Hearst and his cameraman Gregg Toland to devise visual effects beyond his skimmed budget. Welles was a genius at drawing talents together, but he was not omniscient. Great criticism and social history with the raucous, damn-the-consequences character of Citizen Kane itself."

Book World p29 D 5 '71 50w

"There is an appendix of Mankiewicz's film credits and an index to 'Raising Kane' [in this

The CITIZEN Kane book—Continued
volume which] . . . is essential to any film library."

Choice 9:73 Mr '72 120w

Reviewed by Kenneth Tynan
Critic 30:78 My '72 1600w

"[Raising Kane] is probably the best thing Kael has written, a mixture of journalism, biography, autobiography, gossip, and criticism, carried along by a style so exhilarating that one seems to be reading a new, loose kind of critical biography. . . . It contains an amazing amount of material . . . presented so effortlessly that one doesn't at first realize how difficult most of it must have been to obtain and assemble. Better than anyone else writing about films, Kael understands the difference between ethics and aesthetics and uses this understanding to illuminate our appreciation of her subject. . . . The script of Kane [reveals] that Welles must share the credit for what is popularly called 'Welles's masterpiece' with others, especially Mankiewicz and Gregg Toland." J. A. Avant
Library J 96:2536 Ag '71 290w

"The book is open to criticism in a couple of . . . matters. Inevitably, frame enlargement can lead to some rather muddy images, lacking the definition of posed stills, but that is no excuse for the absurd double-page spread (pp 282-3) which splits an ageing Kane down the middle. Nor is Miss Kael correct in stating that the dubbing in the opera-house scene was done by a professional singer, 'who deliberately sang badly'. . . . As for her judgment of the film itself . . . I find myself constantly nodding agreement. With her usual guile she has found a way to describe her reactions that admits its weaknesses without doing it irreparable damage. 'It is a shallow work, a shallow masterpiece,' she urges, which 'manages to create something aesthetically exciting and durable out of the playfulness in American muckraking satire.'" John Coleman

New Statesman 83:82 Ja 21 '72 350w

Reviewed by Mordecai Richler
N Y Times Bk ■ p3 O 31 '71 1350w

CIVIL RIGHTS CONGRESS. We charge genocide. See We charge genocide

CLAESSENS, BOB. Our Bruegel [by] Bob Claessens and Jeanne Rousseau. 267p il col il $50 Abner Schram

759.9493 Brueghel, Pieter, the elder

This is the first of a projected two volume study of Brueghel's works. It is "being distributed . . . on the occasion of the 400th anniversary of the artist's death . . . [and contains a text and] reproductions, mostly in colour, of all known Bruegel paintings." (Economist)

"Regally bound, beautifully printed, and sumptuously illustrated, the current volume is an impressive achievement, although it adds little to our present understanding of Bruegel and his art. Color reproduction is only fair."

Choice 7:532 Je '70 110w

"[This] is a pricey, prestige book. . . . A good deal of [it] . . . is taken up with history of the times, and one interesting new reflection from it is the extent to which Bruegel's paintings portrayed contemporary tensions. Research does not seem to have added all that much to autobiographical details; date and place of birth, for instance, are still obscure."

Economist 238:38 Ja 2 '71 220w

"[This] is a picture book on a massive scale, and a splendid example of printing and presentation. It took me half a day to look at the plates. Sixty paintings are reproduced in color, and because many of the originals are large and what's called 'landscape' shape, these plates are on the small side, but ample compensation is provided by numerous and much larger colour details. For some of the pictures there are fold-outs which can be opened up to show as many as five details at once. . . . [Some], particularly the marvellous close-ups of distant landscape, fill me with wonder, delight and awe. Some of the 27 drawings are reproduced as double spreads and are as impressive in their way as the paintings." Robert Melville

New Statesman 81:52 Ja ■ '71 180w

CLAIBORNE, CRAIG. The New York Times international cook book; drawings by James J. Spanfeller. 599p il col pl $12.50 Harper

641.5 Cookery. International
SBN 06-010788-X LC 70-156514

This cookbook by the recently retired food editor of the New York Times "contains nearly 1000 recipes from 45 countries around the world—Armenia to United States—illustrated by 32 pages in . . . color, as well as by many drawings. . . . The recipes list the ingredients in order of use, followed by . . . directions for preparation. The number of servings is noted in each instance. . . . Sources for foreign ingredients are listed. . . . The recipes are listed by categories at the beginning and then completely indexed at the end." (Best Sell) Index.

"One of the handsomer cookbooks of a decade. . . . The most numerous recipes are from France, with Italy in second place—which is, probably, to be expected. This is a sumptuous collection with what appears to be 'wipe-clean' binding in bright green and dark gray. . . . It will make a treasurable gift item." Freide Gruenrock

Best Sell 31:332 O 15 '71 140w

"If it calls for dozens of yolks, gallons of heavy cream, pounds of butter, chances are it's from Craig Claiborne. The man is preposterous—and irresistible and indispensable. . . . Directions are specific—what needs to mellow before being served, what can be frozen, how to blend curry powder, how to stuff something with something else after many national styles, and, finally, what to do with at least one version of the mysterious pickled lemon that for some reason materializes in almost every Times production." Nora Magid

Book World p6 F 20 '72 240w

Reviewed by Dean Tudor

Library J 96:3136 O 1 '71 190w

"[This] is a great pleasure to have; we can now throw away all those Times Magazine food pages we saved, since the book consists of most of Craig's recipes. . . . Each [country included] gets a chapter of its own, with representative and authentic dishes—not the hackneyed items with which we all are only too familiar. . . . The majority of recipes were tested in The Times kitchens." Nika Hazelton

N Y Times Bk R p33 D 12 '71 80w

CLAPP, JANE. Art censorship; a chronology of proscribed and prescribed art. 582p il $16 Scarecrow

700 Art—Censorship
ISBN 0-8108-0455-7 LC 76-172789

This work "presents in chronological sequence, beginning in 3400 B.C. and ending with May, 1970, thousands of incidents of the censorship . . . of the visual arts (including painting, sculpture, graphics, architecture, and the decorative arts, but excluding photography and films). The listing is by century, year, month, and day and includes censorship by political, social, religious, and legal controls as well as that imposed for aesthetic grounds with its accompanying suppression of individual rights." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Clapp's definitions of both art and censorship are so broad that trivia and inconsequential material are included, while the compilation is far from being complete as she acknowledges in her own preface. . . . Every entry is documented with a bibliographical reference, which is most extensive, and made even more useful by an exhaustive index of 158 pages. This book . . . is informative and enjoyable reading, but [is] not . . . a complete source."

Choice 9:1277 D '72 150w

"[Although Clapp] does not make any claims to comprehensiveness, additional information that is given, delineating the scope of the work, would certainly provide a valid and useful point of departure for further research on the topic and would clarify the extent of her documentation. The reader may legitimately question what has been omitted in the course of compiling information for this book. Ms. Clapp does define her subject . . . but does not indicate what has been rejected as unimportant or insignificant in terms of resource materials." B. J. Irvine

Col & Res Lib 33:493 N '72 500w

"This [is a] mandatory reference work." J Aesthetics 31:134 fall '72 170w

"Researcher Clapp has consulted 641 sources to compile this sorry record of the suppression of the visual arts. . . . Well over half the entries record events in the 20th Century, and this provides ample evidence of the tremendous power of the visual arts in the modern world. An index of 157 pages provides the key to names, titles, and subjects covered in the main body of the text. Of enormous interest and value." W. J. Dane

Library J 97:1797 My 15 '72 230w

CLARE, PATRICIA. The struggle for the Great Barrier Reef. 223p col il $7.95 Walker & co.

500.9 Natural history—Australia. Great Barrier Reef. Marine ecology
ISBN 0-8027-0352-6 LC 77-159515

This is an account of the threats to the Great Barrier Reef, "the fight to save the reef, . . . the people doing the fighting, . . . the many arguments and theories put forth and . . . the court fights and political battles involved." (Library J)

"[This is] a highly readable and personal book by an author who has carefully consulted and travelled with experts performing studies on this greatest of all tropical reefs. It . . . should appeal to all those interested in marine life and conservation. College libraries could well include it for these readers and for its value in practical field work."

Choice 9:672 J1/Ag '72 130w

"It is the struggle for the reef to survive as a unique ecological unit that is Miss Clare's story. And it is a timely one. For the book does not fall into the trap of so many on ecology of forecasting disaster in the unspecified future. The damage is being done now. . . . But the most renowned disaster, on which this book sadly fails to give the adequate story, is the invasion of the crown-of-thorns starfish. . . . This book makes interesting reading for those who know the reef—and whose presence there in the past has perhaps contributed to its misfortunes."

Economist 241:70 N 13 '71 370w

"If you discover a writer who is a painstaking researcher, who entertains imaginative questions in his head, who uses his subject as a starting point for diversions that illuminate an entire field of study; if the writer begins with feeling rather than with intellectual prejudice, his exploration of the subject thus becoming a process of defining that feeling; and if the writer possesses clarity enough that elaboration reveals rather than obscures—why then, miracle of miracles, a good book appears. . . . Such is my admiration for [this book]." Suzanne Mantell Harper 254:94 J1 '72 1300w

"There is an appendix containing proposals made by the Great Barrier Reef Committee for saving the reef, and there are several interesting color photographs of reef animals. This popularly written book should be of interest to public libraries." J. S. Robotham
Library J 96:4022 D 1 '71 150w

"[Clare] achieves a fair and balanced assessment of the dangers facing the Barrier Reef, and if she lacks formal scientific training she makes up for it with a quick eye, a retentive memory, and a good grasp of the biological as well as human factors involved. . . . [She] sets out the several theories of why [the explosion of the crown of thorns starfish] has occurred and what can be done about it. . . . [She] chronicles this episode with some anguish, having herself witnessed the results of starfish predation. The hitherto less spectacular but direct human abuses of the reef are woven into the story. She deplores those scientists who see the inevitability of commercial exploitation, but herself seems reconciled to the inevitability that some will adopt this attitude. The squabbles of scientists are nothing beside the mighty trumpeting of profit, and she ends on a note of despair."

TLS p45 Ja 14 '72 750w

CLARESON, THOMAS. Science fiction criticism: an annotated checklist. 225p $7 Kent state univ. press

016.8093 Science fiction—History and criticism—Bibliography
ISBN 0-87338-123-8 LC 71-181084

"This listing cites some 800 books and articles published between 1930 and 1971. The volume is divided into the following sections: general studies; literary studies; book reviews; visual arts; futurology, utopia, and dystopia; classroom and library; publishing; specialist bibliographies, checklists, and indexes; and the contemporary scene. A brief descriptive or critical annotation is provided for each entry." (Library J) Index of entries. Index of authors mentioned.

"[My] first quarrel is with Section III, 'SF: book reviews.' Clareson states that he has 'not to do more than include a wide sampling of British and American reviews which would give something of the flavor of the popular critical reception of the genre over the past twenty years or so.' (Italics, except 'popular,' inserted.) Instead of giving us this admittedly very incomplete listing of 146 citations, why not exclude the category entirely? Why not suggest a separate volume? . . . Second, there seems no point in listing articles which with little change become chapters of a later book also listed. . . . Third, it would be more helpful to SF students if there were more critical evaluations in the citations. As it stands, there [is] . . . an uneven quality to the annotations. Nevertheless, Clareson's checklist does partly fill a void."

Choice 9:1113 N '72 230w

"An excellent introduction to the growing literature on science fiction. . . . The increased interest in science fiction as a literary genre makes this an important bibliography for larger libraries." H. W. Hall

Library J 97:2374 J1 '72 100w

CLARESON, THOMAS D., ed. SF: the other side of realism; essays on modern fantasy and science fiction. 356p $8.95; pa $3.50 Popular press
809.3 Science fiction—History and criticism
LC 72-163385

This collection includes essays which deal with "generic definitions or historic surveys of limited periods of SF development, . . . [essays which] discuss particular authors: J. G. Ballard, C. S. Lewis, Mary Shelley, John Brunner, John Boyd, Kurt Vonnegut, H. G. Wells, Edgar Rice Burroughs, Kurd Lasswitz, Olaf Stapledon, and Isaac Asimov . . . [as well as essays] on SF movies." (Choice) Bibliography.

"This is by far the most academic and learned treatment of SF which has yet appeared; unfortunately it is not very well organized. . . . [But it is] essential to a popular literature collection."

Choice 9:211 Ap '72 160w

"Excellent documentation and biographical sketches of the contributors aid in placing each essay in perspective. Although a mixed bag, this is an invaluable aid to research and a joy for browsing, and one of the very few such compendiums presently in print." M. L. Peffers
Library J 96:4095 D 15 '71 140w

CLARK, ANNE B., jt. auth. Biographic dictionary of Chinese communism, 1921-1965, 2v. See Klein, D. W.

CLARK, CHRIS, jt. auth. How to get along with Black people. See Rush, S.

CLARK, SIR GEORGE. English history; a survey. 567p maps $10 Oxford
942 Great Britain—History
ISBN 0-19-822339-0 LC 70-595865

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Choice 9:267 Ap '72 180w

Reviewed by Donald Read
Engl Hist R 87:574 J1 '72 1100w
Va Q R 48:lxviii spring '72 100w

CLARK, J. DESMOND. The prehistory of Africa. 302p il pl maps $8.50; pa $3.95 Praeger 573 Man. Prehistoric. Africa—Antiquities
LC 77-108243

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Anthony Marks
Am Anthropol 74:114 F/Ap '72 750w
Reviewed by Jan Vansina
Am Hist R 77:812 Je '72 1200w
Reviewed by C. C. Wrigley
Encounter 39:66 J1 '72 200w

CLARK, JOHN D. Ignition! An informal history of liquid rocket propellants. 214p $10 Rutgers univ. press

662 Rocketry
ISBN 0-8135-0725-1 LC 72-185390

"In this book I have tried . . . to tell the story of the development of liquid rocket propellants: the who, and when, and where and how and why of their development." (Pref) Glossary. Index.

"This book," the author proclaims, "is opinionated." But the opinions are often in good humor, not dogmatic, and when they bite, they have the bite of authority. . . . This chronicle of men, rocketry, and chemical engineering has magnetic authenticity, and manages to combine literary color and scientific nomenclature with remarkable élan. . . . Some laymen may flounder in the occasional morass of propellant formulae, but the author's narrative bridges these gaps for the general reader. . . . Although scholars may regret the lack of formal documentation, this unique and personal account is a significant contribution to the history of rocketry."

Choice 9:386 My '72 200w

"Writing in a refreshingly breezy style, Clark covers well the development of this very technical subject. He explains the chemistry of rocket fuels simply enough for the layman, yet thoroughly enough for the specialist—a nice balance that is seldom achieved in the literature of science. . . . [This book] is both a valuable technical reference and an interesting story." R. L. Hough

Library J 97:1334 Ap 1 '72 80w

CLARK, JOHN G., ed. The frontier challenge; responses to the trans-Mississippi West. 307p $10 Univ. press of Kan.

917.8 The West—History. Frontier and pioneer life—The West. Minorities.
ISBN 7006-0070-1 LC 79-121649

The theme of these ten essays is "the problem of racial minorities laid against the belief in material progress as espoused by the dominant race." (J Am Hist)

"Sophisticated, analytical, and highly readable, [these essays] represent Western historiography in its maturest form. . . . [and] constitute a fine cross-section of recent approaches to Western history." Walter Rundell

Am Hist R 77:207 F '72 600w

"[This book] carries on a rich tradition of scholarship and a diversity of historical interests. . . . Every essay is carefully documented, but there should be an index to this well researched and, in part, freshly exploratory volume. For the student in special Western studies rather than the general reader."

Choice 8:729 J1 '71 200w

"This collection of essays . . . 'hangs together' and presents a meaningful, cohesive entity. . . . This volume is filled with ideas set forth by some of the 'big names' in the historical business and is a fertile field for any graduate student to work in searching for an area of continued study. Here are some important brains to be picked, all packaged in a single volume, and priced at a figure that all can afford." R. G. Athearn

J Am Hist 58:765 D '71 600w

CLARK, PETER, ed. Crisis and order in English towns, 1500-1700; essays in urban history; ed. by Peter Clark and Paul Slack. 364p pl Can$15 Univ. of Toronto press

942 Cities and towns—Great Britain
ISBN 0-8020-1854-8 LC 72-184193

"The essays are arranged in roughly chronological fashion so that we begin with a study of ceremony and the citizen in Coventry, 1450-1550, and conclude with London merchants in the 1690s. Other essays deal with trade guilds in York, migrants in Kentish towns, poverty and politics in Salisbury, politics in Chester, 1640-1662, East London housing, and Norwich as a provincial capital." (Choice) Annotated chapter bibliographies. Index.

"A 'microscopic' introduction to 16th- and 17th-century urban England. Rather than attempting to construct an abstract model of the pre-industrial English city, the contributors focus on eight quite specific topics with the editors providing a general introduction. . . . The major generalization offered by the editors is that 'English urban society from 1500 to 1700 witnessed a major collision of continuity and change. Within the apparently ordered framework of pre-industrial society many communities underwent a severe reorientation affecting all sectors of urban life.' Good, solid local history. Recommended."

Choice 9:1028 O '72 180w

"This resourceful series of essays is the product of a new generation of historians who write with an infectious enthusiasm, reveal considerable zeal for research and show a genuine concern for their subject. Their writing reflects modern ideas and attitudes, including greater emphasis on numeracy and a commendable desire to tune in to neighbouring disciplines. In the process some strange jargon appears; but fortunately, such phrases as 'eschewing the multiplex relationships of kin-oriented society' interrupt only rarely the otherwise smooth flow of intelligible English. . . . Careful use of source material is shown by M. J. Power in his piecing-together of a surprisingly full account of housing development and housing standards in East London in the seventeenth century. Maps, hearth tax-returns and inventories are very skillfully used, together with deeds, surveys and other papers, hunted down at various London repositories and even at the offices of an insurance company."

TLS p706 Je 23 '72 800w

CLARK, THOMAS D. Indiana university, mid-western pioneer; v 1, The early years. 371p pl $10 Ind. univ. press

378 Indiana. University—History
ISBN 253-14170-2 LC 74-126207

"This first volume of a new history of Indiana's state university covers the period from the early beginnings to the year 1902." (J Am Hist) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Merle Curti

Am Hist R 76:1598 D '71 300w

"[This is an] analytical and readable [history]. . . . Clark's account balances well the institutional, intellectual, and social history of the university. . . . Well illustrated with photographs. . . . Recommended as best available account."

Choice 8:1226 N '71 110w

"Drawing upon a wide variety of sources, . . . Clark has compressed almost a century of history into a well-organized volume of 345 pages. A distinguished scholar in the field of southern history, he has succeeded well in placing the university within the context of developments in higher education in the United States. If he is brief in his treatment of the university's influence upon the state, he has avoided turning his volume into a catalogue, a trap that has snared many authors of university histories. Nor can he be accused of lacking objectivity. This study, if anything, is too critical." D. W. Hollis

J Am Hist 58:201 Je '71 600w

CLARK, TOM. Air. 51p $5 Harper

811
LC 72-123975

A collection of poems, some of which have appeared in such periodicals as Paris Review and Poetry.

"[This book] only intermittently fulfills the promise of [Clark's] first book [Stones, BRD 1963]. Its themes are fewer, and greater emphasis is given to love poems (which, by the way, are impressively lyrical and sensitive). Clark must be careful not to fall too much in love either with northern California, his present home, or with love itself. Both environments can reduce a poet to prettiness, and that shouldn't happen to a real coming talent like Clark. . . . Recommended for public and academic libraries." Jerome Cushman

Library J 96:1984 Je 1 '71 130w

"[This volume] is a real disappointment. Too many poems begin in [a] mindlessly clever way. . . . The several good poems in Air are close to the idiom of William Carlos Williams, as Clark's earliest poems were outgrowths of the Williams tradition. There is great tenderness in the title poem, in Alternating Current, in Pillow, tenderness combined with a certain muscularity that gets us to feel the living life of nature. . . . Clark is a very gifted poet, with great verbal facility. But he really should make his books more ambitious." David Lehman

Poetry 119:231 Ja '72 220w

CLARK, W. E. LE GROS. The antecedents of man; an introduction to the evolution of the primates. 3d ed 394p il $8.95 Quadrangle bks.

599 Primates. Evolution
ISBN 0-8129-0224-6 LC 73-162309

This revised edition "is organized in ten chapters. The introduction [discusses] evolutionary principles and the ways evidence from comparative anatomy, embryology, and paleontology is evaluated and interpreted. The next chapter is a brief survey of the order Primates, both living and fossil. . . . The next eight chapters . . . [are] devoted to dentition, skull, limbs, brain, special senses, digestive system, and reproductive system. . . . The final chapter . . . summarizes the main anatomical features of the major primate groups as evolutionary developments making possible successively higher grades of organization, and outlines what fossil evidence is available on the times and places these developments occurred." (An Anthropol) Bibliography. For earlier editions see BRD 1935 and 1961.

"[This new edition] has been brought up to date in some areas, but the basic plan and the great bulk of the text and figures remain unaltered. . . . Not many changes have been necessary because it has stood the test of time. Those alterations which have been made are largely the outgrowth of recent paleontological discoveries and increasing consensus as to their interpretation. . . . There has been some modernization of terminology. . . . Currently controversial problems . . . are noted in passing but are treated noncommittally, quite the proper viewpoint in the present state of knowledge. . . . There is a brief essay into ecological interpretation which is a travesty. Within the major tasks it sets itself, however, the book remains a masterpiece." N. C. Tappen

Am Anthropol 74:967 Ag '72 850w

"The bibliography is adequate for entry to more specialized publications. Remains the best concise, basic coverage for lay and prospective professional students of human evolution."

Choice 8:1603 F '72 180w

CLARKE, ARTHUR C. Into space; a young person's guide to space; by Arthur C. Clarke and Robert Silverberg. rev ed 129p il $3.95 Harper

629.4 Space flight—Juvenile literature. Outer space—Juvenile literature
SBN 06-021271-5 LC 73-161640

"The book covers the history of rocket development, the launching of the satellites . . . manned space flight, and . . . man's landing on the moon. The authors . . . discuss possible uses of space stations; the scientific work that can be done in space; interplanetary travel and what may be found on the planets in the solar system; and finally interstellar trips." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. "Grades seven to twelve." (Library J)

"Back in 1953, Arthur Clarke wrote a book for young people called 'Going into Space' [BRD 1954]. The largest rocket at that time was the fourteen-ton V-2 missile. His friend Robert Silverberg, the science fiction writer, has completely revised the text and brought it up to date. . . . It may well be that this book will serve as an inspiration for some future space explorer fifteen or twenty years from now." Rev. F. C. Carmody

Best Sell 31:432 D 15 '71 130w

"[This] is a worthwhile addition as a general, informative introduction to space travel." P. M. Mitchell

Library J 96:3473 O 15 '71 160w [YA]

CLARKE, ARTHUR C. Report on planet three and other speculations. 250p $6.95 Harper

500 Science. Outer space. Technology and civilization
SBN 06-010793-6 LC 74-156515

This "collection contains over 20 future-oriented essays, eight of them reprinted from [Clarke's] The Challenge of the Spaceship [BRD 1959 and covers] such . . . topics ■ aliens, the ocean, intelligent machines, outer space, and God." (Library J)

"Since this collection includes essays spanning roughly fifteen years, it seems to reproduce in its entirety the Clarkean universe. In his zeal to be comprehensive as well as up-to-date, Clarke addresses himself several times over to certain vexed questions and thus involves himself in postscripts (which is a bonus) and self-contradictions (which is a nuisance). . . . Most of his cogitations are well-wrought, but too often they are littered with ambiguities." Diane Ackerman

Book World p6 D 19 '71 160w

"Few if any authors write science and science fiction as well as Arthur Clarke. For those who haven't read him yet, these little pieces form a good introduction. They are lucid, witty, and informative. . . . This book is worth purchasing solely for its newer material, and you can be certain of its getting good use."

Choice 9:388 My '72 90w

"The preface warns us, 'There is no particular order in which [the essays] need to be read.' As a result, the reader finds himself sometimes behind and sometimes ahead of such historic events as the 1969 moon-landing. To avoid chronological disorientation he will need to keep wide-awake. . . . After listing what [Clarke] regards as the six farthest out speculations in the centuries of human thought, he comments; 'There is only one of these that I feel certain (well, practically certain!) to be impossible, and that is time travel.' . . . In Arthur Clarke's company the impossible is apt to become possible and the possible probable."

Peter Henniker-Heaton

Christian Science Monitor p10 F 10 '72 700w

"Clarke writes in a relaxed, readable style, yet conveys an amazing wealth of facts and ideas to the reader. In one essay, Clarke notes: 'We live in an age when we can keep up with tomorrow—or even today—only by letting our imaginations freewheel anywhere they care to travel, as long as they keep within the bounds of logic and the known laws of nature.' Reading his essays is excellent training for this technique. Highly recommended." H. W. Hall

Library J 96:4013 D 1 '71 130w

Reviewed by Regina Minudri

Library J 97:1628 Ap 15 '72 100w [YA]

CLARKE, AUSTIN. The meeting point; a novel. 249p $6.95 Little

LC 70-183352

In this first of a trilogy of novels "Bernice Leach, a West Indian domestic in Toronto, lives a life bounded by a triangle says Austin Clarke . . . —a life that centered around her kitchen, her radio and her princess telephone." Another strong influence is exerted by the prudent Bernice's account in the Royal Bank of Canada, totalling $3,000 at the moment. Within the narrow confines of this sphere of interest, Bernice works hard, frets at the austere climate, and indulges in varieties of noncommunication with her employers. Relationships have to be redrawn when Bernice's younger sister arrives from Barbados and becomes pregnant by the head of the house." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by Alan Hislop

Book World p5 My 21 '72 460w

"Now that Mr. Clarke has written himself out of his Barbadian childhood and youth he has escaped from the constrictions of fiction which is neatly labelled and categorized. . . . The white man is no longer seen as merely the patronizing exploiter of the black, for the races are partners in misery, mutually exploiting, hating and loving in a world where nothing is simple any more. . . . The great achievement of The Meeting Point is this very avoidance of the simplistic, this awareness of the oddity and variety in human nature. . . . [This book] is of major importance and marks Austin Clarke's emergence as a novelist of depth and force because of the way in which it obliges the reader to confront the tragic and comic complexities of human nature." James Dale

Canadian Forum 48:19 Ap '68 800w

"The writing is characterized by page-long paragraphs interlarded with fat passages of italics reflecting the stream of consciousness. The book is too diffuse to flow clearly, too poetic to constitute sociology, too journalistic to stand as poetry. The characters . . . tend to run 'in neutral gear' to quote one of them.

CLARKE, AUSTIN—Continued

Though Clarke demonstrates admirable talent in parts, the novel as a whole fails to generate the interest of fellow Barbadian George Lamming's The Emigrants [BRD 1955] or of Paule Marshall's Brown girl brownstones [BRD 1960], which concerns 'Bajan' immigrants in Brooklyn.

Choice 9:1290 D '72 200w

"For the Canadian, north and northward have always meant escape from America and things American and toward a sense of place and self—at least for a certain kind of Canadian. For many others, including the blacks of Clarke's novel (first published in Canada in 1967), northward is nowhere new: to be black and poor in such a land is to be black and poor. . . . If the prose is often flat and the scene melodramatic, one is tempted to say that it is the situation which dictates: for those at bottom, romance must be delusion, any gesture Pyrrhic, and character something daily deadened by drudgery. It is not too much to say that Clarke understands such things."

Robert Buckeye

Library J 97:1824 My 15 '72 150w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p42 Ap 9 '72 150w

New Yorker 48:142 Ap 22 '72 70w

"[The book is] melancholic, angry and savagely funny on Bernice's mesmerized dependence on Mrs. Burrmann's hideous, off-white universe. . . . Mr. Clarke has a great flair for catching the passwords, patois and special idioms of a particular, beleaguered social group. These people speak not only like Barbadians but, very convincingly, as Barbadians ghettoed in Toronto. It is something of a burden for the reader, though, that the centre of the tale is Bernice rather than someone else. She is a character of impressive but rather bovine complexity, and there are several others present who could have given the book a more entertaining focus without any sacrifice of weight or truth."

TLS p404 My 11 '67 600w

CLARKE, EDWIN, ed. Modern methods in the history of medicine. 389p il pl $22.50 Oxford 610.9 Historiography. Medicine—History ISBN 0-485-11121-7 LC 70-501553

Problems and subjects discussed in this volume include "the historiography of ideas . . . [as] a part of the history of medicine since ancient days. . . . [and] that much of medical history has consisted of studies of medical men in medical institutions . . . at the expense of a systematic consideration of such subjects as patient care. . . . [Other discussions concern] the use of evidence by medical historians. . . . the field of paleopathology. . . . the demographic approach. . . . the relationship between the history of medicine and the history of science. . . . the boundaries of medical history. . . . [and the kind of] research . . . necessary for the oral historian." (Science)

"This volume should certainly be available in schools of public health, medicine, nursing, social work, and in other educational institutions having to do with health." George Rosen

Am J Pub Health 61:2330 N '71 140w

"After one has read through the 21 chapters it is obvious that here is both a timely and an important book. It is Clarke's wish that 'the book will induce a higher overall level of scholarship in the history of medicine so that the status and respectability of the subject as an academic discipline may be more widely appreciated and more firmly established.' . . . There are . . . interesting chapters in this book, and . . . I believe it is a useful one. . . . [It] is not overly large. . . . It contains some tables, maps, and diagrams, all of which are necessary to the text, and four pages of photomicrographs, which are not. . . . The references, the subject matter, the discussions, all should be made readily available to students with an interest in the history of the life sciences." G. H. Brieger

Science 174:577 N '71 1200w

"It is pleasant to find such a book as this about the wide discipline of medical history. . . . The central theme of the history of medicine [Clarke] defines as 'the evolution of scientific and social concepts in medicine as they relate to human health and disease'. He weakens the cohesion by excluding the history of pharmacy, dentistry and nursing because they 'are now autonomous branches of learning'. So is radiotherapy, and an argument could be produced for each speciality on the vocational register. . . . Dr Clarke has brought together a most useful book, both for those who are committed and for those medical educators who should be. He himself has written four of the twenty-one essays, two in collaboration with his colleagues. They show his practical approach to the subject, of which in Britain he is an academic pioneer, and his evident concern to build a solid foundation for a still-neglected discipline."

TLS p738 Je 25 '71 1400w

CLARKE, LIGE. I have more fun with you than anybody [by] Lige Clarke and Jack Nichols. 152p $5.95 St Martins

301.41 Homosexuality—Personal narratives LC 73-184554

The two male authors "tell the story of their life together, their involvement in gay liberation, their travels, and their adventures editing Gay, a popular homosexual biweekly." (Library J)

"Eager to disavow the deviant connotation of homosexuality, Clarke and Nichols write a lively and uncompromising account of their life together. . . . The authors run through not only the more consequential problems of maintaining a nonfurtive homosexual identity and interpersonal relations between one another and with straight and gay friends, but also a great deal of chatter about their house furnishings, recipes, cosmetics, tourist adventures, and routine for showering. There are more than enough funny lines for an article, but as a book-length memoir it is decidedly thin. Frothy or not, it makes a strong statement for living one's life as one wants, and will cheer the straight and the gay alike."

Choice 9:1047 O '72 170w

"This is simply a memoir intended to give the reader a glimpse of the authors' life style and some of the ways people can come together for mutual enrichment. It allows the reader to share a part of the lives of two interesting people who see their homosexuality as both a blessing and an opportunity. There is no homosexual agonizing here, no hankering after causes, no apologies, few regrets. More than this, the memoir demonstrates that sexuality—gay or straight—guarantees nothing: living creatively is in no sense defined or limited by sexual orientation." G. E. Hansen

Library J 97:2573 Ag '72 110w

CLARKE, M. L. Higher education in the ancient world. 188p $7.50 Univ. of N.Mex. press

378.0938 Education—Greece. Education—Rome LC 71-138468

A "survey of Greek and Roman education above the primary school level from the fourth century B.C. onwards. Special attention is given to the teaching of philosophy, and there are also chapters on the liberal arts, particularly grammar and rhetoric, and on professional education. Professor Clarke describes what actually went on in the schools, how they were organized, and what methods of teaching were used. He discusses the impact of Christianity and the Church as an educational institution, and shows how the classical traditions of education remained alive in the Byzantine Empire and in Western Europe." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Carefully researched (although excessively detailed) and well written account of higher education in the ancient world. Clarke . . . fails to realize the stated aim of discussing higher education in a cultural and social context. There are excellent descriptions of Plato's Academy and Aristotle's Lyceum. The text does not adequately distinguish between philosophic schools (as institutions and schools of philosophy. There are especially fine chapters on the development of professional education (medicine, architecture, and law) and the impact of Christianity on education—also a superfluous chapter on medieval universities."

Choice 9:412 M '72 100w

"The canvas . . . is a broad one; but Clarke's brush strokes are extraordinarily precise. Assertions which purport to be statements of fact are carefully documented with primary source material whenever it is available; secondary literature is invoked only sparingly. Though the book is descriptive rather than evaluative, such pinpointing of sources allows the reader to draw his own conclusions. . . . Professionals and educated laymen alike will use the book with profit." T. M. Robinson

Library J 96:4090 D 15 '71 260w

CLARKE, P. F. Lancashire and the new liberalism. 472p maps $18.50 Cambridge 329.9 Lancashire, England—Politics and government. Political parties. Elections—Lancashire, England
ISBN 0-521-08075-4 LC 75-154513

"The centre of Clarke's argument is (1) Lancashire was one of the critical areas of political geography (Greater London was another) where the post-Gladstonian Liberal party had to make gains in order to win a general election; (2) the party succeeded here, not only in 1906 but in the 1910 elections; and (3) its success in working-class constituencies here showed how strong and healthy the party was on the eve of the 1914 war." (Am Hist R) Bibliography. Index.

"So much for all those from George Dangerfield to Roy Douglas who have argued the inevitability of Liberal decline by 1914. . . . This is a serious, if very expensive book, with an excellent bibliography." Barry McGill
Am Hist R 77:793 Je '72 250w

"When a great political party dies in mysterious circumstances there is no lack of informed speculation as to why and how. Four modes suggest themselves: natural causes, misadventure, murder, and suicide. So far, the first three of these have been widely canvassed in the case of the Liberal party whose demise is the great mystery of modern British politics. . . . Mr Clarke startlingly proposes no less than the suicide theory. . . . The case is plausible and attractive. The evidence is solid and impressive. Mr Clarke is careful not to claim too much. He insists that his case is 'capable of rigorous proof in some particulars'; in many others he concedes that it must rest on the balance of probabilities. . . . Unquestionably this is an important book and will be a central element in a correspondingly important debate." Economist 239:61 My 22 '71 700w

"Here is a new view, powerfully argued and well documented. The revision, though Mr Clarke does not say so, has its relevance for the present day. Clarke starts by describing how the system worked. This method has been common form ever since Namier demonstrated it for the reign of George III. It has the danger that the historian becomes so taken up with displaying the machinery that he never gets the car going. Clarke has not escaped this danger: his book is four parts analysis to one of narrative. But at least there is some narrative, which is more than can be said for the works of his great exemplar. The analysis is full of interest. . . . I think that he has proved his case." A. J. P. Taylor
New Statesman 81:672 My 14 '71 950w
TLS p696 Je 18 '71 1100w

CLARKE, ROBIN. The science of war and peace. 400p $7.95 McGraw 301.2 War and civilization. Science and civilization. Science and state
SBN 07-011239-8 LC 71-169016

The author is concerned with the "menace of thermonuclear war . . . [as well as] the other weapons that modern technology has added to our arsenal. . . . [He shows how] the military has infiltrated such . . . fields as space research and oceanography. The latter part of his book tells about research in the nascent discipline of 'conflict resolution.'" (Library J) Bibliography.

"Clarke has made a deep study of his subjects for he quotes scientists, psychologists, doves, and crackpots as great authorities on what has caused and will cause wars, and has fifteen pages of sources at the end of his ten-dollar nonsense. There are few substantiated facts, and fewer logical conclusions, but these are covered up with a lot of hogwash (that is the only word I can find that really fits). . . . The discussion of war, and very little peace, is entirely too technical for any but the most exceptional reader. . . . This is the hardest book I have tried to plow through and attempt to understand in over twenty years of reviewing, so I would not recommend it to anyone." J. B. Cullen
Best Sell 32:27 Ap 15 '72 460w

"The average reader may possibly be scared to death by the introduction and put aside the text as alarmist. The ship—hopefully generals, admirals, and national security managers—will find, however, a highly persuasive, broad ranging, and informed study, a fresh and revealing overview in nontechnical language meriting wide, general circulation. Excellent bibliography."

Choice 9:878 S '72 190w

"It is dismally clear that the science of war prevention is both primitive and poorly funded in comparison with the science of war making. Sometimes his own preference for the side of the angels leads Clarke to overstate his case. . . . Nevertheless, [he] proves convincingly the necessity of stopping our mad arms race in order to prevent an otherwise inevitable world holocaust. Recommended for public and college libraries." J. W. Weigel
Library J 96:4081 D 15 '71 190w

"[The book's] main theses are sound. We are, undoubtedly, far too complacent about the nuclear arms competition. . . . Also about the increasing, not decreasing, gap between the rich and the poor nations. I certainly agree with Clarke that some nuclear war is likely before 2000, whether between East and West or South and North. And he is right to emphasise . . . that the vast majority of scientists are totally irresponsible where the long-term effects of their work are concerned. 'This is not a scholarly book,' says the author; equally, is it really suitable for piecemeal presentation to the relaxed readers of a colour mag? The style is opaque, and the methodology, with its constant references to war games, metaphors and so on, all too reminiscent of the think-tanks that have produced the 47 volumes of the notorious Pentagon Papers." Geoffrey McDermott
New Statesman 82:210 Ag 11 '71 850w

CLARKE, WILLIAM C. Place and people; an ecology of a New Guinean community. 265p 1l $9 Univ. of Calif. press 301.2995 Ecology. Ethnology—New Guinea. Maring (New Guinea people)
ISBN 0-520-01791-9 LC 78-126764

This is an "account of the ecology of one small, more or less localized community of Maring people. Clarke's main concern is to examine the system of land use in Maring subsistence agriculture in relation not only to such physical variables as climate, topography, soil, flora and fauna, but also to Maring demographic and residential patterns." (Natur Hist) Bibliography. Index.

"About 10 years ago Andrew Vayda initiated a series of interconnected research projects on the cultural ecology of the Maring speaking peoples, a group of small, related societies located in a remote part of the Bismark range in the New Guinea interior. . . . The present work is by a human geographer closely familiar with recent anthropological thought on cultural ecology. The study concerns a group Clarke calls the Bomagai-Angoiang. They number only 154 persons in all, but their anthropological significance is now substantial due to the excellent quality of this report." Choice 8:1516 Ja '72 130w

"Clarke writes pleasantly and concisely and makes his points clearly. I only wish he had presented more quantified statements to cover the totality of the horticultural activities of the local group he describes. Nevertheless, although Place and People deals with one small community in a remote part of New Guinea, it should interest anyone concerned with understanding the functioning of ecological systems." M. J. Meggitt
Natur Hist 81:89 Ja '72 700w

CLARKSON, L. A. The pre-industrial economy in England, 1500-1750. 268p $10 Schocken
330.942 Great Britain—Economic conditions
ISBN 0-3052-3343-0 LC 77-169816

The author "argues that pre-industrial England was a market economy where the production and distribution of goods and services were determined by price. However, the operation of the market was impeded by low productivity and poorly developed market institutions and transport. During these 250 years the market became a more powerful 'engine of growth' as productivity was raised, particularly in agriculture, and the means of distribution were improved. . . . The economic advances before 1750 did not transform the basic structure of the economy, but without them the Industrial Revolution could not have taken place." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

CLARKSON, L. A.—Continued

"Few attempts have been made to boil down the valid findings of the larger studies [on this period] and combine them in short compass with the results of recent specialized scholarship. . . . Clarkson has now done the job . . . and done it very well. The chapter on government and the economy, for example, is a brilliant summary of the current status of the concept and workings of a mercantilistic economy. The 17-page bibliography alone is almost worth the price of the book. Clarkson employs the working tools and concepts of the economist but presents his findings in nontechnical language. An excellent piece of work."

Choice 9:688 J1/Ag '72 250w

"Much of the factual data is presented rather diffusely, with too little sense of economic relationships or chronological development [and] we know far too little (particularly in the quantitative line) about the pre-industrial economy to make really effective empirical use of such concepts as 'underemployment,' 'subsistence production,' or even 'capital formation' or 'productivity.' . . . [The book] concisely presents a lot of important information. But its discussion of the dynamics of pre-industrial growth is neither sufficiently specific nor sufficiently rigorous to shed much new light on what are still in an important sense the dark ages of English economic history."

Economist 241:66 O 23 '71 450w

"In general, Dr Clarkson is concerned more with the broad characteristics of the early modern economy than with the problem of economic growth as such. Nevertheless, much of his argument is related to the relatively slow and uncertain pace of economic growth in his period as compared with the era after 1750. . . . [He] takes a rather unfashionably negative view. . . . The treatment of [the] growth question is perhaps the weakest aspect of Dr Clarkson's admirably well-informed summary: despite the admitted paucity of quantitative material, he might well push his analysis rather further in the vital areas of population trends, regional and sectoral developments, and the growth of the market."

TLS p321 Mr 24 '72 550w

CLASEN, CLAUS-PETER. Anabaptism; a social history, 1525-1618; Switzerland, Austria, Moravia, South and Central Germany. 523p maps $17.50 Cornell univ. press

284 Anabaptists—History. Reformation
ISBN 0-8014-0696-X LC 78-37751

This is a "survey of the varied Anabaptist movements in the southern areas of the Holy Roman Empire and in Switzerland, excluding the . . . Anabaptist sects in the Netherlands and northwest Germany. [Clasen] concludes that the movement was seldom influential and was soon suppressed. . . . [He discusses] the life, organization, social views, literature, and persecutions of the Anabaptists." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This is] an important and controversial addition to the literature in English on the 'left wing' of the Reformation. . . . The book is more interested in the social history of Anabaptism than in its 'ideologies'. Its usefulness as an introduction to Anabaptism is limited by a somewhat turgid style and extensive use of examples. However, it sets new standards for studying Anabaptism, especially in its use of quantitative evidence. . . . All efforts should be made to buy this worthy (and high-priced) volume."

Choice 9:982 O '72 160w

"During the past two decades a wealth of source material on Anabaptism has appeared on the Continent and sparked a growing literature in this country. Clasen . . . has now closely reviewed this massive documentation and added his own archival studies to produce a statistic-studded [survey]. . . . The survey technique precludes a chronological narrative and assumes the reader's familiarity with Anabaptist leaders and background. For subject collections in 16th-Century religion and social history." Genevieve Kelly

Library J 97:2586 Ag '72 210w

CLAWSON, MARION. Suburban land conversion in the United States: an economic and governmental process; pub. for Resources for the future. 406p il $12.50 Johns Hopkins press 333.7 Land. City planning—U.S. Cities and towns—U.S.

ISBN 0-8018-1313-1 LC 70-149239

The author deals with "land use in the suburbs, with particular emphasis on the diffuse decision-making process, many public programs affecting the process of change in land use, market for suburban land, planning processes, land use controls, and housing problems. . . . [The last chapter] offers a range of alternative means for improving the suburban land conversion process." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"[This] timely comprehensive treatise . . . is a sweeping, kaleidoscopic, and well articulated survey of the past, present, and potential future urban growth patterns. Should be immensely valuable to all the many professions, public officials, and interested citizens concerned with the problems of 'suburban sprawl.'"

Choice 8:1616 F '72 150w

"[The book's] scope reaches into the slums and city halls of the metropolitan centers and the vast remaining rural areas of the nation. Based primarily on the last two decades, this study tells as much about our future as an urban nation as it does about our past. . . . [Its] principal contribution . . . is provided by the well-documented, analytic overview of the process of urban expansion in the United States in the period since World War II."

R. S. Rosenbloom

Science 177:419 Ag 4 '72 650w

CLAYTON, RICHARD. See Haggard, W.

CLAYTON, WILLIAM L. Selected papers of Will Clayton; ed. by Fredrick J. Dobney. 298p $8.50 Johns Hopkins press

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations. U.S.—Economic policy
ISBN 0-8018-1298-4 LC 70-164565

"The documents in this volume illuminate [Clayton's] economic ideology and illustrate how that ideology guided his attempts to influence the business community and the federal government in the formulation of economic attitudes and policies." (Introd) Index.

"For revisionist diplomatic historians, Will Clayton has enjoyed a growing importance as the most significant ideological successor to Cordell Hull in the state department. This useful collection of Clayton's letters, articles, speeches, and memoranda traces the development of his views and influence. . . . These selections will have a narrow readership, limited probably to those with a deep interest in Clayton and his views. There are few surprises here in regard to the formulation of United States diplomacy. . . . Dobney has done a careful and scrupulous job in editing the material and has contributed a helpful introduction, although at times the selection seems to have been overly determined by contemporary concerns—revisionist diplomatic history and Vietnam." Bruce Kuklick

J Am Hist 59:475 S '72 350w

"The theme and—almost as important—tone of these papers is confidence. Clayton had confidence in the virtues of our civilization, and in our ability to make those virtues tell in a world of conflict. . . . Men of Clayton's breed were not 'pragmatists' like those now greasing the skids for our slide away from world responsibilities. Rather, they were men whose policies flowed from a profound understanding of the nation's possibilities and purpose. This volume contains their powerful vision and coherent philosophy. It is well-annotated and handsomely produced." G. F. Will

Nat R 24:909 Ag 18 '72 400w

CLAYTON-STAMM, M. D. E. jt. auth. William De Morgan: Pre-Raphaelite ceramics. See Gaunt, W.

CLEAGE, ALBERT B. Black Christian nationalism; new directions for the black church [by] Albert B. Cleage, Jr; incl. papers presented to the First Black Christian nationalist convention; ed. by George Bell, nat. co-ordinator. 312p $8.95; pa $3.45 Morrow

289.9 Christianity—Philosophy. Black nationalism. Negroes—Political activity. U.S.—Race relations
LC 74-151929

The author discusses a black theology seeing it as a means of "enabling the Black church to become relevant to the Black Liberation Struggle. . . . [Cleage says] 'I am now convinced that Black theologians cannot move beyond the basic theological statement outlined in The Black Messiah [by A. B. Cleage, BRD 1970]. Therefore I feel compelled to move on to the essential restructuring of the Black church implicit in that theology. . . . Unless we can discard the white man's individualistic slave theology and accept a Black theology which emphasizes the Black Nation and a communal way of life in a Promised Land here on earth. . . . Black people are doomed to genocide or an eternal hell on earth.'" (Introd) Bibliography.

"The book is a cogent and forceful argument for bringing the black church to, or keeping it in, the forefront of the liberation struggle for all black people. It should be required reading for all dealing with this problem specifically, as well as those striving to understand the place of religion in the contemporary social revolution."

Choice 9:660 J1/Ag '72 130w

Reviewed by Elliott Wright

Commonweal 96:290 My 26 '72 150w

"As the leading spokesman for Black Christian Nationalism, Cleage presents a thorough, though by no means objective, picture of one of the strongest functioning seats of Black Power, centered at his Shrine of the Black Madonna in Detroit. His extensive and often revealing observations about blacks under a system that is and can only remain racist lead him to express the need for a power base of black counterinstitutions. . . . Even for those who might disagree violently with Cleage's theology, his occasional demagoguery, or his often repetitive prose, this book offers a wealth of insights into the struggle of blacks for the control of their lives." Jim Langlois

Library J 97:1691 My 1 '72 190w

"Of course [Cleage] is right that the Church as a kind of theological corporation is part of the oppressive white power structure. But the Church as an extension of the family that Jesus started with the apostles is a brotherhood that includes Mr. Cleage and all the people he despises. And he belittles other black leaders . . . because of their commitment to integration. . . . Many people have attempted to appropriate God for their own purposes (Hitler's official 'philosopher,' Alfred Rosenberg, tried to prove that Jesus was an Aryan). Although we can presume that God is on the side of liberation . . . Christ died for the whole world, not just for liberals and radicals. We are all chosen people." Anthea Lahr

Sat R 55:61 Ap 8 '72 750w

CLEMENS, SAMUEL LANGHORNE. See Twain, M.

CLEMENTS, BRUCE. From ice set free: the story of Otto Kiep. 215p $5.50 Farrar, Straus B or 92 Kiep, Otto Carl—Juvenile literature ISBN 0-374-32468-9 LC 70-184703

In 1933, the subject of this biography "resigned as Consul General of the New York embassy because he felt he could not represent the Third Reich. He continued to serve the German people on further diplomatic missions until he returned to Berlin to serve Germany . . . during World War II. His steadfast anti-Hitler stance throughout the war . . . resulted in his arrest by the Gestapo. He was brought to trial before the People's Court, condemned to death, and hanged on August 26, 1944. [Index]. Grade nine and up." (Library J)

"Choosing as his title a line from Goethe's Faust, the author has quietly presented the chief facts of his father-in-law's life. Otto Kiep, who was never famous—yet died by hanging in Berlin, Germany, in 1944—was born in Scotland, where his father was a timber importer. . . . Although the central portion of the book, dealing with Otto Kiep's experiences in World War I, often reads like understated reports, the section on his early years recalls the charm of a bygone era, and the final part of the biography is tense with the political situation. A significant account of a man of good will caught in the dilemma of his times." P. H.

Horn Bk 48:379 Ag '72 170w

"This biography . . . provides a humanist point of view of Germany during the wars. . . . Passage of time is sometimes vaguely handled and minor characters are rarely fully developed; however, Kiep is believably presented as a true statesman and the account offers an intelligent individual's view of European politics during the first half of the 20th Century." Barbara Kennemore

Library J 97:1919 My 15 '72 260w [YA]

Reviewed by Elie Wiesel

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p3 N 5 '72 150w

CLEPPER, HENRY. Professional forestry in the United States; pub. for Resources for the future. 337p $10 Johns Hopkins press

634.9 Forests and forestry—U.S.

ISBN 0-8018-1331-X LC 70-171107

"In this account of the development of U.S. forestry, . . . Clepper describes the conservationists' . . . struggles to secure a sound national forestry policy. He also examines the feud between the government and the forest products industry over the issue of federal regulation of privately owned forests. . . . The author traces the contributions of foresters to federal, state, and industrial forestry programs from the time of the first forestry schools to the present. He shows how their efforts have made possible the transition from an era of forest exploitation to one of intensive scientific management." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This fascinating book might well have been called 'The romance of American forestry.' . . . At times, the numerous lengthy quotations from original sources become slightly irritating. This aside, the book is fascinating and indispensable to anyone interested in trees, tree growth, and forestry."

Choice 9:388 My '72 200w

"[This is] a thorough and detailed history of the use of forest products in this country from the earliest records to the present. Clepper provides an extensive review of all recorded data on American forest use, including an almost painstakingly detailed account of legal and legislative issues. . . . The author is the former managing editor of the Journal of Forestry and the former executive secretary of the Society of American Foresters. As a result, his personal familiarity with much of the material research has been useful, but it has also led to occasional subjective judgments about issues and people. However, these, in the opinion of this reviewer, are not a handicap. Recommended for all collections relating to agriculture, ecology, and the industrial use of natural resources." F. N. Jones

Library J 96:3624 N 1 '71 150w

"[The author] tells us little about the profession itself. This became significant as professional foresters came to dominate both private and public forest policy. Clepper notes the increase in number of forestry schools and students, but seldom discusses the nature of the curricula. . . . [The book suffers] from a stiff writing style and a topical organization which gives the story an episodic quality, blurring the relations between events and confusing the chronology. A sequential arrangement might have brought more clarity to an important story." T. R. Wessel

Science 176:644 My 12 '72 450w

CLEVELAND, WILLIAM L. The making of an Arab nationalist; Ottomanism and Arabism in the life and thought of Sati' al-Husri. 211p $8.50 Princeton univ. press

320.5 al-Husari, Abū Khaldūn Sātī'

ISBN 0-691-03088-X LC 78-155961

This biography "is based largely on primary sources, including interviews with al-Husri and his son. Part I examines the career of al-Husri (1880-1968) as educator, author, lecturer, and ideologue first in the Ottoman Empire . . . and later in Syria and Iraq. It also deals with his intellectual development and his . . . conversion from an Ottomanist to a champion of pan-Arabism following the destruction of the Ottoman Empire. Part II analyzes al-Husri's doctrines of secular nationalism and of . . . Arab unity, with his emphasis on a common history and language, and the rejection of religious and regional bonds." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

CLEVELAND, W. L.—Continued

"The first comprehensive study in English on the life and thought of one of the most influential and prolific writers of Arab nationalism. . . . Cleveland points to al-Husri's practice of historical selectivity in applying European models of nationalism and to his silence about the social, economic, and political dimensions of the Arab situation. . . . This is an important contribution to the study of Arab nationalism as well as to the concept of modern secular nationhood."

Choice 9:570 Je '72 160w

"Cleveland insufficiently details and documents his view that al-Husri had tremendous influence before World War II. The rest of the book examines, with a critique, al-Husri's theories and methodology, his inspirations and motives, but fails to document his alleged importance since World War II, the period during which al-Husri wrote his nationalist books. Despite these weaknesses special collections should consider the book." D. W. Littlefield

Library J 97:1803 My 15 '72 140w

CLIFFORD, FRANCIS. A wild justice. 142p $5.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

SBN 698-10443-9

LC 70-183556

This novel "concerns the Irish rebellion after World War I. Three rebels hide out in a ruined city. Liam, the leader, worries about Clodagh, a 20-year-old girl. 'All things truly terrible stemmed from innocence,' he thinks. . . . Liam worries, too, about Kenny, who is dying of pneumonia. All three have gone to ground on orders, waiting for a counterattack that may not come. In time, Liam goes for help, finding Tim, another fugitive, who offers food and whisky for Kenny if Liam will bring Clodagh in exchange." (Newsweek)

Reviewed by C. J. Keffer

Best Sell 32:192 Jl 15 '72 330w

"A meticulously written novella. . . . The girl is wild, innocent and dangerous to herself and others. It ends in tragedy. To say more would be to kill the impact of this slight but thoughtful study of desperation, endurance, cowardice and motive. The fact that it is set in Dublin is not particularly relevant; it could be the Warsaw ghetto or An Loc; it would still stand as a respectable work." Mary Borg

New Statesman 83:571 Ap 28 '72 100w

"The author thumbnails [the three rebels holed up together] with admirable deftness and leads them to a terrible undoing. The heart of the matter, he shows us, is not what their enemy can do to these rebels, but what they are capable of doing to one another. The moral freight of the novel is carried by a sequence of cause and effect that moves with overwhelming swiftness." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p28 Jl 9 '72 200w

"This is lean, slick stuff, with a convincing atmosphere and nothing wasted. Clifford directs our attention to his character's concern with survival, thereby distracting us from the pattern of revenge that is even then being planned. I should have guessed what Clodagh would do—the clues are carefully laid down—but I didn't. I was worried, as I read the story, that the end would be sentimental, but it isn't. This adds an extra fillip to the suspense: a story that seems, all along, to be wavering toward a maudlin resolution ends tough and hard." R. S. Prescott

Newsweek 80:92 Jl 10 '72 190w

TLS p612 My 26 '72 40w

CLIFFORD, PEGGY. Aspen: dreams & dilemmas; love letter to a small town [by] Peggy Clifford and John M. Smith. 214p il $15 Swallow press

917.88 Aspen, Colorado
LC 79-81962

The authors deal with a small town "disappearing under the impact of an affluent society. . . . They state the problem of Aspen as they see it, recount briefly its history, talk to a sampling of its residents, trace its growth in the last decade, and view its prospects in relation to a planned community. Snowmass-at-Aspen." (Choice)

"The style is journalistic; it alternates text with photographs which at times do not relate to the text. Its appeal is to those in the environmental struggle and to residents of the region. A problem of the work is its basic contradiction. That is, since the authors found Aspen attractive and migrated there, how can they now be critical of anyone else who would do so?"

Choice 8:1216 N '71 150w

"Despite its sometimes precious tone, and absurd price, this volume deserves attention—or we will all find ourselves living in nice, big, uniform, and colorless communities from coast to coast." R. D. Johnson

Library J 95:4190 D 1 '70 140w

CLIFTON, LUCILLE. Everett Anderson's Christmas coming; il. by Evaline Ness. unp $3.95; lib bdg $3.59 Holt

811 Christmas poetry—Juvenile literature.
Negroes—Poetry—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-03-080218-0; 0-03-080219-9 (lib bdg)
LC 75-150025

"Each of the five days before Everett's Christmas is described by a verse and full-page spread, and December twenty-third and twenty-fourth are presented in two verses and illustrations. . . . Two verses and spreads also depict the joyous Christmas morning and evening in apartment 14A where Everett lives." (Horn Bk) "Preschool to grade two." (Library J)

"Although poignant touches such as an absent father and 'downer lives' are mentioned, the overall richness of Everett's experiences dominates the text. . . . In one of the best drawings, the illustrator has rendered the boy's conception of the nativity—a manger scene with a Black Mother and Child. The book closes with a Christmas greeting moving as Tiny Tim's classic blessings in A Christmas Carol." Anita Silvey

Horn Bk 47:598 D '71 240w

"[The book contains] short, natural-sounding, childlike verses. . . . Unfortunately, the format is less effective than in Clifton's earlier book about Everett. Some of the Days of Everett Anderson [BRD 1970]. That title was well designed and illustrated in bright brown and orange; here, the brown and lavender pictures look rather somber and several of the spreads include too much empty space. . . . Nevertheless, the book overall comes closest among what's available to capturing Christmas as it is today for that large number of American children whose ambience is slushy sidewalks rather than rolling hills." D. G. Stavn

Library J 96:3485 O 15 '71 270w

"[Everett] is glimpsed, rather than explained through poems about him. . . . White middle-class parents will want answers to certain questions. For example, on Dec. 22 Everett thinks about 'If Daddy was here,' but where Daddy is, is never explained. It doesn't really have to be and city children know that. The joys of living in Apt. 14A are perfectly clear. . . . The book, illustrated by Evaline Ness, is worth taking out of the library." Jane O'Reilly

N Y Times Bk R p90 D 5 '71 140w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 54:45 D 11 '71 30w

CLIFTON, LUCILLE. Good news about the earth: new poems. 45p $5; pa $1.95 Random house

811. Negro poetry
ISBN 0-394-47469-4; 0-394-70760-5 (pa)
LC 70-37426

A collection of forty-five poems by the author of Good Times (BRD 1970).

"The combination should be fashionable: a black woman composing lyrics about black identity. In fact, several of the poems in this book—notably 'To Bobby Seale' and 'Daniel'—are beyond the criticism of anyone not born black and/or socially oppressed. Lucille Clifton's survey of her world is an interesting small addition towards greater understanding. Every secondary school and college could use it."

Choice 9:966 O '72 70w

"Lucille Clifton's urban world is a mini-Vietnam—a landscape of inner desolation. The book opens with a credo that sets the tone of a lyric poet confident of her own time and place. . . . I emphasize the word 'lyric' in describing Ms. Clifton, for beneath her anger and the recounting of history is the saving (and soothing) grace of tenderness. Love and hope spring like a scent from these pages. A simple religiosity abounds, not the cloying old-time religion or the frenetic Holy Rollerism. . . . But lest the reader imagine it's all sweetness and light, she can flash the steel of conviction that goes straight to the bone. . . . This is a small book in terms of pages, but large in feeling and humanity. It's good to have such spirits as Lucille Clifton around."

Norman Rosten

Sat R 55:58 Ag 12 '72 240w

CLINEBELL, HOWARD J. The people dynamic: changing self and society through growth groups [bvl] Howard J. Clinebell, Jr. 176p $4.95 Harper

301.1 Group relations training
SBN 06-061500-1 LC 77-160636

"The author's perspective is one of growth orientation—the setting of positive goals and the striving toward making them real. . . . [He] applies his growth formula of caring plus confrontation to a range of activities and organizations limited only by the fullness of imagination. Growth groups can be organized along lines of age, common crises, or social concern. . . . Clinebell lays out strategies for conducting various groups, such as women's and men's liberation, adult-youth confrontation, ecology, and preparation for marriage. He offers methods for training growth facilitators." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"[Here] is an unsilly introduction to human potential movements which lifts out from them what is easily transferable to church life and similar more-or-less conventional settings."

Christian Century 89:259 Mr 1 '72 30w

"This slight introduction might serve as a primer for a layman thinking of becoming a group leader." Juliet Woodbury
Library J 97:1447 Ap 15 '72 80w

CLISSOLD, STEPHEN. Latin America: new world, third world. 394p $13.50 Praeger

918 Latin America
LC 72-117472

"The author first discusses the Indian civilizations and then the years of Iberian colonization. He then treats the 20 republics from independence to the present day. In the last [section he describes] . . . the current Latin American scene, discussing class structure, the Church, labor unions, the military, economic problems, political forces, and inter-American and international relations." (Library J) Chronology. Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"Clissold covers five centuries of Latin American history in this useful tool for identifying political and historical trends. . . . [The last is the] most impressive section. . . . I find the book challenging and appreciate the detailed analysis of the various internal (including nationalism) and external forces that are shaping the future of Latin America. Highly recommended." T. L. Welch
Library J 97:3310 O 15 '72 160w

"[This masterly survey] sweeps one round the continent and through various centuries with effortless ease, and though steeped in liberal orthodoxy is by no means dogmatic in its appraisal of people and policies. But even Mr Clissold can provide no clue as to the popularity of the dictators." Richard Gott
New Statesman 84:289 S 1 '72 140w

CLOGG, RICHARD, ed. Greece under military rule; ed. by Richard Clogg and George Yannopoulos. 272p $8.95 Basic bks.

949.5 Greece, Modern—Politics and government. Greece, Modern—Social conditions
SBN 456-02709-1 LC 78-187001

These essays, which are concerned with the current Greek dictatorship, deal with such topics "as education, the press, the arts, the economy, foreign policy, . . . public administration . . . [and] the repression of dissent.

. . . Following discussions of the internal opposition forces and the foreign policy of European countries toward the Greek military government, . . . the book . . . turns to America's . . . role in the fate of Greek democracy." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This book contains] a helpful introduction by the editors. . . . All topics are well researched and avoid polemic and propaganda. Rather, they soberly describe and evaluate the long-term changes in Greek society resulting from the regime's policies. As the best book on the subject to date, [this] is recommended for academic and general library collections."

Choice 9:1028 O '72 160w

"The writers do not speak with a common voice but they are linked in their total opposition to the type of regime the Greek army has imposed on the country and to its policies. Their views have added weight since they eschew such emotive and inaccurate phrases as 'fascist' and 'totalitarian' to describe the regime, but their arguments lose persuasiveness because they do not examine the state of Greek institutions before 1967 altogether frankly."

Economist 243:68 Ap 29 '72 420w

"This collection of essays attempts to get at the underpinnings of the repugnant Greek regime, and in the process describes new and disastrous currents which threaten to tear the country apart. The book serves a particularly useful purpose by raising the question of the regime's ideological framework and thereby putting to rest the absurd theory advanced by the US government that the rule of the colonels is not in fact a repressive dictatorship, but rather represents a neopopulist revolution of Mediterranean stripe. . . . This book suggests that the junta's policies can very well produce the conditions for real revolution." James Ridgeway

New Repub 167:28 Ag 5/12 '72 1200w

"The facts about the relative stagnation and economic mismanagement under the colonels, as well as many other facts, are soberly set out in [this book]. . . . Except for Helen Vlachos's chapter on the press, written with her customary verve and fire, this volume is rather dry and ponderous, especially when you bear in mind that it's mostly written by Greeks. It is nevertheless an extremely valuable account of the balance-sheet that can be drawn up as the colonels celebrate their fifth gruesome anniversary. The picture that emerges is of a country forcibly restrained from progress as well as from freedom and justice." Mervyn Jones

New Statesman 83:753 Je 3 '72 220w

The CLOSED enterprise system; Ralph Nader's study group report on antitrust enforcement, by Mark J. Green with Beverly C. Moore, Jr. and Bruce Wasserstein. 488p il $8.95 Grossman pubs.

338.8 Monopolies. Trusts, Industrial
SBN 676-22555-X LC 77-170614

The authors argue that about two-thirds of America's manufacturing assets are concentrated in 200 large firms, which have near monopoly power over prices, and that these firms evade "the full force of possible antitrust prosecutions largely because the Justice Department and the FTC are 'hand-maidens of big business and political interest.'" (Publishers' Weekly) Index.

"A Nader group report on the erratic enforcement of antitrust law, working from the persuasively argued assumption that 'absolute corporate size . . . is dangerous because it denotes an uncompetitive market structure and because it connotes a homogenized political structure.' Or, as Nicholas Johnson of the FCC put it, 'government of the people . . . by the corporations and for the rich.'" Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 229:112 My '72 60w

Choice 9:690 Jl/Ag '72 130w

"In a limited mimeograph edition this report was released to the press in the summer of 1971 and caused a flurry at the FTC. Now, in book form, Nader and his team offer their usual factual presentation, giving corporate names and pointing their fingers at various practices of price fixing, collusion, the lack of antitrust law enforcement, and the general hear-no-evil, see-no-evil attitude of Congress and the courts. . . . A thorough, extremely well-documented analysis of the history of antitrust legislation, the lack of teeth in the laws, and the uncountable cost to the consumer over the years, this study does not

The CLOSED enterprise system—Continued
shirk to lay the blame where it belongs: the whitewashing of antitrust hearings by Congress and the unwillingness of the courts to enforce existing legislation while voiding proposed reforms. Here the reader can become 'aware,' and that is the first step in reform."
Renate Hayum
Library J 97:2071 Je 1 '72 250w

Reviewed by J. M. Blair
Nation 215:248 S 25 '72 1450w

"By now nearly everyone knows what to expect from Ralph Nader and his study groups: shocking revelations of industry's abuse of the consumer and his environment, governmental indifference, and bold and imaginative proposals for remedies. . . . [This report] is in many respects fully in the tradition of its predecessors. It is massive, convincing, and merciless. Yet it must be conceded that its account of monopolistic concentration in industry and the failure of antitrust enforcement is hardly new, and in fact has been delivered by more authoritative hands countless times before. . . . Even so, through assiduous library research and intensive interviewing the [authors] have managed to put together an impressive report."

New Repub 166:26 J1 15 '72 300w

CLOWARD, RICHARD A., jt. auth. Regulating the poor. See Piven, F. F.

CLUBE, O. EDMUND. China & Russia: the "great game." (Columbia univ. East Asian inst. East Asian study) 578p il maps $12.95
Columbia univ. press

327 Russia—Foreign relations—China. China—Foreign relations—Russia
ISBN 0-231-02740-0 LC 72-155362

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by J. A. White
Ann Am Acad 400:155 Mr '72 500w

Reviewed by John Israel
Book World p7 Ja 16 '72 850w
Christian Science Monitor p10 F 10 '72 480w

Reviewed by H. E. Salisbury
Pol Sci Q 87:273 Je '72 850w

COALE, ANSLEY J. The growth and structure of human populations; a mathematical investigation. (Princeton univ. Office of population res. Publications) 227p il $9.50 Princeton univ. press

301.32 Population. Birth rate
ISBN 0-691-09357-1 LC 76-166365

"This book is the investigation of the dynamics of population growth and structure—the changing age composition of a population as birth and death rates fluctuate. Coale's mathematical analysis of the relation between a population's fertility and mortality schedules and its growth and age distribution delineates the consequences of fluctuating birth and death rates. It shows that cyclical variations in fertility can produce amplified or attenuated cyclical fluctuations in births; explains why and to what extent a population with declining fertility continues to grow after its fertility has fallen to a level that would, in the long run, insure mere replacement; and gives evidence of the effect of rapidly declining mortality . . . on age composition." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Glossary. Index.

"This excellent book is aimed at expediting demographic analysis and computation of population statistics. . . . Readers lacking a background in integral calculus and differential equations will have difficulty. This is not to suggest that the work is intended for mathematicians, for Coale's exposition is clear and liberally sprinkled with graphical displays. An important work for libraries servicing readers interested in demographic matters."

Choice 9:1021 O '72 160w

"Coale has written a fascinating and highly original book. Population mathematics has all too often been obsessed with the mathematics to the detriment of demographic content; however, Coale's virtually unique blend of technical ability and empirical 'feel' for population dynamics allows him to avoid this common pitfall. Possibly the most adequate review of this book has already been written by Coale himself, whose final chapter constitutes a remarkably balanced assessment of the relative merits of the various topics covered. . . . This book is an impressive contribution to the understanding of the dynamics of human populations." J. N. Hobcraft

Science 177:1094 S 22 '72 1800w

COATES, AUSTIN. China, India and the ruins of Washington. 370p $10 Day

915 East and West. China—Civilization. India—Civilization
LC 74-179784

The author of Myself a Mandarin (BRD 1969) "examines Oriental cultural patterns and the fabric of the Oriental mind by juxtaposing the roots of Chinese and Indian thought patterns against each other and Western life styles." (Library J)

"Mr. Coates is a veteran of the British administrative system in the Far East, and still lives in Hong Kong. He believes, and explains in a peppery, amusing style, that Orientals think in terms very different from those of the West, and that European nations cannot hope for effective dealings with Eastern states until our diplomats understand what those terms really are. To the suggestion that Orientals might learn to understand us, Mr. Coates would reply that the habits of 4000 years cannot be altered, and also that Orientals do not understand each other, the Indian mind being chronically adrift in the clouds and the Chinese entrenched in the kitchen." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:112 Je '72 100w

"Some will take offense at [the author's] declared, but never fully explored, claims of ethical disintegration in the West. . . . He tackles his subject in terms of time-span orientation, centrality concepts, accumulation and abstinence patterns, and elaborately molds these into theoretical formulas. This leads him to some grand generalizations. . . . He singles out the pursuit of material and practical goods as the most characteristic feature of Chinese culture, at the same time distinguishing the Indian mind as a 'hierarchy of less and less.' While the book is engagingly readable, it remains a rather contrived tour de force." R. S. Haas

Library J 97:1338 Ap 1 '72 180w

COBB, JONATHAN, jt. auth. The hidden injuries of class. See Sennett R.

COBB, VICKI. Gases; il. with drawings by Ellie Haines, and photographs. 60p $3.75 Watts, F.

546 Gases—Juvenile literature
ISBN 531-00713-8 LC 74-114922

The first half of this book begins with an "elementary discussion of what a gas is; next comes a thorough treatment of the relationship of volume, temperature and pressure; then the work of Boyle, Charles and Gay-Lussac; then Bernoulli, the kinetic theory, and absolute zero. The discovery and uses of oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen, fluorine, chlorine, the noble gases, carbon oxides, nitrogen-containing gases, natural gas and Freon are described. The concluding pages . . . present Gay-Lussac's law of combining volumes and Avogadro's hypothesis. [Index.] Grades four to eight." (Library J)

"I was . . . disturbed by some of the inaccuracies [here]. . . . Liquid oxygen is not used with solid fuels; helium is not the 'coldest substance on earth'; temperature is not a property of a substance; van Helmont's reason for coining the word 'gas' had nothing to do with cracks or caves. Miss Cobb did well in demonstrating that air and other gases are matter, though her air-weighing experiment on page 5 does not work (Archimedes could have told why). Although she does well with Charles' and Boyle's laws the book has too many slips in its statements of fact." H. C. Stubbs

Horn Bk 47:187 Ap '71 170w

"For this age group, this probably is the best book available dealing exclusively with gases. . . . Throughout, a number of simple, home experiments are described. The illustrations, photographs and reproductions are all excellent, detailing equipment and happily showing many of the scientists in their laboratories instead of in the usual frilled and furbelowed poses." Susan Catania

Library J 96:2128 Je 15 '71 80w

COBB, VICKI. Sense of direction; up and down and all around; pictures by Carol Nicklaus. (Stepping-stone bk) 64p maps lib bdg $3.75
Parents mag. press

912 Maps—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-8193-0508-1 LC 78-156315

The book covers "up and down in relation to people; landmarks; the history of maps; how to make, read and use them; air and sea navigation; latitude and longitude; globes; compasses; and using the five senses to know direction. [Index.] Grades three to four." (Library J)

"Miss Cobb does make reference to gravity in determining up and down, but she does not mention the human vestibular mechanism or the senses which detect stress on muscles and joints. Most of the book, is concerned with latitude and longitude, the stars as direction-finders, terrestrial landmarks, and the like. . . . There are some slips. On page 27 one might get the idea that any metal will upset a magnetic compass; actually, iron is the only common one which will do so." H. C. Stubbs
Horn Bk 48:490 O '72 110w

"A wordy discussion of the theory and practice of direction. . . . The overly long sentences and paragraphs are often confusing, and some statements are so oversimplified as to be misleading—e.g., 'When you travel north or south on earth you can go only as far as the Poles.'" S. A. Smith
Library J 97:3451 O 15 '72 110w

COCHISE, CIVE "NINO". The first hundred years of Nino Cochise; the untold story of an Apache Indian chief; as told by Cive "Nino" Cochise to A. Kinney Griffith. 346p il $9.95
Abelard-Schuman

B or 92 Apache Indians
ISBN 0-200-71830-4 LC 70-157980

"'Nino' Cochise, the 97-year-old grandson of Cochise, recalls the . . . details of his life in the mountains of Sonora, Mexico where his clan of Chiricahua Apaches established themselves in 1876 rather than go to the San Carlos reservation. Under the leadership of Nino's mother these 'Nameless Ones,' . . . lived in peace and retained their heritage. Under Nino's leadership, however the tribe became increasingly involved in the political affairs of Mexico; and the alliance with American ranchers and Mexican Indians brought war and the dissolution of their Apache way of life." (Library J) Index.

"An anthropologist will find the book a veritable mine salted with innumerable stories of Apache culture and tribal customs. A student of comparative religion will find many rich veins of religious ideas among those primitive tribes. . . . Many names crop up in the long story: Teddy Roosevelt; Tom Jeffords the grand and good Indian agent; . . . Pancho Villa and Porfirio Diaz off Mexico; and even John Wayne the movie hero. . . . All-in-all, however, the story strikes a rather grim note of sadness. . . . No person likes to see decay among a valiant tribe of men, but steady and gradual decay is there, just the same. . . . The book is well written. Too bad it does not have a happier ending. Mr. Griffith has furnished a good index and a fine set of cover-ups, and he has made his story lively by many old and new colloquialisms." E. A. Dooley
Best Sell 31:440 Ja 1 '72 450w

Reviewed by Jack Gregory and Rennand Strickland
Commonweal 96:289 My 26 '72 130w

"[An] intimate and personal story . . . this reveals a vital and likeable personality. Warmly recommended." J. W. Stevenson
Library J 96:3317 O 15 '71 140w

"Nino's story concerns his childhood in the Mexican-Sierra Madre, his family life, gold mining, Indian customs and his happy marriage. The book's brief epilogue tells of his life after 1920 when he became a Hollywood extra and was exploited by wild-west shows. Compared with The Memoirs of Chief Red Fox, Nino's story, though much more readable, is uneventful and does not make a great work." Collin Clark

Library J 97:1628 Ap 15 '72 100w [YA]

"Nino Cochise confesses that 'I find it impossible to pinpoint the time and place where myths and realities merge and where legends die and life goes on regardless.' The reliability of the book is naturally reduced because of that disclaimer . . . [but it] is written with restraint, attention to detail, and modesty, and it is at least a very good story." Peter Farb
N Y Rev of Books 17:36 D 16 '72 650w

COCHRAN, THOMAS C. Business in American life; a history. 402p $12.50 McGraw

330.793 Business—History. U.S.—Economic conditions

ISBN 0-07-011520-6 LC 78-38740

The author discusses "how business has influenced American family life, education, religion, law, politics, conditions of employment, and social structure." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Cochran's study provides extraordinary breadth and an admirable fusion of the study of entrepreneurs, and their organizations, with the history of the larger society within which they functioned and which they helped to transform. . . . He draws on an astonishing variety of sources and provides the reader with many original insights, a considerable achievement in a book directed at the nonspecialist. . . . [This is] a fresh, unique study that will supplement any standard business or economic history of the U.S. Should be in every library."

Choice 9:1324 D '72 190w

"[Cochran's] book is without doubt one of the most thorough overviews of the relationship between business and American life. Built on a particularly rich bibliographical foundation, it contributes significantly to the growing rapprochement between the methodologies of historical and behavioral science by utilizing, for example, role theory to show how technological change has altered American society." P. A. Kalisch

Library J 97:1805 My 15 '72 100w

"This book by the president of the American Historical Association is innovative and important. . . . None of Mr. Cochran's themes, or his sources, is absolutely novel, but his coolly detached style, reminiscent of Thorstein Veblen, makes his indictment of business's domination of our society more effective than the preachings of many contemporary 'revisionist' historians."

N Y Times Bk R p20 Ag 6 '72 280w

CODY, JOHN. After great pain; the inner life of Emily Dickinson. 538p $14.95 Belknap press of Harvard univ. press

B or 92 Dickinson, Emily
ISBN 0-674-00878-2 LC 79-148937

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Albert Gelpi
Am Lit 44:157 Mr '72 850w

Reviewed by Scott Donaldson
New Eng Q 45:127 Mr '72 800w
TLS p624 Je 2 '72 1550w

COFACCI, GINO P. How to eat (and drink) your way through a French (or Italian) menu. See Beard, J.

COFFEY, J. I. Strategic power and national security. 214p $9.50 Univ. of Pittsburgh press

355.02 U.S.—Defenses. U.S.—Military policy
ISBN 0-8229-3229-6 LC 75-158188

This is a "synthesis and extension of contemporary public debates on (1) appropriate numbers and types of nuclear weapons and delivery systems, (2) the probability and consequences of a nuclear exchange with Russia and China, and (3) appropriate American defense postures." (Choice) Index.

"Both strategic power and national security have engendered a large body of literature. In treating the intersection of the two, Coffey has of course been selective rather than encyclopedic, but the book seems both honest and fair in its selectivity. . . . [The book provides a valuable] contribution to the literature of strategic arms and to their control. Those fully familiar with the strategic picture and its history will benefit only by a few ideas, but those more distant from the problem will find it a fine discussion of the field." R. L. Garwin

COFFEY, J. I.—Continued

Bul Atomic Sci 28:59 S '72 1800w

"Coffey attempts to relate strategic nuclear power to deterrence, Communist behavior, alliance relations, arms control, conventional warfare, and national security by referencing well known political, military, and academic contributors to the debates. Tabular data and comparative interpretations of American and Communist forces are typical of and often extracted from annual Congressional hearings on defense appropriations. There is an attempt at quantitative and objective analysis. Unfortunately, most defense policy debates are so permeated by undemonstrable assumptions, relativity, vested interests, and political expediency that conclusions must be problematic and quickly tend to become outdated. . . . Glossary of weapons and strategy terms. . . . Of limited value to specialized libraries.
Choice 9:278 Ap '72 150w

"This helpful but not essential survey . . . is current, well documented, and lucidly written. . . . Coffey is concerned about the present and the immediate future; there is much breadth, but little depth, theory, or historical perspective. He is best in his discussion of the military and technical factors. . . . None of the recent works on the arms race and defense policies explore how changes in military technology affect strategy, deterrence, and security in as up-to-date or comprehensive a fashion." W. C. Robinson
Library J 96:2519 Ag '71 210w

COFFIN, TRISTRAM POTTER. The old ball game; baseball in folklore and fiction. 206p $6.50 Herder & Herder 796.357 Baseball
LC 75-165495

The author "demonstrates the continuities between the folk tradition and baseball and also discusses the folklore that has grown up around the game. His final three chapters 'concern themselves with organized ball as a subject or backdrop for all sorts of journalists and authors,' from the Frank Merriwell stories to the fiction of Bernard Malamud and Robert Coover." (Library J) Index.

"Coffin's evocation of the glory days of the 'old ball game' will be a delight to baseball fans. . . . [He] is especially enlightening in discussing the folk antecedents of such heroes as Babe Ruth, Ty Cobb, Dizzy Dean, and Satchel Paige; but it should be emphasized that throughout his perspective is casual and unacademic. His book is a labor of love, not a treatise. The Old Ball Game might have profited from an account of how baseball has gotten entangled in the technocracy, and I miss more detailed commentary on some of the novelists. Nevertheless, such omissions were deliberate: a charmed circle once protected the national pastime, and that is the lost world this book conjures up so splendidly." Keith Cushman
Library J 96:2666 S 1 '71 200w

"Some of [Coffin's] points are well-taken: the function of baseball lingo in American speech, the game as an 'outlet for the underprivileged,' sportswriters as mythmakers 'who rapidly learned the profit in recording real players and real ballgames in terms of Frank Merriwell's never-never land.' But his comments on serious baseball fiction are most unsatisfactory, and on the whole the book is slight: a good idea unfulfilled." Jonathan Yardley
New Repub 165:23 D 18 '71 90w

COHEN, CARL. Democracy. 302p $10 Univ. of Ga. press

321.8 Democracy
SBN 8203-0271-6 LC 77-142911

"The first four sections of Cohen's book attempt to ascertain the principles, presuppositions, instruments, and conditions of democracy; the final two sections deal with the defense of democracy and its prospects." (Choice) Index.

"The virtues of the book lie in parts of the first four sections. There Cohen traces in detail those aspects of democracy, e.g. breadth, depth, range, which are only briefly discussed in more classic works such as [L.] Lipson's Democratic civilization [BRD 1965], and Sartre's Democratic theory. . . . The book is helpful in clarifying issues normally skirted in other treatments."

Choice 8:1641 F '72 160w

"This book is among the most thorough and useful studies of liberal democratic philosophy we now have. The argument is often abstract and difficult, but always clear and concise. . . . The strict adherence to personal interest is a source of difficulty in this generally excellent book, but liberal democracy has a vast number of virtues that have escaped its recent critics—virtues that Cohen articulates and defends with unrivaled skill." G. J. Schochet
Library J 97:1814 My 15 '72 180w

"In marshaling comprehensively all the arguments that have been advanced to explain and justify democracy, Professor Cohen reveals his gift for 'exact and elegant expression.' . . . Democracy could wish for no more lucid or devoted or logically precise champion. . . . [But] Cohen is hobbled from the outset by the logical contradiction in his working concept. The Greek etymology of 'democracy,' Cohen reminds us, is rule or exercise of power by the people. Who are the people and over whom do they rule? No nation has ever or can ever govern itself, Cohen concedes, but this is the 'paradox' of self-rule. . . . Cohen is at his best in the sincerity with which he pleads for the absolute right of freedom of speech, freedom to dissent, unencumbered by Mr. Justice Holmes's celebrated 'clear and present danger' loophole." Ronald Sampson
Nation 213:213 S 13 '71 2850w

COHEN, DANIEL. Talking with the animals. 134p il $3.95 Dodd

591 Animal communication—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-396-06280-6 LC 75-134321

This is an "account of man's efforts to learn if and how animals communicate, including speculation and investigation into the possibilities of man communicating with non-human species. Discussions range from mythological animals who talk to talking birds, dogs who communicate with man, and talkative whales. A major section of the book is devoted to apes. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades four to six." (Library J)

"Photographs and reproductions add to the text. However, [M.] Selsam's The Language of Animals [BRD 1963], Wiley's Beasts, Brains, and Behavior and [R.] Freedman and [J.E.] Morriss' How Animals Learn [BRD 1970] all cover much the same material and are excellent texts. Cohen's book, then, is a valid addition where material on the subject is needed." Frances Postell
Library J 97:2482 J1 '72 130w

"[This book] answers some questions, stimulates even more." Paul Showers
N Y Times Bk R p8 My 16 '71 50w

COHEN, HENRY. Business and politics in America from the age of Jackson to the Civil War; the career biography of W. W. Corcoran. 409p il $13.50 Greenwood pub. corp.

332.1 Corcoran, William Wilson. Finance U.S.—History. U.S.—Politics and government—1815-1865
ISBN 0-8371-3300-9 LC 70-98708

This is an account of the business career of W. W. Corcoran, "the 'foremost political banker of the day,' . . . whose living was made by acting mainly in one capacity or another as banker for the government. He is the 'insider' with access to 'deals,' the 'financier' with wide knowledge of investing opportunities. . . . [His] principal business activities took place between 1840 and 1854 when he was senior partner of Corcoran and Riggs, investment bankers in the capitol. . . . He capped his business career by being a leading financier of the Mexican War and its aftermath." (Ann Am Acad) Bibliography.

"Since Corcoran does not emerge a seminal leader, and since his work does not appear to lead to innovative change except perhaps in the field of international distribution of securities, the weight of detail of transactions tends to burden the reader. This, however, is perhaps inevitable in a business biography of ■■ investment banker. On the other hand, it clearly is a valuable reference work, a veritable catalogue of the political aspects of financial transactions." Ervin Miller

Ann Am Acad 399:243 Ja '72 340w

"Well written and thoroughly researched (the notes and bibliography take up more than 150 pages), this original study by a competent academician will appeal to students of finance, economic and business historians, and to American historians interested in the role of business in politics."
Choice 8:1062 O '71 180w

"It is clear that in working on Corcoran, Henry Cohen has done an enormous amount of research on many complicated and drawn-out episodes in American public and private finance, politics, and diplomacy. He is particularly good in unraveling the intricacies and exposing the questionable ethics of the Mexican War loans, the Mexican claims, and the Texas and California public debt. The treatment of Corcoran's role in securing the 1856 Democratic presidential nomination for James Buchanan sheds new light; and the information presented on his generous gifts to eleemosynary, educational, and artistic institutions marks Corcoran as a major philanthropist of the last century." Irving Katz
J Am Hist 59:145 Je '72 600w

COHEN, HERMANN. Reason and hope; selections from [the] Jewish writings of Hermann Cohen; tr. by Eva Jospe. 237p $6.50 Norton

296 Judaism
ISBN 0-393-04341-X LC 70-133958

The author seeks "to effect a synthesis between philosophy and religion and between the highest values of Judaism and the highest values of the German spirit. This book is based on Cohen's posthumously published Jewish Writings." (Library J)

"These essays from the turn of the century—most of them uniting the Hebrew prophets' vision to German neo-Kantianism—are a welcome addition to 'The B'nai B'rith Jewish Heritage Classics Series.'"
Christian Century 88:410 Mr 31 '71 30w

"[Cohen is] an exemplar of the German Jewish community. . . . A professor at Marburg, he was a renowned interpreter of Kant and the creator of the school of 'critical idealism' in philosophy. . . . Jospe has done more than translate Cohen's words; by her perceptive introductions and lucid notes she has explicated Cohen's ideas." L. S. Kravitz
Library J 96:1277 Ap 1 '71 110w

COHEN, HERMANN. Religion of reason: out of the sources of Judaism; tr. with an introd. by Simon Kaplan; introd. essay by Leo Strauss. 439p $15 Ungar

296 Judaism
ISBN 0-8044-5229-6 LC 76-125962

In twenty-two chapters the author, who died in 1918, writes of such topics as atonement, the law, prayer, the idea of the messiah and virtue. Translated from the German of the second revised edition. Index to Biblical passages in text. Index to Rabbinical works in text. Index to proper names. Index to Hebrew words.

"[The translator] has provided excellent indices; the translation is fluent and poses no problems. The translator's introduction explains the importance of the work and places it into the context of the author's life. . . . The book is a classic in modern Judaic theology. . . . [It] now replaces Reason and hope; selections from the Jewish writings of Hermann Cohen, translated by Jospe [BRD 1972]."
Choice 9:827 S '72 190w

"[This book] gives us an idea of the mental set of the German Jew of Cohen's time, of his need to make Judaism 'rational.' It also gives us some interesting insights into the nature of religious thinking. Alas, the translation in good part preserves the turgid quality of the original." L. S. Kravitz
Library J 96:2656 S 1 '71 210w

COHEN, I. BERNARD. Introduction to Newton's Principia. 330p $30 Harvard univ. press
531 Newton, Sir Isaac—Principia. Mechanics
ISBN 0-674-46175-4 LC 78-28770

The aim of this work "is to give the reader a framework from which he can understand the genesis and evolution . . . of the Principia. . . and appreciate the reactions it produced." (Choice)

"Newton is seldom read in the original; and the practicing physicist is generally not aware of the contents of Newton's masterpiece, the Principia, let alone the circumstances preceding and following its publication. This very readable volume, conceived by two renowned historians of science and executed by one of them, presents a fascinating introduction to that work. . . . The style . . . is crisp, the references abundant, and the comments revealing. Equipped with profound erudition and a potent historical perspective, Professor Cohen has produced a chef d'oeuvre which is certain to become an indispensable item for Newtonian scholars in the generations to come. It will also provide much intellectual delight to the general reader of science and history. Warmly recommended to all libraries."
Choice 8:1599 F '72 160w

"Cohen has made extensive use of primary and secondary sources in piecing together the often intricate train of events leading to each of the [three] editions and the various stages through which the text went in reaching final form. . . . In each instance, Cohen carefully analyzes the editor's contribution to the substantial revisions undertaken. With some exceptions, his analysis only underlines the extent to which the Principia was Newton's own work." M. S. Mahoney
Science 177:340 Jl 28 '72 1200w

Reviewed by Philip Morrison
Sci Am 226:132 Je '72 380w

"[This is the introductory volume to] the long-heralded variorum edition of the Principia begun by Professors Koyré and Cohen, and completed by the latter alone since his collaborator's death in 1964. . . . [It] deals essentially with two topics. The first is an account of the origin of this edition . . . of its organization, and of the other publications in connexion with it that are to appear in the future, notably a Commentary on the Principia text and a revised English translation. Throughout the Introduction Professor Cohen illustrates the usefulness of the variant readings he has collected and of much other material, largely manuscript, bearing on the development of Newton's book. Some of this leads into odd byways. The Introduction may be read by itself as the summary and present culmination of a scholarly tradition more than a century old devoted to the Principia."
TLS pl575 D 17 '71 1200w

COHEN, JOEL E. Casual groups of monkeys and men; stochastic models of elemental social systems. 175p $8 Harvard univ. press

301.072 Sociology—Mathematical models
ISBN 0-674-09981-8 LC 73-133215

The author "has investigated elemental or casual social groups of monkeys, adult humans, and nursery school children, using linear one-step transition models which describe and predict the equilibrium and dynamics of group size distributions." (Choice) Bibliography.

"The first of its kind, this volume represents a successful venture by a mathematician applying stochastic models to the analysis of social behavior. . . . Cohen has clearly demonstrated the applicability of math models to behavior analysis, and it is anticipated on the basis of this book that there will be more work in this area in the future. Useful reading for a graduate seminar in behavior research methods and social dynamics. Well indexed and referenced."
Choice 8:869 S '71 120w

"Few ethologists possess the mathematical expertise to develop [quantitative] . . . models themselves, so it is reassuring to find mathematicians like Cohen willing to apply their special skills to this end. Cohen's monograph focuses on only one basic aspect of social grouping, albeit one with many important ramifications—the determination of the sizes of freely forming primate groups and their fluctuations through time. . . . While the scope of this book is thus more restricted than its title might suggest, it is clear that applying such analyses to a sufficient variety of behavioral phenomena will contribute greatly to the future power of systematic ethology; so in its way it represents a minor milestone." Ian Vine

COHEN, J. E.—Continued

Science 175:157 Ja 14 '72 850w

COHEN, MARTIN A., ed. The Jewish experience in Latin America; sel. studies from the publications of the Am. Jewish hist. soc; ed. with an introd. by Martin A. Cohen. 2v 497; 374p $29.50 Am. Jewish hist. soc; Ktav

301.45 Jews in South America
SBN 87068-136-2 LC 78-138850

"This collection of 25 articles [was] published between 1895 and 1966. . . . Twelve deal with Marrano martyrs; ten with the Jews in 17th-Century Brazil; two with the strange editor of the first Jewish periodical in Mexico in the late 19th-Century; and one with the bureaucratic problems of Baron de Hirsh's colonization plans for Eastern European immigrants to Argentina." (Library J) Bibliography. Index of authors. Index of names.

"None of the authors are known authorities on the Jews of Latin America, although two have written authoritatively on aspects of a particular country. Five of the biographical articles are concerned with personalities who played no role in history nor are they typical. The title seems obviously pompous. The editor's introduction is an attempt to synthesize the history of Latin American Jewry on the basis of material drawn from recognizable secondary and tertiary sources, some of which are naive and erroneous. . . . For scholars, the volumes have no interest. For use by neophytes, there is questionable elucidation. Although the editor indicates many errors in the article, his failure to indicate others may be due to unfamiliarity with archival sources."
Choice 9:1194 N '72 200w

"The quality of the articles varies greatly (indicating how scholarship in this area has developed), from the romantic antiquarianism of those who first discovered the Marrano martyrs in the 1890's, to the recent fine scholarly studies of Martin A. Cohen and Arnold Wiznitzer. The only new contribution is Cohen's excellent 55-page introductory essay setting the problem of Jewish experience in Latin America in historical perspective. Cohen also has added notes on the articles, correcting some of the serious errors and indicating new literature that should be consulted; plus an extensive introductory bibliography to the field. . . . The collection [however] as a whole hardly lives up to its title. . . . Specialists may take advantage of having this collection at hand (but they also usually have access to the original publications). Others will be misled if they consider this collection apart from the other available materials." R. H. Popkin
Library J 97:2183 Je 15 '72 650w

COHEN, STEPHEN D. International monetary reform, 1964-69; the political dimension. 201p $13.50 Praeger

332.1 Finance, International
LC 72-119521

This study is an "analysis of the political aspects of the international monetary reform negotiations preceding creation of the Special Drawing Rights." (Am Pol Sci R)

"Unlike most historical studies of the period, Cohen's has not been made obsolete by the 1971 international foreign exchange crisis. In fact, he has no illusions about the limitations of the existing arrangements for international liquidity. It is most refreshing to perceive that a certain political realism has been injected into the academic analysis of the monetary system. . . . When Cohen wrote his book he did not underestimate the disunity among the Common Market partners—a disunity that came to the fore again during the hectic negotiations on monetary tactics in 1971. Although this is a specialized study, limited in scope and time, it is nevertheless a further contribution to the growing literature which reminds us that modern economics originated in a discipline defined as political economy." H. S. Bloch
Am Pol Sci R 65:1246 D '71 950w

"This book [is] based upon a doctoral dissertation. . . . The exposition is clear but the nature of the subject matter makes the book of more interest to the larger or more specialized collection." R. S. White
Library J 95:3274 O 1 '70 140w

COHEN, WARREN I. America's response to China; an interpretative history of Sino-American relations. (America and the world) 242p maps $7.95; pa $3.95 Wiley 327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations—China. China—Foreign relations—U.S.

ISBN 0-471-16335-X; 0-471-16336-8 (pa)
LC 78-155117

This is an "examination of the essence of the American failure in China. . . . While Cohen is concerned primarily with the perceptions and behavior of American historical figures and politicians, he also ventures to discuss the Chinese setting—conditions in China, the national interest of China, and Chinese provocation of and response to American policy." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by J. K. Fairbanks
Am Pol Sci R 66:1079 S '72 1200w

"[Cohen] focuses entirely on the complex relationship of these intertwined but mutually uncomprehending societies. With an impressive mastery of his subject, and skillful ability to weave the elements of a complex history into a coherent pattern. . . . [he] shows how a combination of naive romanticism, racism, hypocrisy, and unacknowledged imperialism led us to create an image of China that bore no relation to reality. This concise, lucid, and highly readable analysis is essential to an understanding of a century-and-a-half of misunderstanding, and puts the complex China tangle into perspective." Ronald Steel
Book World p1 Ap 9 '72 160w

"A brief but timely and perceptive narrative of America and China. Lucidly and perceptively, Cohen presents the main themes of Sino-American relations down to the summer of 1970, balancing his analysis fairly between economic and political considerations. . . . His deliberately sparse footnotes provoke questions as to sources of some newer judgments. . . . [This] is a worthy companion to [J.] Fairbanks' The United States and China [BRD 1972], and offers new encouragement to Americans to view China more reasonably and less emotionally. . . . This volume should be in any library, institutional or personal."
Choice 8:1626 F '72 120w

"This book is especially rewarding in its discussion of American attitudes toward the growth of Chinese communism. . . . In any work which compresses so much material into so few pages, questions of focus inevitably become more insistent. Too often Cohen explores the Chinese side in more detail than the American and, in general, one wishes for more of the domestic context in which American policy was formed. East Asian specialists within the state department had considerable impact upon policy, but readers learn little about their emergence as a group or the variations in their influence over time. In part such limitations reflect gaps in the secondary literature which a book of this sort cannot fill." C. E. Neu
J Am Hist 59:196 Je '72 800w

"Cohen's book will offer no great comfort to either Americans or Chinese to see themselves as the author sees them. However, the reader will find it as balanced and as stimulating as a general textbook should be." W. S. Wong
Library J 96:2637 S 1 '71 170w

COHEN, WILLIAM B. Rulers of empire: the French colonial service in Africa. 279p 11 maps $9.50 Hoover inst. press

325.3 France—Colonies. France in Africa. Africa, West—Politics and government
SBN 8179-1951-1 LC 76-137405

This is a "study of the French colonial service in Africa from the Third Republic to the end of empire. . . . [It is] an analysis of the men who composed the corps, their backgrounds, training, and activities in Africa, and secondarily a study of colonial policy." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"There is no comparable book in any language. . . . Extensively researched. . . . [this work includes] responses to questionnaires from former officials. The work demonstrates that prior to 1914 the colonies attracted men who found opportunities at home too limited, as well as men eager for adventure and quick promotion; it was unusual to find enlightened and dedicated men in colonial posts. Policy was made frequently in the colonies rather than in Paris, affording opportunity for terrible abuse of power. . . . Excellent bibliography. . . . For collections in the history of France and of imperialism."
Choice 9:262 Ap '72 150w

"[Cohen] provides an entire chapter on the Ecole Coloniale, including a discussion of the role of Georges Hardy. . . . [He] makes clear such matters as the actual roles and powers of agents, 'bush' administrators, et al. He appraises such leaders as Faidherbe, Lyautey, and Eboué in supplementary vignettes which he always keeps subordinated to his theme—the corps itself. The effects of improved roads, medicine, and cars all figure in his assessment. As measured by the number of French functionaries employed in the newly independent governments, Cohen contends that France handled decolonization better than the United Kingdom. Recommended." Garland Downum
Library J 97:1320 Ap 1 '72 130w

COHN, BERNARD S. India: the social anthropology of civilization. 164p $6.95; pa $2.95 Prentice-Hall

309.154 India—Social conditions. India—Economic conditions
SBN 13-456871-0; 13-456863-X (pa)
LC 76-134734

This is a "survey of Indian geography, cultural history, and social organization." (Am Anthropol)

"[This work] ought to have wide use among those new to Indian studies; and yet, because of an incredible number of misprints and a somewhat anti-British bias, the worth of the whole volume for undergraduates is questionable. . . . The author is at his best in the cultural history of the nineteenth century, particularly when he discusses British and Indian views of the nation. He is at his weakest in the twentieth century and on matters of geography. His discussion of social organization is competent, but perhaps too brief to have much utility." Paul Hockings
Am Anthropol 74:850 Ag '72 400w

"[This book] purports to be a combination of anthropological and historical approaches to the study of Indian society. In fact, it is neither. Instead it is a kind of summary document of things Indian that have captivated the interest of a burgeoning band of mutually self-supporting 'Indianists.' From a mélange of articles and monographs whose only common feature is an Indian locus, Cohn attempts to draw out a thin thread of research ideology. . . . As a synthesis of modern Indian studies this book is bad history and worse anthropology." Choice 8:918 S '71 160w

"[In] the historical section . . . most interesting perhaps are the passages on the changing socio-economic conditions of the Mughal and British periods, notably in relation to the land. Both the first and third sections are clearly written, but suffer inevitably from the short space in which Cohn must set out his points. . . . [He] has interesting things to say about, inter alia, the relation of village to town, the views people have (and have had) of the past, the ways in which urban behaviour comprises both traditional and modern elements. He is uniquely qualified to write such a book and his view of both past and present is a needed one; that he has only partly succeeded indicates to this reader that the task is not feasible in the space he has allotted to himself." A. C. Mayer
Pacific Affairs 45:440 fall '72 550w

COHN, ROY. A fool for a client; my struggle against the power of a public prosecutor. 192p $6.95 Hawthorn bks.

343.09 Criminal law. Morgenthau, Robert Morris
LC 79-130741

The author "describes his legal altercations with U.S. District Attorney Robert Morgenthau and other politicians." (Library J)

"This book is an indictment of certain aspects of the grand jury system which self-seeking, political aspiring, or vengeful prosecutors use—not for justice, but for self-aggrandizement or revenge. . . . Cohn names the prosecutors, the criminals with whom deals were made, and even judges, so it will be interesting to see if any actions for damages are filed. In addition, he gives some suggestions for changes in our trial system which will make 'our system of justice, like our country, the finest in the world.' This narration can be recommended to all readers and should be made compulsory for all prosecutors." J. B. Cullen
Best Sell 31:199 Ag 1 '71 750w

"Using a combination of clearly convincing evidence and more minor points which he chooses to emphasize, Cohn traces the web of the vendetta he feels was carried out against him. The reader may well decide that Cohn really wasn't worth the bother in the post-McCarthy period. It was as a counsel for the Wisconsin senator that Cohn briefly became a significant personage. The rest of his story is largely a footnote. The author's interesting, provocative style is bound to bring out the predictable supporters and critics. Recommended for libraries aiming at balanced collections in this area." H. R. Weiner
Library J 96:2340 Jl '71 170w

"[Cohn's] story suggests the manner in which enormous powers heaped up for the supposed purpose of catching criminals can be used for the harassment of non-criminal dissenters, including conservatives. . . . The book is a mixture of financial intrigue, complex legal issues and political infighting." M. S. Evans
Nat R 23:936 Ag 24 '71 850w

COHN, RUBY. Dialogue in American drama. 340p $9.50 Ind. univ. press

812 American drama—History and criticism
ISBN 0-253-11620-1 LC 76-154898

Mrs. Cohn's "view of dialogue is Aristotelian—that dialogue furthers plot and reveals character—so that she confines her analyses to those playwrights she believes have written original and distinctive dramatic dialogue [O'Neill, Miller, Albee and Williams. She] . . . discusses plays written by a select group of American novelists and poets who she believes have produced plays of dramatic interest. . . . These writers include [among others] Theodore Dreiser, Thomas Wolfe, John Dos Passos, F. Scott Fitzgerald, Langston Hughes, Ernest Hemingway, James Baldwin, Wallace Stevens, Robert Frost, Robinson Jeffers, e.e. cummings, William Carlos Williams, [and] Archibald MacLeish." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The book's real substance is contained in chapters 2 to 5, analyses of O'Neill, Miller, Williams, and Albee. After that it spreads itself out over, and peters out in, brief descriptions of the many twentieth-century American novelists and poets who tried their hand at drama. . . . However, the subject is an extremely interesting one, and Dialogues in American Drama is a good start in a promising direction opening up manifold possibilities." J. H. Raleigh
Am Lit 44:174 Mr '72 420w

"[The author, who] hears as well as she reads, . . . chops, grinds, minces and squeezes the plays and analyzes each resulting bit of dialogue; nothing is without meaning or interpretation. In the end, one wants to cry with the Artaud she decries, 'No more masterpieces!' This is the kind of book one reads for the sheer delight of bantering about with an alert and keen banterer. It's a bunch of her old articles and analyses, glopped under what might have been an idea . . . but it doesn't matter much." Choice 9:520 Je '72 140w

"The best modern American dramas fall short of the best European, and I believe that I have shown that the shortcomings are in the dialogue." This book deals with American drama using a standard method of organization. . . . The plays themselves are discussed in terms of character, plot, and theme. There are some very fine moments of analysis, when Cohn reads the plays with a sensitivity reserved usually for poetry. She is particularly alert to the etymology of names and often finds there a whole essence. But why is the book titled Dialogue? Language is really what Cohn deals with when she is most original. She has not gotten to the roots of dialogue as such." Kristin Morrison
Library J 96:2787 S 15 '71 150w

COKE, VAN DEREN. Nordfeldt the painter. 149p il col il $12 Univ. of N.Mex. press

759.13 Nordfeldt, Bror Julius Olsson
LC 71-183866

This is an account of Nordfeldt's "chronological development, a critical study of his work, and an examination of his place in American art." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Chronology. Index.

"[This is] an enthusiastic but superficial study that is an attempt to establish for the little known Nordfeldt a position as a major American 'Expressionist,' comparable to Kuhn and Hartley in particular. Coke traces rapidly Nordfeldt's development as printmaker and painter, through the influences of Whistler, Cézanne, Vlaminck, and Segonzac, to the rather mannered synthesis of the final years of his life. There are a few references to his ideas as artist and teacher, and some comments on his materials and methods. Biographical details and comments on his moods and personality are introduced from time to time, but the major focus is of the evolution of the works. . . . Seventy black-and-white and 17 color reproductions illustrate the text adequately. . . . Worth acquiring."

COKE, VAN DEREN—Continued

Choice 9:798 S '72 180w

"In this excellent study, Coke keeps the biographical data to a minimum, using it only to hold together passages of terse, perceptive criticism. The illustrations are not particularly good, but adequate enough to show the startling and wonderful growth that occurred (about 1945) in Nordfeldt's style." A. D. Ross
Library J 97:1800 My 15 '72 160w

COKE, VAN DEREN. The painter and the photograph; from Delacroix to Warhol. rev & enl ed 324p il $32 Univ. of N.Mex. press

759.06 Photography, Artistic. Paintings
LC 75-129804

The author explores the "relationship between photography and painting [and shows] that almost from the date of its invention the camera has been used by such artists as Delacroix, Manet, Corot, Gauguin, Degas, Picasso, Rouault, Derain, Dali, Hartley, Shah, Warhol, and . . . others . . . to expand their vision and guide their brush. In hundreds of paired illustrations . . . the author matches the photograph from which the artist worked with the painting produced from that photograph. And he traces and discusses, with . . . illustrations, the changing trends in the use of photography in modern art." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[The book's] documentation is so rich and varied that it constitutes an impressive landmark in the midst of the books and articles devoted to the subject. The material is arranged according to categories—portraits, genre, stop-action, landscapes, etc.—in each of which there are startling juxtapositions that raise the most basic questions about art and realisms, realisms old and new, about the realisms of Eakins and Chuck Close—and one is led to think of a Van Eyck. A book of tremendous interest and implications that deserves the widest of audiences."

Choice 9:798 S '72 200w

"The book, originally published in 1964 as an exhibition catalog, has been updated and enlarged to include more examples of the thesis." R. R. Harris

Library J 97:2173 Je 15 '72 80w

COLBY, VINETA. The singular anomaly; women novelists of the nineteenth century. 313p $10; pa $3.50 N.Y. univ. press

823 Women as authors. English fiction
SBN 8147-0096-9; 8147-0097-7 (pa);
LC 70-92522

The author considers Eliza Lynn Linton, Mrs. Humphry Ward, John Oliver Hobbes (Mrs. Pearl Craigie), Olive Schreiner, and Vernon Lee (Violet Paget). Index.

Reviewed by Barbara Hardy

Encounter 38:48 D '71 240w

"Colby presents five loosely related portraits of didactic women novelists. She views the novel, as written by the authors under examination, as a vehicle for the expression and dissemination of ideas rather than as a significant literary form. So far, so good. The main problem is that no pattern of ideas emerges; the unifying thread is simply the gender of the novelists. Colby favors description over analysis, and what emerges is an uneven set of studies (that of Olive Schreiner is the best) of rather obscure practitioners of a minor but persistent subgenre that provide a wealth of information not easily obtainable elsewhere." E. J. Cutler

Library J 96:79 Ja 1 '71 130w

COLE, DONALD B. Jacksonian democracy in New Hampshire, 1800-1851. 283p maps $10 Harvard univ. press

320.9742 New Hampshire—Politics and government
ISBN 0-674-46990-9 LC 79-127878

